God gets very little praise from us in prose. But when our poets and composers put his praises into tuneful song, we sing it with a will. No anthems are so much in demand by choirs as anthems of praise. We, who sing them, probably get much more out of them than God, who hears them.

It might be well if we also were more adept at the singing of the praises of our fellow men. In that case, too, it would do the singers more good than those sung to. And how much a little word of appreciation often does mean to one who has tried his best. Why not tell the pastor now and then how we have enjoyed his sermon, and the singer how we have enjoyed his song? It is so easily done. Was it not Oliver Wendell Holmes who suggested a "mutual admiration society?" Whoever did, such a society would help things along splendidly.

Few choirs have learned to utilize the value of spontaneity. There is always the printed page between them and the audience. If they would learn their anthems so as to sing them without the notes in a free, untrammelled way and in the proper spirit, whether joyous or tender, they would find the music gripping their congregation in a way that would be a delight to themselves and a great inspiration to their hearers. It is the secret of success with popular quartets on the concert stage.

NEW MUSIC REVIEW

From H. W. Gray Co., New York, N. Y.

The Light of God .....Phillip James
The Story of the Cross.....Webbe

Any composition bearing the name of Philip James as the composer may be opened with the assurance that the contents will prove to be out of the ordinary both as to quality and as to mode of statement. The short list of anthems so far made public by Mr. James, the few songs, some highly individual organ pieces, two or three cantatas and secular choruses for various combinations—the sum total of these creative efforts bulks much smaller quantitatively considered than the output of many smaller men—but when we consider the artistic value of this list, it is equalled by few of the composers in this country at least. Mr. James has the courage of his artistic convictions, the technical ability adequately to set down his ideas, a valid and comprehensive vocabulary and high ideals. Hence every product of his pen looms large in importance. The cantata listed above is a case in point. It is intensely personal in statement, not easy, but never difficult for the mere sake of profundity, melodic in a modern vein, with a striking organ part. The text—a version of a legend after the Nicodemian Gospels—is by that noted literary artist, Frederick H. Martens, who has collaborated with so many of the well-known musicians of today.

The Lenten cantata by Webbe is a good example of the choral work written for a definite need in the service of the church. It is much easier than the James production, in fact is evidently adapted for the needs of the amateur or semi-professional choir. That it lacks the highly-tinged dramatic fervor of the first-named work is not to be held against it. The cantata is obviously meditative in make-up and intention, melodic in outline, and of musicianly construction. No doubt it will have wide use.

Palmer Christian's annual report to the music commission of Denver, of which city he is the municipal organist, indicates that in his forty-five straight recitals he reached last year 306,000 people, approximately. The program numbers count up to 293, with 178 different compositions, by ninety-six composers. The audience range is, approximately, from 800 to 6,000, with a usual crowd of around 1,800.

This splendid record by Mr. Christian is attained in a city accustomed largely to popular music, although he presents programs containing the best works, with the lighter numbers interwoven for variety and to cater to public taste. The average audience is a large one for any city and especially so for Denver, and it is brought out to the recitals despite the fact that there is no extensive publicity for the recitals in the daily papers.

Book Reviews

"Historic English."

By James C. Fernald, New York; Funk & Wagnalls Co.

As signified by the title, this volume traces the evolution and growth of our mother-tongue from its beginnings in the strong, clearcut, blunt speech of the Saxon tribes who overswept Britain in the days of the Roman collapse, its welding with some elements of the assimilated Celtic tongues, the continuous accretions from the Danish and Norse invaders, the enrichment which came from the Latin culture of the Normans, and then the tremendous unfolding that came with the merging of all these converging peoples and influences into what is today the English race. The author has treated his chosen subject in detail; his style is lucid and flowing; and the sense-expression is a splendid proof that English is a master-language. One closes the book convinced that English is a living language of great power, inherent vigor, and unlimited potentiality. Of special interest are the well-chosen text-illustrations.

"More Limehouse Nights."

By Thomas Burke, New York; George H. Doran Co.

Most of us remember the vivid impression made upon the reading world by the first set of "Limehouse" stories, with its sheaf of romantic tales, powerfully written, sordid as to setting, but illuminated with deeds of heroic sacrifice. And many of the critics hailed Mr. Burke as a new light in the great firmament of English letters. With this new volume, such praise is confirmed. Once more we are led into the magical lanes of the Chinese section of London-town, with its curious mixture of races and civilizations. The stories in this second book do not fall below the high standard of excellence set forth in the original attempt—which is high praise. If you want short-story writing at its highest point, with thrilling plots and twists of story, fascinating human characters and exotic settings, get the above title; you will not be disappointed.

"Foreshadowed."

By F. E. Mills Young, New York; George H. Doran Co.

When a woman out of a sense of duty marries a man whom she does not love, she has laid train for discord, trouble for herself and all others involved and a fatal termination of what ought to have been a joyful experience. The local setting in South Africa adds little to the character of the book for the human elements revealed in this story are characteristic of any section of the world. The story of this human tragedy as told moves with passion of interest.

"The Boy Apprenticed to an Enchanter."

By Padraic Colum, New York; The Macmillan Co.

Within the too few pages of this book can be found all the magic fantasy, all the beautiful dreams of the Other World so well known to this intimate friend of all fairies and magic-folk; and so simply but yet so enchantingly transmitted to those of us who know not these wonders at first hand. This short romance has to do with the haps and mishaps of Eean, the fisherman's son, who goes through wondrous experiences at the hands of a great enchanter. Wisdom comes to him, and we have a most thrilling battle between rival enchanters, all combined with magic horses, and violet sunsets, and green seas of vast immensity—all the traditional settings of faery lore, done with consummate mastery of marvel, beautiful style and diction, and more than usual vigor of plot. Children from seven to seventy will lose all the cares of this matter-of-fact world once they turn over the first pages.

"The League of Nations at Work."

By Arthur Sweetser, New York; The Macmillan Co.

Painful as the thought may be to some of the august seers now resident in the Senate of this, our own free and independent United States of America, the League of Nations is not dead and only a memory. Indeed, as shown in the pages of this book—or rather, systemized report—it is an organization of living force, potential development, and intense vitality. To sum up the 200 odd pages of this volume, it is "doing things." Mr. Sweetser was a member of the American Peace Commission; now he is a member of the Provisional Secretariat of the League of Nations. Evidently he is fitted to cast a verdict upon the genesis, growth, and possible future of the organization. He has done so in a very clear-cut series of chapters dealing with the varied departments of activity such as the world court, the labor conference, international health conference, etc.; nowhere does he descend to mere vituperation; he is content to let facts speak for themselves—and the pungent facts are there!

A STUDENT'S PRAYER

Thou knowest, O Heavenly Father, the duties that lie before me this day, the dangers that may confront me, the sins that most beset me. Guide me, strengthen me, and protect me. Give me Thy life in such abundance that I may this day hold my soul in Thy pure light. Give me Thy power, that I may become a power for righteousness among my fellows. Give me Thy love, that all lesser things may have no attraction for me; that selfishness, impurity, and falseness may drop away as dead desires, holding no meaning for me. Let me find Thy power, Thy love, Thy life, in all mankind, and in the secret places of my own soul. Amen.

ERNEST D. GILBERT.

"The Hidden Romance of the New Testament."

By James Alex. Robertson, Professor of New Testament Literature and Theology, Free Church College, Boston; The Pilgrim Press, $2.00.

The "Hidden Romance" consists in taking up New Testament characters concerning whom little is said and from fugitive allusion, inferences, possibilities and probabilities weaving a history of the man. Joseph of Arimathea becomes the first apostle to England and founded the Christian church of Glastonbury. The "man from Macedonia" is Luke the historian. The volume is very well written and is charming reading; while the conclusions are ingenious they are also ingenious. The inferences are natural and there is much to support the conclusions both in the New Testament and in the early traditions of the church. The work is scholarly and reverent, and supplies a rich fund of information. It is wonderful how much wealth there is in the Old Book which rewards the seeker. Our commendation of the book must not be construed as an acceptance of all its inferences and conclusions. The book is well named a "Romance" woven out of incidents and inferences that do not violate or even strain possibilities—not to say probabilities.

A Desirable Acquaintance

By A. S. HOBART

Some one has said that to introduce a man to a good book is as good as introducing him to a worthy friend. Exercising faith in this statement I would like to introduce my ministerial friends to a book, "Ethics and Natural Law," by George Lansing Raymond. Doubtless many of the readers of THE BAPTIST are acquainted with his other writings which are many and varied. But this book has an especial value for all preachers. There is a great increase of interest in ethical preaching of late; and for that reason pastors find the study of ethics more important. My own experience in the matter has been varied. I was not taught anything about it in a systematic way when in college or seminary. I took up the study from a necessity when in the pastorate. When I went to teach in the seminary, I assumed the work of a course in the subject although it was outside my department. But as the subject was not in the course, and I knew the need of it, I took it up as an extra two hours a week; extending it into another term on the "Ethics of Public Questions." I say this to show that I have some reason to value the book.

I find this book the only one that has come within the range of my reading which has for the basis of its system what I have found to be the only satisfactory one. The writer assumes that there is in the nature of things a law of ethical conduct as continuous and self-evidencing as is the law of physical health. Whether we have a Bible or not, we have the nature of things and the history of life, and they contain what we need to guide us.

The study of psychology has opened the mind to inspection as we open the back case of a watch and see the wheels go around; and this study lays its crowns of victorious explorations at the feet of ethics.

Then in the great matter of conscience his view is that conscience instead of being a "separate faculty," or being "the intellect as applied to moral matters," or the "voice of God in the soul of man," or the "verdict of public opinion," is the sense of a conflict between the "bodily desires" (which Paul would call "the flesh") and the "mental desires." In this conflict there is to be cultivated from childhood—the settled purpose to put "first things first." "Bodily desires" are not to be suppressed but used subordinately, both being essential parts of ourselves. Then when this sense of disagreement is felt, it becomes the part of intelligence to settle it right. Conscience therefore is not a guide; it is only the sense of loss in the woods and wants a guide. Good sense and good religion are the guides to be consulted. By many illustrations and very clear reasoning he verifies his view.

Then when the principles have been set forth he takes up the task—unusual in such books—of showing how the leading moral qualities can and ought to be cultivated.

In view of my own careful reading of the book I venture to call the attention of my brethren in the ministry as a most fertile source of instruction and suggestion for ethical teaching.

NO wonder John the Baptist and Jesus loved the Jordan valley. Here is a glimpse of the river, which meanders in a course of nearly two hundred miles through the heart of a valley far below the level of the sea. What a fine place for John's camp meetings and for the beautiful ceremony of Christian baptism!

Fresh from the Field

The Rev. Cyrus Fisher Tolman, D. D., died Aug. 3, in his eighty-ninth year at the residence of his son, Frank Leland Tolman, Slingerlands, N. Y., of shock resulting from a fall. Dr. Tolman graduated from Hamilton (now Colgate) university in 1858 and in the same year went to British India as a missionary. After his return from India in 1863, he was pastor of Baptist churches at Lawrence, Mass., and Fort Madison, Ia., chaplain of the Iowa state penitentiary and for more than twenty-five years district secretary of the American Baptist Missionary union.

After filling evangelistic and Bible conference engagements in Texas, Wisconsin, California, Illinois and West Virginia, occupying the time from last September until August 1st, Dr. J. E. Conant is resting for a few weeks at his home in Chicago. For the coming season he has one open date in September, and may be addressed at 6116 Ellis Ave., Chicago.

The Rev. N. J. Peterson, pastor of the First Baptist Church, of Huntington, Ind., announced his resignation effective August 20. He has accepted a call from the First Baptist church at Eaton, Colo.

Rev. W. L. Ferguson, who has been in this country on furlough from India, sailed on his return August 12.

Rev. George E. Morphy has resigned as pastor of the Eagle Grove Church, Iowa, to take effect September 30.

Rev. and Mrs. John A. Earl are on their way to the Pacific Coast where they expect to spend a couple of months. They will be with their son and daughter-in-law at Hayward, California, Box 186, until about the last of September. The first two Sundays of August he supplied for Dr. Skevington at Hollywood, the third Sunday of August for Dr. Snape of Oakland, and the rest of the time he will spend in Yosemite Park. They will begin their work in St. Paul, October first.

Rev. J. F. Huckleberry of Los Animas Calif., has now a home of sorrow. His daughter, Helen, recently died at Franklin, Ind., and Mrs. Huckleberry has been very sick. Helen was a junior in college and an active Student Volunteer.

Pres. W. P. Dearing, of Oakland City college, Indiana, and several members of his family were seriously injured in an automobile wreck August 2. He is still confined to his bed.

Dr. Samuel Z. Batten, social education secretary of the American Baptist Publication Society, is leaving for a visit to Europe to study social conditions there. He will make a special study of the new republic of Czecho-Slovakia.

Special worker among the Poles in Chicago: The Baptist Executive Council of Chicago and the Home Mission Society are joining in the appointment of Mr. Philip Kedzierski as Bible worker among his own people resident in Chicago and vicinity.

Rev. George H. Young, under appointment by the Publication Society and state convention of Oregon, is taking up the duties of director of religious education for the state in a strong and splendid way.

Hear the President's Message

Rochester, N. Y., Aug. 2, 1921.

To the Baptist Churches of the Northern Baptist Convention, Greeting:

Inasmuch as I can not communicate directly with all who, through their representatives, have chosen me to be President of the Convention, I am asking of the editors of our denominational press the privilege of writing you what is in my heart to say.

First of all I want to thank you in the name of the women of our churches for the honor that you have conferred upon them in the election of a woman as presiding officer. I know that I stand in a representative capacity, and that what has been done was done in recognition of the part that the organized women of the denomination have had in the denominational development. I am glad that recognition should have been first given in such conspicuous fashion by those who are proud to be called Baptists. We always have led in democratic movements; I am glad that we led in this. As for me, in so far as I know how, I shall give the best that I have of work and service to the denomination, that has so honored me, and to the Kingdom of God for which the denomination exists.

May I speak to you very simply of some of the dreams that I have for this year? I hope that it can be a year of getting together. Can we not unite in the great work that is ours to do, and postpone discussions? Can we not agree to disagree about many matters, while we unite in the one great matter, the evangelizing of the world in obedience to our Master? I wish that instead of coming together to discuss fundamentals before the next Convention, we might spend a quiet day of prayer in preparation of our hearts for the convention. Why can we not do it—spend a whole day in thanksgiving for what God has done, in praying for all our enterprises, in seeking God's guidance for the future? Would not that be the best possible preparation for a Convention?

Then I hope that the Convention may emphasize our work even more than we have done in the past. There are missionaries, who have a great story to tell. Let us give them time to tell it. Why can we not have the whole Convention pursuing the study of our mission text-books under great leaders, instead of having the classes held in a corner between sessions? At one of the state conventions—South Dakota, if I mistake not—I had the privilege of conducting a study class for the convention at a regular session. Why not a similar class, led by one of our great men for the Northern Baptist Convention? Do you think this is a possible plan?

I wish that we might put prayer into the foreground in our program for the year. We have all the great promises. God invites us to pray on terms that seem too generous to be possible. Why not make this a year of proving God? Let us in each local church adopt a program of prayer, and then let us enlist the whole membership. Why can we not pray that the money objective of this year, twenty millions, be realized? Surely twenty millions is covered by the "whatsoever" of Christ's promise in Mark 11: 23-25. Let us translate these millions into the concrete objects covered, and then all pray together—pray every day for the year's goal. Let us not forget the five year's goal of the $100,000,000.

Even a hundred million is not too much to ask of God.

I wish that we might take a more hopeful and courageous attitude toward our task. We have really done a big and wonderful thing. Why speak of it as partial failure? Suffer my boasting! It is not for sinful pride, but to put a spirit of adventure and conquest into every church, big and little, in our whole convention. The comparison that I shall make is not at all in derogation of the work of the Southern Baptist Convention, but simply to show that even when held up against their challenging record, we can show a better one. Remember that the Southern Convention numbers twice as many members as we do. What the Southern Convention pledged, $92,500,000, amounted to a per capita gift of $29.00, whereas our pledge of $52,824,300 means a per capita gift of $43.00. If the Southern Convention had sought a sum as large in proportion as our $100,000,000 they would have sought to pledge $259,365,400; while if we had set no greater goal than they, we should have set $29,060,016. When we look at what we have given, the record is equally encouraging. They gave, on a pledge of $92,500,000, for the five-year period, $12,900,843 during this past year; while we gave, on a pledge of $52,824,300, $12,596,000 during the past year. This means that Southern Baptists gave in cash, last year, $4.13 for every member, while we gave $10.40 per member. Now is there not something thrilling about these figures? Can we not thank God for what we have done and take courage for the future? I believe that God is going to work out through Northern Baptists something that will thrill the world. Let us talk completion and talk success, and think success. God will help us if we believe in each other and in Him.

God has wonderfully blessed us in the accessions to our churches. We had 106,000 baptisms during the year, an average of one baptism to each twelve members. The Southern Convention had 175,000 baptisms, an average of one baptism for every seventeen members. Can we not make this a year of personal evangelism?—each member seeking to win at least one other during the year? The way Christianity grew during the first century was by each Christian telling others of his faith and joy, and winning them to Christ. Have we not left this too much to the minister? Can we not seek to bring up this goal, and to add hundreds of thousands to our fellowship this year?

Then I have an ambition that Baptists should support their own missions. Why go outside for missionary objects? We have as spiritual, as consecrated, as devoted missionaries as there are in the world. They are preaching the Gospel, they are winning souls to the obedience of Jesus. If we do not support our own orphanages, hospitals, seminaries, colleges, schools, our own Ministers' and Missionaries' Benefit Board, who will? No one else is responsible for them all, except us. We talk a great deal about our Baptist principles, and how important they are for the world; but the only way to make Baptist principles prosper is to support Baptist institutions and agencies. How can a pastor who advises his people to send their missionary money to independent agencies expect the denomination to care for him in his old age? Is he

A Seasonable Suggestion

We have sometimes wondered why women wear furs in the summer and have come to the conclusion that there must be some good reason. For one thing it saves the expenses of putting them in cold storage. But this is not what we started out to say. We want hereby to acknowledge the thoughtfulness of some of our friends who find the vacation time an opportunity for commending THE BAPTIST to their friends. This is a seasonable suggestion.

Killam's Kollum

Kelley Says, "Kan 'Em"

Rev. Robert L. Kelley of Delavan, Wis., feels that this Kollum would render a valuable service if it would open a discussion of trite sayings and phrases which he believes should be "kanned," but not preserved. In the course of a session of the Des Moines Convention he made note of the following: "A goodly number," "A red-letter day," "Reverend Jones," "Brother, sister, mine," "Beloved." Beloved, brother, sister mine are there not other sayings which should be "kanned"? THE BAPTIST believes that there are a goodly number. It would certainly be a red-letter day if they could all be kanned at once.

Why We Are Optimists

Speaking of the promotion of the circulation in one of our Eastern states the director of promotion says: "This is our job and we will do it." Most of our state directors of promotion have the same slogan. All of them admit that THE BAPTIST is a part of and not apart from the New World Movement. The denomination which projected the great forward movement saw how indispensable was a newspaper with a convention-wide vision and service. It scanned the field and there was not one single weekly journal with anything more than a regional circulation. Two of the old journals claimed to be "national" in their circulation but it would have been an eye-opener to have had their circulation published by states. With malice toward none we are under the necessity of pushing up the circulation of THE BAPTIST. Why not 100,000? It is the churches' job and they will do it.

A Weighty Question

"I wonder if 'Killam's Kollum' will tell us whether it is good ethics for a preacher to preach to the readers of a city daily." Thus writes Dr. C. W. Kemper of Lansing. This is a sample of the weighty questions which THE BAPTIST is called upon to answer almost daily. There are several elements which must be taken into account before an answer can be given. The first has to do with the content of the sermon. There are some sermons which tend to make both men and women profane. The doctor was good enough to send us a clipping of this particular effort and on the whole the effect will doubtless be salutary. Then there is another matter which has a bearing. It is sometimes difficult to get together material for a daily paper in mid-summer. If the material is carefully prepared and typewritten its ethical value is enhanced. It would be real missionary work if some benevolent minded Baptist would purchase typewriters for some of the correspondents of THE BAPTIST. Alas! Even this would not solve all our correspondential problems.

Comment on Convention Comment

Feather and Fruit

By W. B. RILEY

IT must be conceded that the Baptist newspapers are a bit aided by the controversy that wages on the question of orthodoxy. It saves our denominational mediums from dullness, to say the least; and it must be wholly agreeable to the editors to know that the articles born of this controversy are not passing without a reading. Two of these appearing in the issue of July 16, interested the writer—"Brethren, Let Us Quit," and "Acorns or Wheat?" I think if one were disposed to characterize these writers from the orthodox standpoint, they might be called "leaning towers." That they are notable men among us no one doubts. That they are orthodox men, each in turn, declares; but as "towers of strength," their "leanings" are evident.

The greatest peril endured by orthodoxy comes often from its professed friends; who want "peace at any price"; friends who first affirm their orthodox views in order to oppose all orthodox contentions. My reasons for entitling this article "Feather and Fruit" are found in the two articles to which reference has been made.

In the first I found

The White Feather

We concede, without controversy, that debate tends to engender bitterness, and to that extent is undesirable, and we cannot concede that there are no subjects fit for debate, and no convictions worthy of contention. If we believed that we are debating about nothing, or at most about matters of minor concern, we would be sinners indeed in disturbing another assembly; but if, on the other hand, the points of controversy in the Baptist denomination are of the first importance and must be settled aright if the denomination is to continue to exist at all, then silence under the increasing skepticism characterizing our schools is more than sin—it is cowardice as well.

Personally we regretted deeply the late war. We looked upon the whole dreadful holocaust of wounds and blood and death, sickened at heart. We would have made any sacrifice to have averted it, paid any price to have saved the world from the same, except one price—namely, the price of surrender of great and independent and worthy nations to the domination of a people who had decided, by a Darwinian process of reasoning, that they were the "fittest" and alone had the right to rule! Rather than endure that—War! Rather than endure that—Taxation! Rather than endure that—a Mortgage upon the future including all moneys and all men.

We wonder if we were mistaken in this attitude, and if it would have become America more to have grieved over the conduct of England and of France and particularly of Belgium in enrolling the world in battles and blood and death?

There are some of us who believe that it is equally important that German rationalism shall not conquer against the simplicities of the Christian religion. Yea, we believe it is more important! There are some of us who regret, deeply regret, having any professed conservative so misinterpret the action of the convention as to send broadcast a report so remote from the facts, in order to make effective his plea for peace. When he says of the committee on investigation of our schools, "The committee tried to trace the charges, reports of bad teaching, etc., and came back and reported they found nothing seriously lacking in our schools," he makes an altogether curious remark. Who could so interpret the majority report of the committee? Read it again! When he states, "Indeed, the committee discovered that the men of the past ten years, graduated from seminaries have had more baptisms to their credit and more money raised than the men of the previous ten years," he deftly makes the one man minority to be the committee's report. That minority report can be shown easily and instantly to be a juggling of facts! The orthodox men decided deliberately not to oppose the reception of that one-man view, but a motion for its adoption would have produced instant debate and resulted in its defeat.

If we have reached the point where we are willing to have the person of God defined as a "force," the virgin birth of Jesus Christ flatly denied, his atoning sacrifice held to scoff, his literal ascension and return laughed out of court, then by all means let us end the controversy and come together on a peaceful program of "world improvement." If not, let us not ignore the recommendation of the committee on the investigation of our schools, to the effect that men who hold these things surrender their professorships, and take the consequences of their own skeptical conclusions.

It is interesting to find a conservative theologian likening his fellow conservatives to the men who prefer acorns to wheat. So far as we can find out wheat is as ancient as acorns, and sensible men have always preferred to feed upon flour. In the Bible we believe we have found "The Bread of Life," and wheat comes far more nearly symbolizing it than acorns. Our contention is for the Book against the rationalistic "dough" which seems to be a mixture of theological acorns, philosophical hazelnuts, social rice and any other grist that the "Modernist" wants to put in, thoroughly leavened with German rationalism, and we must feed on this or find ourselves named "mental mossbacks."

Pardon, brethren! After having tasted once of God's manna we decline to exchange it for your "modernist mixture."

Anent the remark concerning "the Westminster Confession of Faith" let it not be forgotten that two denominations which have confessions of faith, the Presbyterian and the Episcopal, tried and excluded their destructive critics and are to-day less disturbed by controversy and more united in their evangelical attitude than others. It was John's "Defense of the Faith" that ended the Cerinthian heresy! It was a Baptist confession of faith that expurgated Arianism! It was a Congregational rebellion against Unitarianism that saved their remnant! It was Guizot's great leadership that beat back the deluging waves of deism! Shall conservatives now prove themselves spineless before the new skepticism?

I conclude this article by an illustration which seems to me to be wholly apt. The author of "The International Jew," speaking of the Hebrew's ability to break in where he was not wanted, and control what he had not created, says that in both Germany and Russia, "the social system had encrusted around the Jew, keeping him in a position where, as the nations knew by experience, he would be less harmful. As nature encysts the harmful foreign element in the flesh, building a wall around it, so nations have found it expedient to do with the Jew. In modern times, however, the Jew has found a means of knocking down the walls and throwing the whole national house into confusion, and in the darkness and riot that follows, seize the places he has long coveted."

It is a perfect parallel of what has taken place in Protestantism. Evangelical religion, by a series of clear, strong confessions of faith, had walled against the Unitarian infection; but by massing their forces and making continuous assault upon both the right and content of those confessions, the liberals have thrown the theological house into disorder, and under the cover of the consequent confusion, seized the coveted positions in schools of second grade, colleges, theological seminaries, and universities, and are now struggling with all the power at their united command to capture the pulpits of Protestantism, and make the rout of orthodoxy complete. This attempt explains the clash of arms on the battlefield of theology, and the array of opposing armies! To this "Rationalism" movement the truly orthodox will not surrender. It is in vain to cry "Peace! Peace!" when there is no peace."

not doing all in his power to tear down the denomination? I have heard it said that almost as much money went for undenominational and independent missions as was given to all our own missions. Can't we take all this money and send it to our own Board of Promotion? There it will be divided and go to all our agencies according to their needs. Let's believe in our own agencies.

Finally, I wish that THE BAPTIST would give one column where people could ask me questions, and I could try to answer them; and where all the helpful suggestions and plans that have been tried could be told about. Perhaps it is because I am a woman, but I'd really like to have a place where I could keep sort of office hours and talk things over with every one who came.

Faithfully yours,

Helen B. Montgomery.

The Baptist

Start the Campaign at Once

IF any situation can arise in which Baptists ought to unite all of their forces in a common program of co-operative effort, that situation now exists.

The need for such united service as the Baptist denomination is qualified to render is recognized by all observant Baptists as imperative. We cannot get away from it. The only way in which we can ever justify a failure on our part to render that service is to plead successfully either a lack of sufficient resources or an irremediable incapacity for co-operation.

The material resources in sufficient abundance are now in our hands; on this point there seems to be no difference of opinion. President Mrs. Montgomery estimates in her letter in this issue of THE BAPTIST that our churches in the field of the Northern Baptist Convention are now actually raising for strictly religious purposes money enough to finance the New World Movement but that a considerable proportion of the money so raised is appropriated to other than Baptist purposes. It is time that a way be found to utilize Baptist money in Baptist work.

An adequate Baptist program has been formulated and deliberately adopted. This is true alike of the Northern Baptists, of the Southern Baptists, of the Canadian Baptists and of the British Baptists. The New World Movement of the Northern Baptists is paralleled by similar movements of the other groups. In all of these groups alike the program of the movement has been adopted after careful deliberation and with full unanimity. No proposal has arisen in the organized assembly of any group to revise its program. Moreover these groups have so correlated their several programs and allocated their several fields of work as to constitute substantially one great Baptist movement.

Misunderstanding that stood as obstacles to Baptist co-operation in the North are disappearing. It is found that there is no general nor influential defection from Baptist principles among them in their churches, in their schools nor in their pulpits. Without any betrayal of principles, a spirit of conciliation made itself manifest in the recent convention at Des Moines. The time has come for a lot of magnanimous and Christly forgetting.

We come now therefore to the naked test of our capacity for co-operation. The field is clear for it. All conditions within and without urge united effort. Nothing prevents it now except certain removable obstacles such as individual and local indifference, occasional misunderstanding in particular localities, lingering remnants of suspicion and antipathy bred of past controversies, temperamental inertia and lack of information.

The removal of these obstacles requires a definite campaign of evangelization and education in all of our churches. Such a campaign ought to be set in motion at once on a scale as broad as the field of the Northern Baptist Convention.

Material Arguments for an Armament Truce

HUDSON MAXIM, inventor of smokeless powder, favors an armistice truce for a period of at least five years. The saving to the United States, he thinks, would be about one billion dollars a year. This money could be used in ways which would bring vast and incalculable good to great numbers of the American people. A summary of his article which appears in Current Opinion for July gives these possibilities:

"The first year's savings would build 25,000 miles of concrete roads. The second year, the proposed inter-coastal ship canal from Boston to Florida would require one-half billion, and the other half would dredge and deepen the Mississippi and Missouri Rivers for ocean liners to go up to Kansas City. The third year Mr. Maxim would develop a great electrical power system extending from Boston to Washington and connecting with the bituminous coal mines of Virginia, the anthracite mines of Pennsylvania and the sources of water power available at Niagara and in the St. Lawrence between Lake Ontario and Montreal, one-half of the power being shared by the United States and one-half by Canada. This entire system, it is estimated, would cost the United States one billion and a quarter dollars. However, in expending the fourth year's savings one could take the quarter billion additional needed for the third year's enterprise, and the three-quarters remaining for the fourth year could be used for a comprehensive plan of canals leading from the Great Lakes to the St. Lawrence, which would shorten the route from our interior and Western States to European markets, thus making Buffalo, Cleveland, Toledo, Detroit and Chicago practically seaport cities with ocean steamer communications to all parts of the world. This enterprise also would be shared half and half with Canada.

"The fifth year's billion, Mr. Maxim would devote to irrigation and the development of electrical power from water storage dams and reservoirs in the Far West. It is estimated that six million acres of land could be reclaimed for a billion dollars, thus creating values more than double the expenditure, and supporting a population of about one million and a half. Mr. Maxim calls attention to the fact that 70 per cent. of our power in the United States lies west of the Mississippi, while 70 per cent. of the stationary water power in use in this country is east of the Mississippi. He says, 'The vast regions of the Far West have industrial possibilities which far transcend anything that the race of man has yet done upon this earth.'

These statements suggest better than figures could possibly do what the race for big armaments is costing the United States year by year. And the things specified are only a few of the many for which such a sum of money as a billion dollars might be used. Consider for instance what it would mean to have that much money used for educational purposes annually in addition to what is now being spent. Consider what it might accomplish in improving housing conditions in our big cities and in providing people with beautiful surroundings.

As things are we spend vast sums of money, the net result of which is to increase the volume of suspicion in the world and to make future wars more likely. If the present movement towards disarmament has the backing of the Christian churches, we shall find ourselves on the eve of better days that the old world has known for many decades.

A Word on the Atonement

A CORRESPONDENT from South Dakota wrote us, under date of July 28, as follows: "I see by your issue of July 23 that Dr. A. H. Strong declares in favor of the doctrine of 'substitutionary atonement' as a principle fundamental to Baptist belief. I am for a clarification of doctrines Baptists represent and I would appreciate it and I am sure many would if you would ask Dr. Strong to give an exposition of this doctrine so clear as to command acceptance by the denomination."

This request we forwarded to Dr. Strong, fully in sympathy with the desire of our correspondent to get from a man who has been the teacher of so many of our teachers a statement which should represent the ripe fruitage of his thought on this mighty theme. The cross stands at the very center of the Christian faith; the more we contemplate it the greater its significance for God and man appears; and there are none of us who do not welcome any thoughtful utterance which shall lead us into a greater apprehension of its divine mystery. Under date of August 4, the editors have received from Dr. Strong a statement which, though brief, is packed full of meaning. With it came his permission to print the statement if we so desired. He says:

"I cannot enter any further into controversy or even explanations, except to say that my word 'substitutionary' means nothing more than the ordinary word 'vicarious,' and is meant to indicate that whatever of ill is due to the believer falls upon Christ to whom he is joined by a tie of life so close as to free it from all charge of book-keeping or external transfer. As we give ourselves to Christ and Christ gives himself to us, all our needs become his and all his resources become ours. The words 'substitutionary' and 'vicarious' must be, so to speak, biologically interpreted, if we would get at their real significance."

This statement, we understand, is in accord with Dr. Strong's teaching of many years. It touches upon the fact of sin, the divine forgiveness in Christ who suffers in our behalf and that wonderful union with Christ which is the believer's joy. Admittedly so great a fact as the atonement cannot be adequately expressed in human words. But Dr. Strong's statement, in the field which it covers, is admirable.

The God Who Was Is the God Who Is

ALL being begins and ends in personality. It has been a favorite maxim of philosophy that we cannot know ultimate being, because there is no organ or power in us by which we can sense it. But the truth is rather that ultimate being is the only being that we can know. All of our organs and faculties take note of the qualities, contingencies and relations of things which we may know something about, but whose essence we cannot actually know. Who knows what matter, for instance, is?

There is however a sense of self which carries with it a conviction of actuality. I am more real to myself than things are to me. I may not be able to analyze myself, but I know myself with a directness, a clearness and a certainty that no other knowledge of mine possesses. I may be destroyed, for aught I know to the contrary, but I cannot be reduced to anything more simple and real than myself. The real is personal.

The true interpretation of the universe is registered in the nature of the human personality and in terms of self-consciousness: else, we know nothing. That is, we come to understand the secret of the universe not by studying rocks and stars but by a clear reading of the soul's own story of itself.

Note the registration of other personality which we can clearly read in our own. Human beings as such have imaginings, dreams, aspirations, longings—a veritable hunger for society, communion, fellowship comradeship, friendship, love, self-realization and self-expression, whose goal lies not in self but in other personality, and which far overreach any satisfaction we have ever found or can hope to find from association with other humans.

Follow these outreachings to their satisfying goal, and what do we find? Either a diabolical disappointment which mocks bleeding hearts or a personal God who heals them.

Here is the contribution that modern psychology has made to the confirmation of the old faith in a personal God. It enables theology to start, not with the assumptions of logic, but with the clear registrations of self-consciousness. It finds the ultimate truth in personality, and grounds in the philosophy of Personalism all valid interpretations of God and the Universe.

Thus, the latest word in the youngest of the sciences confirms the earliest word of revelation: "IN THE BEGINNING, GOD."

Shall Class or People Rule?

WHEN it comes to actually deciding what shall be done in the social organization, political, economic or religious, who shall decide? Who shall make the laws? Who shall lead? Who shall administer community affairs? The social competency of any group of people is exhibited in the answer they give to these questions?

The source of all legitimate governing power in any political, religious or industrial community resides in the people collectively composing such a community; and the purpose of all legitimate government is to promote the common good.

In a normal society the fit would rule according to their fitness. The essential objection to a hereditary, aristocratic or autocratic system is the danger of rule by the unfit and of the perversion of government to the service of a privileged class. The election of rulers by popular and equal suffrage is simply a crude device for avoiding that danger. It is unscientific and uncertain in its results, but it is probably the best device the people are now able to use. It is far from securing efficient democracy. In spite of its formal safeguards, mass incompetency in the people still gives large opportunity for special privilege and bad government.

Democracy is valid for all social spheres or it is valid for none. Religious, political and industrial democracy must go along together; no one of them can permanently endure without the others. Democracy in America is endangered by the acceptance in one or more of these spheres of the ideals of class rule and special privilege, and by the usurpation of power by a favored race or class without regard to either fitness or the common interest. The dangers of hierarchy, plutocracy and mobocracy in America are actual and imminent. The remedy for those dangers is to increase to the utmost the social competency of the people collectively and to distribute power according to adequately tested fitness.

An understanding of the principles of social order, information concerning the social conditions with which government must deal and training in the responsible exercise of power are the necessary foundations of successful popular government; and a great and immediate task of Christianity is so to promote them as to create a socially capable and resolute democracy.

A Scareless Clergy

"THERE are in the world 450,000 Protestant clergymen and missionaries and this ministry is free. You can't buy it; you can't scare it. If the churches unite upon some fundamental truth, their power will be irresistible."

So Mr. Fred. B. Smith is reported to have said in the recent congress on international conciliation.

No, you cannot buy "it," and you cannot scare "it." Collectively, and when united in some common moral purpose, the clergy as a body is fearless, incorruptible and in the long run irresistible.

But separately, without such common understanding and unity, when each must take, alone and unsupported, all of the risks of a full and free testimony of unpopular truth and to a righteousness which offends powerful interests, the individual preacher finds himself sometimes as weak as water—as shifty, as yielding and as corruptible.

A vital need of these times is for the clergy, collectively to make up its mind together.

When the breakdown of civilization became clear to everybody two years ago, if the clergy had found itself, a reconstruction of the world on the basis of brotherhood could have been undertaken at once and would have been now far advanced. As things are however, thousands of preachers are yet waiting for intellectual and moral bankrupts in the fields of politics and business to tell them what they are permitted to think.

Shall we wait ten years to find out how to say the thing we ought to have been ready to say two years ago?

The Limits of Freedom

NOT very long ago a Lithuanian lecturer, named Mockus, was tried in the state of Maine on a charge of blasphemy. In talking about various pictures which were thrown upon the screen, he used language which has been described as "almost inconceivably indecent, insulting and filthy expressions about God, Christ and the Virgin Mary." The lower court found him guilty and in this was sustained by the supreme court of the state which in its opinion greatly commended the definition of liberty expressed by the judge of the lower court. This definition is as follows:

"The great degree of liberty which we enjoy in this country, the degree of personal liberty which every man and woman enjoys, is limited by a like degree of liberty in every other person, and it is the duty of men and the duty of women, in their conduct, in the exercise of liberty which they enjoy, to consider that every other man and woman has the right to exercise the same degree of liberty; that when one person enters into society—and society is the state in which personal liberty exists—each gives up something of that liberty in order that the other may enjoy the same degree of liberty. It is a conception that perhaps some people find difficult to understand, but it is the conception of liberty which we enjoy."

Such words as these are well worth bearing in mind in days when liberty means to so many people the right to do as they please, whatever may be the result of their action on other people. In society there is no liberty for the individual to do what is against the well-being of the other individuals in that society or against the comfort of the body as a whole. All talk about personal liberty in connection with the outlawed liquor traffic should be brought square up against this fact.

Secretary Robbins is shortly to visit our mission stations in India. One of the reasons which calls him there is doubtless problems growing out of the nationalist movement in that great country. Never was there a time when real missionary statesmanship was more needed than now. In order that our readers may have a clear understanding of this whole problem, we have asked Rev. W. L. Ferguson, one of the ablest of our missionaries, to prepare for us an article which appears in the present number. This article is a masterly production and warrants the most careful reading. One cannot understand the India of the present without having the historical background which is here given. This is one of the articles which you will want to file away for future reference.

In another column there appears a communication from the president of the Northern Baptist Convention, who desires to keep in touch with the churches during the year. Be sure to read it. Also notice that THE BAPTIST will have during the year a "President's Column" in which Mrs. Montgomery will answer any inquiries which may come to her, either directly or through THE BAPTIST. This column will appear as frequently as the president desires it. We predict that it will prove to be a most interesting feature.

India, Nationalism and Missions

THE BAPTIST sought for its readers a comprehensive and statesmanlike survey of India in its present period of awakening nationalism and turmoil. The writer of this survey is a veteran Baptist missionary in India, and he has made a special and thorough study of conditions

BY W. L. FERGUSON

INDIA is awake: and not only awake; she has risen up and begun her day's work. How thorough is the awakening and how vigorous the arising can best be understood by comparing the India of a hundred or two hundred years ago with the India of today. Like China, India had had and like China and some other lands, progress became arrested somewhere along the way; stagnation ensued and finally disintegration set in, leaving India weak, sometimes powerless and often the prey of conquerors. Of internal strife in those days there was a plenty and the exploits of the mighty, with their deeds of chivalry, heroism and valor, are sung in epics comparable to the Iliad of Homer or the Aeneid of Virgil. From without, invasions have come, beginning none knows when—Scythians, who were the progenitors of the modern Dravidian races of South India now known as Tamils, Telugus, Kanarese and Malayalam; Aryans, who were the forebears of the present day high-caste population called Brahmans, Kshatriyas, Vaisyas, or in other words the priestly, the warrior and the merchant-banker-landlord-moneyed classes; the Greeks under Alexander the Great; the Moguls under the descendants of Genghis Khan and others; and finally Europeans, as Portuguese, Dutch, Danes, French and English. In the midst of all the turmoil occasioned by wars, invasions and civil strife authentic and detailed records of India's past, if they ever existed, have perished. Unlike China and Japan, India has failed to preserve a careful history of the years. Some writers attribute this to disinclination on the part of the Hindus; whose chief interests for centuries were religion and philosophy, both of which in their higher forms stretched away to the most attenuated pantheism the world has even known, by which the present material universe, individuality, consciousness and the power of volition were absolutely denied, and which taught that the one and only thing worth while for man was absorption in or identification with that neuter something called Brahma, which is void of the qualities of both matter and spirit, which is unknowing and unknowable, without sensation—immune from all things, a dead calm. Not much history is possible from the source like that!

While the priests, the literati and the philosophers held to these things ideally, the common people toiled at the common round of daily life. They ate, they drank, they plowed, they reaped, they bought, they sold, they builded; they were born, they passed through childhood, youth and age; they married, reared families, saw their children's children and sorrowed or rejoiced as folk do everywhere; they beheld the world about them, they pondered life and the stars; they felt the awe of mystery, the anger of the storm and the bite of pain; they thought of life-after-death, they constructed temples, made idols, worshipped; they lived, some in poverty, some in wealth; they died and were forgotten. This was the practical every day experience of the people; and the facts of life seemed somehow not to fit with the philosophy of the priests and the learned. Life was real, hard and sometimes bitter. In the face of facts, how could the world, life and all things be only illusion? Truly here was a world, here were people, here was matter and spirit. Ideally all might be denied existence; but practically the people wrought out a mighty civilization, with towns and cities, cultivated fields and village crafts; with busy bazaars, marts of trade and lines of commerce; with kingdoms and capitals, gorgeous temples, royal palaces and great monuments.

Her Soul Held Fast

Yes, India in her time, in that far-off past, was great; but she lost her greatness centuries ago and only fragments of her arts, literature and history remain and are available today. Her religions and philosophies have fared better, for these have persisted in the hearts of all classes in spite of kings and armies; in spite of the rise and fall of dynasties; in spite of the flight of time and the age of years; and in spite of ruin, poverty and decay. India has claimed her soul persistently as her one abiding inheritance and possession. Hard experience, born of successive early conquests and adversity, taught India to live in scorn of the material and at costs to hold fast to her.

Ancient Institutions

as embodied in her caste system, her ideas of government, her range of philosophy and her pantheon of religions. Caste is social and economic government backed up by religious sanctions. Men and women are classified according to birth and occupation, sorted out and separated into water-tight compartments which neither have inner connections one with another nor overflow. Into whatever lot one was born, in that state or occupation he must remain, himself and his descendants to the last generations of time. Knowledge of any sort belonged to the elders and was transmitted within the caste from generation to generation. No sin could be greater than to break with the caste, to rebel against circumstances, to question the wisdom of the ancients, to deviate in the least from the form delivered by them. I have stood in a museum where were exhibited specimens of common pottery made some 2,000 years ago. If the pieces had not been so labeled, one might have supposed the ware to have been made by modern village workmen, so faithfully have the shapes and methods of manufacture been preserved! This too is observable in other crafts. Caste not only decrees occupations: it standardizes life in all its phases so that every detail of existence for the individual from the hour of birth to the hour of death seems regulated. Whatever has been handed down from the ancients is custom: and custom is rigid law, binding alike on king and people, on caste and out-cast.

As occupations descended from father to son, so service descended; successive generations of one family serving in the same capacity those of another. The government was personal and autocratic, sometimes benevolent towards special castes or individuals; but always in evidence and with a show of grandeur which was pleasing to the multitudes. The will of the ruler was absolute and the part of the subject or suppliant was always to acquiesce and to sue for favor. In many an ancient kingdom not only the office of king, but the occupation of prime minister, treasurer or other function has been transmitted from father to son for many generations. So also the priesthood and religion were provided for, the office being ancestral and the cults being fixed.

Brahmanism and Buddhism

Both in government and religion the Brahmans for centuries have well nigh had a monopoly acquiesced in by people as a whole. The aborigines were allowed to retain their worship of spirits and demons; the outcasts were allowed to retain whatever forms of idolatry they possessed at the time of the Aryan conquests; and the village deities wherever revered and under whatever name were left undisturbed. At first the Aryans taught that the gods were eleven in number; later they increased to thirty-three, and finally to 330,000,000. The chief gods were Brahma, Vishnu and Siva, respectively—the creator, preserver and destroyer of the universe; which was made, destroyed and re-made in endless succession; which seemed real to the deluded, but which after all was only shadow and illusion, neither universe, nor gods, nor men having any existence at all. This being the case, one cult was as good as another, theoretically; and it was a matter of indifference what one believed or how he worshiped—demonolatry, idolatry, polytheism, pantheism or monism were all alike accepted and one just as useful or useless as the other. Practically, however, things worked out differently; for sin, sorrow and suffering were everywhere and people sought relief.

Buddhism appeared on the scene 2,400 years ago and all but won the day against this conglomerate and incoherent system. The people were for the new teaching, which sought to explain the cause of misery, if not its origin, and to point the way of escape from it. The cause was desire. Desire arose in consciousness. The way to escape desire, and therefore all sin and its penalties, is through unconsciousness—the escape from all sense-perception, appetites and ambitions; becoming oblivious to the world and all in it, and entering into nirvana, eternal absorption in that neuter Something which is unconscious, impersonal, imperturbable and calm. If this be heaven, what is the good, since there is none con-serious to enjoy it? But Buddhism did not have the priests even though it had the people. Brahmanism as a system withstood the newer religion and the people who had adopted it; and Brahmanism prevailed above the new religion and the people by swallowing the new religion whole and incorporating all its followers and tenets into its own system, just as it had swallowed or allowed to exist all the ruder and more primitive cults before mentioned. Thus it happened that Buddhism became incorporated in Hinduism and as a separate religion ceased to exist in India proper, finding its habitat beyond the natural confines of the peninsula, in Ceylon, Burma, Thibet, China and Japan. Other reformers sought in vain for universal acceptance of their special creeds; but all alike met with the same fate; their systems can be found within Hinduism and their followers are allowed to go their way in peace so long as caste is observed and the social and economic order remains unbroken.

Mohammedan Contact

Mohammedanism came in like a flood; but Hinduism has managed to hold its own against it. Unlike Buddhism and some other cults, Mohammedanism did not become absorbed in the Hindu system; but grew up in the land, opposing it and ruling over it until modern times. Each of the two religions had schools, representing systems of learning of great antiquity, in each case closely identified with the temples and mosques, and chiefly in cities or large towns and for the higher castes and well-to-do classes. Hindu pundits gave instruction in Sanscrit grammar, logic, philosophy and law to the upper castes; and to the children of traders, landholders, and a few others, such rudiments of education as were needed in the humbler walks of life. Mohammedans likewise gave to the elite instruction in grammar, rhetoric, logic, literature, jurisprudence and the science of the time. Both systems were largely memoriter and had all the merits or defects inhering in such a practice.

The rise of Mohammedanism has been traced to the unfaithfulness of the Christian Church. A time was when north Africa was Christian. There were five hundred bishops and countless scholars, some of the best that the world has known. But that church became self-centered and indifferent. One of its leaders said, "We draw to ourselves, and feast our souls on a vision of God." There was plenty of contemplation and meditation, but no witness-bearing. While they were thus engaged, a crafty fellow took the Old Testament out into the wilderness and brought forth the Koran. That curse would not have fastened on the world if the Church had been faithful in its testimony. — The United Presbyterian.

This was India; static or nearly so in her internal life as represented by her arts, literature, philosophy, science, social relations and religion; holding fast to the past, refusing to let her sons cross the seas, largely under the rule of invaders, caste-ridden; suffering, in silence and in scorn of the world and circumstances, all the ills inflicted by herself upon herself or imposed from without by others. One must continually bear these things in mind if he is desirous of rightly understanding the

and what is happening today. The first impact of Europe upon the East was chiefly commercial. This was particularly true of the old East India Company whose early activities were confined to trade and whose desire was to leave the people as undisturbed as possible in their social, economic and religious life. As time went on, however, the company found difficulties. There were rivalries, factions and wars among rulers of contiguous territories and commerce was thereby broken up or hindered. Opposing parties each sought the good will and influence of the company. The company unable to remain neutral was compelled to take sides; and this little by little led to the company itself engaging in keeping peace and order by means of troops at its command and ultimately by assuming the functions of government in a limited way, which functions it later turned over to the British Government. For the servants of the company brought out from England, for the local colonies of traders living in the country or temporarily sojourning there, for the British troops garrisoning the forts and composing the armies, the company was always in favor of the employment of chaplains, the erection of places of worship and the stated observance of Christian worship; but it held most strongly to the theory that Christian missionaries would greatly disturb the peace and contentment of the population and greatly interfere with the company's business. The actual practice of the company seems to have been, Christianity for Christians, Hinduism for Hindus, Mohammedanism for Mohammedans; and it contributed to the support of all, the two latter especially by grants of land in connection with temples and mosques, and by grants of money for the school connected with them. This was the beginning of the present system of Grants-in-Aid as practiced by the government of India, modified to such an extent today that financial assistance is impartially afforded to any individual, body or organization which will carry on education according to government standards, irrespective of whether religion is or is not taught.

The modern missionary and educational movement in India began with the advent of William Carey and his coadjutors at Serampore, in the latter part of the eighteenth century, while Carey was residing in Danish territory. With the introduction of the more settled forms of western government came an agitation by missionaries, progressive foreigners and some Indians for the introduction of western learning. Opinion was divided and little progress seems to have been made till about 1815, when Lord Hastings made a new order of things possible. Carey, Marshman and Ward opened Serampore College in 1818 as the crown of a system of lower schools previously established. Alexander Duff began his great and revolutionary work of Christian education at Calcutta in 1830 and obtained almost immediately a fame which his name still bears in this field of endeavor. In 1832 all restrictions to the entry of missionaries to India were removed and from that time onward missions and education received a great impetus. Some of the older type of schools exist to the present time; but the newer, the western method, prevails in all the chief centers of population.

Two Forces Generate New Ideas

As a result of the two forces, missions and government, each working in its own way and for its own ends, and each assisting the other where interests exist in common, India has been inoculated with a whole series of new ideas and impulses. The treasures of the Christian faith have been unlocked for the highest and the humblest classes; the gospel of love and salvation has been freely preached; churches have been formed, the outcaste, the criminal, the orphan, the sick, the famine stricken, the poor and the friendless have been ministered to in practical ways and through well organized institutions; the history of western lands, with their laws, literature, science, struggles for constitutionalism and democracy and human rights, has been unlocked and the spirit of liberty breathing through these things has been wafted to the souls of millions of India's people. The common medium of instruction in all schools of higher learning has been the English language, so that, for the first time in history, the 186 different nations and tribes of the land have a lingua franca for use when their representatives meet. The effect of this interplay of forces, together with commerce and increasing foreign travel, has been slow but decisive, in undermining old ideas, weakening caste, overthrowing customs such as widows being burned alive (suttee), hook-swinging at religious festivals and human sacrifices; and in subjecting every phase of life to searching investigation and reform. Out of this has grown with all its aspirations, social, commercial, political and religious. From this has been born patriotism, public sentiment and a growingly influential press. The day of the individual has dawned. Somebody has told him, somehow he has discovered, that God is no respecter of persons and that every soul is precious, of infinite worth, in his sight. The very spirit of the West breathes in many of the reformers who are clamoring for a greater measure of social and religious freedom; and for race and political equality with the west.

For many years farseeing persons, a few, have anticipated the coming of this day. The India National Congress by its meetings from year to year has sought to prepare the way politically; and the Brahmo-Samaj, the Arya-Samaj, the Parathana-Samaj and several theistic societies have attempted to deal with caste, idolatry and other matters needing correction in the religious and social life of the people. But the way was hard and long and there was a great jangle of voices, with divided counsels, half-way measures and inadequate leadership. "India for the Indians" was the common motto; but some would find its realization by going backward and others by moving ahead. And this is true today.

Both in politics and in religion there are three strong parties and innumerable factions. The Reactionaries, idealizing the greatness and glory of India's past, cry, "Back to the Vedas and Shastras, to the methods and faith of the ancients, and thus restore India to the Indians without the loss of her old-time social, economic and religious systems." This party is headed and supported chiefly by the Brahmans and higher castes. The Radicals are probably more numerous than the Reactionaries and make much more noise. They recognize that for better or worse India has changed and is changing; they see her ills, perhaps more clearly than do the Reactionaries—2,300 castes and social sub-divisions; 50,000,000 outcasts; 26,500,000 widows; 2,650,000 child wives under ten years of age, more than 13,000 of them less than one year old; 500,000 blinds; 81,000 insane; 200,000 deaf and dumb; 110,000 lepers; they see that the masses are poor, economically and commercially backward and largely illiterate, 90 per cent of the male and 99 per cent of the female population being unable to read; they see famines, plagues and pestilences like influenza scourge the land from time to time; they see mounting and ominous census returns, inadequate food supplies and the post-war reign of high prices. They do not hesitate to attribute most, if not all, of these ills to the presence of the British government in India. Their policy is, "Out with the foreigner, bag and baggage. We want independence, complete and absolute, and at once."

"India for the Indians"

It will be seen immediately that both Reactionaries and Radicals agree in saying, "India for the Indians" and that, while they may not agree on ultimate remedies, whether to turn back or to forge ahead, they can unite in a common agitation against the British government in India and in a common effort to get rid of it. Both these parties are irreconcilable regarding the recently inaugurated India Reform Bill, by which the British Parliament put the people of India in possession of a large part of their own administration, with the promise of more and more as time goes on and efficiency is assured. Both Reactionaries and Radicals reject the Reform Bill and refuse to co-operate with government in its operation. There is a great middle party, however, the Conservatives, who accept it heartily and are joining with Government in making the bill effective. This party sees things as they are; knows

India's weakness and inexperience in modern state-craft; recognizes that democracy is the spirit of the times; welcomes the day of opportunity for the great middle classes and the outcasts; is suspicious of and generally opposed to Brahman rule; and is in favor of gradually attaining home rule under the tutelage of the British government in India, and of remaining within the British Empire. In the first elections under the Reform Bill the Conservatives carried most of the constituencies; and the newly established legislative councils are under their control. In South India there is a Non-Brahman Party which is well organized and effective; and which may be classed for all practical purposes as Conservative. Owing mostly to the agitation kept up by the Reactionaries and the Radicals is running very high in India. Both these parties join in denouncing Government and in condemning foreigners and all their ways; and both resort to the sowing of discontent among the masses; to the inaugurating of strikes in mills, factories and institutions conducted by foreigners; to the boycotting of merchants who deal in foreign-made goods; to the enlistment of high-school and college students as agitators, pickets and propagandists; to the advocating of non-co-operation with Government to such an extent as will bring on paralysis of all its functions, both civil and military; to the sympathizing with Bolsheviks, Sinn Feiners, Afghans and Egyptian revolutionists; and to sending representatives to America to elicit support and to carry on activities for the overthrow of the Government of India. It is needless to say that in carrying on a program of this kind there is much heat, passion and misrepresentation. But assumption, denunciation, appeal to prejudice and race feeling, the creation of turmoil and disintegration becloud vision and lead only to worse confusion. What India needs is a constructive, not a destructive, program.

Caste Blocks Progress

On account of the caste system, as applied by the people themselves to the social, economic and religious affairs of their life, the major ills of India exist. When the people and their leaders recognize this and voluntarily abandon the system, they will take the first long step toward putting India in the way of amendment and on the road to a place in the column of modern peoples. As matters stand, no ill can be tackled separately and cured. Touching one disturbs all; and to threaten the existence of one makes all the others rise in rebellion and stout resistance. This applies to the education of the masses; and of girls especially, for whom Caste decrees marriage at eleven or twelve years of age, motherhood soon after, and grandmotherhood at thirty. Girls have little or no chance to reach the higher classes in the schools; no chance to grow strong bodies and be able to produce vigorous offspring. These early marriages are the fruitful sources of an excessive infant mortality; of enfeebled constitutions which are unable to resist the ravages of disease and epidemics; of the sorrows of child-widowhood; and the over-population of the land; of the reign of high prices due to food scarcity; and of much of the poverty and general indebtedness of the people. What started with an educational problem runs into marriage, social problem, and ends with land and food and debts, an economic problem. And Caste stands at every turn of the road, with its religious sanctions, blocking the way of progress and reform. Sometime, somehow these problems must be tackled en bloc; but they cannot be tackled without the desire and consent of the people, nor can they be solved without the hearty co-operation of the people. Since caste and religion are inextricably related, the British government in India cannot touch one without disturbing the other; and to touch either with legislation, apart from the consent of the people, would be a violation of the principle of religious neutrality to which the government is pledged. In the face of a situation of this kind in India has accomplished marvels; in education, in transportation, in commerce, in agriculture, in medicine, in jurisprudence, in famine relief, in care for the insane in espousing the cause of the outcasts in maintaining peace and order and in encouraging the people in the ways of democracy and freedom. Britain has given of her best to India, her finest sons and daughters and best administrators, who have served unsparingly. Had she been out for mere exploitation of the land and its people, India would be infinitely worse off than it is today. No doubt mistakes have been made from time to time. What government never makes any? In the main, however, Britain's rule has been strong, progressive and in the interests of the people as a whole. This the Conservative Party recognizes and rejoices in, accepting the Reform Bill in good faith and undertaking to share in the responsibilities of government and to co-operate for the bringing about of a new and better day for the people, not by separating from the British Empire, but by remaining in it and becoming an important part of it; and by sharing in its counsels and assisting in shaping its policies. The Conservatives seem ready and willing to forget past mistakes, to let bygones be bygones and to face the future hopefully. Already in the Madras presidency they are moving forward, one of their most recent acts being the enfranchisement of women. But the Reactionaries and the Radicals are making common cause against Government under the leadership of who in some strange way seems to combine in himself the characteristics of both. I have seen him, read many of his utterances, and on one occasion presided at a meeting of missionaries whom he addressed. He is an ascetic, almost a visionary. His belief is that whatever has originated in India or is produced by the Indian people is best for India. This makes him oppose practically everything modern which has come to India from the outer world; railways, telegraphs, automobiles, street-cars, machinery, machine-made goods, buttons for one's clothing, electric lights, and so on through the whole list of innovations; and this makes him advocate the retention of all that is indigenous to India in her social, economic and religious life.

His method for expelling the foreigner, getting absolute independence in government and securing country-wide prosperity, is satyagraha,—the application of soul-force through 'civil resistance' to Government; and hartal,—the boycott of all things foreign, whether ideas, goods, methods, money, persons or service. He says that if the people will refuse to co-operate with Government; will boycott all foreign goods; will refuse service or pay under foreigners; and will return to the ancient ways of village and communal life, particularly to the use of the spindle and hand loom, the foreigner and his government will go and India will be free and independent by October 1 this year.

Gandhi's Mischievous Propaganda

Already this preachment has been prolific in mischief. While it is possible for Mr. Gandhi himself, who is an educated man and not dependent upon salary or daily wages for his livelihood, to practice 'civil-disobedience' towards Government, it is not so easy for the common people, the great illiterate masses who live from hand to mouth. These when stirred and aroused by agitators, easily get out of hand and quickly resort to violence. This has happened twice as the result of Mr. Gandhi's propaganda; once most disastrously at Amritsar in North-West India nearly three years ago, when the military fired on the mob, which assembled following upon acts of looting, arson and murder. Neither

Mr. Gandhi nor the parties whom he represents can forgive Government for the manner in which it dealt with this outbreak of violence. Although Government has publicly expressed its regret concerning the heavy loss of life which was caused in dispersing the crowd, has undertaken to make provision for the families of innocent parties killed or injured and has disciplined General Dyer who commanded the troops, Mr. Gandhi and his followers remain irreconcilable and proceed with practically the same program, which again, just a few months ago, resulted in violence, in the Bombay Presidency, and in the calling out of troops.

Of course all these things have their influence and effect upon

Missions and Their Work

Whatever affects the life and welfare of the people either helps or hinders the progress of the gospel. We cannot be other than deeply interested in what is going on about us; and while as Americans we do not ask or desire to take part in political movements, still we have our duties to fulfil both towards Government and the people, by aiding and advocating things which make for peace, public welfare and good citizenship; and by loyally interpreting the spirit of the new Reform Bill and the legislation growing out of it. In the past we have pursued our tasks of evangelization, education, medical relief and industrial betterment without serious hindrance and, except in the matter of evangelization, with the aid and co-operation of the British government in India. As has been shown, both missions and government have been parties to the awakening; both have recognized, but each in its own sphere, the great worth of the individual; the one before God, the other before man; and both have sought his welfare. It seems plain, however, that, owing to changes brought on by the world war and to conditions arising from the new form of government, missions will have to readjust themselves. New times demand new measures. Shall we continue our present systems of education unaltered? Shall we continue to receive from Government, if we can get it, financial aid for our schools, hospitals and industries? Or, shall we say to the people, we will not ask for aid from your taxes; what we are able to do with our resources we will do gladly, and if you and your children are profited by it, that is our reward: take the gift in the name of Christ, who sent us; and take him as the Greatest Gift? Shall we add new forms to our ministry for the people? How can we best observe loyalty to the government by law established in India; and how best be sympathetic with the people? These are some of the pressing problems.

What of the Future?

And what of the future of Missions in India? That depends upon our answer to some of the above questions; upon what party gains the ascendancy; on how far the even hand of British administrators and fair-minded Indian ministers of state can exercise a restraining influence or put a check upon the extremists and secure for us a free hand; on ourselves, our behaviour and our policies, whether they are wise, fair, progressive and in the interests of the people; and lastly upon God, his eternal purposes in Christ and our co-operation with him. Madras, India.

The Supremacy of Service

BY PRESIDENT HARDING

Service is the supreme commitment of life. I would rejoice to acclaim the era of the golden rule and crown it with the autocracy of service. I pledge an administration wherein all the agencies of government are called to serve, and ever promote an understanding of government purely as an expression of the popular will.

One cannot stand in this presence and be unmindful of the tremendous responsibility. The world upheaval has added heavily to our tasks. But with the realization comes the surge of high resolve, and there is reassurance in belief in the God-given destiny of our republic. If I felt that there is to be sole responsibility in the executive for the America of tomorrow, I should shrink from the burden. But here are a hundred millions, with common concern and shared responsibility, answerable to God and country. The republic summons them to their duty and I invite co-operation.

I accept my part with single-mindedness of purpose and humility of spirit, and implore the favor and guidance of God in his heaven. With these I am unafraid, and confidently face the future.

I have taken the solemn oath of office on that passage of holy writ wherein it is asked: "What doth the Lord require of thee but to do justly, and to love mercy, and walk humbly with thy God?"

This I plight to God and Country.

A Mexican Pilgrimage in an American City

Where "incurably religious" folks are out of work—"and the women looked sad and the children stopped play." A hymn in the shade of a shack

BY ALICE BRIMSON

IT couldn't have been at all except for the high school principal with a fine Hudson Six, and a vacation and "a mind to serve." But even he didn't know all the rocky streets and byways and queer looking lanes down which we went that hot July day. "You've surely had a sight-seeing trip of all of the worst living quarters in our city," was his comment at the end of the day.

So it could never have been except for the guide, a woman who has eyes to see—a foreign mission association secretary who at the same time sees all the strangers in her own city and longs to help them. She is the ideal city chairman of Christian Americanization.

First, we went off north to pick up a volunteer, the sort of volunteer who never misses a single week. Then off to the first group of Mexicans. "You'd better stay here," said the guide to the driver, "and we will go through those yards up to the railroad tracks—that's where the folks live." Yes, it was literally true. On the track in one car, whose shade furnished a playground for children and kittens and chickens and a fine place to store coal and washtubs and hang some of the washing, lived our Mexican friends. Below the track were shanties where others lived. In one little shack, all freshly scrubbed, was an altar, with two shelves on which were all kinds of improvised vases filled with "bouncing bets." Surely women as well as men are

"incurably religious." The men were all loitering around and each gave the same hopeless reply to our questions, "No work—go every day—try everywhere—no work," and the women looked sad and even the children stopped play for a minute at those tragic words—"no work." In the summer sunshine we tried to forget winter's snows, and uttered a prayer to the Heavenly Father that he would not forget his children when this next hard winter comes.

Then in the shade of one shack and in front of another we started a hymn, "What a friend we have in Jesus." A little encouragement and the women gathered about and the men stood at the windows listening, while the visiting missionary spoke to them in their own soft tongue. He told them of that which brought the volunteers and the American friends to call—the love of Jesus. Reverently, with heads bowed, we prayed together to the Father who understands the cry of all of his children, no matter what language they use. "Tell the women we appreciate their coming—we greet them," was the message the strangers sent in their own tongue to the volunteers.

Back to the Hudson, to be whisked along to another out-of-the-way spot. We supposed we saw the neighborhood when we saw the street, well paved and respectable, but down a rickety stairs the guide took us—surely she should have taken accident insurance first—and there we saw another neighborhood made by the folks who live "in behind." That is the kind of neighborhood—dirty and unsanitary—which our cities do not have eyes to see. Hearty is the greeting of Mrs. Remus and Goya—for isn't this the American friend to whom they went in despair when the colored woman stole the baby—and as they look at the lad playing about, they know that he is back again because their American friend went to police and judge in their behalf.

THE PLACE CALLED HOME.

American officials can't quite understand why a Mexican should care if a colored woman does steal the baby! But when an American woman, and that a determined one, backs them up, it's different. Sixteen dollars the officers must have at once to get the baby, and the Mexicans didn't have the money. When the American came in, the officers dropped the money question. So there was reason for the hearty welcome that teacher and her friends found in this home.

Want to Learn "American"

On we go again, beside the canal, to see Thomas' family. Thomas is a bootblack up on the main street. There a Christian woman talked kindly to him and asked him about his family. So he told of his home, his aunt and the other women there who would like to learn "American" if some one would teach them. One little woman here has a Spanish Bible and is Protestant and in Mexico attended a Presbyterian church. So the missionaries talked with her and had a song and a prayer—Mexican kneeling beside American—bringing Christ close to that humble home.

Now, we drive past the Gonzales place. There we sing, too, for the Gonzales love music. Of course, we admire the baby and the mother points proudly to the little gold ring, tied on. The American teacher gave that to the baby. Then Mrs. Gonzales brings a paper to the teacher, and everyone looks troubled, and teacher reads the "notice to evict." Some questions and answers and some sighs, and a look of relief comes to Mrs. Gonzales as teacher promises to see the real estate man. Do the women of the churches of Christ—comfortably clothed and housed and fed—know of the suffering this industrial depression is bringing each day to his children who are our neighbors?

Lunch—and "faith we have earned it" and like Kipling would like to sit down for an aeon or two beside an electric fan. But refreshed and rested, we are all alert to go on when our genial chauffeur arrives.

First, to the outskirts of town—an unpaved, sunbaked street, no trees or grass, many children, ducklings dipping themselves in mud puddles beside the pumps and chickens that have never been taught the proper respect for human habitations! Upstairs—inside—a bare room with only two cots. Sitting on one a modern magdalena, a black cloth about her head; on her face a depth of suffering, physical, mental and moral that showed the weight of sickness and loss and sin. In her arms a baby borrowed from the neighbors to fill the aching void that came when her own was laid in its coffin a few days before. The wages of sin is death. Human help is powerless here. God alone by the blood of Christ can heal.

With heavy hearts and minds full of problems, we start again, and this time it's a pool room and a restaurant. There's a fourteen-year-old girl, with a pure, sweet face. Will she come up to the daily vacation Bible school? Goya comes and she likes it—and Goya is her friend.

The Arabs have a saying about the palm tree, that it stands with its feet in salt water and its head in the sun. They often cannot drink of the brackish water found in the oasis where the palm grows; but they tap the tree and drink the sweet palm wine. The palm tree, by the magic of its inner life, can so change the elements found in the unkindly soil around it that they minister to its growth and strength and fruit-bearing. So you and I, in our earthly life, must often have our feet in the mire and bitterness of sin around us; and upon our heads will often beat the fierce heat of temptation. But in spite of these things we shall be able to grow and grow strong, rejecting the evil and assimilating the good, if within us there is the making of a new life through Jesus Christ.

CHRISTIAN WORK.

THE BABY THAT WAS STOLEN.

The Human Story

And there's a baby in back; very sick yesterday, but the nurse came—whom teacher had sent—and baby is better. We're just in time for the end of the bath—no white enameled tub and daintily filled basket but there's water and soap anyway and if baby hasn't quite all the clothes we expect, perhaps he'll be better off for it this hot weather. Mother and father both welcome teacher and a neighbor coming in expresses her welcome, too.

Time for the train home, and ready for it, too, but the guide talks to the missionary about how some services in Spanish may be arranged for these Mexicans now and then; and as they plan, the Christian Americanization secretary dreams. These homes are just one small part of the contacts of volunteers with foreign speaking homes in one small city in America. This work belongs to two volunteers. What is being accomplished by the 932 now enlisted? God alone can measure the reach of the work as Christian women enlist to bring Christ in every home, by to bring Christ into every home, by way of the volunteer.

"For a Better America"—

in which the foreigner can find friendship, sympathy, understanding and appreciation; where education and opportunity are within the reach of all; where Christianity does not come upon one by accident in a back alley, but is the community spirit—the true America.

Farewell! God Bless You

An open letter to the Woman's American Baptist Foreign Mission Society, New York:

July 24, 1921.

Dear Sisters,—

Two days more and the steamer will take me across the blue sea to Europe. I feel that I must thank you for inviting me kindly to this wonderful land of yours. I enjoyed every hour of it and my whole life will be blessed by the influence of my new friends, in the States.

God bless you, sisters, in your great work. Your work will not be in vain. I see you—passing by—like a kaleidoscope of beautiful pictures. In my dreams I see you, smiling joyously, laughing, embracing me—your new sister, "Czechoslovakia." You took my country to your heart and God will bless you through it—by it. After some years you will have in Czechoslovakia sisters of which you will not be ashamed. To your next Jubilee I wish to send you fine, educated smiling girls from Czechoslovakia—I see them like in a dream now.

Keep on smiling and working, sisters; I will always think of you as smiling and working. I greet you, say good-bye to all, all in Newton Centre, New York, Yonkers, Buffalo, Rochester, Cleveland, Washington, D. C., Chicago, Minneapolis, New Prague, Spokane, Seattle, Portland, Oakland, San Francisco, Sacramento, Salt Lake City, Denver and Des Moines.

Now I am in God's country on beautiful Ayrmont. Seeing the majesty of mountains, I feel like praying. And seeing the beauty of love in this sweet home, I feel like saying, in saying, Good-bye: "There is nothing on earth as great and as grand—like Love."

LYDIA KOLATOR

Prague-Veltrus, Czechoslovakia.

July 5, 1921.

Dear Miss Prescott:—

I wish to present to the board of our society my sincere thanks out down from my heart.

1. For the honour they had done me to represent Burma in our wonderful Golden Jubilee celebration. It is a rare privilege which I shall always remember with joy, gratitude, pride and also with great humility.

2. For the closer relationship with the beautiful Baptist women of America. Especially those of the board who carry the burden of the great organization and yet are never tired. Surely as they wait upon the Lord they renew their strength. May God bless them each one. I have the friendship and fellowship of some of these beautiful women and girls and I shall value them above all things and I shall keep them as a bond and a stimulus for richer, fuller, more useful Christian service.

3. In the powerful inspiration of the spirit of oneness in Christ, of service, of consecration and of love from our wonderful meetings. It helped us as nothing else ever did before. It made us happy and feel privileged and blessed that we helped our sisters over here as well.

4. For the care taken, in the very details by our board to make us, your foreign sisters, comfortable in every way, with a free and open hand. Further you gave us Miss Parrott all the way, who knows and understands the East greatly to accompany us. We had not a care, not a thought about our frequent long travels with all the necessary numerous transactions. Everything was seen to already by Miss Parrott who, though herself not strong, gave herself up entirely to our comfort.

Furthermore you gave us Mrs. Doane, that woman of this board with a loving heart and a great understanding soul, to mother us all along. Our oft homesick attacks, our irritable spells on a long journey, our tired and wearied moments, our various and numerous little needs, troubles, and difficulties, she forestalled with her keen insight, intuition and love and had them all smoothed out, soothed, solved, and corrected with the most happy results all round.

Still further you gave us those beautiful lovely Christian homes, in our short sojourns at different cities. They opened their homes, they received us right into their family circles. They took care of us like our own parents and I know they all love us. We spent very happy times with them and we thank them and thank you for that kind care and love bestowed upon us and our only regret is that we couldn't stay longer for we loved to be with them longer.

Still furthermore, you gave us Mrs. Montgomery who has the beauty of holiness stamped all over her. Her spirit-filled life, which sheds out its rays of this worship of God in beauty of holiness, in itself is an inspiration to us. Her election to be the president of the convention for the coming year made us happy, proud and honoured. As you raise this status of your women in your country, connected so vitally as we are to you, we feel we come up to a higher level along with you. The example of high and noble womanhood will be a goal which we shall ever hold up before us. There are a few things we may repay in some income, but there are some which we shall never hope to be able to repay, but we shall ever remain debtors to you.

When I express my gratitude and my appreciation, I feel sure from our exchange of thoughts and ideas and our association together, that every one of our foreign representatives join heartily with me. You have cared for us in every possible way and you have loved us and I assure you, we shall love you right loyally in return.

The society has worked well and may well be congratulated. We came at your call, fairly gave specimen of the products of your fields, but we go back better ones with wider vision, with more zeal and enthusiasm with stronger faith and greater love, because we have seen and heard ourselves your work and your prayers, because we have experienced your love and because we know that the spirit of the society will be always behind us. The spirit of this society—the childlike spirit of our beautiful Baptist women of wonderful vision and great love—is the spirit of Christ yearning over the world. And He said, "Go . . . and teach . . . and lo, I am with you alway." So we will go and do our part, knowing your spirit and His Spirit will be with us always.

Praise God greatly for his bountiful blessings on us all. With my gratitude and love, Yours always in Christ.

M. SAW SA.

Sowing the Word in India

BY MARGARITA MORAN

(Extracts from a letter written June 7, by one of the workers in the mission in Nellore, South India.)

Since my return to India the last of January for my second term of service in Nellore, it has been very gratifying to see on all sides the results of faithful seed-sowing on the part of the missionaries throughout the years. Surely the circulation of Christian literature is well worth while. "My Word shall not return unto me void," as the Bible has promised. The field is ripe unto harvest. "One soweth and another reapeth and God giveth the increase."

Touring out in the country in February, I met a Christian man in a distant village who held up his New Testament to show me saying, "Seven years ago you gave me this book. It is now worn out with study and use. I am ready to buy a whole Bible and a hymn book, and I shall pay for them myself." We held a meeting in front of this man's house. He knew his Bible well, as we saw by his answers to our questions. He led in prayer, and although a layman, he holds a meeting every Sunday for his neighbors and takes a special interest in teaching the children. This man has real spiritual discernment. In speaking of the missionary who is the field evangelist of our mission he said, "That man knows the Lord. I can see it by his face. He has Christ in his heart."

One Sunday while sitting in our touring tent at noon, two Hindu women came to see me. One was humming over to herself the name of Christ. Looking up I said, "Oh, are you a Christian?" "No," she said, "but I heard the name of Christ at our mission hospital." "What did you learn about him there," I asked. "That it was a good thing to believe in Jesus Christ," she promptly replied. The two women were smiling and friendly, and after taking a good look at me and at the tent, they left, promising to come again. They afterwards invited the Bible women and me to their house and presented me with cocoanuts and cashir nuts.

During two weeks of touring in February we camped in two different centers in the district surrounding Nellore. We held meetings in about twenty-seven of the nearby villages, besides holding meetings at our tent. Some of the places we visited twice, and we called in many of the private homes. To the far villages we rode in our tonga, or dog cart, drawn by two Indian ponies, but when there was no road for the tonga we had to walk. Sometimes the Bible women had to make a chair with their arms and carry us across the canals surrounding the villages. For the public meetings we took the gramophone placing it in a central spot and using it as a church bell. The people flocked from all sides at the sound of the music, especially when they heard their own Telugu records. When a crowd gathered we stopped the gramophone and gave them the gospel in various ways. Sometimes we sang a simple hymn and explained it. Other times we told them a Bible story. "The Prodigal Son" and "The Good Samaritan" are two of their favorites and they never tire of listening to them. Our Bible shows its Oriental origin because the Bible stories are wonderfully well adapted to the people of India.

Wherever there are schools the children buy our books. They run after us on the road or come to the tent. One morning early some children came to our tent soon after I was up and stood patiently outside in a row holding up their coppers in their little brown hands to show me that they had come to buy books. It was indeed a picture and I was very much touched by their interest and willingness to spend perhaps their only coppers on a gospel.

They Hunger

We noticed that there was more interest than ever before in the gospel message and in the buying of Christian literature. Especially some of the men in many villages listened attentively and asked intelligent questions. They seem to have a hunger in their hearts for something and often have a wistful look on their faces. The old grandmothers often listen well too. Perhaps they realize their time in this world is short.

After the regular touring season was over, when it was too hot to live out in a tent, Miss Brunner, two of the Bible women, and I, especially when it was moonlight, used to go out on Saturday evenings in our tonga to hold meetings in the nearby villages. We took a picnic supper with us and held one meeting before supper for the caste people in the village, and one afterwards for the non-caste people outside of the village, selling gospels in each place.

The other day when giving the gospel message to some men and women in front of a Hindu house, the most interested person in the group, who asked really thoughtful questions, was a man who said that he had studied in our boy's mission high school ten years ago. One of the men who teaches our missionaries the Telugu language is a young Brahmin who is a graduate of our boy's high school, and who is practically a Christian at heart. A Brahmin teacher, now a headmaster in a government school, whom I gave a Bible when I was in India the first time, tells me that he is still reading it and believes it and that he has no more use for his old religion. He is ready to come out as a Christian, he says, as soon as the way opens for him to get another position.

On Good Friday in Nellore we had a most interesting and unusual experience. It was the day of the annual Hindu festival of the Juggernaut car. In the morning when the town was thronged with people in gala attire some of us went out in the motor car which belongs to our mission hospital to the center of the town. There we stopped our car and crowds of Hindus gathered around us. We were armed with our ammunition, the Word of God, because we knew that it would be a psychological moment for selling Christian literature. In about an hour we sold 104 books, mostly Scripture portions, and a few hymn books, making the change as fast as we could, and handing them out to the eager crowd. In this throng of Hindus where heathenism and idolatry surrounded us it gave us great satisfaction to give this witness for the true God through his written Word.

Surely God has set before us in this land of India "a door opened which none can shut." Will you not pray definitely with us that (1) God will bless the seed sowing of his own Word through the spoken message out in the villages and in the town of Nellore, and through the books which we have sold by the hundred in these places; (2) and that he will give courage to the secret believers among the caste people to confess the name of Christ as their Saviour.

London As the War Has Made It

BY WALTER CALLEY

IT was with some hesitation that I decided upon a summer's outing in Europe, as conflicting reports of post-war conditions made the desirability of such a visit at this time problematic. I came however, hoping that the more optimistic of the reports were true.

There were factors which detained me in London for three weeks—I say detained, for I had no intention of spending so much time in a great city. So it is of conditions as I found them there that I write. One who has made visits to London before the war could not but be impressed with the change even after two years and a half of technical peace. I was there in the latter days of the coal strike and of course this industrial upheaval and the Irish disturbances added to the sense of depression and nervous apprehension. The houses of parliament were closed to visitors as well as the great buildings themselves. For awhile the tower was also closed.

While there was an attempt to keep up a lively interest in sports it could be seen that the enthusiasm was not as spontaneous as of old. Seats for the American-British polo games brought as high as $100 and cricket matches and the races drew attention and fair crowds, but the informed said they lacked something. The forms were observed. The Royalty and aristocracy patronized them and the great dailies wrote of them, but the spirit which once characterizes these sporting events was absent. A prominent religious leader told me that since the war the people had been given over to pleasure and it was hard to interest them in the things of the spirit; and yet while I was in London nine of the leading theatres closed for want of patronage.

An Unfavorable Reaction

My impression is that the reaction from the war is affecting England unfavorably. No doubt it is a passing phase from which recovery will be made in time, but it is not true that the result of the awful world conflict has resulted in a mighty spiritual awakening—a turning away from the worldly selfish life. They were false and foolish prophets who preached that stuff. Whatever may have been the dire necessity for entrance into the bloody conflict, the result has not been and could not have been a spiritual victory. The reaction as seen in England is on the one hand that of weariness and depression and on the other an attempt to get comfort out of all sorts of amusement. There has been much loss and sorrow and the burden of taxation is heavy—along with this is the problem of unemployment and the whole industrial situation. While as I write it looks as if some way to peace may be found in Ireland. That question looks different as seen in England from what we in America seem to regard it. The London times and the whole string of Northcliffe papers are advocating a milder policy on the part of the government, and the Protestant churches are sympathetic with some kind of peaceful solution which will put an end to bitterness and bloodshed. If the English people were left to themselves they could solve this problem, but the matter is greatly complicated by outside interference, principally on the part of American agitators and politicians. We who were in London when Admiral Sims made his rather amazing remarks were deeply impressed with the intense feeling in the city on the subject. He may have been indiscreet, but he revealed the fact that he is the kind of an American who is loved by the English. They deeply resent our meddling with their domestic affairs.

An Optimistic Pulpit

I would not be understood as thinking that all is gloom or that there is a spirit of hopelessness in England. There is depression and both the press and the pulpit are urging the people to an optimistic view. There are prophets of a better, brighter day. I heard a sermon in Westminster chapel by Dr. Jowett which was full of good cheer. He called upon the downcast to behold the signs of the presence of the Lord. He recounted the evidences of better things as seen in the events of the hour in national life. The impression made must have been full of encouragement to the faint of heart and the heavily burdened. He declared that the daily press gave to the world only the thunder and rushing wind, but God was not in these. It was left to him of spiritual discernment to call upon men to listen to the still small voice—those events and signs of which the news-gatherer took little notice. In these were the presence and doing of the Lord manifested.

There is now a plain but striking monument to "The Glorious Dead" standing in the center of Whitehall. Around its base are laid every day floral tributes to those who gave their lives for country and humanity—mothers, fathers, wives, sisters and sweethearts bring them and when they have faded they are taken away in carts and others are being constantly put in their place. The inscriptions upon the cards accompanying the flowers are significant—"My boy, he did his duty;" "My only son. He gave himself for country and humanity," and so they ran, no hopeless wail but a sharing in that sacrifice was present in all of them. The grave of the "Unknown Dead" is in the most prominent place in the nave of Westminster Abbey and to it the crowds pay pilgrimage every day. May the years cause no abatement or forgetfulness.

Choosing a Site for a Church

The site helps make the church. Europe realizes this. America ignores it. Expert should select site as well as plan church

BY JOSEPH HUDNUT

EVERYONE who has been in Paris has felt, to some extent at least, the beauty and stateliness of her public buildings and churches. Mixed with some delightful memories of her joyous boulevards, her brilliant gardens, of her river and its tranquil bridges, of her antique houses and quaint tangle of streets, is the scarcely less treasured memory of a noble public architecture: of the Madeleine, for example, whose chaste portico rises so serenely out of the sea of traffic; of the Opera, loaded with its rich encrustation of ornament; of the venerable stern towers of Notre Dame; the martial dome of the Invalides; the chiseled walls of the ancient Louvre. We remember Paris as the seat of great palaces and splendid churches; and we are apt to think of these as an ideal so splendid that we, in our cruder civilization, can scarcely hope ever to rival it.

Yet if we were to analyze the delight which we feel in the Parisian buildings we would perhaps be surprised to find how much of that delight arises from something else than sheer excellence of architectural design. How much of it, for example, is due to that holiday mood which, far from our work-a-day American world, takes sudden possession of our spirits and prepares our eyes for enjoyment only; how much to that golden light which romance and history cast over even the meanest relics of the departed centuries. And what an enhancement of beauty the carressing hand of time has brought to the architects' work, softening its harsh outlines, corroding to the loveliest textures the hard surfaces of its mechanical masonry! These are elements of beauty, which, I fear, we in America cannot hope—for many years at least—to realize in our buildings.

Settings Deliberately Chosen

But there is still another attribute of the Parisian churches and public buildings (other than the fine qualities of their design) that we can, to some extent at least, emulate: the excellence of their settings. By this I mean the choice and treatment of their sites, their relation to their neighbors and to each other and to the city as a whole, their entourage, if I may use a French word, more expressive than any we have coined.

When we think of the Madeleine, it is not the Madeleine alone that we remember: it is the Madeleine placed in its balanced plaza at the end of the finely-proportioned Rue Royal and flanked by the flaming masses of the flower market. When we think of Notre Dame, we think not of Notre Dame alone: it is of Notre Dame beside the Seine, with its bridges and embankments and the spaces of green foliage which offer their quiet contrast to the procession of its pinnacled buttresses. And we shall forget the grim facade of the Luxembourg long before we shall erase from our memories the noble avenues of trees that lead up to it, the balustrades and terraces which raise it to so fine a dignity and the great oval basin in which it is so brilliantly reflected.

To the Frenchman the site and the design of a building are so intimately related that he can scarcely think of one without the other; and to him the "barbarous American custom" of throwing our finest public buildings—our libraries, our city halls, our churches—pell-mell among a disorderly mob of commercial and private buildings, with no thought of harmony, no order in their mutual relations, with no consideration of background or of approach, of relative scale or mass, of vista or of groupings—this to him is monstrous.

Buried Buildings

It is monstrous; and so long as we remain insensitive to these things, the skill of our architects will be lavished almost in vain upon the facades of our public buildings. In vain, I sometimes think, are the noblest proportions, the most exquisite ornament, if they are to be buried in narrow streets or put down carelessly in mean squalid surroundings, grossly elbowed by vulgar shops and hideous sign-boards, over-topped by the naked wall of gigantic sky-scrapers.

I wish that our American cities could afford us as many splendid sites for churches as Paris does—a city planned for beauty—but these have already been denied us, in great part at least, by the too-rapid growth of our great cities and the lack of prescience on the part of our fathers and grandfathers. The hard mechanical mind of the surveyor, and not the artist's, was permitted to govern the topography of our noblest cities. Our endless streets, rigid, monotonous, go on eternally in one direction only, with scant respect for hill and valley, river or ocean front. The even blocks, the regular side-streets, the uniformity of pavement and planting—these have ironed almost every trace of individuality out of building sites along their way. Our land must be sold, not in sites, but in slices, like cambric, and too frequently a thousand lots will differ among themselves only by some accidents of planting or by the differing shadows cast by neighboring buildings—or by their relative distance from the heart of Main Street.

Yet, even under these unpromising conditions we can, if we wish to do so, emulate, if we cannot compete with, the Parisian settings. Even in America there are variations of the tyrannous gridiron—precious accidental deviations! (Such a deviation, for example, is Broadway, which, cutting diagonally across the monotony of New York, creates along its course such irregularities as Union Square and Madison Square and Columbus Circle, those blessed green oases in an otherwise intolerable city). Even in America there are parks ready to lend their softening grace to a spire or dome seen from over their tree-tops; even in America streets sometimes end, affording a chance to stop their tiresome vistas with a portico or dome. And in America, too, there are lakes and river-fronts (which happily the railroad or the factory have overlooked) ready to lend their blue reflections to any architecture that shall be terraced at their side; and there are hills and valleys which even the engineer has not been able to erase: the great rock of Morningside Heights, for example, which lifts the new Cathedral of Saint John so nobly out of the city's side.

Our civic histories are, perhaps, meagre compared to the richly-colored histories of Florence and Marseilles, Vienna and Cologne; yet there is enough to give some significance to certain sites, as compared to others—if only we will appreciate and search for it. Even in America there are neighborhoods—areas which, from their differing use or differing population, take on an individual character. There is still room for selection and restraint.

I am speaking now, of course, from the point of view of an artist. I want to ignore for a moment practical considerations such as those which will persuade a church community, naturally, to choose a site near its center of population, conveniently accessible by trolley or automobile, with agreeable neighbors and a reasonable assurance that it certainly should be thought of; but beyond there lies the possibility of selecting a site which by its nature, will almost impose upon an architect the necessity of beauty, a site where beauty is nearly unescapable—or of another upon which beauty will prove almost impossible of achievement.

The trained eye of an architect is necessary to appraise a site; and I think our own Department of Architecture could be of even wider service if it were called in to consider each building project even before a site has been selected. A mistake, ruinous to the artistic success of the whole building, might thus be avoided; or, at any rate, the possibility of a great beauty, otherwise overlooked, might, by their advice, be seized upon and developed into a reality.

Imagine St. Paul's on Broadway

I like to speculate sometimes as to what might happen to the reputation of some of Europe's churches should they be transported by some sorcery to one of our American sites. Imagine the sombre dome of Saint Paul's, which presides, with such inexpressable dignity, over the red-bricked acres of London—imagine Saint Paul's suddenly lifted from its hill-top and set down on one side of Broadway, the Times Building looking condescendingly down upon it from one side, the Rialto Theatre screaming at it from the other. Or think of the still finer dome of the Sancta Sophia, to which the terraced roofs of Constantinople and the crescent of the Bosphorus are pedestal and forecourt, set down among the cliffs of Randolph Street, encircled with Chicago's exquisite loop. Or of the sister dome of the Salute which rides like some wonderful water-lily on the tide of Venice, moved unexpectedly to Pittsburgh and—but no, the thought is really too appalling.

We cannot remake Pittsburgh, we cannot remodel Broadway, nor can we smash the sorry scheme of Randolph Street and rebuild it nearer to our hearts desire.

The Devotional Life

The Greatest Thing in the World

(Notwithstanding Henry Drummond to the Contrary)

By J. P. TREAT

THE battle of Perryville, Ky., Oct. 8, 1862, while not one of the great battles of the Civil War, was a battle that sorely tested the courage of the young soldier boys, fresh from college, farm and shop, with but little or no training to prepare them for the trying ordeal. They stood the test, however, so far as courage was concerned, and the historian does not fail to eulogize their bravery.

Among the soldier boys who participated in this battle was young Chaplain McCabe, who, after the war, became one of the noted bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church. His regiment was placed just under the brow of a hill with orders to check and drive back the enemy, when they made a charge over the crest of the hill. The charge was momentarily expected but was delayed for half an hour or so, during which a death-like stillness prevailed and livid faces were the rule and not the exception. It was this waiting time, just before the rebel yells of the as-yet-invisible enemy began to be heard, that tested the courage of this particular regiment. While standing in long columns with guns, bayonets, and sabers ready for action as soon as the enemy came over the hill, and with death staring them in the face, young McCabe happened to observe that his legs were shaking violently. He smiled at the sight and exclaimed: "Old legs, if you knew where I am going to take you before this thing is over, you would shake worse than that!"

Courage Depends on Will

It seems to the writer that this incident is a fine illustration of transcendental will power—the kind of transcendentalism that makes character. It also shows how moral courage, inspired by high ideals, makes it possible for one to triumph over physical cowardice. In other words, all kinds of courage are the result of will power and those who possess it dare to do things, to take risks and rise to emergencies. It is the most god-like thing about us. It consults neither priests nor prophets. It obeys neither fashion nor custom. It bows to the dictates of neither monarchs nor nobles. It is a law unto itself.

Some one has said: "One of the greatest forces in the world is man and one of the most irresistible forces in man is his will. When the human soul gathers its forces together and makes final resolution to accomplish some noble or heroic thing, then it is that mountains sink into mole hills and men and women become the vice-gerents of God."

It is because a few great souls made great resolutions and carried them into effect that the world stands as it is today. What would art amount to if strong wills did not execute the designs? What would science be if indomitable will power had not given the concepts concrete expression? They would be mere fanciful dreams, and day-dreaming and castle-building would be the extent of human achievement. Were it not for such will power as Grant had when he declared, after the awful battle of the Wilderness, and the whole North was criticising him, "We will fight it out on this line if it takes all summer," not only would no victories be won on the field of battle, but no new worlds would be discovered, no continents would be spanned by wire and rail, and there would be no talking with persons across the sea or through the air as easily as one talks with his neighbor across the back yard fence.

It is the will that makes the love of country, love of humanity, gratitude, pity, sympathy, a controlling influence over our lives. It is also the will that casts down and out anger, resentment, revenge, jealousy, ingratitude, selfishness and all the rest of the foul brood.

Politics is said to be nothing more or less than a war of wills. The emotions of beauty, grandeur, sublimity, cheerfulness, happiness, joy and even conscience are said by our distinguished psychologists to be largely under the control of the will; and they also affirm that a strong will, kept well in hand, gives self control, self respect, dignity, poise, and strength of character—that kind of dignity and self respect that Garfield exhibited when he said: "There is one person in the world whose good will I will always covet and that person is Garfield." The reason given was that he had to sleep with Garfield walk with him, eat with him

Some people stagger at the words "a full surrender to Christ," and wonder what it means. Is the lover staggered when the loved one demands an undivided heart, an unmixed love and a yielding of body, soul and spirit? For there can be no real lasting love that will stand the test and strain of wedded life without the whole being being surrendered on both sides. Surely this is understood easily enough and God makes the same kind of demand and not without reason, because He gave all for me. He makes an unconditional demand of all I have and hope to be. As the Apostle Paul puts it in Romans 12, "Because of the mercies of God, I beseech you to present or surrender your whole spirit, soul and body, which is your reasonable service." And how can I expect God's confidence and love unless I obey?—GTPSY SMITH.

The psychologists also tell us that the will has a controlling influence over the other powers of the soul; that the intellect with its power of perception, of representation, of elaboration, and all the emotions may be made subservient to the will; that attention, imagination, memory, judgment and reasoning, are subject to the will.

Oliver Wendell Holmes says that happy is that man that is born well and that if this result is attained, he should begin the process with his great-grandparents; but thrice happy is the man who has subdued his own will and made it the instrument whereby the most ideal life is wrought out in fear and trembling—a life that is characterized by self reliance, honesty, truthfulness, energy, enthusiasm, pluck, perseverance, resignation and faith that moves mountains.

But what if the will is weak? It results in indecision, vacillation, stupidity, indifference, inattention, lack of self control and self respect, ingratitude, selfishness, cowardice, with a whole train of evils the mention of which space forbids. It means a wasted, fruitless life.

Will Culture in Character Building

In conclusion, the writer takes occasion to say that in his judgment more attention should be given to the culture of will, not alone in religious education but in public school education; for the culture of the will is character building and character building is preeminently the business of the teacher. Horace Mann, one of America's greatest educators says: "Character building the first twelve years of a child's life is worth all the rest. If the teaching of these years is not what it should be, all subsequent teaching is of the nature of reformation rather than education." Vacation Bible schools are to be conducted all over this country during the summer months, particularly so by our Baptist denomination. Should not the emphasis in these schools be placed upon developing the training will power that makes for righteousness and character building in all of its phases? Should not methods and exercises be thought out and put into execution, with the soul purpose of developing strong symmetrical will power—the fundamental thing in all character building?

Some one has said that hell is paved with good resolutions that were so badly shattered that they became of no effect. It is the business of the home, the school, and the church to remedy this deplorable result by the proper training and developing of the will; and the task should be intelligently and prayerfully accomplished.

Jesus Went to Church There.

Rev. W. M. Christie seems to have proved quite definitely that the marble building at Tell Hum, the ruins of which are now laid bare, was the Jewish synagogue extant in Capernaum in the time of our Lord, and built probably by the Roman centurion. The establishment of this fact is the more remarkable because up till now the identification of the town of Capernaum itself has been a matter of conjecture. It appears that the evidence accumulated in the last ten years enables Mr. Christie definitely to locate Capernaum at Tell Hum, on the north-east corner of the lake, and the arguments he adduces for this locality as the site of Capernaum, as being the only possible place on that portion of the shore of the lake for a city of importance such as Capernaum was, seem quite unanswerable.

From the position of the stones when excavated it is believed that the synagogue was destroyed by an earthquake, and the direction of its action was from east to west. Practically every stone remains on the site, so that the proposed reconstruction can be carried out with facility.

Sharpen Your Nose for News.

Dear Mr. Editor:—The following lines which popped up "as I lay on my pillow" are not copyrighted; I am sending them for the CHRISTIAN WORLD, hoping, if you see fit to use them, that a dilatory brother, "seeing, may take heart" and accustom himself to send in his news items a bit sooner.

Old news is no news,
Because it isn't new;
Old news, like old shoes,
Is very oft not true;
Old news is spent fuse
That makes the reader blue.

A column of stale news might be compared to the empty tube of a discharged fire-cracker, which is a bitter disappointment to the child that picks it up.

Hats off to the busy pastors and other Christian workers who send in their reports on special service and other happenings before these have passed to gray age. May we be delivered from the boredom caused by the snail writer who waits till Easter to write up his Christmas doings and till summer to report Easter accessions.

Working Without Tools

Rev. J. H. Giffin, of Kaying Academy, East China, in a recent letter to the Foreign Mission Society, describes the encouraging growth and the great need of the institution as follows:

"Kaying Academy has more than doubled since I returned to U. S. A. Then 110 pupils; now 260. Kaying Boys' School then (Jan. 1920) 377 (all grades): now 555. One of our students (according to letter just received) took P. O. examination for clerical position. He passed first place against eighty competitors. This ought to bring in more pupils—but we don't want them. Rather we want something to put them into. Our boys in France received support and 'put it across' successfully. We have practically no science apparatus, and are destitute of everything in the way of material equipment. Thus far we have 'put it across', but the question is how long we can do efficient work without tools."

One Man in the Pew Speaks

A layman writing in the Northwestern Christian Advocate under the title "From a Man in the Pew," says to the ministers, "When you are preaching do not fail to give use the gospel messages, clear and give us the gospel messages, clear and over our heads, lest we miss it and go away with souls unfed. Put more prayer into the preparation of your messages, that they may come to us warm, pulsing and thrilling, direct from the heart of God who knoweth our frame and remembereth that we are dust. When you meet us, give us a good grip on the hand and a smile and an accent that will carry your message true and sure into our hearts."

Ministerial Shortage

The New York Evening Post has been giving front page space recently to the question of ministerial shortage. Over a thirty-year period we find that the Episcopalian candidates decreased from 341 to 193; Presbyterian from 953 to 695; Congregationalists from 646 to 255; while on the other hand the Baptist went up from 977 to 1457, the Methodists from 506 to 976 and the Lutheran from 744 to 1265. It is likely that the increase in these latter three denominations is due to the fact that they have been accustomed to use quite largely ministers uneducated in the schools but are beginning to use school graduates more extensively. The Roman Catholic candidates in training increased from 1890 to 1920 from 1711 to 4001. Against this later figure may be placed the total of 6219 of Protestant candidates.

This Ford Requires no Prodding.

Now comes news of them from Nandyal, South India—where "gas" is "petrol" and where the Ford is still an object of much curiosity. The new car at the Nandyal mission is furnishing continuous service to its missionary owners and is a constant source of wonderment to the natives. A large amount of time is saved by the little car for the mission worker, as it enables him to make long trips in incredibly short spaces of time. It takes him to many villages not on the regular roads of travel and makes all points of his field more accessible. With the new vehicle three evangelistic helpers may accompany the missionary on his trips while the crude cart used formerly carried but one passenger and the native driver who alternately pushed and prodded the scrawny Indian pony along the rough dirt roads.

A Soldier's Verdict.

Major-General Maurice of the British army says: "As a soldier who has spent a quarter of his life in the study of the science of arms, let me tell you I went into the British army believing that if you want peace you must prepare for war. I believe now that if you prepare thoroughly and efficiently for war you get war. Since I had to discard my first theory, I sought another solution of the problem of how to avoid war, and I think I have found my solution in the League of Nations."

—Pacific Christian Advocate.

Beautiful Upon the Mountains Are the Hands.

Carried on the back of a friendly helper, Mr. Iwakiri, a cripple from birth, was brought to the platform of the World's Sunday School Convention which was held in the Imperial Theatre, Tokyo. Mr. Iwakiri is an itinerating Sunday-school leader from Miyazaki in spite of the fact that he has no use of his legs and feet and is forced to walk on his hands. He teaches classes and conducts Sunday-schools at places some distance from his home, often "walking" a number of miles through the sands to keep his engagements. Word has been received at the office of the World's Sunday School Association in New York City indicating that this Sunday-school leader has just graduated, cum laude, after his year of special Sunday-school and religious education study in the Methodist College in Kobe.

War Cost $186,000,000,000.

The cost of the World War has been the subject of considerable speculation, and interest is being shown in the figures given by Ernest L. Bogart in his recently published "War Costs and Their Financing" (Appletons). The author is professor of economics in the University of Illinois and has been trade adviser to the Department of State at Washington and was associated with the War Trade Board during the war. Professor Bogart's figures are based on the best available official information, and his calculations are said to be conservative. The net expenditures for both the Allies and Germany and her allies are found to be $186,000,000,000. Of the principal belligerents Great Britain is shown to have spent most, Germany second, United States third and France fourth. Professor Bogart compares the figures for the World War with those obtainable on previous wars. The direct monetary cost of the Napoleonic wars was $3,070,000,000, the American Civil War $7,000,000,000 the Franco-Prussian war $3,210,000,000.—Pacific Christian Advocate.

A Monkey Wrench and Three Eggs.

Tears persisted in alternating with laughter when the Polish Grey Samaritans who arrived in New York harbor this week on the "Amerika" tried to tell the story of their two years in Poland to eager groups who greeted them on dock and in offices of the National Board of the Y. W. C. A.

"I think," said Miss Josephine Tarkowska, "I could build a flivver out of a few hairpins and some of the wooden boxes and tin cans in which American food comes to Poland. We did emergency work through the isolated regions all hours of the night and day traveling by flivvers."

Sitting all night in the back seat of a dead Ford in the woods, monkey wrench in one hand for protection, and three eggs, the gift of a peasant in the other hand, while the driver went to the village for gasoline—was one of the tales of Miss Felicia Krutewicz of St. Louis.

The Greys are Polish-American young women who were recruited two years ago by the Y. W. C. A. for child refugee relief work.

Here Is a Good Baptist Scout.

It is always good to know the actual facts, even if such knowledge should humble our pride. Nothing can ever be gained by juggling figures so as to make a false impression. "The Baptist," of Chicago, calls attention to the fact that while Southern Baptists have been rejoicing over 175,000 baptisms last year there were 106,000 baptisms reported by Northern Baptists, and while Southern Baptists had one baptism for every 17 members, Northern Baptists had one baptism for every 12 members. We are glad to call attention to this fact and to give it as wide publicity as possible. In this respect Northern Baptists have made a magnificent record, and we rejoice in their success.—Baptist Advance.

Up From the Ranks.

Charles Dickens was a label-sticker in a shoe-blackening factory.

Michael Faraday, the famous chemist and physicist, was a journeyman book-binder, the son of a blacksmith.

Benjamin Franklin was a journeyman printer, the son of a tallow-candler.

Giuseppe Garibaldi, whom the Italians revere as their liberator, was the son of a sailor, and was at various times a candlemaker and a small farmer.

Napoleon was a penniless second lieutenant in 1785; in 1804 he was crowned an emperor.

Samuel Richardson, one of the first famous novelists, was a journeyman printer, the son of a carpenter.

William Shakespeare was the son of a glover in a little country town; both his grandfathers were husbandmen.

Ben Johnson, on whose grave in Westminster Abbey is the famous inscription, "O rare Ben Johnson," was a poor boy, the stepson of a bricklayer.

How That Old Liquor Bill Dwindles Beside This!

Five billions of dollars—what an immense sum of money! We are inclined at once to calculate how much good could be done with this gigantic amount of cash, if the Church of Christ only had it for use in the Master's work. Will you please stop, look, and listen for a moment, fellow-Americans? Based on the Federal taxes collected, five billions of dollars is a "minimum estimate" of the sum spent in a year by the people of the United States for luxuries and amusements! Think of it! We have travelled far from "the simple life" in this favored land. A year's interest on our national debt could have been paid by the $1,000,000,000 spent for movies and regular theatres. For ice cream and soda water another half billion went, and a fatuous people spent $50,000,000 more for perfumes and cosmetics. Just for the glorious privilege of chewing gum "the public" paid taxes of $1,500,000. As it is next to impossible to collect all the taxes thus imposed, the figures given are decidedly conservative, and the probability is that considerably more was spent in doing homage to the god of luxury.—Reformed Church Messenger.

A Beautiful Second Childhood.

Recently two men with rather unique histories were baptized in the Chin Hills of Burma. One, a man past middle age, heard the gospel stories told and asked that he might be allowed to attend the Christian school. He entered the primary class and, along with the little children, studied to acquire the first steps of an education. As he is the head-man of his village the missionaries had little hope of his actually confessing himself as a Christian, and it was therefore a great joy to them when he came and asked for baptism. He is old enough to know what the step means and his decision will have great influence on the people of his village.

The second was an old man, feeble and bent with age. Once several months ago he was traveling from one village to another and while on the very summit of one of the hills a terrific storm broke, filling him with a fear that he could not overcome. The storm raged with increasing fury and as he was too old to run from it, and there was no shelter in sight, he fell to the ground and prayed to be saved from the wind and rain. After a short time he looked up and found that the storm had been carried in another direction and the sky had cleared. This experience so impressed him that on his return to the village he told his wife and they decided that they both would become Christians. Their home is 23 miles from the Haka mission, and it was some time before the old man could see the missionary and tell his story. After much questioning it was decided that he was ready for baptism, and that at the missionary's first opportunity he would visit the man's home and baptize the wife.

Not Afraid to be Seen.

In Berkeley, Calif., we are putting over a fine piece of promotion work in connection with a Fair to be given under the auspices of the Chamber of Commerce. The Baptists have taken a booth right in the midst of the merchants and manufacturers where we will display a world map marked with our missionary outreach. There will be statistics of our worldwide enterprises. We are even daring to post up quite prominently some of the outstanding principles (not a "creed"! ha, ha,) we stand for. There will be displayed, pictures of Judson, Carey, Roger Williams, President Harding, Lloyd George, Sec. Hughes and Sec. Davis.

"Come Along Cherry Picking."

With that pretty, beckoning phrase as a starter, the Y. W. C. A. camp of Chicago girls in the cherry orchards at Sturgeon Bay, Wisconsin, has turned out to be a "successful experiment."

It was another way to earn your vacation and have it at the same time. Camp registration figures testified to the want among employed girls of a vacation which would combine outdoors and companionship with income.

Orchard companies provided barracks for the girls and carried the overhead expense. Pickers received two and one-half cents a quart for a picking of 50 quarts a day, and paid fifty cents a day for board. The Y. W. C. A. provided a college girl adviser for every twelve girls, a trained recreation leader, a nurse, and a cook.

A schedule that provided for nine hours' sleep, two and one-half hours of singing and playing by the camp-fire and under the stars, odd hours for swimming and hikes, was nerve-proof. Overalls, middies and a simple dress made up a cherry-picker's wardrobe.

Nurses Headed for West Baden.

There are 1975 nurses' training schools in America having 65,000 students, and graduating annually about 65,000 nurses. Yet more nurses are needed. There are probably not to exceed 80,000 active graduate nurses in America. Their numbers are too frequently depleted by marriage. The fields for nursing are various such as in: hospitals, social service, clinics, private homes, rural nursing, visiting nursing etc. Some enter into official positions, such as superintendents of hospitals, principals, supervisors, teachers, technicians and anaesthetists.

How to make our hospitals more Christ-like and promote a true missionary spirit in our nurses' training schools and hospitals is a vital subject. The Protestant Hospital Association, which meets September 12, at West Baden, Indiana, is putting on a program with this end in view. Strong speakers will have such subjects as "The Call for Nurses for Home and Foreign Mission Hospitals," "A Call to Life Service through Hospital Work," "What Constitutes the Efficient Ideal Church Hospital."

International Uniform Lesson for August 28

FROM ASIA TO EUROPE.

Acts 16:6-18. Golden Text, Acts 16:31

By JOHN A. EARL

The Lesson Text

In what way the Holy Spirit forbade the missionary party to preach in Asia is not revealed; but probably by some inward conviction that the time had come for the extension of the gospel to Europe. The inward conviction was soon corroborated by the vision in the night, and Paul wisely concluded that the party should proceed to Macedonia. The vision, however, did not materialize speedily, for they were in the city of Philippi waiting certain days before anything developed to prove that they had been divinely led. The gospel's triumphs in Europe began with women. The man of Macedonia was a vision, but the women of Philippi were real. They furnished the approach to a difficult situation. The work of missions owes much to the women.

The Lesson Taught

The man of Macedonia, the woman of Thyatira, and the slave of Philippi suggest three of the topics found in the lesson.

The Man of Macedonia

The man of Macedonia was simply the incarnation of a vision. Visions have always taken different forms to those who have been subject to visions. The vision of the man of Macedonia did not come to Paul out of a clear sky without preparation. Forbidden to go in a certain direction, Paul sought for light on the direction he should take. Bithynia appealed to him, but when he attempted to enter, the door was shut, "for the Spirit of Jesus suffered them not." God leads by the negative route of frustration as well as by the positive path of revelation. The closed door in one direction is often the sign of the open door in another direction. China closed to David Livingstone was the occasion of an open Africa; India became the field of Carey's great work and not the South Sea Islands which he first planned to evangelize. The man of Macedonia will appear in due time to give positive guidance, if perplexity will only wait and trust. It is a source of great comfort to all who seek divine guidance to know that they can have it in both small and great matters. This, however, does not mean that in seeking divine light men are to neglect the light of reason, judgment and common sense. One cannot read this lesson without seeing that Paul used his very best judgment at every turn. He first tried one thing and then another until he was convinced that there must be another way. God blocks as well as beckons. The upsetting of cherished plans is often God's interference. "Our disappointments are his appointments." When blocked let us expect the man of Macedonia.

The Woman of Thyatira

If the man of Macedonia was the incarnation of a vision which led the missionaries to Europe, the woman of Thyatira was the incarnation of the enterprise which was necessary to the planting of the gospel in Europe. Lydia was a business woman who believed in prayer. Instead of spending her Sundays in a desultory way around a hotel like many traveling salesmen, she found the place of prayer and made one of the number who worshipped God. Women have kept the prayer-meeting fires burning as well as the home fires. The gospel would never have succeeded in Europe without the Lydias. It is not without significance that the church was planted in Europe through a prayer-meeting kept up by women in the open air. The letter of Paul to the Philippians long years afterwards bears evidence of the fact that the church in Philippi was above the average; and although Euodia and Syntyche differed to the point of alienation, possibly one being strong for foreign missions and the other for home missions, the women who labored with Paul in the gospel were largely influential in giving the church at Philippi its fine tone.

The enterprises of the kingdom of God still need the business initiative and devotional spirit of the Lydias. While the men of the Northern Baptist Convention were meeting last year in Cleveland and academically resolving that tithing would solve the problem of the New World Movement, the women of the Northern Baptist Convention were actually engaged in the business of raising half a million dollars to present to the New World Movement at Des Moines, and at the same time to demonstrate that the task of completing the $100,000,000 is not impossible. The women raised the half million.

The Slave of Philippi

It is a long cry from the man of Macedonia to the slave girl of Philippi, but both were necessary in the planting of the church in Europe. God, who makes the wrath of man to praise him, caused this girl to speak the truth with regard to Paul and his companions. It would be an interesting study to search the New Testament for evidences of the promise that all things work together for good to them that love the Lord. The slave girl, held by her owners because of her commercial value as a fortune-teller, turned out to be a true prophetess when she cried out, "These men are the servants of the Most High God who show unto you the way of salvation." But Paul, like his Master, refusing to receive testimony from such a source, commanded the girl, in the name of Jesus Christ, to return to normal. With her peculiar powers gone the girl ceased to be profitable to her owners, and this was the signal for a violent protest against Paul and Silas which ultimately landed them in prison. Thus the slave of Philippi became the occasion of giving a publicity to the gospel which it would not otherwise have received and of introducing the missionaries to the Roman authorities as free Roman citizens. Through the man of Macedonia, the woman of Thyatira and the slave-girl of Philippi the gospel began its glorious career in Europe from which it has spread over all the world.

Church Vacation Schools

By THOMAS S. YOUNG

The hearts of all interested in the religious education of children, are made to rejoice over the advance in number and enrollment of church vacation schools for the present season. Splendid reports are coming in from all over the field of the Northern Baptist Convention.

We give the one state report that is most complete up to date, for the encouragement of schools still in session or about to begin. This report comes from Rev. J. M. Gurley, director of religious education for Kansas. Last year Kansas had seven schools. Most of these were conducted independently, a few in co-operation with other denominations. This season Mr. Gurley has assisted in organizing nineteen, of which twelve have been held. These twelve report as follows: Atchison, Pastor W. O. Shank, enrollment 130, average attendance seventy-five; Beleville, Pastor F. C. Ward, enrollment seventy, average attendance fifty-five; Chelsea Place, Kansas City, Pastor J. S. Jones, enrollment 187, average attendance 115; Bethel, Kansas City, supervised by Miss Nathana Clyde, enrollment end first week, 139 average attendance ninety-six; Horton, Pastor Wm. Lettle, enrollment 225, average attendance seventy. Frontenac, supervised by E. F. Hallock, enrollment 184, average attendance 140; Morrill, Pastor C. C. Overeen, enrollment 115, average attendance 105; Topeka Baptist churches combined, enrollment 124, average attendance sixty-five, Wichita, First, Pastor J. B. Smith, enrollment 245, average attendance 175; Holton, Pastor Horace Goodin, enrollment seventy-eight, average

Moses Aaron in Search of a Name

HIS mother thought his name was beautiful. More beautiful than any of her other children had, for Isaac was always being shortened up to Iky, and Rebekah Rachel to Becky; but Moses Aaron was so easy to say in one piece that nobody ever tried to shorten him up into nicknames. Perhaps there was no very good way to do it!

But Moses Aaron simply hated his name: "Moses Aaron Jacobstein," he would complain, "aw, say, everybody can know just what I been before they sees me—Sheeny! Sheeny!" they calls on me!"

"You should to be ashamed," Iky said lazily, "tell them you got an uncle what has the biggest second hand store in town! What more can they want? And ain't you got an uncle what is a rabbi, too? Say, you're hard to please." But then Isaac was almost too easily pleased; so one day Moses Aaron made up his mind that if no one else had proper pride about names he would start out and get a whole new set by himself.

You should have seen him prowling the streets and reading sign-boards. But in his part of town there were far too many other Jews, and the names on the stores were much too familiar. Seven blocks away the Syrian people lived in row after row of tenements, and their names absolutely would not do; so he balanced himself on the curbing, and absent-mindedly watched a policeman out in the middle of some very lively traffic, and while wishing for a name with one-half his mind he was deciding with the other half to be a policeman when he grew up, and twirl a "Stop! Go!" signpost in the rush and roar of auto trucks and street-cars.

Suddenly he wondered what the policeman's name was, and with tremendous courage he skipped out to the little island of safety, and shouted: "Say, Mister Cop, what you got in the way of a name, huh?"

You might suppose a policeman would refuse to answer anyone so very small, but Pat O'Flannigan was not the top-lofty sort of person. He squinted down at the little fellow and shouted back through the uproar: "Patrick Murphy O'Flannigan, at your service, sir!" And instantly Moses Aaron knew his search was ended: the new name was found! O'Flannigan—what a nice mouth-filling American name, especially with Patrick and Murphy before it.

So that afternoon at the House-Around-the-Corner (our Christian center) he went boldly up to the golden-haired lady in charge: "Please," he began, "I must make you a correction on my name. I got a different one from what you call me, and I should like to be called by it."

"Why, of course," agreed Miss Golden Hair instantly, "how horrid of me to be calling you wrong. What is it, Moses Aaron?"

Moses Aaron groaned: "Aw, don't never say that no more; Patrick Murphy O'Flannigan is the name you should to call me, so you please."

Miss Golden Hair stared: "Oh, but—but—why Moses Aaron, that's an Irish name, and you aren't Irish, surely!"

Moses Aaron stood on one foot nervously. "You should to know I am American, and that's my American name. All of us is American in my family from now on and forever more."

"Then have we the names of Isaac and Rebekah Rachel correctly on our record book?" Miss Golden Hair asked, opening the big book and dipping her pen in the ink.

Now Moses Aaron was not prepared to name the rest of the family offhand in this sudden fashion, but he knew it must be now or never; so in a thin, scared voice he finally heard himself saying: "You see, we got two full sets of names, and O'Flannigan is the American set. Now Iky, he ain't really Isaac at all, his American name is—er—er—" and his eyes wandered around the room in a wild sort of way until they rested on a picture on the wall, where a well-known American face gazed kindly at him, "Iky's real name is George Washington O'Flannigan."

Miss Golden Hair wrote it down very neatly and correctly in the record book, so that it seemed the easiest way in the world to stop being a Jew. Then very quietly she said: "And now, what is Rebekah Rachel's name?"

Poor Moses Aaron! He was all pins and needles, wondering what on earth to name poor Rebekah Rachel, something good enough to last forever. A frantic procession of Marys, Marthas, Ruths, Janes and Mabels scurried through his brain, but they had already been taken by somebody else at the Center, and he could not have Rebekah Rachel getting mixed up with someone undesirable. Suddenly the very plan popped into his mind and he selected his two favorite flowers: "Violet Rose O'Flannigan," he said proudly, and thought it altogether beautiful.

Even Miss Golden Hair seemed impressed, for she held her handkerchief to her lips and was unable to speak. So Moses Aaron hurried home, anxious to prepare Iky and Becky for the change, so they would recognize themselves.

It was not until he was climbing the steps of the rickety tenement where the Jacobsteins lived that he began to quake in his boots. For perhaps Iky and Becky would not like it. And they didn't! Not one least little bit!

"Why for should I be George Washington O'Flannigan," grunted Iky crossly, "aw say, you make me sick!"

As for the new Violet Rose, she sniffed in disgust: "You make me to sound like sachet powders," she complained, "I like I should rather be Rebekah Rachel. What will the father be saying when he finds you would be wishing Krisht (Christian) names on us?"

Moses Aaron was soon to find out exactly what his father felt, for very unfortunately he had met Miss Golden Hair on the street and she had said: "Good-evening, Mr. O'Flannigan."

Mr. Jacobstein bowed politely: "I make you a correction, Lady," he begged, "you have been made a forgetting that I should to be named Mr. Jacobstein."

Miss Golden Hair flushed: "Oh, but I understood from Moses Aaron that you had all changed your names."

"What?" roared Papa Jacobstein, completely thunderstruck. So Miss Golden Hair simply had to explain, although she now saw that poor Moses Aaron had evidently had a scheme all his own.

So presently Moses Aaron learned exactly what his father thought about having a perfectly good Jewish family turn into Patricks and Georges and Violet Roses. After a miserable half hour Moses Aaron was sent to bed without supper, and his mother crept in to comfort him.

"This is what comes of going with Krishts, mine son," she whispered, "you should to keep away. Krishts make no good with nobody."

Moses Aaron gallantly lifted his aching head from the pillow: "I tells you some things," he confided, "you can't for to have a mad on the Lord Jesus when all the time he's got such loving feelings on us. Nobody shan't stop me from being an American Krisht, not never!"

"O hush you, mine little Moses Aaron," she begged, "or father will make you more whippings."

The next day after school Moses Aaron hurried to the House-Around-the-Corner. The Golden-haired Lady looked up, smiling: "Good afternoon, Patrick," she said in the most matter-of-fact way.

Moses Aaron adored her for it, for he knew that she knew from his father that was not his name at all. Yet she was pretending for his sake not to know.

"I make you a correction," he said, "you must name me Moses Aaron. My father makes me a whipping for being Patrick. But you should to know I am an American Krisht in my heart."

Miss Golden Hair placed a chair opposite hers. "Sit down, Moses Aaron," she begged, "and let's talk about names. They really don't matter much, you know, but I honestly love yours."

"Aw say!" groaned Moses Aaron.

"But I do!" she insisted, "for I remember that it was Moses and Aaron who led the children of Israel away from the land where they were badly treated and unhappy into the Promised Land. It was Moses and Aaron who explained to them what the Lord God wanted them to do and be and say. If it hadn't been for what Moses and Aaron did, there might not have been any little town of Bethlehem where Jesus Christ could be born! There might not be ten commandments brought down from the mountain to teach us how to be safe and good; there might not be lots of other Christian things if Moses and Aaron had hated their names and disobeyed God. So I can't see why you can't just love to keep on being Moses Aaron, it's ever and ever so much finer than Patrick."

"Aw, but it shows I'm a Sheeny. I hate it!"

"But Jesus Christ was born a Jew, yet he lived so marvelously that people never stop nowadays to remember what he was, only what he did! Listen,—sometimes people called America the Promised Land, full of liberty and freedom and opportunities. Wouldn't you like to pretend you were another Moses appointed by God to lead your family into a happy understanding of these best things in America?"

Moses Aaron smiled: "When you says it like I was a hero, then I can to try anything!"

The Abalone's House

By DELPHIA PHILLIPS

THE pearly walls of the Abalone's home are very lovely, reflecting almost all the colors of the rainbow on the inside of the shell, but the outer surface is rough and dark in color. However, this rough outer "bark" can be ground away, leaving the outside as beautiful as the inside. Many people, when they first discover an Abalone shell in their walks along the rougher stretches of the California coasts, enquire for the "other half of the shell"; but their quest for it is in vain, for the big mollusk is a univalve, or one-shelled creature. Securely fastened to the tinted inner walls of his home, the Abalone clings to the rocks by suction, the soft, fleshy mass of his body being between the rock and the shell. There are a whole row of little round windows the length of his shell, through which he can poke his long feelers, and eject the water that flows in. The force of this suction is so strong that it is not at all easy to dislodge him.

He carries his eyes on short stalks, somewhat in the fashion of snails, and has a long tongue fitted with little rasps which enables him to scrape the marine growth from the rocks for his food. He walks on the under surface of his body, moving along the rocks in a queer, awkward fashion.

There are seven or more different kinds of Abalones (which, by the way, is pronounced "abalony" with the accent on the first syllable) but they have big long names, so we will just divide them into the three varieties that look different to the eye.

The red Abalone is perhaps the favorite, and grows very large. The prevailing tones are red, pink, and pearl. Quantities of this variety used to be shipped to Europe to be converted into buttons, inlaid boxes, and all sorts of ornamental work. The green Abalone carries more of the tints of the sea in his house, the colors being green, purple and blue, flecked with rose. The black-backed variety is like the sea at sunset, or sunrise, its lovely opalescent tints almost defying description.

The Abalone is found only in certain habitat. They have various names, being called "ear shells" from their shape, and "rainbow" and "aurora" shells from their wonderful coloring, but in California, they are known by their own musical name of Abalone.

Like the mussels, which are utilized in making pearl buttons, the Abalone shells are converted into many useful and beautiful articles. Tons of the shells are shipped to the factories in California, after the meat has been extracted. This meat is very palatable if prepared just right. Though it is eaten quite extensively when fresh, the greater portion is dried and sent to China and Japan, where it is a favorite article of food. The Japanese have regular fisheries in different parts of the state of California, where the Abalones are procured in large numbers. It is these shells which are made up into various articles at the shell factories. Of late years this sort of fishing had to be restricted, as there was a fear of the Abalone becoming extinct. Fishing for Abalones is no easy task. They are fond of clinging to the under surfaces of the rocks, and are neither easy to see or to dislodge. Some sort of short iron bar, with a pointed end, is usually employed in prying them loose. It is not pleasant to get a hand caught under the big shell.

When the shells are brought into the factories, they are first sawed into strips as lumber is sawed. From these strips the sections of the various articles are cut. They are oiled, polished and ground until they shine with a high brilliance, and are then fitted together by the skillful fingers of the girls that do most of the work. The number of articles that can be made from the shells are surprisingly numerous. Clock cases, mirror frames, all sorts of pins, button hooks, knife handles, backs for brushes, salt and pepper shakers, crucifixes, inlaid boxes and pin trays are some of the things that are made from the Abalone's beautiful home.

Young People's Work

Topic for August 28 LIKE SKETCHES OF GREAT ADVENTURERS

Luke 8:1-15 (Conquest Meeting)

1. A child bride and a widow. Little Chundra Lela was but seven years old when her marriage was celebrated with many days of festivity, but because of her extreme youth, and perhaps because her father vaguely visioned better things for girlhood and womanhood than his sacred book taught him, the little bride was kept at home for awhile. Her father was a very learned man, a Brahmin priest of Nepal, in the Himalaya Mountains, and in exercise of his office had plenty of leisure time, so he taught his little daughter to read and write, although in those days, eighty or more years ago, nobody ever thought of trying to teach a girl anything.

So the little bride spent two happy years in her father's house, and perhaps had almost forgotten to dread the time when she would have to leave her beloved home for the unknown home of her husband. Then one day word came that her husband was dead and she was a widow, the most despised of all creatures in India; for was not his death a visitation of the wrath of the gods for some sin committed by her in a previous existence?

Days of lamentation followed, mitigated somewhat for little nine-year-old Chundra Lela by the unusual love of her father. Ordinarily a Hindu widow must remain all her life a scorned and ill-treated outcast with shorn head, clothed in coarsest garments, and eating scanty and coarse food.

2. A pilgrimage to Juggernaut. The God Juggernaut is one of the most hideous of all the 315 million gods of Hinduism. When Chundra Lela was twelve years old her father took her and her mother on a pilgrimage to the sacred shrine of Juggernaut at Puri, a long journey of hundreds of miles filled with hardship. One sight of Juggernaut's ugliness is said to atone for many generations of sin, and he who dies after seeing him, enters at once the eternal sleep of the saved and will no more enter the ceaseless rounds of rebirth. After several days at Puri, Chundra's father fell sick. Before his death he turned over to her a bunch of keys with instructions about the gold she had inherited from her husband as well as certain houses and lands. His body was burned on a funeral pyre and the mother and daughter started homeward, the mother insisting upon walking because she was now a widow.

3. The long search for peace. For a year Chundra Lela devoted herself to the study of the sacred books her father had taught her to read, and then decided to take another long pilgrimage, visiting shrines at the four extremes of India. The first shrine was that of the god of Juggernaut where her father had died. Tired and weary she and her companions traveled to the temple of Ram on the island of Ramaswar, near Ceylon. Disappointed, she and her friends journeyed another thousand miles to Dwaraca, a great temple on the extreme west of India, sacred to the god Krishna. The next stage of the journey was to the fourth great temple located on one of the great mountains of the Himalaya range, 10,400 feet above sea level. After three days of worship here, Chundra Lela left unsatisfied as before.

4. Peace at last. Probably twenty years had passed since the fourteen-year-old widow had started out on her long search for peace. The child had become a mature woman, and though she did not know it, was nearing the end of her search.

One day she heard some white men, as they passed, talking of Jesus. She paid little attention, believing Jesus to be merely another god whom the foreigners worshipped. She began to read the Bible, and was greatly troubled in mind. She desired to know whether or not the Christian religion was the true religion. After considerable waiting and earnest prayer she resolved to become a Christian. In due course of time she was baptized and immediately began to tell the Hindus about Christ. For thirty years she labored, winning hundreds to Christ. Often she spoke to great audiences, more often to small groups out in the open, and everywhere to individuals whom she met by the way. (Adapted from Service).

John Burroughs was not only a prose poet, but disclosed, at rather rare intervals, to be sure, his own soul in verse form, as in the well known poem Waiting, beginning:

*"Serene, I fold my hands and wait,
Nor care for wind, nor tide, nor sea;
I rave no more 'gainst time or fate,
For lo! my own shall come to me."*

With these lines in mind, it is interesting to remember that death came quietly to him on a railway journey across the continent at the close of a long life.

Recommendations Concerning Young People's Activities

6. That, following the great financial drives, our young people pursue an intense evangelistic program. "Each one win one" should be our slogan for 1921-22. The Baptist denomination is greatly interested in evangelism. Considerable emphasis has been placed upon this phase of the work during the past year. Large place will be given to soul-winning in the campaign of 1921-22. Baptist young people are urged to give the most loyal support to their pastors in winning other young people to Christ and the church. On request to the headquarters of the B. Y. P. U. of America, 125 North Wabash Avenue, Chicago, Ill., we shall be pleased to mail free and postpaid to our young people's societies a copy of a little pamphlet entitled "Soul winning, a Privilege and an Obligation," by Dr. F. E. Taylor. Societies planning an evangelistic program should have this leaflet.

7. That we push with great enthusiasm a program of extension, calling for a 25 per cent increase in membership of the young people's societies in this convention. Some of the older folks proclaim from the "housetops" that the young people of today are the church of tomorrow. The young people are not only the church of tomorrow, but they are the church of today as well. The church that does not have a constant stream of young life coming into it through the various church organizations is bound to fail. It will ultimately die off at the top. There are literally thousands of young people in the communities surrounding our churches who ought to be won to the Saviour and to the activities of the young people's society. It is not enough for a select group of young people to have their meetings in the church and enjoy themselves in each other's presence. The young people's society is not a clique or clan, but an organization to minister to all the needs of all the young people of the entire church constituency. Twenty-five per cent increase for 1921-22 would bring into our churches and young people's societies 100,000 young men and young women. The possibilities after such an increase would be absolutely unlimited.

8. That we urge upon our young people everywhere the importance of the worship services of the church and the need of their attendance upon and prayerful support of such services. Many Baptist people have developed the habit of attending church once only on the Lord's Day. The example of fathers and mothers in this regard is now making itself

Conference for New Missionaries

At Newton Center, on June 6-7, a conference was held for the young women newly appointed as missionaries. The list of the recent appointees present at the conference, include: Harriet Barrington, Evelyn Bickel, Katherine Bohn, Waneta Deer, Susan Ferguson, Emma Geis, Mayme Goldenburg, Anne Harris, Grace Hill, Charlotte Lerner, Mary Matthew, Edna Mason, Esther Nelson, Sadie Robbins, Lucy Russell, Emilie Schultz, Edna Smith, Carrie Shurtleff, Margaret Stevens, Marion Tait, Gertrude Teele, Helen Tufts.

In addition to the addresses by the officers of the Woman's American Baptist Foreign Mission Society the candidates found especially helpful the talk given by Dr. F. W. Stait, on "Missionary Motives and Aims"; the address by Dr. Charles D. Leach, on "The Health of the Missionary"; and Miss Rose Nicolet's discussion of "Conservation of Health and Influence." The conference closed with a most inspiring address by Dr. W. L. Ferguson, on "The Spiritual Life of the Missionary."

Labor Sunday

The industrial question is one of the vital issues at this time. Human values are at stake in this question. Human relations under all such questions as labor and capital, hours and wages, and these relations must ever be considered. Men are to do the will of God and serve his Kingdom. Industry is here that it may serve man; its function is service, and its method is association. Industry, like every other interest of life, is a field for ethics and religion.

This is a question that concerns the churches, and in the Gospel we have the principles that can put men in the way of solving this question. It is for the churches to find the ethical values that are at stake in every situation, to interpret and to apply the principles of Christ in all industrial relations, to develop a body of ethical standards which shall guide our conduct and measure industrial action and to develop an active and discriminating conscience in the people which shall make them quick to feel the inequalities and evils of our present system. It is for the church to impress upon its members the necessity of nothing less than a fundamental change in the spirit and working of our economic life. Our work as Christian people in relation to industry sums itself up in the task of creating a state of mind which will put men in the way of solving our problems in a spirit of justice, brotherhood, and service.

Monday, Sept. 5, is Labor Day. The Northern Baptist Convention in common with many religious bodies, has commended the study of social and industrial questions and has recommended that the Sunday preceding Labor Day be recognized as Labor Sunday. It is hoped that many of our pastors will arrange to observe this day in such ways as may seem best. The Social Service Commission of the Northern Baptist Convention in co-operation with the two departments of Social Education and Service, has issued some valuable literature bearing upon the industrial question. Among the pamphlets are the following: "Social Unrest and the Opportunity of the Churches," "The Christian Spirit in Industry," "A Christian Industrial Program," "Social Justice," "Social Service Ideals." Copies of the above will be sent free on request. —Samuel Zane Batten, Secretary of Department of Social Education, 1701 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Northfield School of Religious Education

The most successful session in the history of the Summer School of Religious Education has just closed at Northfield. The registration totalled 678, in which number were representatives from nineteen states, the District of Columbia, and three foreign countries. The largest registration was from Massachusetts, with Connecticut and New York taking second and third rank respectively.

Fifteen denominations were represented among the registrants, a very convincing testimony to the non-sectarian and interdenominational character of the School.

A very strong faculty has been gathered to the support of the School by the management, of which Judge Robert Chapin Parker, of Westfield, Mass., is Chairman. The educational quality of the work is maintained at a high standpoint by the dean, Dr. Norman E. Richardson, head of the department of religious education of Northwestern University, Evanston, Ill, while the social and dramatic elements are under the most efficient direction of Miss Mary M. Russell, and Miss Edith Lovell Thomas, both of the Boston University faculty.

The General Conference of Christian Workers opened July 29. Among the men of wide reputation who will speak are: Dr. F. B. Meyer, and Dr. J. Stuart Holden, of London, Eng.; Drs. Charles E. Jefferson and Dr. John McDowell of New York City; Dr. John A. Hutton of Glasgow, Scotland; Dr. Samuel M. Zwemer, of Cairo, Egypt; Dr. Len G. Broughton, of Richmond, Va.; Dr. Charles R. Erdman, of Princeton, N. J.; Melvin E. Trotter; and others. The Lotus Male Quartet of Boston, and Mr. Homer Hammon-tree of Grand Rapids, Mich. will assist in the singing.

Mount Hermon Federate School of Missions

Baptists were noticeably prominent at the Federate School of Missions, held at Mount Hermon in the Santa Cruz mountains, North California, July 9-16. In the first place, Dr. John Snape, pastor of the First Church of Oakland, conducted the Bible period on most of the days, his topics being "Sin," "Repentance," "Faith," "Regeneration," "Sanctification." Also on Monday evening, July 11, Dr. Snape delivered a wise and witty lecture on "The Eloquence of Silence." Moreover, at the joint valley of Baptists and Christians at the Mount Hermon house of Mrs. R. E. Beach of the First Church, Oakland, Dr. Snape gave on Thursday afternoon, July 14, an address on the Northern Baptist Convention at Des Moines.

The pageant, "Others," given on Thursday evening, July 14, at Mount Hermon, to illustrate the textbook, "The Kingdom and the Nations," was written by one of Dr. Snape's church-members, Mrs. Geo. Thomas, and some of that church's members also took part in the pageant. The daily text-book classes in the books, "The Kingdom and the Nations," by North, and "From Survey to Service," by Douglass, were taught by Miss Frances Bates Patterson of Chicago, who also on Wednesday evening, July 13, gave a beautifully illustrated stereopticon lecture on "China," the country in which she was once a missionary. The daily morning period on "Methods," was conducted by Mrs. Paul Raymond of San Francisco, author of "The King's Business," and proved an interesting medium of drawing out the women's experiences in conducting mission circles. There was a daily afternoon hour for the girls' work, and a children's storytelling hour. Two Baptists, Mrs. R. E. Beach and Mrs. Miles E. Fox, of Oakland, First Church, helped diligently at the registration table. There was also a display of some Baptist missionary literature.

Registration by denominations in the Federate School showed that the Baptists stood second in numbers, the Presbyterians being highest. There were 128 paid registrations in the school, and numerous other people came to the free evening lectures. Baptist women representing the denomination on the interdenominational committee of the school are Mrs. R. E. Beach, Mrs. J. M. Davis, Mrs. M. E. Fox, and Mrs. H. A. Johnson.—MARY E. BAMFORD.

WESTERN WASHINGTON

REV. C. A. NETHERY, recently pastor at Ferndale, has settled as pastor with the church at Kent.

REV. ANTON HOK, pastor of the First Czecho-Slovak Church of New York City, was in Western Washington July 21-24. He spoke at the sixth Avenue Church in Tacoma and the University and First churches in Seattle. His messages were very favorably received and brought vividly to our people the opportunities among his people, both in this country and in the new republic of Czechoslovakia.

DR. A. M. BAILEY, pastor of the First Church, Seattle, will take his vacation in August. During his absence the pulpit will be supplied by the following well-known Baptist leaders: Aug. 7—Dr. John Snape, of Oakland, Cal.; Aug. 14—Dr. A. W. Rider, of Los Angeles; Aug. 21—Dr. E. M. Poteat, of New York; Aug. 28—Dr. M. L. Thomas, of San Francisco.

AMONG THOSE ATTENDING the Northern Baptist Convention in Des Moines from Western Washington were Dr. C. O. Johnson, pastor of the First Church, Tacoma; Rev. E. H. Hicks, pastor of the Fremont Church, Seattle and Rev. F. E. Dark, pastor of Tabernacle Church, Seattle. Following the convention, all of these took their vacation visiting friends in various places and enjoying a well-earned rest, after a successful year's work. They are back on their fields again and hard at work.

IDAHO

TWIN FALLS CHURCH much to its regret, had to give up Dr. Young as pastor, as he felt he must take up other lines of work, but has now called Rev. W. H. Tollner of Portland, Ore., and he will take up the work Sept. 1.

THE IDAHO SUMMER ASSEMBLY was a great success. Over 300 attended and enjoyed the helpful teaching of the men sent to assist. The delightful mountains and cool weather made the convention a joy indeed.

THE TWIN FALLS CHURCH put on a vocational Bible school in June which surpassed fondest hopes, as 200 were regular in attendance. The Sunday-school has been much strengthened.

NORTH DAKOTA

Norwegian Baptist Conference

The Norwegian Baptist Conference of North Dakota held its twenty-eighth annual meeting at Powers Lake, July 7-13. The delegation was not as large as in previous years but the meeting was in every respect successful. The atmosphere was splendid and a few expressed their desire to follow Christ. Quite a number of young people dedicated their lives for a specific life work. May God bless them abundantly. The inspiring addresses given by Miss Isabel Crawford proved a spiritual uplift to all.

The conference had the privilege of listening to the helpful messages given by State Superintendent F. E. Stockton and the religious educational director, Rev. E. Wiese, and also by Prof. Gunderson from the Norwegian Theological Seminary, and the general missionary, Rev. N. K. Larson. The following officers were elected: Rev. O. Larson, chairman; Rev. E. Monnes, vice-chairman; Rev. B. Kjenstad, recording secretary; Miss Lottie Lund, corresponding secretary; O. S. Hadeland, treasurer.

WISCONSIN

EVANGELIST JOHN M. LINDEN of Madison, during July supplied the pulpit of his home church recently resigned by Dr. MacLaurin. The Sunday evening union services of the down-town churches were held during the month in the Baptist building and the presence of 4,500 summer students enrolled in the University of Wisconsin afforded splendid audiences.

KENOSHA lost one of its oldest and most valued citizens in the person of Henry C. Dodge who departed this life July 15, in the eighty-ninth year of his age. He was born in Vermont, April 28, 1833. At the age of twenty-one he settled in Kenosha—where he resided to the day of his death. Mr. Dodge was clean, strong, dependable. In his church relations he was the embodiment of faithfulness. He was clerk of the First Church for a number of years, and a deacon at the time of his death.

MICHIGAN

HILLSDALE COLLEGE CHURCH: The congregations and Sunday-school have kept up their usual good attendance through the summer school including the pastor, ent pastor, H. M. Ford, has added 101 to the membership the last year and a half. This church has among its members a Persian, a Persian-Jew, three Chinese and a Hawaiian. It sent eight delegates to the summer school including the jarlov, a professor of the college and Pres. J. W. Meauck. A vigorous campaign of church activities will be put on in September.

MINNESOTA

REV. A. C. EARLY, pastor of the church at West Concord recently baptized five, these having confessed Christ in the union evangelistic meetings held there.

REV. C. J. GREENWOOD, Detroit, has baptized two.

AT THE NORWEGIAN CHURCH at Artichoke, where special meetings have been held, ten persons have been received by baptism. The services were conducted by Rev. C. H. Bolvig and J. R. Brygger, assisting the pastor Rev. C. L. Jensen.

THREE RECENT CONVERTS from the Sunday-school were baptized at the Lake Lillian Norwegian Church by Rev. E. P. Johnson, the pastor.

REV. J. G. JOHNSON, pastor of the church in East Rock Creek will close his work there the first of September, having accepted a call to the Third Swedish Church at Fergus Falls.

SWEDISH DISTRICT MISSIONARY, Rev. G. R. Anderson, has held a number of special meetings during the last three months with excellent results. At Washkish four were baptized, uniting with the church at Battle.

REV. L. O. WILLIAMS, Norwegian District Missionary, has just closed a four-week's tent meeting at Gully. There is no church there, but a considerable degree of interest was manifested and a number professed faith in Jesus Christ. The tent is now at Strathcona.

JULY TWENTY-SIXTH an ordination council was held with the church at Brownsdale and Rev. Ernest Volkenant was regularly ordained. The sermon was preached by Rev. J. McFarlane of Austin; Rev. F. O. Peterson, of Fairbault, gave the charge to the candidate and Rev. A. J. Hoag, of Albert Lea, charged the church.

WORK HAS BEEN STARTED upon the building of the University (Olivet) Church edifice in Minneapolis. The excavation has been completed and the foundation is now being laid. It is proposed to go on with completion as rapidly as funds are on hand and the first portion of the building that will be put up is the social section.

STATE SECRETARY E. R. POPE spent about a week in Glacier Park, with Dr. H. A. Heath of the General Board of Promotion. This outing was enjoyable and restful in the very best sense of the word. Go to Glacier if you want to see the mountains at their best.

REV. A. M. WHITEY closed his work at West Duluth and has already begun at International Falls.

REV. W. G. CLARK, who has served the church at Northfield for seventeen years in a very acceptable and earnest fashion, closed his pastorate there Aug. 1. At the request of the American Baptist Home Mission Society and the Minnesota Baptist Convention, he is taking up work as Baptist hospital worker at Rochester, Minn. Mr. Clark is pre-eminently adapted for this new and important work by his pastoral ability, sympathetic nature, and tactful dealing with individuals. His work will be primarily with the Baptist patients who come to the clinic while he will minister to others as he may have opportunity. Any people, particularly Baptists, coming there should get into contact with him through the pastor of the church, Rev. J. H. Beaven and he will be ready to help in any way. This is a new form of work which we believe will be very helpful as the years go by.

REV. MRS. EDITH FRENCH has closed her work at Vernon Center.

REV. E. L. TRUE, stated supply at Campbell, has recently baptized two candidates.

THERE HAVE BEEN nine vacation Bible schools held in Minneapolis Baptist churches. Two of these have been community schools, the Baptists uniting with other churches in the immediate vicinity. The attendance has been very gratifying and good results have been achieved. The school at the Judson Memorial Church has been the largest, with an average attendance of over 100, while no school has had an average attendance of less than thirty-five. Most of these nine schools have been conducted under the direction of the Baptist Union of Minneapolis and have been under the personal supervision of Rev. Jesse J. Runyan, executive secretary of the union. A school was held in the First Church at Duluth and the pastor, Rev. E. R. Fitch was in charge of the entire movement in Duluth. Schools have also been maintained in St. Paul.

Summer Assembly

Sunday, July 24, was the closing day of our ten-day summer assembly at Mound, Lake Minnetonka. More than 300 participated in the services of the day which were rich in spiritual blessings and reached their climax in the afternoon life service meeting led by Rev. E. A. Valiant of St. Paul. Twenty-six young people dedicated their lives to specific Christian service in this meeting. Two others made the decision the previous Sunday at the life service meeting led by W. H. Woodbury of Trinity Church, Minneapolis.

Sixty-three members of the Minnesota Life Service League were present on the closing Sunday at a called meeting for effecting a state organization. Robert Thompson and Richard Holland, both of Minneapolis, were elected president and secretary-treasurer.

The assembly was highly favored this year in its splendid faculty which included Dr. W. E. Chalmers, Prof. Conrad H. Moehlmann, Rev. Chas. A. Boyd, Miss Helen Crissman, Miss Naomi Fletcher and Rev. R. N. Crawford. The illustrated lectures by Sumner Vinton were enjoyed by large crowds especially of young people who were inspired to new conquests for the Kingdom. Dr. F. L. Anderson, of our new International Seminary at East Orange, N. J., took a few days of his vacation to renew acquaintances at the assembly and gave us four wonderful addresses.

Other features that contributed largely to a successful assembly which were the dramatization of the book of Ruth presented out-of-doors under the direction of Mr. Boyd, the musical entertainment under the direction of Mrs. Aller, the field meet won by the Judson Memorial Church of Minneapolis, and a stunt night which will not soon be forgotten by either faculty or students who participated in the hilarious time.

The Owatonna B. Y. P. U. won the banner for attendance, but Central Church of Duluth, Riverview of South St. Paul and Cypress St. of St. Paul also deserve special mention.

ARTHUR J. HANSEN.

KANSAS

Assembly and Summer School

The assembly and summer school, held at Ottawa, July 18 to 27 was one of the most successful yet held. The registrations from outside the city of Ottawa were 184, with possibly twenty-five to forty not registering, and forty-seven from the city, and doubtless between seventy-five and 100 more attending did not enroll. The attendance was better sustained than ever before, and the interest and enthusiasm ran higher.

The spirit was beautiful. All the speakers did fine work, but we wish to mention the work of several specially. Dr. Warner P. Behan of Philadelphia conducted the class in teacher training and gave a series of messages on "The Bible and Spiritual Values," also gave several special messages. He greatly pleased the people.

Dr. Thos. S. Young of Philadelphia conducted the class on adult work, led in church vacation school features and demonstration and spoke several times specially. His work was of a high type and called out very favorable response.

Miss Mabelle Rae McVeigh of Denver featured work with children and spoke several times before the assembly. She held the interest of her group from the first to the last. She led in presenting a missionary play of her own production that created considerable interest. She greatly endeared herself to the delegates.

Miss Elsie Kappen of Milwaukee was the representative of the missionary education department of New York, and led in one of the missionary groups, presenting the missionary book entitled "Playing Square with To-morrow," also spoke several times on missionary problems and world needs. She was very popular.

Rev. J. T. Latta, missionary on furlough from Burma, represented the Board of Promotion of New York and led in the other missionary group, using the late missionary book entitled "The Kingdom and the Nations," besides speaking a number of times on Burma and other phases of our missionary work. He did splendid work for us.

Miss Grace Douglas Thompson, Americanization worker of the Woman's Home Mission Society was present during most of the period of the assembly, lifting ideals along the line of this important work. She met with favorable response.

Dr. T. P. Stafford, of Kansas City Seminary, was a special speaker furnished by the Ministers' Summer School, but spoke before the entire assembly. He dealt particularly with the fundamentals of the personal life. His messages were very strong and were highly appreciated.

Dr. J. B. Smith, of First Church, Wichita, was another speaker furnished by the Ministers' Summer School. He led the group of ministers in the early morning hour in the discussions along the various lines of evangelistic interest. He won for himself a fine place in the thought of the ministers of the State.

Dr. J. J. Ross of Second Church, Chicago, was the leading speaker furnished by the Sunday-school and Young People's Convention. He spoke every day and sometimes twice a day. His main theme was "Our Spiritual Dynamic." He led the people into the heights and depths of thinking and experience. He won for himself a lasting place in the hearts of Kansas people.

Take it all in all the Assembly reached high water mark this year. With the prestige now gained it should be an easy matter to build up a great attendance from year to year.

The following officers were elected for the ensuing year: Paul G. Hudson, El Dorado, president; C. O. Long, Kansas City, 1st vice-president; Miss Mary Crane, Hutchinson, 2nd vice-president; Miss Lena M. DeWitt, Lyons, 3rd vice-president; Miss Jeannette Emmert, N. Topeka, recording secretary; Orlo Rolo, Ottawa, corresponding secretary and transportation leader; Miss Lois Johnson, Ottawa, treasurer.—J. M. Gurley.

Mrs. Joanna M. Lovelace

In the death of Mrs. Joanna Malvina Lovelace, of Turner, July 27, at the age of ninety, the Baptist cause in the Middle West loses one of its greatest benefactors. A woman of deep faith, simple piety and wholesome Christian life, she was interested in every great enterprise of the denomination and had made generous gifts to the Kansas State Convention to Ottawa University and to home and foreign missions. Her principal benefactions, however, were to the Kansas City Baptist Theological Seminary. The check for $100 with which the seminary began its life came from her. She gave $2,000 for the running expenses of the first year, that the school might be launched. Early in the school life, just twenty years ago, she gave the seminary the deeds of ninety (later increased to 115) acres of land, to be used for endowment, on condition the school continued to be operated in Kansas, within ten miles of Kansas City, Kansas. She reserved a life usufruct in the same. This property, worth from $115,000 to $130,000, and which in ten years will be worth $250,000, automatically becomes the seminary's, without incumbrance or lien. Mrs. Lovelace, besides many smaller gifts, a few years ago gave the seminary $5,000 for a president's home. These gifts, with the $10,000 assigned by the adjustment committee of the Northern Baptist Convention at Des Moines toward the purchase of a new site in Kansas City, ensure the continuance of the seminary in its great Kansas City field in the center of a constituency of 400,000 Baptists.

NEW YORK

PASTOR TILMAN B. JOHNSON of Salem Church, New Rochelle, has been unable to fill his pulpit for some time, owing to ill health. He expects to resume his work in September. Rev. R. F. Y. Pierce is supplying the pulpit through July and August.

GENEVA, HAVARD GRIFFITH, PASTOR. During the month of August the church auditorium will be re-decorated and re-lighted and put in a first class condition, making it one of the finest church auditoriums in the city; about $1,400 will be spent in this work. The pastor will be on his vacation during the month; all services will be held in the Sunday-school rooms. The supplies are, Rev. B. H. Eddy of Vermont; Rev. M. R. Hendrickson of Cortland; Rev. M. R. DeWoody of Port Jervis, a former pastor; and Rev. F. B. Igle, student pastor at the University of Penna. The Bible school has been divided into three departments for the month, with a teacher for each department; this is a new arrangement, but it is believed that it will work well as a good list of teachers has been secured. The pastor will return for the work the first Sunday in September.

EAST AVENUE CHURCH, ROCHESTER, seems stronger now than ever before, thanks to the efficient service rendered during the two and a half years between pastorates by the acting pastor, Dr. E. W. Parsons. As the new pastor, Rev. Clinton Wunder, will begin his duties September 1, it seems fitting at this time to pay a brief tribute to Dr. Parsons, who has endeared himself to the entire membership by his beautiful character, lofty Christian ideals, uniform courtesy, deep spirituality and self-sacrificing devotion to the interests of the church. Dr. Parsons' really great sermons attracted large and steadily-increasing congregations, so full were they of vital truth, presented in most forceful and beautiful language. Under Dr. Parsons' leadership the church pledged over $186,000 to the New World Movement and raised largely-increased sums for other benevolent objects and for current expenses. Dr. Parsons' work was done so quietly that the public and even many in the church itself doubtless failed to realize how much he accomplished, entirely without the aid of an evangelist. The different problems of harmonizing the widely divergent ideas of the members as to the future policy and location of the Church has been solved, a new pastor has been called by a unanimous vote, a warm spiritual atmosphere has been produced evidenced in part by a number of the young people pledging their lives to definite religious work, by two of the young men going to teach in the Syrian Protestant College at Beirut and by the eighty baptisms recorder in the 1921 report. The condition of the church when Dr. Parsons assumed office was extremely critical. He turns over to the new pastor a harmonious membership with a clearer vision of its great task and a deeper consecration to perform it.—George Letchworth, Baptist Church Clerk.

Young People's Summer Assembly

The fourteenth session of the summer assembly met at Keuka College, July 25-31. Two hundred and eighty young people from fifty-eight towns and cities crowded the capacity of the building. One hundred thirty certificates were issued for full classwork—work done by delegates. The educational program was up to its high precedents. Every phase of religious education received emphasis. The volunteer faculty did a thorough piece of constructive work that will certainly bear fruit.

Recreation features included everything in the catalog of sports on land and in the water, for boys and girls. Rev. J. D. W. Fetter, Baptist student pastor at Cornell, was recreation director. Table groups in the dining room organized as Indian tribes with appropriate names, such as the "Bunnybabas," competed for honors in athletics and stunts, and enlivened the meals with a chorus of songs and yells.

The New York Assembly charged a Registration fee of $3 per delegate and by this means has always been self supporting. The state Baptist young peoples' board is the directing body. By the courtesy of Dr. Norton and the Keuka College Board, the renovated college equipment was placed at our disposal without cost. At a very low cost splendid meals were ready for the delegates promptly at meal hours.

For ten years past the Assembly delegates have raised a fund and kept one or more prospective Christian workers in some high grade college or university. A sum of more than $600 was again raised this summer, which will help two or three students to an education they could not otherwise get. In this way the assembly already has workers it has helped educate ready for or already in the work in Japan, China, and India. The students aided will probably study in Keuka College, and Cook Academy, both of which feature training for definite Christian service and leadership.

The religious spirit of the fourteenth assembly was high grade. Earnest class work was done by the delegates. A delightful week was spent on the beautiful lake shore, full of the joy that comes to those who combine heartily work, self-denial, and recreation. The success of the assembly would scarcely be possible but for the co-operation of the American Baptist Publication Society.—C. W. Briggs.

WESTERN PENNSYLVANIA

THE FIRST CHURCH of Bradford has just closed a successful season with the daily vacation bible school. In many ways it was the best ever held at this church though not so large in numbers of pupils as in some previous years. The spirit of co-operation of the whole community with the enterprise was marked. The pastor, Rev. Fred R. McArthur, was the head of the school. Mr. Finley Keech, of Bucknell University was employed as the director, and there were ninety-two volunteer helpers from many different churches who were registered during the three weeks session. The total registration of children was 590, with an average attendance of 360 children and fifty-five helpers. Twenty-one helpers did not miss a day. The sessions were held in a large tent erected on the church lawn, and the various classes were scattered about through the tent and the church building. Craft materials were purchased in large quantities and given free to the children. Out of this material they made bead work, baskets, hammocks, toys, jumping jacks, aprons, embroidery work, etc. While their hands were busy they were taught Bible verses, Bible stories, and songs. All the finished work became the property of the child who fashioned it. The pastor believes that uncommercialized recreation paid for by the community at large and directed by responsible agencies is a solution of many vexing community questions and that the daily vacation bible school is one of these agencies. The commencement exercises of the school were held in the High School auditorium which was packed with interested citizens. It took the form of a regular session of the school and was entered into with evident joy by the children. Mr. Keech was the idol of the children and proved to be a very successful director of so great a school. The First Church, under the leadership of its pastor, has engaged in many successful community activities. The Christian Worker's Institute held in April was one of them which was attended by people from all churches. The junior congregation is a permanent institution in this church. Each Friday evening during the colder months the pastor gathers several hundred children in to see several reels of selected motion pictures and to learn Bible verses, stories and songs. These, with the vacation school constitute the only contact many of these children ever get with Christ's teachings.

Ridgeview Park Assembly

The summer assembly for Western Pennsylvania, held at Ridgeview Park, July 11-18, was the most successful ever held in the state. This was due primarily to the faculty, which was the strongest yet gathered together for our Pennsylvania Assemblies, to the unusual quality of the young people in attendance and to the able leadership of Dean E. A. Harrar. The merging of the young people's board with the education board of the Pennsylvania Baptist General Convention is proving to be a wise step in every way and ensures the future of the Sunday-school and B. Y. P. U. work. Rev. A. J. R. Schumaker, director of religious education of the Pittsburgh Association, is general chairman of the committee of summer assemblies. Ridgeview this year was a young people's assembly, in fact as well as in name. There were 200 registered delegates with many visitors. At least ten pastors of the Pittsburgh Association were present throughout and attended the courses with profit. The courses given by Pres. Milton G. Evans, Prof. I. G. Matthews and Principal Curtis P. Coe proved unusually inspiring and valuable, although every course given reached the highest standards. The vesper services were conducted daily by Rev. Jas. A. Braker, of McKeesport, and Pres. Evans had charge of the morning devotional period. Sunday proved a fitting climax to the week. The morning sermon was preached by Dr. Evans; Rev. Rittenhouse Neisser, associate secretary of the education board, gave the address at the life work meeting; and the consecration service meeting in the evening was led and addressed by Dr. H. J. Whalen, of Greensburg. Twenty-two decisions were made for Kingdom life service.

EASTERN PENNSYLVANIA

NORRISTOWN, FIRST, Wm. Houghton, pastor, had the largest vacation school in Eastern Pennsylvania with an enrollment of more than 300. The pastor was director. Miss Eleanor Price principal, and Prof. Whitehead, physical director.

REV. M. E. HARE has resigned as pastor of the First Church, Lansdale, and accepted a call to the church at Shamokin, where he begins his work Sept. 1. During his ten years service in Lansdale the membership of the church increased 70 per cent and the present beautiful auditorium was erected.

MR. AND MRS. ROBERT JOURNEY, who go to Burma under the auspices of the Foreign Missionary Society, were publicly set apart for their work at the First Church, Chester, Sunday morning, July 24. After a sermon by Pastor Jas. A. Maxwell, Rev. W. G. Russell, director of the state board of promotion, representing the Foreign Missionary Society presented their commissions, and Rev. C. W. W. Bishop offered a prayer of consecration.

THE FIRST CHURCH, NORRISTOWN, is mourning the loss of one of its most faithful workers, Mr. Thos. Sames, a business man of that city, whose death occurred July 16. He had had a long period of service as chairman of the board of trustees of the church, and at the time of his death was one of its most honored deacons. His work was not confined to his own church. He labored for many years as superintendent of the Sunday school of the Olivet Church of Norristown, and for nearly thirteen years was an active member of the educational board of the state convention. He well deserved the respect and honor in which he was held by the people of the church and community.

WEST VIRGINIA

HINTON-CENTRAL: July 25-31 was a season of intense activity and interest for Central Church. Dr. F. H. Divine of New York had been asked to assist the church in its campaign for funds for the new building. The goal was set at $70,000, $60,000 of which was for the building and $10,000 for the new building for the Alderson Baptist Academy which is nearing completion the last named amount to be applied on the New World Movement. The task was begun with some apprehension by a few of the members. Such an undertaking had never been conceived before. They had not been thinking in such figures for the kingdom of God. But this did not deter them. They went at the task with a sublime faith in their God. The result is most gratifying and heartening. Up to the present time subscriptions amounting to $67,012.25 have been received and they are still coming in. It was a great victory for the church and the community as well. The amount raised is in addition to the income which the church will realize from its old plant when they move to the new location. Rev. H. P. Hackney is in the seventh year of his pastorate with the church. During this time the membership has doubled and the average attendance in the Sunday school has grown three-fold.

RHODE ISLAND

THE DAILY VACATION SCHOOL conducted by Miss Viola Olson and Rev. A. J. DeSouza at the Union Church, Providence, with Miss Mary McCoid assisting, has just closed. Excellent work was done by the boys and girls. About twenty Portuguese children were enrolled; the others were American children.

FIRST CHURCH, EAST PROVIDENCE, has called the Rev. Charles Fisher of East Killingly, Conn.

CHESTNUT HILL CHURCH expects baptisms again in the near future. The Services are being well attended; this includes the prayer meetings. The church will soon have one of the large sign boards which our country churches are placing for the convenience of visitors and travellers by auto.

REV. J. J. WILLIAMS has resigned the pastorate of the Central Falls Church and accepted the call of the Georgiaville Church. He will begin his work September 18.

PASCOAG has called Rev. John Harding of Lonsdale, and he will take up the work in September.

REV. ALBERT ADAMS, JR. has resigned as pastor of the East Greenwich Church.

THE TWO CHAPELS which were missions of the First Swedish Church of Providence have organized as an independent Baptist church to be known as the first Swedish Baptist Church of South Auburn. Thirty-five members were received from the First Church, Providence. Thousands of Swedish people are in the community where the new church has been organized.

GREENVILLE CHURCH under Pastor Henderson is making progress. Fourteen were baptized on Sunday, July 17. Others are awaiting baptism. Three members attended the C. E. Convention in New York.

NEW HAMPSHIRE

THE CHURCH AT CHOCORUA is greatly favored with the ministry of Rev. O. P. Eaches, who came to this church from New Jersey last fall for a temporary pastorate. The parsonage occupied by Dr. Eaches and family was burned last winter and their loss in personal effects was considerable. A furnished house was soon placed at the disposal of Dr. Eaches which he still occupies while a new parsonage is being constructed. This church is experiencing some real newness of life. Six were baptized on a recent Sunday.

AT EAST ROCHESTER two young men were baptized June 26. This church has an active Christian Endeavor Society. Rev. G. F. Howard is pastor.

OTHER CHURCHES that seem specially blessed at this time are the Lebanon and Hanover churches served by Rev. C. L. Chamberlain, where an unusual number of baptisms have recently been administered. This has been the result of a quiet personal work conducted by the pastor.

THE NEW PASTOR AT MILTON MILLS, Rev. H. E. Whitcomb, recently baptized seven. This event has given a new impetus to the church life here.

A Site for a Church

But we can, in the vast checkerboard pattern of our cities and towns search for and find some spots where accident or foresight have left some traces of individuality or developed some peculiar beauty of environment: some places where Nature, breaking through the asphalt desert, asserts once more her "ancient solitary reign;" some places where the surveyor (who sometimes, happily, is more than a surveyor) has broken with the commonplace and mechanical and built a street or a crossing where some shreds of civic art are possible of achievement.

Such places are rare; but they alone are worthy of a church. Let us see to it that our new church shall have such a site. Just as a jeweler, by his rich and skillful setting, enhances the beauty, heightens the brilliancy, of a fine diamond, so let us set our church in the pattern of the city's streets, where it shall be, perhaps, the city's most splendid ornament. There may it shine with a bright and enduring radiance!

Church Vacation Schools

attendance seventy-three; El Dorado, Pastor fifty-eight, M. O. Clements, enrollment 124, average attendance seventy, Ottawa, supervised by Miss Edna Umstot, enrollment 350, average attendance 300.

This is an encouraging record. These twelve schools show a daily average attendance of nearly 70 percent. If Horton record be omitted because of its low average, for which there was undoubtedly a reason, we have an average daily attendance of nearly 72 percent. This is very high when we take into consideration the many attractions of the vacation season and remember that attendance is purely voluntary. This is a still more remarkable record when we realize that many of these children are from non-church going homes and often are discouraged rather than encouraged by the homes.

It would be difficult for Christian workers to find a more interesting, absorbing and result-producing field of effort than the church vacation school. But it demands thoughtful and prayerful preparation. The worker may find the difference between a marked success and an almost failure, in the matter of preparation, mental and spiritual. There are no little and unimportant things in a work for a company of children in a church vacation school. It does make a great difference in a school whether it begins its session in a brief prayer-meeting for the workers followed by a prompt opening of the session or begins ten minutes late amid a babble of children's voices. The same children marching into the room in orderly fashion, on time, preceded by the flags, either singing or accompanied by the piano and then going at once into a devotional program, means twice the religious and habit-forming reaction in these children, in half the time used by the other process. It does make a great difference whether you duplicate the program of your Sunday school in its opening session, or using similar material, you so vary your program and enrich it that a new and vigorous interest is created. With the rich suggestive material now in print, anyone who is willing to give time and thought can have such a program that the teachers themselves will be aroused to new interest. The ideal church vacation school will be so conducted that the children will be as deeply interested in the hymns, stories, drills and conversations as in the expressional work and games.

Young People's Activities

felt among the younger set. Many of them feel they have done their full duty when they have attended morning worship and possibly the Sunday-evening young people's meeting. This means that the pastor quite often preaches to departments rather than to the organized church as such, and quite often he preaches to varnish. It is a well known fact to even the greatest of our preachers that even the most highly-varnished sets of pews do not respond like folks. There are numbers of Baptist services, especially during the summer months in which there are not enough people in the congregation to whip a cat. A few of the saints who simply cannot be kept at home attend. In other words, it is felt that only those who have nothing else to do attend many of the evening services. Our young people must begin immediately an enthusiastic effort looking forward to the very largely increased attendance upon the worship services of the church by our young people. Young people who are busy can well afford to neglect some of the meetings of the various organizations of the church, but they cannot afford to miss the regular worship services of the church. We call upon our parents everywhere to set a good example for our young people in the matter of church attendance.

9. That we institute an international-wide mission study drive, the same to be opened with a mission study day in the early fall. The books to be used by our young people for mission study 1921-22 are, "Playing Square With Tomorrow," by Eastman, and "World Friendship," by Murray. These very attractive books may be secured from the American Baptist Publication Society for 75 cents each.

In co-operation with the department of Missionary Education of the Northern Baptist Convention a great campaign is being launched to interest the whole church in the study of missions. On request to headquarters of the B. Y. P. U. of America, leaflets on missionary education in the young people's society, and national missionary reading contests, will be mailed.

The week of Oct. 2-9 has been designated as mission study week. During these days special emphasis will be given to the matter of presentation of the two mission study books mentioned above. On some evening during this week young people's societies are requested to take up the discussion of the two books, looking forward to the organization of study classes. In addition to the work in the well-organized young people's societies, such societies are requested to organize automobile parties to carry the message of mission study to the outlying districts. The goal for the week will be to reach every society in the mission study campaign. We urgently request the co-operation of all pastors and church officials in the arousing of interest in this great cause. A brief statement regarding the two books mentioned above will be mailed on request to the headquarters of the union.

Propaganda for the Organist

Below is printed a letter recently sent out by the American Guild of Organists to ministers and music committees. We are glad to give a wider publicity in this manner, for the cause and motive are both worthy, and will have potent influence on the future of church music in this country:

"As one interested in the music of the church, the American Guild of Organists invites your co-operation in its efforts to raise the standard of music in our churches, and begs to present to you the following facts.

"The American Guild of Organists, chartered twenty-five years ago by the Regents of the University of the State of New York, requires its members to pass difficult and comprehensive examinations, in order to prove their fitness to perform the duties incident to their profession.

"It is a fact that almost every organist enters his profession from the high motive of a pure love of music; talent he may have, as the lawyer has a natural aptitude for the law; but it should be clearly understood that the education of an accomplished organist inevitably means as great an expenditure of time and labor as does that of the lawyer or minister, and often a greater outlay of money. In order to fit himself to assume the duties of a choir-master as well as those of an organist, he must acquire a knowledge of the voice and its use, and also a wide acquaintance with vocal literature.

"It is an indisputable fact that music is an important factor in the services of the church. In order to present a service that will inspire a spirit of worship, the organist must devote many hours to his preparation.

"If a high standard of church music is to be maintained and encouraged; if young students are to be urged to seriously consider music as a profession; then at least a fair recompense must be the partial incentive for the many sacrifices and the hard work entailed in securing the proficiency expected of the organist of the present day.

"The compensation of a great proportion of organists is pitifully inadequate. We feel sure that if a better understanding of what it means to be a competent organist were spread abroad among ministers and their congregations, there would result an immediate effort to pay organists more nearly what they deserve to receive.

"May we not hope that the churches will approve our efforts for mutual betterment by a proper recognition of their ministers of music?"

From the Scrap-Box

Often the leader of a choir of limited ability will be wise if he ignores a very close observance of the expression marks of choruses. We advise thus because some indicated effects require great skill to be done, and a mediocre attempt is apt to produce a very bad performance of the portions affected. We know certain leaders who have had much experience with amateur choirs, and not one of them ever tries to achieve an effect which is obviously beyond his singers' training to be accomplished satisfactorily.

Inexperienced organists are prone to "give out" the hymn tunes at a much faster tempo than that which follows when the singing begins. A bad practice: the tempo in the first place should indicate the correct speed of the tune to the congregation.

All of the rush and bustle and genuine inconvenience ament extra rehearsals may be avoided if Christmas music were put in rehearsal quite early in the fall and then "mildly" rehearsed until the rendition. We know two choirmasters who always produce a very pretentious program at Christmas who actually abandon severe rehearsals two weeks before Christmas so as to give their members plenty of opportunity for shopping and holiday preparation. The plan suggested above is what gives these wise gentlemen their ease.

***

There is a strong tendency on the part of young (and sometimes old) organists to favor voluntary books using only two staves. Two staves are easy to read, of course; but every hour spent with the two staves to the neglect of the customary three, is just so much time consumed against acquiring that reading proficiency without which one can never be an organist of any ability.

New Music Review

From the Clayton F. Summy Co., Chicago, Ill.

The Christ Truth Way...Hague Kinsey

Soloists in search of a simple song, well-written, modest in its demands upon both singer and listener, but musically valid and of melodic appeal, will welcome this carol-like lyric. The vocal range is such that it is usable for almost every type of voice.

From M. Witmark and Sons, New York, N. Y.

I would weave a song for you...O'Hara
Your Spirit Dwells with me...Penn
Little White Cot in the Lane...Penn
Mammy Dear...Grey
The Heart Call...Vanderpool
Regret...Vanderpool
Ma Little Sunflower, Good-Night...Vanderpool

The above series of melody-ballads, issued by one of the most progressive publishers in this country specializing in such material, contains some unusually effective material, some of the ultra-highbrow critics may frown upon such songs obviously built to appeal to lovers of "tune" and easy sentiment; the great mass of the public evidently likes such concoctions—else why the perfect flood of ballads filling the market today! The songs listed above are head and shoulders above much that is advertised to fill that large need—something above the cheap popular slush, but not connected with that much feared "classical" genre. Within the last few years, the larger mass of the populace has come to know and to like the better type of "English Ballad," and a swarm of composers on this side of the pond are turning such songs out on schedule. All of the titles listed above are first of all easy to sing and play, they are clean in sentiment and expression, they are appealing in melody and attractive as to color.

Church News by States

MASSACHUSETTS

AFTER A SHORT PASTORATE at West Medway, Rev. Arthur Jeffries has accepted a unanimous call to the First Church, Athol, and began his pastorate Aug. 1.

REV. A. BERNARD WEBBER, pastor at Avon four years, has done a work there that has attracted other churches to him, but he prefers his own field and people. It is the only church in the town, and is well serving the whole community. The people have shown appreciation of Pastor Webber by adding $520 to his salary.

THERE ARE TWO VACANCIES IN BROCKTON, the First and Warren Avenue churches. A full mile apart, both of them are well equipped to serve a growing constituency.

DR. ROBERT W. VAN KIRK was the preacher at Newton Center on July 31, the day of the notable thunder storms. Nature easily put sermons into eclipse that day.

WHO WILL COME TO Tremont Temple? That is a persistent query. As yet, we hear no whisperings. Probably there is no ministerial crusade towards that big job.

MAINE

REV. L. G. PERRY who came from a very successful and progressive pastorate at Lee is beginning his work at Dexter with a fine outlook. Congregations are large and the pastor is preaching the world-significance of the gospel. Mrs. Perry, who is an experienced teacher, has a flattering offer to take certain work in the public school. If she does this, she playfully says, "It will greatly increase my tithing money."

Board Meeting

The convention board made history in the record attendance for a summer meeting. Pres. Ranger presided. The convention force including evangelists, missionaries, missionary pastors, executive officers and department workers is larger than ever before and the work is correspondingly successful. Worthy of special note is the summer services of Director of Religious Education Henderson in his institute and summer schools. The one held at Richer Institute in Houston was greatly appreciated.

The Central Collecting Agency will be at Waterville and all missionary funds will be sent to Secretary J. B. Mower.

The four pastor evangelists are continuing their good work. A vacation of one month was voted to convention workers. This is something new in Maine, and will be arranged for the advantage of all concerned. Grants in aid were made to many churches for the support of their pastors.

A great enlargement of equipment is taking place at Farmington, where the exceptional work of Pastor R. T. Andem and the service of the church to the State Normal School makes larger quarters imperative.

Special aid was granted to Old Laron in the repair and improvement of the church edifice. This is the nearest Baptist church to the University of Maine and the Pastor, Rev. W. C. Schurman, will have special care for the Baptist students, of whom about 200 are in the university. The board voted its hearty support to the promotion department and declared that it would stand squarely behind its director, Dr. E. C. Whitteman, in the effort to keep Maine well to the front in the New World Movement. The greatly enlarged work of the Maine Convention is a proof of the wisdom of its executive, Dr. J. B. Mower, and the board associated with him. It shows also the immediate value of the New World Movement.

NEW YORK

BALLSTON SPA: The occasion of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the ordination of Pastor D. E. Sprague was marked by a gift of books to him and a spray of twenty-five Ophelia roses to Mrs. Sprague from the ladies, at the last monthly communion service; also their vacation was extended to six weeks which will be spent at their camp "Oak Lodge" on Lake Henka.

LAKE AVENUE, ROCHESTER, Sunday school, is hearing address in its adult department from such notables as Clinton W. Howard and Mrs. W. A. Montgomery. Pastor Albert W. Beaven is now on his vacation. An excellent vacation. School closed Aug. 5.

OHIO

MR. R. LARUE COBER was recently ordained at Trinity Church, Marion. His father, Rev. A. A. Cober, was a member of the council.

PASTOR T. H. McAfee of Trinity Church, Marion, who has been in precarious health, suffered a relapse in prayer meeting, July 20. He is still in bed but improving.

INDIANA

RILEY SANDERS of Bloomington passed away July 28.

ILLINOIS

MISS LENNIE RHODES was ordained at Pontiac, on recommendation of a council, Aug. 2. Participating ministers were W. C. Boyd, D. O. Hopkins, J. C. Seafter, N. J. Hilton and E. L. Dayliss.

MINNESOTA

MR. ERNEST VOLKENANT was ordained at Brownsdale, July 28.

MRS. WM. GILBERT, a member of Luverne Church for thirty years, died July 2.

NEBRASKA

REV. R. RICHARDS recently closed his second pastorate with the Ansley Church. The Lord has greatly blessed his labors on this field. He leaves a strong church with two vigorous out stations. Bro. Richards feels that the Lord is calling him to devote his entire time to evangelism. He has purchased a nice home in Grand Island for his family and they are now in possession. His address is 624 E. 11th Street, Grand Island, Neb.

A Chance for Ministers' Sons

Ministers are usually blessed with right-minded and promising sons. Many a business house has proved that they make good in the commercial world. One such concern, The Babson Statistical Organization, is so eager to secure that type of young man that Roger W. Babson as president puts before them special opportunities. He offers free scholarships to a limited number of ministers' sons who desire to take the two year's course in the Babson Institute in Wellesley Hills, Mass., which trains men to become business executives. Already many young men, under direction of a competent staff, are fitting themselves to take positions of responsibility. The ordinary charge for tuition is $2000, which is entirely remitted for ministers' sons who are selected for these scholarships. The total expense is board and lodging. The only thing that Mr. Babson stipulates is that the scholarship applicants visit his office and talk things over personally before they are finally accepted.

Mr. Babson, as many of our readers know, has become an authority on business statistics. His idea of business is that it should be made to conform to the Golden Rule. He is a Congregational layman who serves the denomination and the wider fellowship in many ways. He desires that all those connected with his business should be church members. We are glad to pass along this suggestion to the sons of Baptist ministers who desire every worthy chance offered them. In addition to Mr. Babson's connection with the Institute, readers will remember that George W. Coleman, a layman of international reputation, is president of the Institute.

New Books

"Heaven: A Place, a City, a Home."

By Edward M. Bounds. New York: Fleming H. Revell Company.

A posthumous work of the author, who died in August, 1913. He was a Methodist minister, an editor of one of the "Advocates" and an evangelist of excellent repute. His heart and mind seemed obsessed by a kind of otherworldliness. Mentally and spiritually he dwelt on Bungan's "delectable mountains" with the heavenly city in sight which he visualizes in descriptive rhapsodies interspersed with liberal Scripture quotations. These he presents with a literalism that seems to transcend the bounds of ordinary biblical interpretation. The seventeen chapters treat of heaven as a city, a place, a life, a home, a state, and so forth. Its devotional spirit is intense as is one of the old mystics. To some readers the volume will appear as too much given to literalizing and visualizing spiritual and transcendent objects while others will be spiritually nurtured and delighted with the contents.

"The Prophet of Reconstruction."

By W. F. Lofthouse, Tutor of Hebrew Language and Literature in Handsworth College, Birmingham. Boston: The Pilgrim Press.

The prophet is Ezekiel; probably on account of his symbolic language and uninterpretable figures and parables the least read and understood of the major prophets. Possibly the figures, like those in the Books of Daniel and Apocalypse, were to cover sentiments and desires that it was prudent to conceal from their captors and oppressors, but were readily interpreted by the "inner circle" of the readers, for the three books were written by men in exile. In any event the rhapsodies and allegories of Ezekiel have not helped to popularize his wonderful deliverances. This volume is a key to this unique literature. It is written in the best style of the scholar. It transfers the reader to the times and conditions of the prophet, and the history of the age is spread on like a panorama. Much of the historical element both in respect to the prophet and his times is inferential, but not fanciful. Possibly for a busy reader the inferences are overwrought as to details, but there is not a dull paragraph in the volume.

Fresh from the Field

New Bible Worker Among Mexicans: The board of the Publication Society at the July meeting appointed Mr. Francisco Colmenero of La Junta, Colo., as a Bible worker among Spanish-speaking people in Colorado. Brother Colmenero is highly recommended as a consecrated Christian brother by Supt. Edwin R. Brown, in charge of our mission work for the Mexicans, and by Dr. Palmer, state secretary for Colorado.

Idaho has a new director of religious education. The Publication Society and the state convention of Idaho have jointly appointed Rev. W. A. Shanks, one of the young pastors of the state, as director of religious education. He began his duties May 1 and is meeting with splendid success. Mr. Shanks will give some of his time each year to helping the churches of Utah in their religious education work.

Jacksonville, Florida, has been chosen as the meeting place of the next session of the Southern Baptist Convention which will begin May 17, 1922.

On Saturday, August 27, about 50 new missionaries, under appointment of the Foreign Mission Board of the Southern Baptist Convention, will sail from Seattle for stations in China and Japan, while a number of other missionaries who have been at home on furlough will return at that time. Japan will get at least ten of the new workers, the largest number that has ever gone to that field at a single time. Other new missionaries will sail shortly for stations in Brazil, Argentina, Chile and Africa.

Actual construction on buildings for the Baptist Theological Seminary for negroes at Nashville, Tenn., will probably begin in January, according to Dr. O. L. Hailey, secretary of the Commission charged with establishing the institution. Citizens of Nashville have contributed a site of forty-three acres and classes have already been conducted for two years with the assistance of instructors in Roger Williams University and Negro Baptist pastors of Nashville.

Baptist churches in England report 102 baptisms for the week of July 9, according to the Baptist Times and Freeman.

At the Lancashire and Cheshire Baptist Association in England the moderator, J. D. Robertson proposed a campaign for 3000 converts this year.

The Federal Council of Churches has created a commission on negro churches and race relations, headed by John J. Egan of Atlanta.

Evangelist S. A. Hayworth of Danville, Ind., during July held two successful revivals in Mt. Zion Association at Dolan with twenty-five additions and at Unionville with ten. He went to Youngstown, Ohio, Aug. 14 to supply the First Church, and will supply the Memorial Church, Indianapolis, Aug. 21-23.

Mr. Hayworth is now booking dates for fall and winter work. Pastors desiring his help should address him Walnut Hill Home, Danville, Ind.

G. A. Huntley, M. D., Baptist medical missionary in China, who has been on furlough in the United States, will leave for his field Aug. 23.

Rev. C. M. Carter of Detroit now traveling in Europe writes from Louvain, Belgium: "What the Germans did here was a plenty—left it in ruins."

Rev. E. P. Smallidge, pastor at Tekonsha, Mich., died on July 18 at the home of his son, at Spokane, Wash. He attended the meeting of the convention in Des Moines and from there went west to visit his son. Mr. Smallidge was for many years a pastor in Michigan.

Good news comes from the sick room of Dr. Polling, associate president of the Christian Endeavor Union who on July 4 was badly hurt in an automobile accident while on his way to New York City. A surgical operation, made necessary by the fracture of a lumbar vertebra, was successful and the surgeons now say that by fall he will be putting into the work in which he has been so successful all his old-time pep.

Evanston, Illinois, was one of the earliest places to work out a really practicable system of instruction in religion for week days. Some opposition developed, as was not unnatural, but revised plans have now been made so that the work will go forward during the coming year. Instruction will be given in adjacent church buildings instead of in the schools, but will be during regular school hours. The new plan will be put into operation in the south town district first and will probably later be extended to the north. Rev. F. A. McKibben will be in charge and much of the teaching will be done by a young woman who will be in different parts of the south district at different hours of the day.

Dr. Carter Helm Jones, the able pastor of the First Church, Philadelphia, is to be the university preacher at the University of Chicago on August 21 and will also preach the convocation sermon on the following Sunday.

The Roman Catholic Church has a fixed policy of erecting large establishments in the capitals of nations. In accord with this, large development of the new Catholic University at Washington is being planned. The Shrine of the Immaculate Conception, now being erected will cost $5,000,000. A new million dollar library is soon to be started. A stadium, on the model of that at Harvard and costing $500,000 is planned for the near future. We have begun on our National Baptist Memorial none too soon.

As is well known, great numbers of church letters which are granted are never presented to any church. The loss of churches through members who move away and get lost, so far as the church from which they go is concerned, is very great. The Universalists are trying just now by a publicity program to get in touch with such scattered members. The Episcopal Church has formed a "Church League of the Isolated," by which it hopes to keep in touch with Episcopalians who are away from churches of their faith. Messages are sent occasionally to such people and where possible visits are being planned to groups of them. All of which serves as a reminder that the number of lost and isolated Baptists is very large.

Four thousand churches in the United States are at present, it is said, using motion pictures in connection with their work. Men interested assert that this number will be very greatly increased during the coming year. Various motives are behind the movement, but not the least of them is to give children of the community clean and wholesome pictures such as they do not always see in the commercial houses.

The Bahaists are erecting a world temple at Wilmette, a suburb of Chicago. Wide publicity has been given to the plan which are very striking and the temple is likely, after completion, to attract itself every year large numbers of visitors. Rooms will be provided in which members of all religious sects may hold their worship.

Dr. J. S. Kirtley is just closing a service of two and a half years as acting pastor of the First Church, Winnepeg. He went to the church at a difficult time. The congregation had been deprived of most of its young men through the call of overseas service and few of them had returned. Church work, always difficult in the downtown section, was doubly so during the war and the period following the armistice. But the excellent service rendered by Dr. Kirtley leaves the church in excellent condition as the permanent pastor takes charge. His Christian spirit, his unfailing geniality, his interest in all the interest of the congregation and his earnest proclamation of truth have won for him a large place in the affection of the church.

Pres. Dearing of Oakland City College, who was recently injured in an automobile accident is able to get about on crutches, although it will probably be several weeks before he can walk.

Harp Evangelist Geo. H. Thompson, of Waterloo, Iowa, supplied the Walnut Street Church of that city during July while Pastor D. E. Purser was on his vacation. He expects to begin the new season's work in meetings with Pastor C. J. Greenwood at Detroit, Mich.

Evangelist E. S. Stucker of Ottawa, Kansas, and singing Evangelist Will S. Dixon, of Wheaton, Ill., will conduct meetings in the First Church, Duluth, Minn. Oct. 16-Nov. 6, several Baptist churches uniting. Mr. Stucker writes that he has numerous open dates for the later fall and winter.

Miss Helen M. Strong, whose thesis on The Geography of Cleveland won her the degree of doctor of philosophy at the recent convocation of the University of Chicago, is said to be the first woman to receive a doctor's degree in geography in America. Dr. Strong, who took her bachelor's degree in science at the University of Chicago in 1917, has accepted an offer to become assistant professor of geography in the University of Missouri.

Prof. John Merle Coulter, head of the department of botany at the University of Chicago, has been elected foreign member of the Linnean Society of London. Prof. Robert Andrews Millikan, of the department of physics, has been made foreign secretary of the National Academy of Sciences to complete the unexpired term of George E. Hale, and recently served as delegate to the Solway Conference at Brussels. Prof. William Draper Harkins, of the department of chemistry, has been elected to membership in the National Academy of Sciences.

Rev. A. E. Rapp of Prospect Avenue church, New York City, is spending his vacation Sundays with the Tabernacle Church in Brooklyn. By invitation of the Federated Churches and the official board of the church, he is conducting an attendance campaign. While August is not the most auspicious month of the year for work of this character, it is yet

It Can Be Done

Director Hudson and the Michigan Convention have shown that it is possible for a state to have a splendid bulletin and at the same time build up the subscription list of THE BAPTIST. Michigan has made a net gain in circulation every month. It need not be said that this result is due to careful planning and persistent effort on the part of all the field force.

Killam's Kollum

The Best Method

There is no one method which is best under all circumstances. This we graft. In the case of securing subscriptions for THE BAPTIST there are many ways all of which have brought most commendable results. The every-family canvass for both THE BAPTIST and Missions on the whole, however, brings the largest and most lasting result. It should be preceded by careful preparation.

Conclusive Evidence

THE BAPTIST is well aware that it has a real job to fairly and proportionately represent all shades of opinion among us Baptists. We believe, however, that we are having a large measure of success. The grounds for this assertion is that the extremes are both charging us with having sold out to the other group. A Chicago layman expresses his regret in the most expressive phrase at his command when he declares that we have become but little more than a second Watchman-Examiner; while a Nebraska pastor charges us with killing the Open Forum so that the conservatives could not be heard. Another brother in Michigan addresses us: "Sirs, but not gentlemen" and proceeds to exhaust Mr. Webster in telling us what he thinks of our liberalism. THE BAPTIST believes this is conclusive evidence of reasonable success in representing the great body of Baptists, even the extremists. In the meanwhile brethren, give us facts. All good men bow down before the plain unvarnished truth.

Demoted

One of the interesting signs of the times is the new emphasis placed upon the rural pastorate. In a recent convention the rural church secretary was giving a summary of the work in his state. In the course of the report he incidentally stated that most of the men were making good on the job as rural pastors. One, however, had fallen down and had taken a city pastorate. A ripple of laughter passed over the audience. This particular rural church was without real leadership and the pastor did not have it. His pastorate in the city furnished him with a group of strong men. All of which leads us to say that one of the constant responsibilities of the pastor is to develop lay leadership. One step is to bring every church member to an intelligent appreciation of the work of the denomination, as it seeks to make Christ known. THE BAPTIST was born for this purpose. Let an every family canvass for the denominational periodicals be a part of your fall church program.

estimated that the attendance of the church services will at least double the ordinary average for this month. He will also speak in the afternoon and evening the first two Sundays in September for the Bethany Memorial Institutional Church of Manhattan. During the week he is enjoying the glories of Westchester County at Old Oak Farm, where the Baptists of New York City are conducting a most successful Fresh Air Home for the children of their churches.

The membership of the Presbyterian Church in the United States is reported at 1,692,558, a net increase of 55,441 over last year. There were during the year 43,015 adult baptisms and 46,296 infant baptisms. The Sabbath school membership is 1,433,292, a gain over last year of 82,032. There are 9,842 churches, with 9,997 ministers, 45,581 elders, 17,714 deacons, and with 4,650 mansees. For all purposes the sum of $47,036,442 is reported as having been received. For home missions, $3,701,369, and for foreign missions, $4,200,144 were raised. For congregational and local church expenses the sum of $30,996,123 was expended, the rest of the amount, $16,040,319, being devoted to the various departments of missionary beneficence.

In his recent book, "What Christianity Means to Me," Dr. Lyman Abbott gives the following definition of the gospel, which, incomplete as it is and omitting what seem to many of us certain essential things, yet gives in beautiful form the function of faith. He says: "The gospel, then, reduced to its simplest form, may be stated thus: God wishes me to be his son. Do I wish God to be my Heavenly Father? If this is what I really wish, he will take me as I am and make me what he wishes me to be. All that he asks is that I should wish to be what he wishes me to be. Faith is just the desire to be like God; it is reaching out the hand and taking hold of the stretched-out hand of God."

The Baptist Times and Freeman of London has in a recent issue an appreciative note concerning Col. E. H. Haskell, of Boston, whom it describes as "one of the most interesting American Baptist visitors in London this summer." It says of him what we here all know: "Though seventy-six years of age, Col. Haskell is still hale and active. His eye is not dimmed, nor is his natural strength abated," and expresses great interest in the Ministers and Missionaries Benefit Board of which he is president. Col. Haskell, together with his daughter, spent some weeks in England after which they toured as far as Switzerland and finally sailed for home on July 12.

In a recent article in the Baptist Times and Freeman of London, describing his journeyings in the territory of the Northern Baptist Convention, Dr. J. H. Rushbrooke has the following to say of two of our well-known pastors: "Sunday morning, June 12, found me in Philadelphia. My service was at the First Baptist Church, of which Dr. Carter Helm Jones, one of a group of brothers who are all well-known preachers, is pastor. (Dr. Jones, a remarkably gifted man, is descended from one of the signatories of the Declaration of Independence, and his wife is a first cousin of Lady Astor, M. P.) The First Church, a historic foundation, is now a 'down-town' church, but still retains its vitality and influence. From Philadelphia I journeyed to New York in time to attend the evening service in Dr. Massee's great Brooklyn Temple, where, despite the excessive heat, I found a very large company—a vigorously, enthusiastically evangelistic people, and far from "stiff," as was evident when a hearer rose at the close of my address to put a question, and another followed with a second question on the subject-matter. It was a happy day, with warm welcomes and countless handgrips and God-speeds."

Beginning October 1 a new marriage act goes into force in Ontario, Canada. At that time the privilege of issuing marriage licenses is to be taken out of the hand of jewellers who have so long held it and vested with municipal clerks. Thereafter also only duly registered clergymen of recognized denominations may legally perform a marriage ceremony. The larger denominations have already sent in to the Provincial Department of Health for registration a list of their ministers throughout the province. The right of ministers of some of the lesser denominations to perform marriages may be questioned under the new act.

Gipsy Smith has been engaged for an evangelistic campaign in Pittsburgh, Pa., to begin Sept. 11 and continue through October.

Within a short time China will be able to supply all her own cotton yarn, if present plans materialize. According to the managing director of the Oriental King Cotton Company, who recently returned to Tokyo after a trip through China, 300,000 of the 1,000,000 spindles which are to be installed in various parts of the country are already in operation.

Excavations being conducted at Ascalon, Palestine, by the British School of Archaeology in Jerusalem are reported to have resulted in the discovery of a large image of Herod the Great. Archaeologists also claim to have uncovered the stoa around the great court of Herod, which is referred to by Josephus.

An American woman elder in a Japanese Presbyterian church seems almost an anomaly. Yet Miss A. Caroline Macdonald of London, Ont., has recently been elected to that position in the Fugimicho Church of Christ, in Tokyo the largest Presbyterian church in Japan. At the time of her election to the eldership, seven other women, all Japanese were also elected elders, along with sixteen men. The pastor is the well-known Japanese preacher Mr. Uemura. Miss Macdonald, who is the only foreign member of the Fugimicho church, was national secretary of the Y. W. C. A. in Japan for nearly fifteen years, but is now working as an independent missionary among prisoners.

Rev. Charles W. Gilkey, pastor of Hyde Park Church, Chicago, has spent a highly interesting summer in Europe. His last personal letter to his church in July reported him in Italy. Mrs. Gilkey is with him and the children are with friends in England.

Miss Constance Ball of Hyde Park Church, Chicago, sailed August 18 on the S. S. Empress of Asia for Japan. Miss Ball has been for the past three years executive of the central field student department of the Y. W. C. A. After a year of language work at Tokyo, Miss Ball will do student work throughout Japan. Her address will be 12 Sen Chome, Tamachi, Ushigome, Tokyo Japan and it takes a five cent stamp to carry so long an address.

Shifting Chapel Car Workers

Rev. and Mrs. F. I. Blanchard, chapel car missionaries, closed their labors in Missouri in June, have been transferred to Chapel Car, "Evangel" and will labor in Nebraska and Wyoming. The Car, "Glad Tidings," their former car, has been transferred to Arizona where Rev. A. B. Howell, with the car, will work among the Spanish speaking people.

Rev. and Mrs. Blanchard's last week was at Little Blue, Mo., where there was not even a Sunday school. Now there is a live Baptist church and Sunday school. A B. Y. B. U., a Woman's auxiliary, splendid congregations, and largely attended prayer meetings; a neat church building all paid for but $100, and that pledged to be paid within sixty days, a splendid pastor secured and his salary all raised, and all without any aid of any organization either within or outside of the state.

This is the second building erected by them while in Missouri. The other was at North Kansas City.

Dr. Cyrus Ingerson Scofield, known all over the country as a Bible expositor, publisher of the Scofield Reference Bible, and at one time pastor of the Moody church at Northfield, Mass., died recently at his home on Long Island. He was seventy-eight years of age.

Some Additional Suggestions

BY BRUCE KINNEY

In justice to myself I would like to make some explanation of my comments on the recent Des Moines Convention under the title "As Bruce Kinney Saw It." As intimated I was asked to make such statement in writing as I had made in conversation to one of the editors. I was asked as others were, to limit what I had to say to 250 words. I think only one other man kept within those limits. I could not say all that I thought and felt within that limitation. I was fearful that some might forget the serious side of some situations which confront us. But it will be noted that several writers mention one or more of the dangers which were stated by me. I am an incurable optimist. But the real optimist will recognize the dangers, face them and say that by the Grace of God we can and will overcome them.

I have nothing to retract but want to declare that I appreciate the many good things that were accomplished and the glorious "high spots" most of which have been mentioned by others. Our situation is by no means hopeless but it is grave.

Having said this much may I make some constructive suggestions:

1. Can we not all resort to prayer to the end that we may all approach another convention determined to put aside petty things and get busy on the tasks that are before us?

2. Can we not have more "previous publicity" as to what various committees are to report? This is not a criticism of any committee which refused to report prior to the Des Moines convention. They were instructed by the action appointing them to report to the convention. Had I been a member of said committees I think I should have felt that we had no right to release our report prior to the convention.

Last year at Buffalo matters were thrust upon us suddenly and without having time to think them through. Heated discussions were indulged in which must always be regretted. Then we thought over these things for one year, a commit-

The Suffering Christ in Russia

"INASMUCH as ye have not done it unto one of these least," said Jesus in one of his striking parables, "ye have not done it unto me," thus identifying himself with the sufferer. Yet again, in the parable of the good Samaritan, he made it clear that the neighbor whom we are to love is the one who is in need and whom we can reach. There is no impropriety, therefore, in speaking of "the suffering Christ in Russia," as there come to us tales of the dreadful famine which is afflicting that land.

At the present time, owing to the failure of the harvest and the overthrow of the industry which has accompanied the Soviet regime, some 25,000,000 Russians are in imminent danger of death by starvation. In places, also, cholera is raging. Pestilence may any day reach such proportions that it will threaten not only the Russian population but other peoples. If help is to be given it must be quickly. Vessels of grain must reach Russian harbors before these are frozen over. The appeals coming are insistent and all over the world response is being made. The United States, however, is the nation best able to answer and it is to the United States that Russia, and particularly the children of Russia, must first of all look. Help has been promised by our government under certain conditions and these conditions, it would seem, are being fulfilled.

The matter of the form of the Russian government is not now in question. The insistent propaganda carried on by the Reds in other countries has nothing to do with the situation. Just one fact stares us in the face: men and women and little children in vast numbers have not enough food to keep them alive while America has enough and to spare. Shall America help in a full-hearted way? Shall she exemplify the gospel of the Christ which she professes? The meanest motives of self-preservation and of future good would urge to such a course. But we Christians must move on a higher plane. We have to consider whether we can rise above political and social prejudices and act simply and heartily in the spirit of Jesus. THE BAPTIST believes that we can and that the response will be quick and large.

The matter of the organization of this relief is not now in question. The need over-bulks everything else. And yet we trust that in some way Baptist money may flow through Baptist channels in order, first, that the money may be diverted, and secondly, that if there is to be made in this way a religious approach to the hearts of the people, we may not lose the opportunity which properly belongs to us.

Religious Liberty in Italy

THE Roman Catholic Veillot once said: "Protestant gentlemen and free-thinkers, it is we who have a right to liberty, not you; and when we talk of liberty it is, of course, of our own, not of yours, which does not exist." The same thought seems to exist today in the Vatican and in that part of Rome which is attached to it. For the papacy there is abundant liberty, but for the Methodists there is and must be no liberty which the Vatican can prevent.

Methodism has done a great work in Rome. It has stood for spiritual democracy in the very heart of Romanism. It has seen steady growth and numbers among its adherents many persons of influence. Its evangelistic work has been successful and its schools and colleges are prospering. Every now and then there have been outcries against it on the part of the Roman church, but, in spite of these it has kept on its steady way.

Now hue and cry has been raised again. For these enterprising Methodists are proposing to erect a series of educational buildings on the site of Monte Mario, across the valley from the Vatican and St. Peter's where they would be in full view on the hillside by the prisoner of the Vatican. And the pope is using every resource to prevent this from coming to pass.

One method has been to inaugurate a drive against the civil authorities to get them to stop the project. Another is to get associations of various kinds to pass resolutions against it. Yet another has been to ask the Knights of Columbus to stir up sentiment in the United States. Sometimes the argument used is that the buildings would be artistically offensive as they rose on the sky-line beyond the mass of the Vatican. But a study of the plans makes it clear that there is nothing to this. Again it is urged that the presence of a large college in that spot would be an insult to the Catholic religion, an expression of hatred against the pope and his church. It would be an expression of opposition, indeed, but no body, except one which can brook no will but its own, would ever think of it as an insult. The real motive is that Rome is forever intolerant, and though it may not itself minister to the spiritual needs of the people of Italy, it does not propose that any other body shall do so.

In the United States, the Roman Church is loud in its praise of liberty. Italy tells another story. Is it not likely that the true spirit of the hierarchy is better revealed in Italy than in our own country? Religious liberty is a thing very dear to us, a treasure which the world cannot afford to have abridged, even in the slightest degree. If the Knights of Columbus are to take a hand in this matter, why should not our Protestant organizations have something to say. The Roman church does not hesitate to invade Protestant communities in the United States and regularly conducts missions for the express purpose of winning Protestants.

We who have the pure gospel need not feel any more delicate about the matter. Let there be a free field for all in Italy as everywhere else. And let the church which best presents the real gospel of Jesus Christ win.

Baptists may think that this matter in Rome does not concern them. But it does. The Methodists are fighting our battle, and at the very least should have our cordial moral support.

But One Loyalty

FROM Ames, Iowa, a brother F. M. Blakeslee writes to right THE BAPTIST about Roman Catholics in office.

"To say 'They have the same (legal) right to political preferment' (as others) is merely to restate that to which we object," he reminds us. In a well-reasoned argument for which we have not room, he argues that since the Pope claims, and where possible exercises temporal power, there is no logical reason why this government should extend towards the Catholic Church or its members any political privileges.

Our brother has the logic on his side. Allegiance to a foreign government logically disqualifies one for voting or holding office under ours. Only on the ground that the Pope has no right to political power can we justify the extension of political privileges to Catholics in this country. Whenever, if ever, this government shall send a representative to the Vatican, then every Catholic will become in fact a citizen of an alien government and ought to be so treated.

The alternatives are perfectly clear. If the Pope is a sovereign, his subjects in America are aliens to our government; and if they are entitled to citizenship here, his sovereignty must be absolutely denied.

The Catholic has a right to be loyal to his church as a church; but in politics there can be but one loyalty for a true American.

Wild Talk from a Chancellor

OCCASIONALLY a literary phenomenon appears beneath the moon.

Observe, for instance the recently published book, "My Neighbor, the Workingman," by James Roscoe Day, chancellor of Syracuse University. Such a subject invites a humanly sympathetic, reasonable, temperate and constructive discussion, and such a man ought to be able to respond to its call with dignity, clearness and scholarly self-restraint. But the book is a phenomenal tirade, a steady stream of denunciation, abusive epithet, invective, scolding and ranting, with abounding vocabulary of scurrilous speech, running with hardly any variation in its flow through 373 pages.

As for analysis, definition, distinction among things that differ, clearness of statement and fairness of treatment, the chancellor seems to have forgotten that these qualities are proper to the discussion of grave topics among sober men. Many pages of the book have been scanned in the hope that some sense of these virtues might appear; but the search has been almost fruitless.

Particulars are both interesting and illustrative.

Communism, socialism, unionism, the I. W. W., public ownership, the Labor Party, Bolshevism the liberal teacher in the university, Lenin and Gompers, are all of a kind. The whole movement they represent breeds lawlessness, crime, bombs, assassination, riots, murder of the helpless and the innocent, midnight plottings, treason, and all manner of outrage. It is a great conspiracy to destroy all law, all government and all civilization. All those who participate in any of its forms of organization, sympathize with it or even view it tolerantly are alike guilty. Those who follow it to its logical conclusions are enemies of the human race to be hunted down, imprisoned, exported, exterminated as outlaws. They have no right to either liberty or life.

Of course, a temperate and reasoned criticism of the labor movement is legitimate and may be highly useful; and there is a broad principle that will justify a loose general identification of the labor movement with socialism; but this book misses both.

What an opportunity such a theme gave to such a man to deliver a sober, temperate, conciliatory and helpful message! Occasionally, indeed, a casual but commonplace hint of constructive value creeps into the book. But on the whole its main value lies in the fact that it presents the worst that can possibly be said by bitter enmity about the organized movement of the "American proletariat," and that it exhibits the most perfect example of the wrong way to approach a solution of the problem of industrial relations.

If these relations ever issue in violent conflict such books as this will be partly responsible for bringing it on.

But read the book.

The Vanity Which Tempts Ministers

THE "Centennial State University," located in Colorado, consisted of one man. There were no buildings, no professors, no classes. The state which for a time watched the gyrations of this one-man university, has taken away the charter, having concluded that the university was shedding no educational lustre on the state. The federal postal authorities inquired into the business dealings of the one man and suggested that he had better return the money which had been flowing into his hands, which he agreed to do. And certain highly-ornamented documents which ministers in various parts of the country had expected to look upon with all the feelings of gratified pride will never come into their hands.

The "university" existed for the sake of bestowing the degree of doctor of divinity upon such ministers as should be willing to part with twenty-five dollars for it. A great many ministers made inquiries, so the mails show, regarding the proposition. And the receipts of the Colorado man, all of it coming from ministers who are not notoriously over-paid, were as high as $1200 in a single week.

We have been wondering about this whole proposition. What is the explanation of it? Sellers of mining stock have often testified that many ministers are gullible, but that hardly seems an explanation in this case. Are we to find the reason in the love of men for decorations, in their pride in uniforms and badges and insignia of various sorts? Do the letters "D. D." after the name give a man the same feeling of gratified vanity which these other things bring? Or does the degree give a man a better standing in the community? Does the minister who is tempted feel that it is a needful part of his equipment if he is to have the widest influence? Does it impress the church more than proved worth and solid accomplishment?

There is something childish about even the best of us. That we can readily admit. On the other hand, there is an aristocratic vein of feeling even in the most democratic societies which leads people to think much of labels. To be one of the crowd is not to be distinctive; therefore men reach out for the ornament which shall differentiate them from others.

In this whole degree business there is something that is not altogether satisfactory. Men of the best sort are often overlooked. Men their inferior in scholarship and accomplishment are often singled out. In an imperfect world this has always been so. Nevertheless it does lead those who think of the minister merely as a gifted brother among brethren, set aside for a particular service, to wonder concerning the value of all titles, even that of "Rev.," which tend to set men off in a class by themselves. So long as such titles prevail, farces like this one in Colorado will be repeated.

Jesus Christ Is the Son of God

CHRISTIAN faith, historic and scriptural, affirms the deity of Christ. No dialectic has ever been able to explain it, but somehow or other the being of God finds a clear projection into human nature in the person of Jesus.

One needs neither much learning nor any ingenious form of words to enable him to discover God in Christ. By a power of perception neither physical nor rational, nor yet mystical, but as vital and direct as taste or sight, this truth is as clear and real to the child as to the philosopher.

The New Testament expresses this truth in many ways: "I and my Father are one;" "Before Abraham was, I am;" "God was in Christ reconciling the world to himself." Perhaps no description of the inner personality of Jesus is entirely comprehensible to us; perhaps it was not entirely comprehensible to those who spoke or wrote it. But the truth was there, known in part and spoken in part, but in itself whole and perfect. There Christ is, "God manifest in the flesh."

The soul that cannot recognize God in Christ probably could not recognize him anywhere.

Technical discussions of the natures of Christ, of the persons in the Godhead and of the relations among these natures and persons usually becloud the subject rather than clear it. They may be intellectually useful to those who specialize in theology, but they count for little in the common life. Believers come to Jesus and meet God. That experience brings each of them into union with God and to spiritual satisfaction. Knowing so much that is vital, they do not fret to know curious and incidental details.

The deity of Christ thus vitally understood, and without regard to theological formulas, is not now and never has been an issue in dispute among Baptists. There is probably not a teacher, minister or other person in a representative position in the Baptist denomination today who does not hold it as an essential in his religious life. If there be such a person he is religiously misplaced. He has missed the faith.

A Challenging Program

THE BAPTIST is in receipt of a letter from a religious educator, not connected with the Baptist denomination, in which he remarks that, familiar as he is with religious programs, none has come into his hands of late as thorough-going and as challenging as that adopted at Des Moines by the General Board of Promotion and submitted for consideration to the churches through the issue of THE BAPTIST for July 30.

Associations are giving time to the discussion of the objectives set forth in this program and are finding it stimulating. Individual churches will doubtless do the same when the clans gather again in September, and will work much of it into the church program.

The goals set forth are large as is becoming in a denomination like ours. These include 200,000 members added to the churches by baptism or restoration; 200,000 members enrolled in stewardship leagues; one thousand churches paying the pastor's pension premium in the Ministers and Missionaries Benefit Board; a total of $87,500,000 pledged towards the $100,000,000 (This means $29,675,700.15 in addition to the amount pledged to April 30, 1921. These additional pledges must be secured before May 1, 1922 if conditional pledges of $3,000,000 are made available); a total of $20,000,000 paid on account of the New World Movement.

Whether these goals shall be realized or not depends finally on the local churches. Something like half of our churches have not yet participated in the New World Movement; their enthusiastic co-operation would ensure success. But even without these, the task, though very great, is not impossible. It means hard work and sacrificial giving. The goals set are greater than for the year just closed. But they can be reached if churches will live up to their pledges, will call on that reserve in their own resources which has not been touched and will take seriously Christ's command to evangelize the world. The last year was a remarkable one in the history of Northern Baptists; the churches have it in their power to make the present year even greater.

Christian activity is recommended by Jesus himself as the cure for religious perplexity. "If any man will do His will," he says, "he shall know of the doctrine."

Parents everywhere are getting their boys and girls ready for college. Why not a Baptist college? Have any other as much to commend them to people who wish education to be secured in a religious atmosphere?

Attention is called to the Labor Sunday Message of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ, which appears on page 916. In days when industry is marked by so much confusion it is imperative that our ministers and churches shall have clearly in mind those principles of Jesus which have a bearing on this matter. They should not lag behind business men in making it clear that Jesus is the hope of our times.

Odds and Ends (Chiefly Odds)

Snappy short stories told by the wife of a Baptist foreign missionary: "A Candidate for Matrimony at Large," "Our Foolish Virgin," "The Women of Whom I Have Been Jealous," "An Earthen Vessel" and "Every Dog Has His Day."

BY PREACHER'S WIFE

A CANDIDATE FOR MATRIMONY AT LARGE

MR. N is a widower of seventy-three. We have been hearing that he contemplates a second marriage. Therefore I know when I see him approach the parsonage door, dressed in his best black suit, with white though collarless shirt and the fronts of his shoes well blacked, that he has been courting and has come to tell me all about it. We have had confidential chats before when I have expressed my sympathy for him who must live alone in his big house and I do not wonder that he longs for a companion.

A Sockless Widower

There are no preliminaries when I admit him except that he casts a searching eye about the living room, steps to the library door and takes a deliberate look to make sure there is no one around. Then he seats himself in the most comfortable chair and says, "Liddy L. is running after me plum disgraceful. What do you suppose she is up to?" I do not need to hazard any supposition for I know exactly what she is up to. I have already warned him that with so much wealth in his possession and at his age, he is in great danger of being roped in by some designing person whose main ambition would be to come into command of his bank account. What I dare not tell him is that with his fondness for incessant tobacco chewing (often carelessly allowing the juice to trickle down his heavy beard) and with his incurable habit of profanity, he has but little more than his money to commend him. It seems that I can never become naturalized to his perpetual profanity although I'm perfectly sure he has used it for so long the habit has become automatic and he is not conscious of it. During the few minutes that have elapsed since his arrival, I have observed that he has dressed up and gone forth to his courting without any socks and his ears, as our small son says, have not been manicured.

What I fear the worthy women on his list of eligibles may not know is that for all of his uncouth exterior, he was beautifully tender in his treatment of his first wife. Many hours have I listened to his descriptions of her lovely hair, her pretty eyes and her talent for cooking; and I happen to know too that she heard these things from him so long as she lived. He is using her memory as a standard by which to measure all other women and that will never do, I urge upon him, since some of us have been endowed with gray or blue eyes and may not own the "sparkling brown" ones of his ideal. While apropos the talent for cooking, which he seems to seek in vain, I quote to him the words of the old colored mammy, "Cookin' 's like religion is; some's 'lected and some aint."

He has just said again for the several dozenth time since the day he began to confide in me, "It was her wonderful hair that first moved me," and my eyes grow moist when I witness the gentleness and pride in his manner of drawing from his pocket that age old tintype of him and her together. As I step over to take it in my hand (it would never occur to him to bring it to me) he suddenly explodes with, "why do you wear such durned high heels?" Before I can scramble to my poise and think up any defense for the said offending heels, he goes on with his story of a day when he took her to a distant city for the purpose of having this picture taken. "Why, you didn't go away like that before you were married, did you? If our young people of today would ask for that privilege, we'd exclaim in horror and say it was not so in the good old days." It is thrilling to watch him straighten up in magnificent pride and declare chestily, "Her dad would trust that girl anywhere with me!"

A Sod Widow in View

He tells me he has three widows in view, as he expresses it, "one grass and two sod." There is another girl of advanced years and then there are several who he suspects have him in view! I tell him all I know about a few whom he must not marry. He relates his experiences of having been coldly repulsed during some of his calls and too warmly welcomed during others. Today he has the blues. He had just about decided on Miss D, but when he called at the home she was positively snippy. Could I say a good word for him? Would I slyly sound Mrs. G. (a sod one), and let him have an opinion? We shake hands in parting and there is an agreement that we'll hold another conference soon. Then he takes his sockless way down the walk and is gone.

OUR FOOLISH VIRGIN

Miss R is a prominent member. (Please speak it in capital letters and awed tones). Last week she led the meeting of our Mission Circle, her subject, "Sons of Italy," during which meeting she impressed upon us the duty of feeling neighborly and living chummily with our brothers of other countries who come to settle in our midst. Today she had a chance to practice what we heard her preach.

Joe in a New Suit

Joe, a little Polish boy in our neighborhood and a warm friend of mine, marched majestically down our street arrayed in his first suit from the store. Heretofore his mother has done his tailoring and he looked a different boy in his clumsy, hopeless garments she made for him. Joe's father works in a factory and his income makes the preacher's salary look like a penny stamp. The parents have but the one child and only the one ambition—to make of Joe an all-wool, yard-wide American. During the war the windows of Joe's parlor became plastered almost solid with the cards which bespoke their eagerness to do their part. As each new one appeared, Joe would meet me down the street, lead me to the window and proudly indicate the newest arrival. We did not know each other's language very well, but there are gesticulations of delight which interpret themselves into any language. By them I raved in turn over the cards "War Garden," "100% Red Cross," "Save Some Sugar," each of the liberty loans, the Y. M. C. A. One day in passing I saw at Joe's window a grinning face and a chubby finger pointed to the latest bulletin of Joe's Americanization. I looked. It was a large red card bearing the one word "Influenza."

Today as he comes down the street in his new suit with bow tie large enough for a girl's hair ribbon, he greets me in fairly good English. He has learned to talk so well with his one year in school that we can be most clubby now. He sees me on the step ladder washing windows and he introduces his main idea by some wholly irrelevant remarks. "You will fall. You will hurt." "No, I will not just see how steady I am"—and I wave a foot to prove it. "I will thank you if you give me pretty flowers.—I want to give my teacher a present." "They aren't my flowers Joe, they belong to the lady in the other house."

Can't Bear Dagoes

Joe starts toward her door and I shiver as he goes for well do I know her. I try to head him off by suggesting that it is getting late (which it is not) but there is no saving him from his awful fate! Bless his dear little Polish-American heart, he actually removes his cap when she answers his ring and I gloat in my heart for I'm certain she can't resist that. But she does resist it. And she ignores the politely worded request! I blush for shame when I hear the cutting speech she hands him,—punctuated with ugly words which I hope he cannot understand. "Troublesome kids,"—"nervy boys,"—"nuisances," and she does not use the polished tone we heard last week at the mission circle when she admonishes us to be true friends and neighbors to our brothers, the immigrants.

Brothers, indeed!! She's treating Joe like a remote fifth cousin or perhaps like a relation-in-law! Her snowball bush is huge—that is the flower Joe seeks—and it is so heavy with bloom that it has become non-symmetrical yet she refuses him one spray for his teacher!

I am not a Socialist nor an I. W. W. advocating that Joe has any right to her property. But there is a principle inbedded so deeply in my soul that I yearn to scream at her and ask what right has she to take the grin off of little Joe's face.

He descends her steps changed. He is sober, grinless and sheepish. To shorten the period of humiliation in my presence, before whom he has always strutted, he starts to run to school. While she calls across to me, "I just can't bear those dirty dagoes!"

THE WOMEN OF WHOM I HAVE BEEN JEALOUS

If I were to write a book upon this subject it would be a voluminous work and most of it would be concerned with Mrs. K. I would not make of her a heroine—but rather a she—villian (or should one say a villianetta).

There have been many instances in his ten-year pastorate in this one church where other women than I have loved the preacher devotedly. Mrs. C. was one of these. The affection existing between these two was known throughout the whole church family as a real case. Did I ever receive a bouquet of any proportions, that man was sure to make away with a third of it and present it at her shrine! If anyone calling at her home (for she was a shut-in) so much as suggested that another pastor of the city, were a few inches taller, she bristled with indignation and gave them such a piece of her mind that they were glad to think up and express some praise of him! When she lay stricken with pneumonia so critically ill that we all feared she might slip away from us, the preacher refused to eat his meals regularly until her crisis was safely passed. This love affair has been one of the beautiful things in his long pastorate and I do not care how many women love him in the same degree for I'm convinced that he is deserving of it all.

But since it is the wife's prerogative, and her privilege exclusively, to abuse her husband (supposing that he needs any abuse) my jealousy has been aroused by those types who assume this right of mine.

"I Hate to Tell It—But"

Mrs. K. was the most hardened of them all. At home, in the absence of our children, she was referred to as "the cup of cold water." Her unofficial title was "Supt. of the Every-member Canvass." Her slogan: "I do so hate to tell it—but." She never could find time, so she insisted, to take an office in the church. But let any new work be proposed or launched by the pastor and she could spare three afternoons a week traveling from house to house knocking the new movement. Were any new members ever received into the body, they by coming into our fellowship laid themselves liable to dissection by her tongue.

I cannot believe the cartoonist ever knew our Mrs. K, and yet when he makes Andy Gump describe Andy's Aunt Sophy, he gives a perfect word portrait of Mrs. K. He takes her number as follows: "When she gets those glasses way out on the end of her nose, picks up her sewing basket and starts to knit,—women cripples and little children,—get back of the ropes! She spares no one, when she shoots that mustard gas (and she's some sharp shooter) there isn't a man, woman or child safe within a radius of fifty miles! If ever she gets a bead on you with one of those shrapnel bombs and if it ever hits your home,—goodbye reputation!!"

The Good Die Young

I can forgive her for being soured. She once mothered a model boy. She herself admits it. "Just David" was a wild rake compared with Mrs. K's son. He never soiled his clothing, he never played marbles, he loved to go to Sunday school. When his mates waged war upon him (which must have been every time he passed, for he would have been an awful temptation) he did not engage in naughty brawls—but retired and prayed for his oppressors! She always ends her discourse on his virtue by rolling her eyes heavenward, folding her hands and saying with maddening piety, "But the good die young." It's lucky they do sometimes for I fear my eleven-year-old son with a leaning toward Huckleberry Finn tastes would be the death of me trying to get at that ultra pious boy of Mrs. K's. And I am sure that if my happy home were cluttered up with a boy who takes himself as seriously as did that child, I too would be soured on the world. What I cannot forgive Mrs. K is her ambition to inject her acid into every limb and branch of my husband's work.

She attends every service of the church and no one could hire her to be late once so that a prayer meeting might be joyous for a few moments before her arrival. But she has her uses, this World's Champion Grouch! She has developed my husband into a great diplomat! Any pastor who can remain on speaking terms with her and heal all the wounds she makes is a statesman! If only when we arrive in Heaven she is not appointed to the post of Accusing Angel!

AN EARTHEN VESSEL

Mrs. A was not one of the world's favorites who possess what she called "book learnin'."

But she was full of the treasure of God and to sit with her for an afternoon in conversation on the things of the Kingdom, made me feel when I had come away from her presence that I had been admitted to the Holy of Holies. One day she broke the news to me that her eldest son was going away to live in another state. It was not really so far distant but to Mrs. A with her limited knowledge of geography, his destination was "away yonder." For several years I had done her letter writing for her except for the few business notes, which task she delegated to one of her sons. The real gossip letters on home matters such as need a woman's touch she reserved for me. Now that the son would be away, she expressed a yearning for the intimacy which might exist if she could do her own writing. I did not realize how deep was this longing until one day when I called at her home she asked me humbly, apologetically, bashfully, to set for her a copy of the alphabet that she might surprise her son with a letter written by her own hand! Oh the marvel of a mother's love! I set for her the copy. How my heart ached in anticipation of the disappointment she was doomed to suffer. My first visit in the office of teacher of penmanship revealed what I knew must come. She had discovered that some of the letters were much too complicated for a seventy-year-old hand and besides that her pen trembled far too much for even the simplest ones!

A Soul That Could Not Say It

Perhaps she could not spell the words or form the letters and I doubt very much if she knew what is meant by the words "meter," "rhyme," "poetic fancy,"—but I have many times assured her that she had within her the soul of the poet and looked through the eyes of the artist. One evening in summer, just a few weeks before her promotion into Heaven, I sat with her on her porch. She fell into reminiscence and spoke at length of the early pioneer days when our state was but a broad expanse of prairies and she one of the first settlers in it. The neighbors were so far remote from each other, she told me that they early formed the habit of closest communion with God—like David out on the hill sides alone with the stars on those nights when his soul cries came to be our Psalms.

She said, "I always stood in the cabin door when my man returned at evening. I held the baby in my arms so that he could see us and feel that he had someone—in all that loneliness—to wait for him. And I mind well the feeling that came over me when he came into sight—he and his horses—all of them with that tired-out look. And I mind well the cows sauntering back over the prairie paths, bellowing now and then until they came into the lot.

"The poet Gray," I told her (but she only laughed at me) "said the very same thing only that Gray was skilled in the use of the pen and knew how to rhyme his words:

"The curfew tolls the knell of parting day;
The lowing herd winds slowly o'er the lea;
The plowman homeward plods his weary way,
And leaves the world to darkness and to me."

EVERY DOG HAS HIS DAY

Elmer was the worst boy in Sunday school. I have it upon the authority of every mother who had raised girls only, every moss-back deacon and every old maid of the church. I wish they were here separately or collectively to dictate a description of him. The mother of girls only would give him a pair of stubby horns. The deacons would donate a tail and the old maids would declare for cloven hoofs. To me he was just a normal boy of high spirits, good health and quick wit. He had curly black hair which would not submit to a comb, his face was freckled to an adorable degree and his snappy brown eyes would melt the heart of anything except a cement post.

It was in the very early days of my husband's reign in this church and I had not yet classified and catalogued his flock. Had I known Miss R as well then as I knew her later I would never have asked her to be an assistant in the junior union. Elmer was its leading light, Miss R was a deep shadow hanging over all of us.

Elmer's Day Was Stormy

We were compiling a Scripture alphabet and so far as possible I appointed the member whose name began with the letter for the day to bring a verse of his own finding. Alas for Elmer! I wish his mother had christened him Frank or Joe! It is not at all likely that there was any Bible in Elmer's home, so he took the verse from his memory and there again it is not likely he had very many stored with the initial letter E. He was so eager to do a fine thing in his best manner that he fairly squirmed through the exercises preceding the Scripture alphabet. He was on the edge of the pew with mouth open when I called his name. He came up like a flash and dashed off his verse: "Every dog has his day." All his eager pride was taken out of him by the laugh which greeted his verse. No one shrewd enough to see his change in countenance would have accused him of impudence but Miss R was never shrewd.

Her behavior was a disgrace. A few weeks before she had sat in prayer meeting and listened to Deacon Hanley quote from the Bible this sentiment:

"God moves in a mysterious way
His wonders to perform."

And the deacon got by with it! Miss R did not ask that he be expelled from the church. But upon the occasion of Elmer's blunder, she jumped to her feet and demanded in shrill voice that I choose between her and Elmer. My choice was registered in my own mind instantly but I asked if she wouldn't wait to talk it over after service. She did. And what she said about Elmer would need to be printed on asbestos—so I do not repeat it. My ultimatum to her was that Elmer needed me so much more than she I should just have to choose him.

It is a very, very short journey and one that has been traveled hundreds of times,—this journey from the "worst boy in Sunday school to the best deacon in the church."

That Worthless Scamp

Eight years after Elmer blundered on his Bible verse, Miss R happened to visit in the western town where his people had moved. Elmer, so she had the fine grace to write me, had a good position commanded generous pay, was rapidly being promoted and was the leading deacon in the Baptist church!! "That worthless scamp you always made such a pet of" was the name she gave him.

To even up just for that, when I replied to her letter, I did not ask Satan to get behind me. I said, "Well Miss R you know 'every dog has his day' and I've always felt sure Elmer would have his."

Just a few months later our little city's daily contained notice of Elmer's tragic death. A gas main had broken in a tunnel where Elmer had sent his men for repairs. He sensed the danger, called to his brother and another workman to follow and ran to their rescue. Not one of them returned! I did not need to ask the moss-backs what they thought of Elmer now. Miss R herself said it at the next prayer meeting, "Greater love hath no man than this that a man lay down his life for his friends."

A Christian Argument as to Disarmament

Federal Taxes $270 per family annually. Army costs more than all colleges, technical schools and universities of both church and state—by $200,000,000

BY CLARENCE W. KEMPER

MR. FREDERICK LYNCH writing from Central Europe says: "The whole of Europe is in a state of political, economic and religious chaos and confusion." The world is in dire need and America should lead in the better, Christian way. And the Christian church must lead America.

The cold facts are not comforting when we are told the federal taxes per family are now $270 per year; that $183 of it goes to past wars and $66 direct to the army and navy; that $16 goes for government function including salaries and public works; that but $2.70 of it goes to health education and agriculture.

The navy costs use more per year than all our churches of every name, sect and sort—more this year by some $50,000,000.

The army costs more than all our colleges, technical schools and universities, church and state—more this year by 200,000,000.

A single first class battleship costs more than the teacher training schools of the U. S.—ten to fifteen million more.

Unless there is good reason for this, it is the worst kind of folly and an awful sin. Said Ambassador Harvey in London recently: "Now the question arises, have not our respective countries reached the point with respect to the remotest possibility of conflict that justifies our forgetting it as completely as the battles of Bosworth Field and Appomattox have faded out of recollection?"

All Must Disarm

"The Tokyo Ashai" (Jan. 11, 1921) "The proposed disarmament should cover all the countries. . . . If that is difficult of immediate realization, a disarmament agreement between Great Britain, America and Japan can serve a useful purpose. . . . The evils of armaments competition and the benefits of disarmament are too numerous to be counted."

Marquis Okuma of Japan said Jan. 9, 1921: "A plan for curtailing naval construction would work to the great benefit of Japan. While, however, Great Britain and the U. S. continue to build battleships, Japan must in self-defense follow the lead. But Japan is in no condition to engage in an unlimited naval construction program."

General Pershing electrified a great crowd in New York not long since by saying in most emphatic tones that it was a crime to go on putting millions into armament, with so many women and children starving and by adding that competing armament was the sure cause of war.

General Tasker H. Bliss, former Chief of Staff, wrote under date of May 1921 saying: "Either there is no practical common sense among the people of the U. S., or else they now know the essential facts that point to the necessity of such a conference." "The responsibility is entirely upon the professing Christians of the U. S."

When great military leaders speak like this, it is time for the Christian church to take leadership in calling for disarmament.

Everybody is Sick of It

Everybody the world over is sick of the whole war business and the awful burdens it lays upon the shoulders of men except the survivals of the militaristic era and this survival is very much alive just now in the U. S. as in all the countries.

Gradually a larger number of people the world over know that the whole world must be organized on some basis of justice, or civilization may perish from the earth. The talk of isolation for America is as silly as for a grown man to return to the talk of his childhood.

Among the good things said by Ambassador Harvey in his recent London speech, he did not represent the best opinion of the world today by his brutal and unpolitic fling at the League of Nations. It is quite possible that fifty or one hundred years from now the men who took such glee in ditching the League of Nations, in the United States and crucifying President Wilson will be looked upon as the inferior patriots of this day.

Any person who arrogates to himself the function of balking the friendly organization of the world is not humanity's friend but enemy. It is therefore to be hoped Hughes and Hoover serve as the spokesmen of America rather than Harvey.

When war is on there is nothing for us to do but fight it out or lie down and be trampled upon but, when we are at peace Christian people should go to bed rock in their relation to the world-old curse of war. The church cannot get on by making her religion applicable to personal relations and failing to make any application of the teachings of Jesus to society and nations. We must learn that it is a sin against humanity and God to fail to make our religion applicable to all life. We dare not be content continuously with the pagan idea of the state.

The church must go to the mat with war. The time is come when in the growth of intelligence and conscience the Christian opinion of the world must solidly set against war.

First because war is anti-Christian and second because the best opinion of the world looks to the church for leadership at this point.

In the past Christian conscience has achieved definite victories one after another; such as; securing religious toleration, the abolition of slavery, prohibition of legalized drink traffic for the U. S.; and now the greatest moral issue is that of making wars impossible at the earliest possible moment.

Say It So They Can Hear You

I. The Christian church must dare say, so every one can hear: "War is wrong and the day has come to stop it." If the Sermon on the Mount means anything, we dare not tolerate the pagan idea when it comes to the relations of nations. Thus competitive armaments, diplomatic deals behind closed doors, the systematic cultivation of prejudices and hatreds between nationalities must go. "We must obey God rather than men," said the early Christians and the church today must take this attitude toward war.

We will not turn our back upon the high, human ideals of Jesus to follow the inherited pagan ideas as to diplomacy and war. This we must say so emphatically in times of peace that our leaders will not dare tolerate the conception of war.

At heart Christianity aims to create Christ-like persons by Christian means of helping rather than crushing people.

The distinctive Christian method of overcoming evil is to overcome it with good. In the cross we are taught the sublime way of overcoming evil.

The primary aim of war is not to win the wrongdoer but at greatest costs to prevent him doing wrong. War is a method which cannot by any stretch of imagination be classed as Christian.

Some justify war on the basis of the corrective discipline a father exercises toward his child. But war has to do with adult fellowmen and not children. Moreover the discipline of any father is aimed at the correction and not destruction of the child. In fact war exhausts all inventions by way of securing utter destruction.

II. The best opinion looks to the Christian conscience for leadership at this point. In face of the idiocy of competitive armaments, such men as Mr. Lloyd George, Sir Douglas Haig, Gen. Bliss, and Roger Bobson are appealing to the churches to lead the way.

Said Gen. Bliss recently: "If the clergymen of the U. S. want to secure a limitation of armaments, they can do it now without any further waste of time. If on an agreed-upon date, they simultaneously preach one sermon on this subject in every church of creed throughout the U. S., and conclude their services by having their congregation adopt a resolution addressed to their particular congressman urging upon him the necessity of having a business conference of five nations upon this subject, this thing will be done; if the churches cannot agree upon that it will not be done, nor will it be done until the good God puts into them the proper spirit of their religion."

The great Christian layman, Fred B. Smith, recently said: "H. G. Wells after writing almost the final word of despair concerning the future says there may be one last hope of saving the world, if the Christian churches can be roused unitedly to take up the problems of world peace!—Perhaps the greatest single contribution the U. S. can make to the period of reconstruction is to pour out her best life by any and every means to bring into one great unit the Christian sentiment of the world against military force as a remedy for international differences in the future."

The hour has struck for the church to speak in a voice that can be heard throughout the troubled world.

We must find the Christian way out.

Responsibility of the Church in Industry

Labor Sunday Message of the Commission of the Church and Social Service of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America for September 4, 1921

CHRISTIANITY'S message for this Labor Sunday is set against a background of suffering and confusion. The land is filled with unemployment. Possibly one-fourth of the population are straitened and anxious. Thousands of employers are holding their industries together merely from day to day. Labor is fighting for the fundamental right of collective action, and fighting at a serious disadvantage. The freedom of the ministry to proclaim a social gospel and to apply it according to their own honest convictions is sharply challenged. Even the common right of citizens to freedom of speech and assembly in many communities is at stake.

In such a troubled time as this it would be easy for the church to hold aloof from industrial questions. To confine itself to simpler tasks would seem the path of prudence. The summons, however, is not to the easy way but to the way of duty. Concerning the relations of men to each other in the economic and industrial realm, as well as in the other areas of life, the church must seek to discover and to proclaim the mind of Christ. The relation of persons to one another is always a moral and religious question and so is inevitably in the preacher's field.

A redeemed life is one redeemed in all its aspects and relationships. The economic and industrial factors that condition the lives of men and women and help to make them what they become are, therefore, as much a concern of the church as any other phase of their moral environment. An industrial practice that cramps and devitalizes human beings in body or in spirit is as much a foe of religion as is the liquor traffic. The church cannot ignore the one any more than it can ignore the other.

There are no areas of life which Jesus excluded from the ultimate operation of the law of the kingdom. A gospel that is susceptible of only partial application is not a gospel which can save the world. A church which is content to recognize limits to the proclamation of its message is a defeated church.

CHRISTIAN PRINCIPLES TO BE APPLIED TO INDUSTRY

There are at least three fundamental principles in the teachings of Jesus that the church must apply to industry. Unless we can learn to conduct industry according to these basic principles the Kingdom of God cannot prevail in the modern industrial world.

1. Men are to live as brothers.

But between several hundred absentee stock-holders on the one hand and several thousand wage earners on the other, relations are so impersonal and distant that the responsibilities which brotherhood implies are more difficult to grasp and are too seldom regarded with seriousness. In the administration of a large industry policies are frequently inaugurated which would not have been determined upon if their full human consequences could have been instantly visualized. The investors in an industry expect its managers, first and principally, to produce profits. The directors scrutinize the records but rarely visit the work shops. In consequence men and material are lumped together as commodities, labor is bought in the market like goods, and the personal equation is lost in a mechanical system.

Democratic relationships in large scale industry do not necessarily pre-suppose a restoration of the early intimacy between employer and employee. Such intimacy is impossible in large plants, and where it actually obtains it is by no means a guarantee of a square deal. Democracy requires rather that every individual shall have his point of view represented and shall have opportunity effectively to register his will. What really matters is that the life interests of the workers should be the first consideration; not that they should be called by their first names. But where there can be added relationships of personal friendship between employer and employee, the human possibilities of the situation are greatly increased.

In an industrial age there can be no real brotherhood of man unless there is a brotherhood in industry. Mr. John D. Rockefeller, Jr., has put the matter well; "surely it is not consistent for us as Americans to demand democracy in government and practice autocracy in industry." Of similar import is the recent statement of one of our foremost labor leaders that to political citizenship must now be added industrial citizenship. Political democracy leads to industrial democracy because a nation trained in school and church and state to democratic relationships, will inevitably carry these same principles into industry. The growing sense of manhood and responsibility in the workers tends in the same direction. There can no longer be satisfactory relationships under an autocratic shop rule, any more than in an autocratic state. Arbitrary control leads to class war, which is as contrary to Christian principles as any other war.

Democracy in industry must be realized progressively and is being steadily approached today in an increasing number of industrial establishments. Recognition of the ideal commits no one to any particular social theory or program. Collective bargaining with labor unions is an expression of the democratic ideal; so also are some of the various forms of labor representation in shop councils. There are also democratic forms of co-operation by which labor relations within a plant are handled as in a town meeting, or a family circle. It is quite possible to develop such forms of association, without prejudice to those vital interests of labor which are conserved by its own regular forms of organization, and to secure a real partnership between employer and employees. Such a partnership may go to any length in democratic procedure that those concerned may desire it to go.

2. A human life is of immeasurable value.

All society is obligated to see that it has a chance. Although we have deeply mourned the loss of the 48,000 American men who were killed in the great war, we have given little thought to the fact that during the same period of nineteen months, American industries claimed 35,000 victims. This fearful rate of destruction still continues.

But the crippling of the body is not the only price paid by human lives. Crowded living quarters reduce physique and low wages increase infant mortality. The wage earner is subject to hazards from which the salaried and professional classes are secure. Children born in industrial districts are deprived of opportunities that should be inalienable in a Christian society; a predestination as real as any theology ever taught governs their future. Low wage scales and unemployment have the effect upon the lower paid workers of thrusting millions down to the poverty line and an accident precipitates them into destitution. Unless the man is lifted above the machine, the life that Jesus considered of more value than the whole material world is sacrificed. There can be no doubt that our working people should receive a relatively larger share of the product of industry.

Since prices began to recede we have heard much concerning excessive wage demands. Without doubt wages in certain occupations have been out of proportion to those paid in the less skilled and less well organized trades. But throughout the entire period of war prices large groups of wage earners have been compelled by inadequate wages to live at a low standard. Not only so, but even the wartime wages of highly skilled labor, whether of hand or brain, can be considered disproportionately high only when it is forgotten that in the production of all our wealth labor bears the most irksome burden, takes the heaviest risks and suffers the gravest insecurity.

3. Service is the Christian motive.

The services of physicians, teachers and even of ministers, require compensation. But the primary motive in these professions is assumed to be service. A Christian society will try to put business under the same motive; it will purge itself of all ruinous competition and substitute for it a co-operation and that secures initiative and all the stimulus of competitive enterprise without its war-like methods.

And the motive of service is not only entirely practicable but it is the only salvation of business itself. The service motive will bring a spirit into industry that will minimize strife and selfishness and magnify fraternity and goodwill. It will inspire production and tend to eliminate waste. With the profit motive controlling both employer and employee, each seeks to exploit the other, each looks upon the other with suspicion, friction grows between them instead of confidence, and industry assumes the aspect of war broken only by periods of truce. The operation of the profit motive defeats the practical purpose of industry—continuous, efficient production.

The Golden Rule is the classic expression of all these ideas and of the spirit in which alone they can ever be made real. These Christian principles are as binding upon one group in industry as upon the other; and only in so far as they are recognized can industry achieve permanence and security. They will be found at last to underlie the social structure as the laws of chemistry and physics underlie the phenomena of the material world.

THE CHURCH AS A TEACHER OF RIGHT INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS

The right of the church to speak on human relationships in industry has been challenged by some representatives of employers, although upheld by many others. It is objected that ministers know nothing about industrial processes and therefore are not competent to speak upon the relations of employer and employee.

Even in the absence of such knowledge the church and its ministry would not lack a sufficient warrant for the proclamation of the gospel with respect to industry. The church is commissioned to bear testimony to the truth as it is in Christ. The responsibility for making the world of business and industry conform to Christian requirements rests upon those leaders of business and industry who profess to be Christian men.

But the church is not advocating an untried experiment. Abundant demonstrations are at hand that every sincere approach to the application of the Golden Rule in the world of work has made not only for stability by putting co-operation in place of competitive strife, but for lower costs and a better product.

Clearly the function of the church is not to manage industry, or to teach either employers or workers how to manage it, but to interpret these Christian principles and to mediate the Christian spirit. To do this effectively, its teachers, and especially its ministers, need to have direct knowledge of industrial conditions.

But the church has also the possibility of teaching through its laymen, including employers and leaders of labor who have the Christian spirit and who are working conscientiously at the problem of Christian relationships. These men know the problems of management as the ministers do not and are competent to speak upon them in their technical aspects. The church can use them appropriately and with great effect in explaining what Christian principles mean and how they actually operate in industry. The application of these Christian principles rests finally with the laity,—with employers, managers and leaders of labor,—and upon their spirit and faithfulness depend the future of our industrial life.

The church must therefore assert

The Gospel Through Schools in China

A member of the faculty of Shanghai Baptist College is the author of this incisive and discriminating discussion of a fundamental problem in missionary policy as it actually works out in experience.

BY VICTOR HANSON

THE purpose of this article is not to set up one branch of missionary work as being more important than another—that would be pernicious—but to present a function of missionary schools that is not everywhere well understood.

The school is the open door to the gospel in China. Through the school it may enter the mind and heart of the individual and the family circle. It is the gateway to the professions and is more and more influential in business by government. It is popular and growing rapidly. Without throwing away all that is old, the Chinese recognize the necessity for introducing much that is new, and the school is looked to for that. Missionaries would be remiss did they neglect this fact and this opportunity.

Western ideas are not popular because they are Western nor new ideas because they are new. There is at least a natural defensive attitude and often a hostile attitude toward what is Western and new. But there is also the compelling necessity of finding some solution for the intolerable domestic conditions and the equally intolerable international relations.

They Want What They Want

Laudible native pride and budding nationalism forbid that what is alien should be wanted and at the same time forbid that what is really wanted should remain alien. Science and learning know no flag and the schools that have been looked upon as Western are becoming indigenous. Missionary schools rightly share in the resulting immunity from opposition.

The remarkable and regrettable fact is that school systems have until recent years had so small a part in missionary programs. The older missionary schools in China have abundantly proved their virtues. Without going into detail or statistics we may point to such familiar leaders as Dr. Wellington Koo, ambassador to Great Britain, Alfred Sze, ambassador to the United States Dr. Fong Sec of the Commercial Press, C. T. Wang, and David Yui of the Y. M. C. A. as being to a greater or less degree products of Christian education. Not less suggestive is the increasing number of well trained ministers and lay workers in the Christian church in China. These are the men to whom we must look to take over responsibility for the propagation of Christianity, in which foreigners must, without abating their zeal for service, become less and less conspicuous. We must decrease and they must increase so far as prominence in leadership is concerned.

The East China Mission

The work of our East China Mission is centered in six main stations. With the exception of Shanghai each of these six stations is a center from which various missionary activities extend out into the surrounding region. The three main types of work, church, school, and hospital are all carried on in each of these main stations. It is the policy of the mission to organize churches and schools throughout each district centering in the church, the hospital and the high schools for boys and for girls in each main station. Wherever union is practicable in hospital and school work it is undertaken. No effort is made at unnecessary duplication, so that in Hangchow we are not engaged in hospital work. In Hangchow, Ningpo, and Shanghai we have high schools for boys. In Hangchow we co-operate in a union high school for girls. In Ningpo we have our own high school for girls. In Shaoahing, Huchow, and Kinwha we have junior high schools for boys and higher primary schools for girls. College work for both male and female students is now provided at Shanghai in Shanghai college, co-education having been undertaken only last year. It is the policy of the mission to weld together all work of the missions and its institutions to constitute the most efficient means in the Master's service.

Shanghai a Union College

Shanghai college is a union institution in which we co-operate on equal terms with our brethren of the Southern Baptist Convention. The college is thus intended to serve a larger constituency than the East China Mission and belongs as much to the central China Mission of the S. B. C. Shanghai is the gateway between these two neighboring fields. Our South China Mission and the Southern Baptist work in Shantung and Honan also participate in the college. It is hoped that all the schools thus represented may together with the college constitute a homogeneous and efficient educational system, dedicated to the service of the missionary purpose. The Shanghai college is a very young institution. Less than fifteen years ago the land on which the college now stands was a tidal marsh; now it is a beautiful campus. There are in the high school and college combined four hundred students. The first class was graduated from Shanghai college in 1914 and consisted of two men. One of these, Rev. T. C. Wu later graduated from Rochester Theological Seminary and in 1919 returned to Shanghai where he is now the pastor of the Baptist Church. The other, Dr. C. C. Chen, graduated from Yale University and returned in the same year to Shanghai where he is now the head of the department of Biology in Shanghai College. Nineteen former students of Shanghai College are at the present time studying in various colleges in America.

College Work Brings Conversions

There are now about 270 students in the high school department and about 130 in the college proper. The college confers the B. A. degree upon graduates under its charter from the state of Virginia, and that degree is recognized by our American Universities. The most of the students in the first years of the high school are non-Christian, many of them never having heard the gospel before. In the graduating class of the college however, there are few if any non-Christians. Special efforts are made during each semester to secure decisions for Christ after careful preparation. Personal work by teachers and students is the principal method used. The personal workers groups of the students are especially effective. I think it is safe to say that in general the most satisfactory additions to our Christian church in East China are those that come, first, from Christian homes, and second, from Christian schools.

There is an organized church in the college with a large and active membership. The activities of students and teachers extend beyond the campus to the neighboring villagers for whom dispensary work, a day school, and a community center are conducted. They extend to the great manufacturing district near by where about 30,000 mill workers are employed, for whose benefit the Yangtse Poo Social Center is conducted. Here hundreds of men, women, and children are reached through day schools, night schools, vacation schools, play ground, vocational training, moving pictures, hospital, and religious institutions. They extend to a great many towns from which students come. Daily Vacation Bible Schools are conducted in a great number of places during the summer by students who have been especially prepared for that work.

Work in the college department is done in English rather than in Chinese, because there is not sufficient literature and reference material available in Chinese for the pursuit of advanced studies in most of the sciences both material and social. The creation of this literature in Chinese is one of the tasks of education in China. It must be done. Two things are required, both of which Shanghai College should do its part to supply. The first is well trained men capable of doing the necessary translation and original research work. The second is a successful and up to date library making accessible the best products of wisdom, thought, and experience throughout the world. One of the greatest services we can render China at present is to provide her students with our books, not only American but broadly representative of western science, culture, and religion.

A Center of Genuine Religion

After six years of intimate observation I must testify that the missionary body as a whole is characterized by religious zeal and abiding faith in the indispensable and invincible power of the Spirit. I have held up schools as the most successful evangelistic agencies, but their success for the kingdom depends upon the Christian faith and character of the teacher. Unfortunately many missionary schools are still compelled to employ a few non-Christian teachers, due to the small number and higher salaries of qualified teachers, that is, teachers with modern training. This is especially the case in the department of Chinese Language and Literature. The old-style teacher of the classics and Chinese history is as a rule a stanch Confucianist. Shanghai College ought to have and to train Christian teachers in this department and supply our high schools and the public schools so far as possible with teachers in this vital field who have both a modern and a definitely Christian viewpoint. In relation to the matter of translation to which I have referred above this matter is of almost equally great significance. Translation will not flourish without the co-operation of these literary leaders and they inevitably exercise a censorship over the process.

RELIGION WITHOUT SCHOOLS

Forty-two years ago the pioneer Baptist missionaries going out to the Congo, went to a section which had once been evangelized before ever America was discovered. The Spanish Cross had followed her ships to Africa, and these modern missionaries came to a people whose capital bore the significant name of San Salvador, where were the ruins of a great Cathedral, and yet where heathenism reigned supreme. In the King's compound they found the fetishes of the King, an old crucifix and some images of the saints. All the degradation of Africa was in the belief of the royal pagan; but the brother of a king of his people had once been consecrated a Bishop by the Pope of Rome himself.

The college places maximum emphasis on the importance of Christian homes and there is at the college a "Christian Home Club" whose mission is indicated by that name. It is a very effective organization of students and teachers for the cultivation of the ideals of a Christian home. It deals with the question in very practical ways, even to the extent of securing arrangements for giving Christian education to the fanécs to whom the students are frequently bound by arrangements not of their own choice. Flourishing clubs have been established by our graduates in several communities, patterned after the mother club at their Alma Mater.

Last year 25 per cent of the student body of the college were candidates for the ministry, in all twenty-eight men. These partake in the student life and activities in the college as freely and fully as any other group in the institution and receive the same degree, B. A., upon graduation. The churches are calling these college trained men. A number of them are now out in the active ministry and are doing excellent work. They make good. Direction of the church work of the Mission is in process of passing into the hands of the Chinese Christian leaders and, other things being equal, the best trained are the most efficient in adapting themselves to the new responsibilities.

The church at present in China does not have a sufficient number of effective leaders nor does it have a sufficient foundation of Christian homes, nor has it been so adapted to the Chinese habitat that it can stand alone. We will not always as foreigners have the control over the administration of churches, hospitals, and schools that we now have. That must pass to the Chinese. Just at this time we must look to the school to strengthen the church and do what it can to make up for the lack of background in Christian homes and lack of effective native leadership that can make Christianity indigenous in China. and maintain the authority of Christian teaching with reference to the industrial order, and its own right and duty as interpreter of Christian motives and ideals. Let the church gird itself with humility for this great new task. Let it work by faith, for the difficulties are unsurmountable unless one believes in the presence and power of God. Its platform is the Sermon on the Mount. Its function is to promote goodwill to secure that social justice without which good will is impossible. Others will propagate self-interest, hatred and class struggle; it is for the church to work in the Master's spirit and to give itself to the coming of His Kingdom of brotherhood upon the earth.

With Baptist Boys in the Adirondacks

Come away from the grand canons of the cities with their smothering heat to the hills where cool breezes blow and the lake invites you

By U. M. MCGUIRE

IF there is in the Adirondack Mountains or anywhere else a more beautiful place than Cranberry Lake, I should like to see to it. The contour of the surrounding mountains is so graceful, the islands that dot the lake are so cosy and inviting and the lake itself so clean and bright, that the whole scene is an Elysium. The entire region from the most distant mountain top to the water's edge, including the islands, is covered with a splendid forest. There are no ragged spots, and no bare ones except Gull Rock, a great isolated mass of granite that rears its bald, gray head straight out of the water in the center of the lake and adds to the picturesqueness of the scene. The lake itself is about seven miles long and five miles wide, with gracefully winding shore lines and numerous inlets and channels running here and there among the hills and islands. About the middle of the east side of the lake on a projecting point of land is Camp Oswegatchie.

A RAW DAY

There are many camps of many kinds, but this is the only one of its kind in America. It is a church enterprise of the Baptist denomination conducted in the interest of Christian culture and service. It is a boy's camp with all that goes towards making such place attractive to boys, but it is shot through with Christian and missionary purpose. It proposes to take selected boys from Baptist churches and to mix with their recreation such inspiration and training as will awaken in them high ideals of Christian life and service and will help to direct their lives in line with those ideals.

How It Started

It came about in this wise: Dr. Samuel Z. Batten, director of social education for the American Baptist Publication Society, Dr. Rolvix Harlan, specializing on rural church work for the American Baptist Home Mission Society and Dr. J. Foster Wilcox, executive secretary of the Baptist Brotherhood, discovered that their several lines of work converged on the boy problem. Dr. Wilcox, in a series of organization tours covering 12,000 miles, observed in the churches wherever he went a scarcity of adolescent boys. He found that the churches had no program adequately providing for such boys and that this interest was turned over largely to the Boy Scouts, the Y. M. C. A. and other extraneous organizations. He became convinced that the highest interests of the Baptist denomination and of the Kingdom of God require the training of Baptist boys by and for the Baptist denomination. Dr. Batten and Dr. Harlan concurred in his opinion and the two societies together agreed to encourage and finance an experiment in this direction. Camp Oswegatchie is the first step in the working out of the experiment.

Dr. Wilcox is the director of the camp. Mrs. Wilcox and her daughters, Ruth and Helen are also here, occupying the family cottage, assisting in the work of the camp and making the place "homey." The administrative staff is composed of Arthur J. Greer of Boston University, Claude Allen of North Adams, Mass., and Harvey Collings of Cranberry Lake, assistants; Dr. Samuel Z. Batten, director of education; Frank G. Robinson, physical director; Dudley Luce of Yonkers, swimming director; Willard Sparrow, chef, and Miss Ruth Wilcox, registrar. Most of the members of the staff were baptized by Dr. Wilcox in his various pastorates and have been trained by him in camp life and boy's work. There is therefore perfect team work in the administration.

Equally of course the health and morals of the boys are carefully fostered, and the boys show the effects of the care given them. One watching this husky bunch in action finds his blood running faster, and his heart is warmed by their Christian and gentlemanly deportment. There is rarely a word that could shock the most fastidious and never a foul remark. A Sunday school has no more decorum nor a romp more freedom than the discipline of this camp.

Good army tents are fitted up in orderly rows for the boy's quarters and working squads appointed daily keep everything in order. The occupants of each tent are held responsible for its care. Inspections are frequent and prizes are awarded for superior neatness.

Fun Plus Something Else

Chief in importance though not the most obtrusive on the program is the Christian idealism and inspiration gained. Every morning there is a devotional period in which many prominent leaders conduct worship and give short and snappy talks on many phases of Christian life and service. This season the boys have

Note the dock and boats at the left, the tents peeping through the trees and the mountains in the distant background.

Recreations are a matter of course. Along with a great variety of games there are swimming, rowing, hikes, mountain climbing, camping on the islands or on the mountains under the open sky, fishing and actually catching fish, hunting—not shooting, but looking for and finding the wild animals and birds that abound in this wild country. Deer are often seen. One boy reported that he had caught sight of a bear. Loons play around the rowboats on the lake and make the woods echo with their cries. Chipmunks scamper about the camp almost within the hand's reach, or burrows under the tents, apparently on the friendliest terms with everybody. An occasional trip through the woods under the direction and instruction of government forestry officers gives a rare opportunity to acquire wood lore. On pleasant evenings everybody gathers around a great campfire, where in the gathering shadows of the night stories are told in keeping with the spirit and purpose of the camp, and from the campfire the boys go sleepy but happy to their tents, not for mischief but for sound slumber.

Z. Batten; "Lessons from Nature," Prof. J. R. Brown; "Studies in the Life of Jesus," Antonio Mangano; "The Human Body," Dwight L. Hubbard, M.D.; stories by Coe Hayne; stories and addresses on other subjects by Chas. L. White, Milton G. Evans, C. A. Barbour, G. N. Brink, J. Foster Wilcox, the associate editor of THE BAPTIST and perhaps others.

"You Bet We Are"

How does it work out? Well, on my first arrival at the camp, when our motor boat rounded up at the dock, there stood a crowd of boys in their bathing suits, wet from swimming, with every visible part of their bodies tanned brown. And this was the manner of our introduction: "Hello! boys," said I, "you seem to be enjoying yourselves." "You bet we are," cried Tom, Dick and Harry—whoever they were, in concert. And from that moment we were chums.

Personal contact with the work of the camp for a week has led me to place a high value on this experiment. Here, taking the season's total enrollment, are 125 boys from fifteen states of the Union, the District of Columbia, China, India, Corea and Burma; sons of prominent ministers, missionaries, business men and professional men; sons of millionaires and of laboring men; Baptist boys, all, who are to be future leaders in many spheres of life; receiving the inspiration and training that will augment their fitness for real Christian leadership. Many of them will carry the spirit and methods of Oswegatchie directly back to their churches, and in the future Oswegatchie will be heard from on mission fields, in effective pastorates and in the counsels and work of Christian laymen of large influence.

The experiment is worth trying on a larger scale and through a series of years. Locally the camp needs more ground and larger though not better equipment. Tents, hut, mess hall, assembly tent, cots, bedding, food, boats, helpers and organization are good enough for a king's son; but if there is a larger enrollment next year, more equipment and an increased force of helpers will be required. The increase in attendance may be expected. The number of registrants could have been doubled easily this season. The difficulty has been not to find boys but to select wisely so as to keep within a reasonable limit of numbers and to bring to the camp only those boys who will profit most substantially from its training. Helpers can be secured. The staff of this season will probably be available next season, and some of the boys in camp at the present time have developed such capacity for leadership that they have been cited for addition to the staff next year. Tents and other equipment can be purchased as needed. But one need there is which must be met at the right time or not at all. The camp stands at one angle of a triangular peninsula whose base faces the lake. The entire peninsula contains probably ten acres of superb lake frontage, high enough, perfectly drained and covered with fine spruce, birch, maple and beech trees. All of this shore ought to belong to the camp.

Try It on a Larger Scale

To make the experiment on a scale sufficient for intelligent appraisal a similar camp ought to be established somewhere in the central states, and another in the West. No state west of Illinois is represented here, and there is only one boy from that state. Wisconsin has none, Indiana none, Michigan two, Ohio two, West Virginia one. This sectional representation is in no sense a fault; it is merely a natural fact that indicates the need for other camps.

To encourage and support this work is a natural function of the Baptist Brotherhood, not through a new financial and administrative organization but through the denominational agencies now engaged in making the experiment. Dr. Wilcox is born and trained for this sort of thing. Given an adequate force of lieutenants, as at present and in cooperation with Drs. Batten and Harlan he can easily create and operate a system of such camps for the field of the Northern Baptist Convention.

At night as I lie on my bed in the heart of Chicago, I seem to hear again the rustling of the trees over the assembly tent and somebody saying "Bowser, str 'em up!" Bowser (from Michigan) springs to his feet and begins a series of tortuous agonies that explode at last from half a hundred throats into

By A. E. BIGELOW

LAST Christmas the board made us a present of a Ford. Don't you wish that you had a board like that back of you? Oh, yes, I supposed some one would be quick to shout out that it was extravagant. I once heard a woman rave about the awful extravagance of some Japanese lady missionaries because they wore silk dresses, when she only exposed her ignorance. Oh what a relief it has been! I hardly see how we ever put up with slow, nerve-racking street rigs all these years. Now we can go to Iloilo, four miles away, do all our shopping and be back with half the afternoon before us, and it is more like an outing than anything else. The saving to our nerves will be enough to equal the extra outlay, not to speak of the saving in time and cash, even with gasoline at seventy-five cents a gallon. Then, too, we can go into the country at will along our first class road so that our usefulness is greatly increased. This has been almost an impossibility to us in the school because the trains do not run at the right hours.

Not long ago the members of a country church asked some of us to visit them and try to counteract the work of some very diligent Adventists. I took three preachers of the Jaro church and one of our boys here and we five made the trip up in about an hour and a half. We stopped for morning worship and dinner at a nearby church and then held our service in the afternoon at the appointed place. Two of the men spoke, one on "The Law" and the other on "The Sabbath." The people were greatly helped and some wavering ones made steadfast. At five we started home and came back the long way as the cutoff was a new road and full of sharp stones. Two weeks later we did it again and now we have a fine young man stationed there as preacher and head teacher of a big first-year high school class. It was made possible by the Ford, and was less expensive than if we had had more time and could have gone by train and jitney. I have no doubt but that this will be repeated many times during this school year. The Ford is a great asset here where the roads are fast being put into shape and will continue to be more so year by year.

One of the unusual features of that first meeting was the reply made by one of the Adventist workers present. She was a young Visayan woman who had been a school teacher and was one of the earliest converts of the Adventists. When she began to speak to uphold her faith she began in English. Everyone shouted for her to talk Visayan. She said she couldn't do it and say what she wanted to say! So she had the young man who came with her translate for her. It certainly was a funny occurrence. She followed some book of theirs and rolled it off much like a parrot and the people listened attentively for a while, but she either misquoted so many verses or else took them out of their context that they soon called her down for it, especially the men with me. When I saw that it would result in useless argument I called

Crumbs from the Master's Table

BY R. E. NEIGHBOR

Mark XI:22, 23. "And Jesus answering saith unto them, Have faith in God. For verily I say unto you, That whosoever shall say unto this mountain, Be thou removed and cast into the sea; and shall not doubt in his heart, but shall believe that those things which he saith shall come to pass; he shall have whatsoever he saith."

HOW are we to understand the great Teacher in such an utterance as this? Did he speak in hyperbole? Did he really mean just what he said?

An esteemed correspondent with an active and independent mind who is not disposed to let another determine her religious opinions for her, writes that she finds some difficulty in accepting what recently appeared in these columns as to assurance in prayer even when the conditions are fulfilled that we "ask in faith, believing." She says referring to the Saviour's words that stand at the head of this paper, that it is hard to believe that the mountain is plucked up and cast into the sea when it remains standing right where it was. Exactly so. For prayer is not idiotic, and the "faith" upon which Christ conditions the answer is itself intelligent.

How then shall we understand his words here about faith's removing mountains—not hypothetical mountains either but actual ones, "this mountain," he says, i. e., the Mount of Olives, and the sea the distant Mediterranean thirty or forty miles away? In dealing with a Scripture like this we need to bear in mind certain things which the Saviour assumed the disciples, to whom he was then speaking, would not require to be reminded of. And is it true that we have fallen below their level of spiritual understanding? I think it must have been clear to them,

(1) That he was treating of prayer as related to the kingdom of God and of their personal relation to that kingdom as representatives of himself. They were to become his witnesses to the ends of the earth; he was to live, i. e.: continue to live, in them. It was through them and his working in them that the Kingdom was to be established. Therefore,

(2) It was not of prayer for the sake of securing some selfish personal end that he was speaking. Of course, I am not here using the word selfish in any condemnatory sense. On the contrary what I mean is prayer for merely material good things, such as prayer for the sick that they may be restored to health, for relief from physical pain, for prosperity in business, and so forth. Neither am I saying that these are not proper subjects for prayer; I am only saying that prayer for these things was not in the Master's thought when he spoke about removing mountains, as in the passage before us.

(3) The "faith" on which he conditions this mountain-removing power has the quality of spiritual discernment. When he compares it to a grain of mustard-seed (Matt. xvii:20), He is not measuring its quantity but its quality—a very different thing. Faith as a living element of character is capable of growth and therefore has its various degrees or stages, as indicated in his eulogy of that of the Roman centurion: "I have not found so great faith, no, not in Israel," and his rebuke of his own disciples: "O ye of little faith!" But their little faith was of the same nature or kind as the greater faith of the centurion, even as the life energy of the feeble plant is the same in kind as that of its more vigorous or adult brother, and relates it in the same way even though not in equal degree to all those forces of Nature with which it has kinship. So even mustard-seed faith puts one who has it into relationship with powers that are almighty because they are divine. For it is not the faith that removes the mountain, nor is it the disciples who have the faith, but it is that divine almightiness with which their mustard-seed has brought them into vital connection. A child's hand as well as a man's could press the button that exploded a few years ago the dynamite under the obstruction in the approach to the harbor in New York. That the writer of Mark's gospel thus understood the Master to have said is evident from his coupling this utterance about the removal of mountains with the other one about having faith in God. He did not lose sight of the fact that it is not the faith that does the stupendous thing, but God on the occasion of the faith of the disciple through whom He acts—as in New York the chief engineer through the little child.

Passing now to consider faith as having the quality of spiritual discernment, two things are to be noted, viz: (a) It will be likely to know when to ask for the removal of the mountain and when not to ask for it; and (b) that it will itself not want it to be removed until God's time to remove it comes, or provided He does not want to remove it, or at least does not want to remove it now. In other words, and because faith is in control, the asking is always subject to God's will and leaves the situation in his hands.

Altering Guide Boards

BY OBED

Wrongly-placed emphasis may reverse God's order, and endanger great interests. To a large extent Christian people are doing this. By lessened stress on united prayer as the first step in the divine plan for securing results in Christian work, and increased prominence given to human effort, we are practically saying that we know better than the Master how His work should be done.

Here and there is a church where this is not the case; some pastors lead their flocks to believe that united prayer is vital, and to live up to that faith. But churches whose prayer-meetings have been slighted to death are far too common. Many pastors act as though something else can be safely substituted for prayer, and permit Bible studies, mission studies, song services, conferences, reports, etc., to be given the right of way. The majority of our church members never think of the prayer meeting as a standing engagement; many would actually feel strange there. Too frequently members are forgetting how to pray in public—even to utter a sentence-prayer. The lack of prayer in many so-called prayer meetings cries out for pastors to "teach us to pray."

The condition is serious. Of course it has not been planned (except by our old enemy the devil), it is mainly the result of failure to put first and keep first what our Master placed first. Possibly a few familiar scriptures, garbled for the purpose (but not irreverently), may serve to illustrate the misplaced emphasis against which this word of protest is made. No (1 Thessalonians 5:16.) Plan without ceasing.

(John 14:14.) If ye pull together I will do anything for you.

(John 16:23.) Whatsoever ye shall unitedly work for He will give it you.

(Matthew 21:13.) My house shall be called a house of committee meetings.

(1 Timothy 2:8.) I will that men get together and co-operate everywhere.

(Ephesians 6:18.) Discussing always, and watching thereunto with all saints.

(Matthew 6:6.) Shut thy door, and lay out thy work, and He shall reward thee openly.

(Acts 6:4.) But we will give ourselves to practical work, and to the ministry of the Word.

(James 1:5.) If any of you lack wisdom, let him talk it over with others, and it shall be given him.

(Acts 4:31.) And when they had held a long business meeting, they were all filled with the Holy Spirit.

(Matthew 7:1.) How much more will your heavenly Father give the Holy Spirit to them that get busy!

(Philippians 4:6.) In everything, by plans and preparation, with thanksgiving, go to it, and—

(Matthew 18:19.) If a few of you shall plan together concerning your church work, it shall be done for them of my Father.

And be Quick About It.

The American Red Cross is collecting new and used garments and materials that can be made up into garments, to be shipped abroad for the relief of the people of Eastern and Central Europe, said to be nearer nakedness today than they have been at any time since the close of the Napoleonic wars. Uncut muslin and flanellette, remnants and mill ends of cloth for suits, yarn and thread are needed. Mill ends of blankets, for instance make excellent baby blankets. It is believed that many firms have odds and ends of goods on their shelves that could be used to great advantage.

It is felt that the need will reach a climax next winter. American Red Cross workers say that the number of mothers who will be unable to provide clothing for their babies will pass the million mark, and hundreds of thousands of children will have no shoes when cold weather comes unless they are provided in advance by American relief organizations. The accumulated stores of clothing in homes are at last giving out. Even the patients in the hospitals are dependent upon paper bandages.

The American Friends' Service Committee has united with the Red Cross in this clothing drive. The clothing must be made or collected during the summer months in order to reach Europe before cold weather. Used garments that are strong, warm and serviceable, shoes, stockings and sweaters are needed. Clothing or material that is not designated for a particular country will be distributed by the two organizations according to the greatest need. Donors may, however, specify the country to which they wish their gifts to go.

The materials may be shipped to the American Red Cross warehouse, Bush Terminal, Brooklyn, N. Y. to the warehouse of the American Friends' Service Committee, 15th and Cherry streets, Philadelphia. The nearest Red Cross chapter will gladly give information to those who want to know how to help.

Prepare to Pray.

Free literature on Christian education will be furnished to pastors, teachers and others who wish it for use in connection with the observance of the day of prayer for public schools, Sabbath, September 11th, or other convenient day. This literature includes the September educational number of The Christian Statesman, the official journal of the Association, the report of a World Commission on public education, and pamphlets on the Bible in the public schools and on kindred subjects. Send request by card or letter to the National Reform Association, 209 Ninth Street, Pittsburgh, Pa., mentioning this journal.

The New School for Girls at Ningpo

The "little sisters," at the Sarah Batchelor School, Ningpo China, are to study soon, in a new school, enjoying good light, fresh air, helpful books, and race, run and frolic in an ample play-ground. On June twenty-first, a promising group of five, graduated from the high school, nine from the higher primary, twelve from the lower primary, and five from the kindergarten. The commencement exercises were held on the newly acquired property, under temporary tents. The graduates, a year ago, organized an alumnae association for the purpose of raising money for the needed building. This year they announced at their alumnae banquet that six-hundred dollars had been received. The money for the new school, a Jubilee gift from the women of the East Central District, will provide a new main building and dormitory. Instead of American middies, the five girls in the graduating group pictured here wear the Chinese jacket and write most gratefully to Miss Prescott, of the prospect of the new school, made possible through "friends in Christ," in America.

Though Poor, They Make Many Rich

Armenia is at the point of dying of starvation, but Armenians have made some remarkable contributions to the wealth of the United States. Seropian Brothers improved the California fig to the standard of the Smyrna variety and introduced it to the market. Mr. Krikor Arakelian, "the melon king," originated the honey-dew melon. Dr. Osigian has established at New Orleans the largest silk-worm nursery in the world. His worms produce per worm fifty per cent. more silk than any others in the world, and he has discovered a method of coloring the silk by feeding the worms, so that they produce it in eighteen different colors.

Baptists in Japan Hold Conference

Baptist missionaries in Japan held their annual conference in Tokyo in June. This conference is held separately from the Japan Baptist convention which is composed regularly of delegates from the native churches. Next year the two bodies may meet together. The work in Japan was found to be suffering for lack of both money and workers. Several new missionaries were welcomed however, and Mr. and Mrs. Laughton will soon be ready to take charge of Captain Bickel's little White Ship, the Fukuin Maru.

Where Black Boys Grow Big Crops.

There are now in operation in North Carolina sixteen county training schools having vocational departments of agriculture; one department in a city high school, located at Wilmington; and one department in the State Normal School at Fayetteville. The work in the county training schools has passed the experimental stage, for wonderful results have been obtained in the communities where these schools are located. A survey of the project work of the eleven schools in operation during 1919-20 shows that 220 colored boys grew crops on a scientific and business basis on 191 acres of land and successfully raised 278 farm animals. The average income for each pupil in crops was $98.60. The average income an acre was $78.49. In most instances the yield and income an acre received by these students surpassed those of their fathers. In Palmico County a boy grew $450 worth of farm products on one acre of land. He raised four crops, the first of which was early potatoes. These he shipped to the New York market, selling them at the then prevailing war prices. When the student's financial returns are in, the teacher usually sees to it that a portion of his money is placed in the local bank. The seeds of thrift as well as of industry are thus started.—

Burn the Soldiers That Saved Democracy.

The race question comes to the front in the British Empire from many different angles. Mr. Sastri, the Indian delegate to the Imperial Conference, interviewed by the Manchester Guardian, said he was strongly in favor of an Indian navy manned by Indians, but he could not imagine such a navy being ordered in the event of war to the protection of Australia which has definitely closed her doors to Indians. It is quite evident that there will have to be a better balance held in the future as between privilege and obligation. It will not do for the United States to send colored boys to France to make the world safe for democracy and then burn them up when they get back to Tulsa.

What One Evangelist Has Done

Rev. J. A. Scott, Home Board Evangelist of the Southern Baptist Convention, reports for the past year 794 additions to Baptist Churches; 601 of them were received for baptism. Over 300 joined tithers bands, and 250 surrendered for home or foreign mission work. He secured over 400 subscribers to Home and Foreign Fields, the mission journal of Southern Baptists.

Green Bags Reach the Masses.

Central Presbyterian Church, Denton, Texas, A. Reilly Copeland, pastor has a unique way of reaching the masses with the gospel.

The church has placed literature bags in prominent places throughout the city and elsewhere. These bags have thirty pockets each and are filled with the best tracts that teach spiritual, patriotic and educational truths.

For instance, in Denton, these bags are placed in the church, Sunday school annex, schools, (two state colleges), city hall central office, court house barber shops, hotels, cafes, mills and the depot.

In addition to this, Central church has these bags in the depots along the railroads out of Denton and plan soon to extend the work as funds permit. Funds are secured in a very simple manner. Mr. E. Hugh Egan, a layman, of Denton, is chairman of the work, and all offerings are strictly voluntary. This means free will in spirit as well as in name. Most of the funds come from members of the church yet it is left open to anyone who is interested in this program of the work.

Mr. Copeland says it is marvelous how all classes read these tracts in great quantities.

In addition to the spiritual, patriotic, and educational features of the tracts, the church announcements can be attractively displayed on the space at top of literature bags, thus making a permanent ad for the church doing the work. The beautiful green canvas bag looks well anywhere.

Central Presbyterian Church also has a free book table in the vestibule supplied with an assortment of the best ten leading subjects. These books are also paid for by voluntary offerings from those interested.

There are two books near the main entrance loaded with a large assortment of orthodox books with printed prices on outside of covers. One can select books desired and leave money in the plate.

Carlinville Refuses to follow

In contemplation of a proposal to transfer fellowship from the Northern to the Southern Baptists, the First Baptist Church of Carlinville adopted the following resolutions August 3, 1921:

"Resolved, That this First Baptist church of Carlinville, Ill., deprecates the efforts being put forth to split the Baptist denomination in this State into Northern and Southern branches;

"That this church, being located in Central Illinois, having been organized by Ebenezer Rodgers as Moderator, and A. Wilber as Clerk, in 1835, as a Northern Baptist church, having always adhered to the fundamental Baptist doctrines, and held its affiliations with Northern Baptists, both State and National, hereby reaffirms its position;

"That when the Macoupin County Association, of which this church is a member, refuses to fellowship with the Northern Baptists, and support the societies which they maintain, and aligns itself with the Southern Baptists, this church withdraw its membership from that Association and unite with some other association of Baptist churches in this district which is in accord with the Northern Baptists;

"That the pastor and messengers of this church to the Macoupin County Association, which meets in Nilwood, August 31st, be instructed to make the position of this church known at the Association, and report to the church the position the Association holds on the question."

How the University of Chicago Grows.

The rapid development of the University of Chicago is illustrated by the fact that in the last five years four editions of The University of Chicago: An official Guide have been published. The fourth edition, recently issued from the University of Chicago press, has been revised and enlarged by the author, David Allan Robertson, Dean of the Colleges of Arts, Literature and Science, and a number of striking new illustrations added, among them a sketch of the quadrangles in 1921, the Harper Memorial Library in connection with the Law School, a model of the Theological Building and Bond Chapel, remarkable reproductions from the plans of the University Chapel (exterior and interior), and St. Paul's on the Midway and Ryder Divinity House.

Among the statements in the book that illustrate the great growth of the University are the following: Thirty years ago it had a site of seventeen acres and now one of a hundred (not including seventy acres in the Observatory site at Lake Geneva); then it had four buildings, now over forty. The University Faculty has grown from 120 to about 450. During the first year, 742 students were registered; in 1920-21, over 11,000 different students were in residence. The University now has 13,200 alumni, and during the thirty years of its history 88,700 students have matriculated.

Portland, Ore., Baptists Pull Together

Seventeen Baptist Sunday schools of Portland, Ore. maintain a "Superintendents' and Workers' Union," with a membership of 130. It has both social and instructional features in interesting variety and is regarded as highly successful. At a recent meeting it adopted a resolution approving the acceptance by the Home Mission Society of the trust fund of $1,750,000, declaring that "it is time for us to take an out and out stand regarding the Divinity of our Saviour and the Inspired Word of God that cannot be misunderstood."

If You Want To

Camp Mark L. Bristol has been founded by the Y. M. C. A. at Constantinople to provide for the needs of American sailors in that port. It has all sorts of facilities for rest, comfort and recreation and the following imperative rules:

"It's YOUR camp and naturally you can do as you please!

- "(1) Any time between eight A. M. and noon you may get up—if you want to!
- "(2) Breakfast is waiting for you and you can eat what and when you want—if you want to!
- "(3) We nearly forgot—you CAN wash—if you want to!
- "(4) Turn to! Anytime you feel like doing anything you feel like doing anywhere you feel like doing it—if you want to!
- "(5) Dinner and supper are ready whenever you feel like eating them—if you want to!
- "(6) In the afternoon you do just as much as you did in the morning—if you want to!
- "(7) Same for the evening—if you want to!
- "(8) Smoking is only permitted anywhere and any time you feel in the humor—if you want to!
- "(9) You can only get what you want and when you want it at the Canteen—if you want to!
- "(10) Turn in when you want to—if you want to!
- "(11) BUT, YOU MUST BE HAPPY—WHETHER YOU WANT TO OR NOT!"

International Uniform Lesson for Sept. 4

"FROM PHILIPPI TO ATHENS"

Acts 16:19-17:15. Golden Text, Psalm 34:7.

BY JOHN A. EARL

The Lesson Text

From Philippi to Athens involves three cities, viz., Philippi, Thessalonica and Berea. Having established the church in Philippi, Paul and his companions were accelerated in their journey westward by the prison experience of Philippi. Thessalonica was the next city of importance to be visited. It is now called Salonica. This city has always been a trade and commercial center, and this accounts for the fact that there were Jews enough in the city to maintain a synagogue. Driven out of Thessalonica by the activity of the Jews, the missionaries next reached Berea. Here their message was received readily by the people of the synagogue and by others. But the recalcitrant Jews of Thessalonica following Paul to Berea drove him farther south. The next lesson will take up the thread of Paul's second missionary journey at Athens.

The Lesson Taught

A Philippian Prison, a Thessalonian Tumult, and a Berean Bible are suggestive topics in teaching the lesson.

A Philippian Prison

Humanly considered the prison is an anti-climax. Beginning his European experience with such a vision as he had at Troas when the man of Macedonia called for help, Paul had reason to expect something better than the stocks in the inner cell of a Roman prison. One would not have blamed him and Silas if they had complained. But instead we find them praying and singing hymns unto God at midnight. They had a serious complaint against the Roman authorities in Philippi which Paul later expressed in no uncertain terms; but there never was any question about God's dealings with them. It is one thing to fight against the injustices of men, and it is quite another thing to fight against the providences of God. The men who could worship God at midnight with backs bleeding, could also administer a stinging rebuke to their persecutors in the morning. Submission to the will of God does not mean non-resistance to the brutality of men. It is possible for us to accept without question some accident caused by the criminal carelessness of others involving us in pain and sorrow and irremedial loss as part of God's will for us, and yet prosecute the parties who caused the accident. The jailor's conversion seemed to hang upon the train of circumstances that landed Paul and Silas in prison, and the record of the jailor's conversion has been the means of countless other conversions since. God has His own peculiar way of advancing His kingdom, and the most peculiar thing about it is that the kingdom advances best by opposition.

A Thessalonian Tumult

"Out of the frying pan into the fire," seems to have been the lot of Paul on his way from Philippi to Athens. His experiences at Philippi did not stop him from going right on with his mission. Paul may have been small in stature but he was big in pluck. The gospel burned in his bones like a fire, and it had to be preached. The synagogue wherever there was one always furnished an opportunity for the preaching of the word. So when Paul and Silas reached Thessalonica they sought the synagogue, and for three successive Sabbaths reasoned with the members of the synagogue from the scriptures concerning the Christ. Three points about the Christ were persuasively insisted upon by Paul, viz., that it behooved the Christ to suffer, to rise again from the dead, and that Jesus of Nazareth was the very Christ. This preaching was in direct opposition to the teaching of the Rabbis because they taught that the Christ when he appeared would set up a political kingdom like that of David, and in fact he would be another David only greater. That the leaders of their people in Jerusalem could have made a mistake in regarding Jesus as an impostor was not to be admitted for a moment. Therefore the preaching of Paul was denied by the Rabbis, and although a goodly number of people were converted to Jesus as the Christ, the Jewish leaders stirred up a mob which threatened for a time to do great bodily injury to the missionaries. Immediately after this demonstration of hostility, the brethren sent the missionaries away by night to Berea. The trouble at Philippi was caused by the financial loss of the men who could no longer exploit the slave-girl after she was delivered from something worse than human slavery; the trouble at Thessalonica was caused by religious bigotry. These have been the two causes which account for nearly all the religious persecution with which the pages of history are filled. The third cause was political. These three prejudices of men still operate to hinder the coming of the kingdom of God on earth.

A Berean Bible

The preaching of Paul to the Jews was based upon the scriptures of the Old Testament. His message at Berea was in all probability substantially the same as the message at Thessalonica. The Jewish Bible was the basis of the argument and appeal of Paul. His preaching was, what we would call, messianic. The Jews at Berea were receptive of the message proclaimed by the missionaries, and there seems to have been no disposition on the part of any of them to oppose the preachers. On the contrary, they searched the scriptures daily in order to assure themselves that the things preached to them were so. They evidently accepted the scriptures as final authority in all matters which had reference to the Messiah. Much of the Old Testament has long ceased to be binding upon Christians. But its perennial authority lies in its prophetic spirit, its spiritual emphasis, its deep religious experiences and its Messianic hope. The epistle to the Hebrews is the apostolic interpretation of the Old Testament. The scriptures of both the Old and New Testaments are still the final authority in all matters pertaining to Christ and Christian experience. When we depart from the Bible interpreted in the light of the Spirit of Jesus experienced in the soul our preaching and teaching is without authority.

A Preacher's Safeguards in His Pastoral Work

BY GEO. H. WISE

4 Tim., Chapter 5

1. Exhort and not rebuke.
2. Without prejudice.
3. No partiality.
4. Not partakers in other men's sins.
5. Keep thyself pure.

It is to be noticed in these safeguards there is extreme pressure on how to handle the situation from the disposition of the minister rather than definite rules to govern specific cases. To be able to radiate the glow of a great Christian grace is more powerful than to radiate the preeminence of a haughty spirit.

Morning Prayer

Safeguard us, dear Lord, from the entanglements of a haughty and irritating disposition, so that when it comes time for our ministry we may be unfettered to do thy will. May we never be puffed up so that we may think of rebuking men and women, as though we were their superiors, but rather may we have such warmth of affection and such stainless characters that they may lead us to live lives without reproach. May our flock think more of our Savior, Our Master, than they think of his servant; more of the message than the words which bring it; more of the life than the things that he does. Accept our gratitude and thanks but make us to show our appreciation by more deeply consecrating our all to thee. In Jesus' name. Amen.

The Talking Palm Leaf

FAM was big and black, and he carried a spear; Pale-As-Clouds was slender and white, and she carried no weapon. Moreover, they were alone on the forest trail, and Fam was exceedingly angry.

"The thing that you ask me to do, Pale-As-Clouds, is not a thing to ask of a man who is a warrior. How would I look to go walking back to my kraal carrying a palm leaf to the White Man, saying: 'This palm leaf will talk to you a message from Pale-As-Clouds!' Bah, he would laugh at me deep down in his throat, and the men of my tribe would make fun of me. From way back before my father's day, was there ever a talking palm leaf known to the tribes of black men? No never! I dare not do this thing!"

Pale-as-Clouds stood straight as an arrow. "Fam," she said sternly, "I insist upon your doing it. You can tell the men of your village that you saw Pale-As-Clouds take a thing called a pin, that you saw her tattoo a design all over the palm leaf with this pin, so that it might talk to her husband way back in his kraal. You can say it is the White Man's way! And when my husband hears the palm leaf talk, then you shall see how interested he will be. O Fam, please! please! It is a big matter to me, so go quickly—I am breaking my heart over this delay."

Fam wagged his woolly black head as if all the world had suddenly gone mad, then he took the palm leaf between his fingers very gingerly, and began his unwilling trip back over the zig-zag trail to his own kraal, where Pale-As-Clouds and her husband had recently come to live.

Meanwhile Pale-As-Clouds herself hurried on to the nearby kraal, a little village of beehive huts, built of straw and leaves, looking for all the world like haystacks.

"News! News! Pale-As-Clouds has come!" was shouted from haystack to haystack, as the whole village rushed out to meet her.

But she would not linger to talk. "Take me to Nlem Ngon," she cried, "for I heard a strange tale out on the forest trail while I was coming here; I heard that your witch doctor suspects Nlem Ngon of having made your sheep and goats fall sick. Shame on you; is not Nlem Ngon a very little girl? How could she hurt so many healthy animals all at once? Is there no thing like poisoned grass, like bitter water, to make the flocks fall ill? Yet you have hit Nlem Ngon, they tell me, yes, you even stoned her, and are now starving her, so my heart is heavy within me. For Nlem Ngon is a friend of mine. When I travel here to visit, it is Nlem Ngon with whom I can sit to palaver about the things of God, for she is hungry for that news. Take me to her!"

Angry snarls greeted these remarks. "White Woman," roared the headman of the kraal, "it is not well for you to be here, saying these bitter words. For our flocks are certainly sick, and how do we know but that you bewitched Nlem Ngon into bewitching the sheep and goats? That is what the witch doctor tells us, and he has just come from a journey where he saw you making a palm leaf talk; surely any one who can make a palm leaf talk can also make Nlem Ngon bewitch our herds. With a very little more of this trouble we will raise our spears and kill you!"

Pale-As-Clouds felt her heart beating uncomfortably fast. How she did hope that Fam was hurrying the talking palm leaf to her husband, otherwise these superstitious Africans might—

"When she's dead I want her hat!" cried a young warrior excitedly, which started a regular hub-bub. "Then I'll take her skirt!" "And I'll take her gold ring!" "I'll take her shoes!" "Bah—you couldn't wear them," laughed another. "I'll take her shoes myself!" "No, you won't," cried number one, "let's kill her now and be done with it."

In this rather terrifying fashion the babble increased into an uproar, until Pale-As-Clouds prayed in her heart that God would give her courage to die as a Christian ought to die. Sure it is that God was already giving her courage to live as a Christian ought to live, for there was a fearless smile upon her lips as she bravely raised her white hand for silence. "In the tribe of White Men we do not do things this way," she said; "we let the person about to die give away her own belongings, in her own way, to her own friends; and the headman of a White Man's town insists that those wishes be obeyed, for his word is law. Surely the headman of your kraal is exactly as just and powerful..."

"Indeed I am!" boasted the big black headman, swelling out his chest.

"I thought so," Pale-As-Clouds said tactfully, like oil on troubled waters; "surely your word is law. So in the White Man's fashion, I would ask that you let me talk quietly with Nlem Ngon, at least until the sun has climbed up to the top of the sky. Then, if I feel that Nlem Ngon has actually bewitched your flocks, I will gladly give away all my possessions to those who have been my best friends in your kraal. And as for me, have you forgotten that I told you how the great God of Heaven has sent me to bring you his message? Of course, if you kill me, he will be very much disturbed, and you will have to wait to hear this message until he finds some one else to send in my place. For he will find some one else to send, and quickly, too. No doubt because her skin will be white you will call her Pale-As-Clouds also, just as you have named me. And she will have joy in her heart as she whispers to herself: 'These black men are my brothers.' How I hope she may never live to see a day like this, when her brothers suddenly turn into butchers! It will make her low in her heart. Yet even if you kill her, too, the God of Heaven will send some other white messenger—you don't suppose you can ever stop God, do you? And now, mighty headman, may I talk my last talking to Nlem Ngon?"

The headman nodded, and she walked quietly to Nlem Ngon's hut; and while she was walking past them, black man whispered to black man: "Why was it that she showed no fear? Surely she has some strong magic against it..."

"I do not like it," groaned another. "She should have quaked and trembled. Perhaps her God may be too powerful for us, after all."

Then Pale-As-Clouds entered the straw hut where poor little Nlem Ngon lay groaning. Gathering the little girl into her arms, Pale-As-Clouds whispered: "Of course I know you didn't hurt the sheep, dear child; and I hope that the White Man will find a way to save us. Don't cry! For even if we die, have I not told it many times, how we can go straight home to God? 'Sh! 'Sh! 'Sh!' And Nlem Ngon was strangely comforted.

Meanwhile you will be wondering about the talking palm leaf. Long before this Fam had reached his kraal and had carried the absurd green leaf to the White Man.

"Pale-As-Clouds said this palm leaf would talk to you," he muttered in a shamefaced way, fully expecting a peal of scornful laughter.

It must be admitted that for a moment the American man was puzzled. Then he held the palm leaf up against the light, and there, pricked with a pin, he read these startling words: "Nlem Ngon is being tortured as a Christian. Must rescue her. Means danger. Need help. Hurry."

Exactly like a telegram you see! The young husband realized that if Pale-As-Clouds had told this trouble to the loyal Fam, he would probably have started a fight single-handed, and ruined every chance for more skilful planning. This silent palm leaf was a safer communication, yet the White Man never had felt so utterly helpless. What, what could he do? If he took a small army of men from his kraal, equipped with spears, it would only create deep enmity between two friendly villages, and dear Pale-As-Clouds might be killed in the scuffle. If he went alone, without any weapons, then he might be killed himself, for full well he knew that Nlem Ngon, their first little Christian convert, was arousing great wrath in that other kraal, because any girl is of little account in Africa, yet here was one whom the missionaries kept treating as a friend—a worth-while person. Every one was provoked and jealous, and no doubt the witch doctor was altogether gleeful in blaming her for the sick sheep.

In the twinkling of an eye the White Man debated many plans in his mind, but every plan ended with the question: should he, or shouldn't he, go armed to fight? Spears or no spears? Then suddenly his eyes lighted on some burlap bundles which had come that very morning down the river to him. Ah! Ah! He suddenly remembered a certain Bible verse: "For the Word of God is quick and powerful and sharper than any two-edged sword." All right, he would prove that verse.

"Fam!" he cried, "Pale-As-Clouds may be in great danger in that neighboring kraal. I do not wish to fight, so we will go armed with presents, White Man's gifts. Is it not a good idea? Get me four strong men from the palaver-house. We must go swiftly. Is it agreed?"

"It is agreed!" cried Fam excitedly, for a fight is a fight, and he had not dreamed the talking palm leaf had to do with war!

So presently six men went hurrying along that forest trail, each carrying a burlap bundle. Then when they reached the other kraal the White Man made his face look cheerful as he shouted: "Good news! Good news! We bring you presents from the God of Heaven, one for each man. But Pale-As-Clouds must help me to distribute them."

"Go get her," said the headman to another man, watching the burlap bundles being ripped open. Every one was excited. "Good! Good!" they grunted, as dozens upon dozens of square black leather things were brought out of the bundles and distributed. It was discovered that the black covers were full of white leaves, and every leaf was covered with curious tattoo-marks. You should have seen black men rubbing the leather binding against their noses, crying: "It has a good smell, it is a good present, for it has a pleasant smell!"

Before long they asked about the tattoo-marks, and the White Man took the hand of Pale-As-Clouds and said: "God has sent the two of us to bring you his message, for he has written it down in black and white for all the men of Africa."

"But does it really talk?" asked Fam, holding a Bible to his ear, and listening. "I cannot hear it talk!"

The White Man smiled. "Neither did you hear the palm leaf talk to me, yet it told me how Pale-As-Clouds was in deep trouble. If she can make a palm leaf talk, then surely God can make these white leaves talk, also."

"Good! Good!" grunted the black-skinned savages. "But how shall we ever learn to make it talk to us?"

"You must learn to read," said Pale-As-Clouds. "The White Man and I will start a school. It is one of the things God sent us to do."

"Good! Good!" they grunted again, and every savage heart was thankful they had not killed Pale-As-Clouds a few hours earlier.

The Young Reserves

A Grasshopper Glacier

FOR several years the people who lived in the small villages in the neighborhood of the Beartooth range of mountains in Montana could be heard joking about a grasshopper glacier. When strangers asked questions they were told that several years ago a man hunting for gold in these mountains reported that he had found a glacier covered with frozen grasshoppers.

This story was not believed by anyone, and because of the very bad storms on the icy mountain-tops the miner was not able to return to the remarkable glacier so as to convince the people that he was telling a true story.

Not long ago, however, two men employed by the Government started to explore Granite Peak, a mountain which rears its great head nearly two miles and a half into the sky, and is the highest point of the Beartooth range. These men were not able to reach the top of the mountain, and plant an American flag there, as they planned to do, but they did reach the wonderful grasshopper glacier, and brought back pictures and specimens which show that the miner's story was correct.

The belt of frozen grasshoppers runs the entire length of the glacier at the head of West Rosebud Mountain. It is about a mile long, and the bodies of the frozen insects lie so thickly that a person cannot walk without stepping on them, and when the wind blows, fragments of the insects are blown about.

No one can say positively how the grasshoppers came to be imbedded in the ice, but it is supposed that they tried to fly over the high mountain, and were frozen to death, because of their inability to continue the flight in such a high altitude.

Young Reserves!

Remember the contest in the July 16th issue.

The story on the opposite page about "The Talking Palm Leaf" will show you how the Africans, too, are learning to find hidden treasures in the Bible.

So that is the way that the Word of the Lord came to two villages in Africa, places so small and so unimportant that you would hardly find their names on the map; yet God is talking to the men of those kraals—day by day you will find them slowly spelling out his message from their Bibles, and by torchlight many a group in the palaver-house will read the old, old story, then walk homeward, saying: "It is a new thing; we did not dream before that God could talk to black men with tattoo-marks!"

Timothy's Old Gentleman—Who Hopped

By PEGGY

TIMOTHY is forever begging for a pet: "Oh Muvver," he will beg, "couldn't I just have a little pet lamb?" Just a very little bit of a one? Or the next day he will be pleading for a pet rabbit or a pet pony or a pet alligator—but alas! our back yard is about as big as a pocket handkerchief and it's mostly taken up with Bill's garden and my garden, anyhow; so mother has never been able to let him keep any of these pets. So one day at luncheon Timothy said pathetically: "Do you know, Muvver, I prayed to God last night and told him to please send me a pet today, but nothing's come yet!"

We all sighed, and I wondered what mother could say, when it was so absolutely the sort of prayer God must want us to answer. But the telephone rang just then, and Timothy's little remark dangled in mid-air all afternoon. But at supper that night he came racing in with his cheeks like the pinkest of roses and his eyes like great blue saucers: "I've got a pet!" he called enthusiastically. "I've got the nicest, jolliest pet, and he's so amusing, Muvver, and he takes up the littlest bit of room!"

"What kind of a pet is it?" we all asked. Timothy's eyes grew dreamy: "W-e-l-l, I don't know exactly but I guess he's just a little old gentleman."

"A little old gentleman?" we gasped. "What do you mean? What's he like? What does he do?"

Timothy looked at us solemnly one at a time: "He's a very nice old gentlemen, and he hops."

"Hops?"

"Uh-huh!" Timothy nodded.

Bill whistled long and loud: "What's the name of this old man, Timothy, is he a neighbor?"

"No, he's not any neighbor we ever saw, and he hasn't any name but The Old Gentleman-Who-Hops. And Muvver, God couldn't have sent me any pet I'd like half as well. I just knew he would!"

Of course we asked questions and asked questions about this old gentleman, but the answers grew "curiouser and curi-

Topic for September 4

THY WILL BE DONE—III. WITH MY MIND.
Matt. 6:7-15. (Consecration Meeting).

For the first Sunday of the last six months of the year, the general subject is "Thy Will Be Done," For July 3, "Thy will be done with by Strength;" for August 7, Thy Will be done with My Pleasure. For September 4, we deal with the use of the mind.

"Professors of universities say: 'If we could only get the young people to think.'" This convention has raised many questions in my mind, but didn't settle them. I will have plenty of thinking material which will last until the St. Paul Convention."—A Chicago Delegate.

Just what the Cincinnati convention did for this young college student, is just what ought to be done with all our young people. Something should be done from the pulpit, Sunday-school room, or college halls which would set out young people to using their minds.

1. A question? "Just what are we coming to?" is on the lips of thousands of people today. No one seems to have the answer. I have on my desk a letter from a young girl of seventeen, ready for high school. A very brief letter contains a number of mis-spelled words and incorrect sentences. A newspaper clipping in my morning's mail tells the story of the suspension of two children from the schools of Sacramento because their parents would not allow their children to take dancing, which appears to have been compulsory in that local school. Our school boards and teachers are too often ready to teach the young people the use of their feet instead of their heads.

2. What are we reading? Ask the librarian. A survey was made some time ago of a western city to see just what the people were reading. On the hill, where the big autos run and the people are able to live with the kings and queens of literature, the librarian found they were reading only the trashiest of the twentieth century sensations. But, he found, that when a fellow from the foreign quarter came to the desk, he inquired for books on Jefferson, Washington, Lincoln, Roosevelt, and others. If a small volume was handed out, it was returned with the following words in broken English, "Can't you give me a bigger book? I want more." If this condition be true generally, there is but little question where the leadership of this country will be in twenty-five years. And yet, only recently in that same city, the educational authorities sent out an appeal to the parents of the high school pupils, pleading for a closer supervision of the pupils in such activities as auto riding, dancing, etc.

This page is for all Baptist young people's organizations. Send news items on activities, organizations, plans and methods of work for publication in THE BAPTIST to James Asa White, General Secretary, 125 N. Wabash Ave., Chicago.

Moral conditions were unspeakably bad.

3. We need reform. In dress, in social affairs, in school work, in reading. The girl who goes down to work in the morning with such unbecoming dress should be rebuked by her employer and sent home. The schools must give more attention to the cultivation of the mind and the building of great character. The learning of the latest dancing step is not at all necessary to a life of real culture. Entertainments and social affairs must be planned on a much higher plane. The obscene movie must go. Parents and children alike must set their heads to work, else there is a possibility of disaster.

4. What is the business of the church? "To preach the Gospel" you answer. So do I. What's the use of preaching the Gospel and winning a young person to the church, then give him the handshake, tell him you are mighty glad, but please sit down. The program of the church must be such as to stimulate interest and arouse enthusiasm on the part of young people for the things of God. The young people are getting a smattering of the sciences in the high schools. They are going off to college. They come back with questions, and then somebody gets up and says the "college is ruining the faith of the young people." If the church had given the young people the right sort of training, they would have come out all right. Anyway, it is not a crime to think. The mind of the young person is not a sewer and catch-all for everything that comes along. The minister may desire his young people to take "things ready made" but they will not do so.

5. The rub of the whole affair. It is true that the war cut the devil loose in many ways. But the war did something else. It made everyone of us live in an infinitely bigger world. Now, we must relate ourselves to that big world. We must keep our hearts right. We must be loyal to Jesus Christ and his church. We must go out and tell our young people of their need of Christ, and of Christ's need of them. We must turn their wills in the direction of Christ and the great issues of his Kingdom.

BULLETINS

New World Movement calendar will be published again for 1922. It carries B. Y. P. U. topics for the year. Young people's societies everywhere are urged to secure the Calendar from the General Board of Promotion, 276 Fifth Avenue, New York, N. Y. Sample copy will be mailed for 15 cts. half-price. Sale of this Calendar to members of the churches would mean considerable profit to young people.

Mission study books for 1921-1922 are "Playing Square with Tomorrow" by Eastman and "World Friendships" by Murray. Order from any branch of the American Baptist Publication Society for 75 cts.

Board of Managers' Report of the B. Y. P. U. of America showing the wide activities of the Union will be mailed free on request to Headquarters, 125 No. Wabash Ave. Chicago, Ill.

Minnesota young people have organized a Life Service League with Robert Thompson as president. A large number of the young people of this state are in preparation for world service.

1922 convention of Baptist young people will be held in St. Paul, Minnesota on invitation of the Twin Cities.

Down in Georgia the young people are going out to organize 200 new unions; secure 250 A-1 (Standard) unions; 400 new tithers; 15 associations organized for active B. Y. P. U. work.

Southern Baptist Convention statistical department reports 6,786 senior B. Y. P. U. S., 2,188 juniors, with a total enrollment of 207,673. There are thirty-one boy P. U. secretaries working in this field.

Michigan delegation at the Cincinnati convention made things lively: They brought with them a Chippewa Indian—quite attractive with his paint and feathers. The Roumanian band was very much enjoyed.

New Baptist headquarters for Chicago and vicinity. The B. Y. P. U. of America has joined with other Baptist organizations in securing space for Baptist Headquarters on the fourth floor at 125 No.

North Dakota Letter

BY FRED E. STOCKTON

Four Days With a Colporteur

Saturday evening, July 24, Colporteur C. J. Hill and the writer left Grand Forks for Minot, reaching that city at 2:00 Sunday morning. Sunday was a full day. We first conducted the services in the Minot Baptist Church, at the conclusion of which a woman presented herself for membership in the church by baptism.

After dinner we started in the colporteur's car, which has inscribed on one side in gilt letters the name, "American Baptist Home Mission Society;" on the other side, "American Baptist Publication Society." We drove thirty miles south to our Russian Baptist Church at Max, where we found the church crowded to the doors and as many people outside the church as inside. Following the preaching service almost the entire congregation drove to a lake some ten miles distant where fourteen Russians were buried in baptism. That sight can never be forgotten. It was a perfect summer afternoon. The hillsides were covered with fields of harvested grain. Pastor Nesdoly went out about one hundred and fifty feet from the shore. The Russian choir sang gospel hymns in their native tongue. First came the pastor's father, a man about seventy years of age. The son baptized the father. Then came the young men and young women, marching in steady line out to the pastor and back to the shore. Among the young women was the pastor's daughter.

Following this service we drove south and west about forty miles to our church at Ammundsville, reaching the latter place shortly after 8:00 o'clock. Here we found a house full of people waiting for us. The sermon was preached by the writer. At the close of the service a boy, who had been converted in the Minot State Convention, was received for membership and baptism. Ammundsville is an inland community on the open prairie. The people of this place are working to secure funds to build for themselves a church home. They have already raised in cash over $700. The state convention and the Home Mission Society will help in this enterprise.

Monday morning we returned north to the village of Ryder. In this prosperous village there is a Presbyterian church, which is at present without a pastor. A number of families, most of whom are Baptists, have perfected an organization and have purchased a building which they call "Mission Hall." Here we preached Monday night. Our colporteur has succeeded in introducing Baptist literature into the Sunday school at this place. Careful leadership will eventually result in a Baptist church organization.

Tuesday morning the missionary automobile started again on its journey, going west and north among the hills and inland north of Plaza. At the supper hour we had reached the home of Nels Eldet, where the service was to be held in the evening. In this community we have an organized Norwegian Baptist church. The Sunday school is conducted in a neighboring schoolhouse. Preaching services are usually held in the homes. During the early summer, our colporteur, Rev. Hill, conducted a series of tent meetings, which were largely attended and unusually successful. The closing day of the tent campaign, the colporteur preached six times; three sermons in English and three Missouri River city. There is not a church building in the place. The only services held at this place recently, have been conducted by Mr. Heidenberg. A union Sunday school meets in the schoolhouse. If the right man can be found for this great territory which the colporteur and myself visited, we can have not less than four strong Baptist churches in the course of a few years. The man we need in Norwegian. Had he been physically able he would have preached again, as the people requested. The whole Sunday was spent at the tent, people bringing their dinners and suppers. Tuesday night and Wednesday morning it rained and hailed through a part of the country south of us. I later learned of a farmer and his family who watched their year's work and crop driven into the ground by the hail storm, and then went out to the side of the house where the hail stones were piled up and gathered a quantity of them. They got out the old ice cream freezer, and the family enjoyed a feast of ice cream. The crop was gone but the spirit and optimism of this typical western family was undaunted. The colporteur and his host improved the time we were waiting for the roads to dry by overhauling and cleaning his car.

Wednesday afternoon we were off again, driving south to Plaza and west to Van Hook, where we met and visited for a few minutes with Rev. C. C. Heidenberg who publishes a paper at Van Hook and preaches every Sunday in the surrounding communities. From Van Hook we proceeded to Sanish, the terminal of the "Soo line" on the banks of the Missouri River. In the valley west of Sanish we passed through great wheat fields that will produce bumper crops this year.

We reached Sanish late in the evening. We have a small group of Baptists in this place, and also hold title to some town lots. Sanish is a beautiful little should speak both English and Norwegian, and be a man of energy, consecration and a pioneering spirit.

Thursday morning the writer returned to the office to send out the pay checks, and the colporteur crossed the Missouri into the great prairies beyond, where preachers are few and far between. When he finishes the journey at Minot, the starting point, he will have traveled more than one thousand miles.

Park River

Pastor at large, Rev. C. W. Finwall, recently lead in a campaign on this field, together with the pastor, Rev. Richard Jensen, in raising funds for a new church building. The church house was destroyed by fire last fall. The campaign was unusually successful, the farmers and town people co-operating to the limit of their ability. With the help of the convention and the Home Mission Society, it will now be possible to build an attractive and commodious church building at Park River.

Tent Meetings

Scandinavian Missionary, Rev. Ole Larson, has been conducting a series of tent meetings north of Maddock. After the harvest rush is past and Rev. Larson has taken his vacation, the tent meetings will be started again at Esmond.

Newport

July 31, the General Superintendent visited our farthest-north church, three miles from the Canadian border line. Here he found a happy-family-church, in the open country sixteen miles from the nearest railroad. The membership is made up of Germans, Swedes, Norwegians, Irish and Americans. The church is a splendid illustration of the unifying spirit and power of the Gospel. Rev. A. Franklin Swanson has been pastor of this church for the past four years.

North Dakota Goals

So far as we know, North Dakota is the first state to fall in line with the program adopted at the Des Moines convention. Our state convention at Minot enthusiastically and unanimously adopted the "Objectives and Program" approved at Des Moines. North Dakota also assumed what seemed to be its fair share in the objectives for the coming year. Our convention goals are as follows: 500 baptisms and restorations by May 1, 1922; 500 members enrolled in Stewardship Leagues; $60,000 paid on New World Movement Pledges.

The Convention also adopted a program with definite goals for the work of our Sunday schools and young people's societies and women's mission circles for the coming year. All of the objectives and plans will be woven into one comprehensive plan for all of our churches and their activities.

Rev. Cyrus Fisher Tolman

Dr. Tolman was born in Meridian, N. Y., Oct. 25, 1832, and died at the home of his son, Frank, in Slingerlands, N. Y., August 3, 1921. He was graduated from Madison (now Colgate) University in 1856, completing his theological training in the same institution in 1858. In October of the same year he was married to Mary E. Bronson, daughter of Dr. Miles Bronson, and the following month sailed as missionary for Assam under appointment of our Foreign Mission Society. While his work in Assam was still in its beginnings he became a victim of malarial fever, and in 1861 was compelled to return to this country. For many years he suffered from the return of this malady, but held pastorates in Lawrence, Mass., and Ft. Madison, Ia., before entering upon his work as district secretary of our Foreign Mission Society for the upper Mississippi valley states in 1866. Here he served for nearly thirty years with untiring faithfulness and conspicuous success. During these years he was a familiar figure in Baptist gatherings in this section, and rendered most valuable service in the development of our denominational work. Later on he served for ten years as pastor of the Maplewood Church, Chicago.

"He was a good man, full of the Holy Ghost and of faith." No one who knew Dr. Tolman could fail to be impressed by the absolute genuineness of his character. He never posed, never sought place or honors. The spirit of his favorite text—"For the Son of Man came not to be ministered unto but to minister"—found constant illustration in his life. Up to the very last he served. After his death friends found among his papers the notes of a sermon which he was to have preached the following Sunday in the community church of Slingerlands.

For him death was no "leap in the dark." During the later years of his life he had a constant desire to depart and to be with Christ. This did not lead him to lessen his labors, neither did it render him gloomy and discontented. His interest in all the movements of our modern life, and especially in that which concerned the progress of the kingdom of God, remained keen and unadated to the end. But his citizenship was in heaven, and he welcomed the hour when the exile should finish his wanderings and enter into the better country.

Five children cherish the memory of a wise and loving father; Major Edgar B. and Julia R. of Chicago, John of Montana, Cyrus of California, and Frank of Slingerlands, N. C. The funeral services held from the home of Major E. B. Tolman, were conducted by Rev. Lathan A. Crandall, and the interment was in Oakwoods cemetery, Chicago.—L.A.C.

Put with this, facts recently unearthed from official sources by the great statistician, Dr. Walter Laidlaw—a Pedobaptist. (For details write to the Home Missions Council, 156 Fifth Ave., New York City). He finds that in the ten years between the last two takings of a religious census in the United States—1906 and 1916—the total population made a gain of 17.1%, but Roman Catholics gained only 10.6% while Protestants gained 23.4%. Protestant bodies practicing adult baptism made a gain in the same period of 28.2%.

The careful student of Russia for many years, Dr. R. S. McArthur, is credibly informed that there are at least 200,000 Baptists in that country.

A Third of a Mile of Baptist News

When the Board of Promotion was organized one of the first things it did was to establish a Publicity Department in order to give to the Baptists and to others current news about our New World Movement and our denominational life. As a result of the work of this department the Baptists have been able to get on the front page of hundreds of American dailies. One evidence of the efforts of this department is to be seen in the publicity—which was secured for the recent Des Moines Convention. We are dependent upon the returns of our clipping bureau only for our knowledge of what the papers publish. These bureaus claim that they are able to make returns of about sixty per cent. of the items that appear. Since the convention this one bureau has furnished to us over 3,000 clippings. If these were pasted end to end they would make a strip 1,868 feet long or almost one third of a mile.

The significance of this can be appreciated only when it is known how difficult it has been heretofore to get Baptist news into the daily press. Two years ago we asked one of the great eastern metropolitan dailies that had just carried a full page each day of news of the recent convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church, if they would accept a column each day if we would furnish it. They never acknowledged the receipt of the letter. This year that same paper asked us to furnish not less than a column a day, and at least eight hundred words by wire. The Associated Press asked us to furnish them each day generous reports of the convention. The Publicity Department has put the Baptists on the publicity map. It should be explained that not everything that appears in the press about Baptists emanates from this department. We lay no claim to that. The department for example had little responsibility for what appeared in the Des Moines papers as they covered the Convention themselves. We believe however that our Baptist people will appreciate the fact that for the first time Baptists news is receiving some adequate attention in the American press.

A Letter from Burma

BY J. HERBERT COPE

Like other parts of India, Burma is getting right up to date. There are strikes and rumors of strikes. For some time the railroads of the province were almost tied up by the men walking out but they lost and are returning to work, that is those whom the company wants. Then the oil people struck. So do not be surprised if you hear of a missionary strike. They might if that hundred million is not raised in four years from now. To missions the question arises how much of this independent spirit and discontent is going to affect the churches. It is almost sure to create a restlessness and dissatisfaction which will mean good or ill for the churches.

One of the "neediest" needs of the work in Burma has been men devoting their entire time to literary work. It has been the perpetual complaint that there was not being produced for the Christians a literature. Mr. Hascal has been at work at home. Dr. Tilbe last year asked to be relieved of station work to put his time into literature and is now at Kalaw, one of the hill stations, hard at it. Now comes word that Dr. Hanson is to be relieved by a new man, Sword, and so devote his time to the Kachin literature. It is a good move. Of course Dr. Smith has been producing book after book for the Sgaw Karens. In time there will probably be a man for each language appointed for this special form of work and they will be most welcome.

The missionary is continually having honors thrust upon him in the form of new work. The Chinese and Indians will come to Burma and they are the most accessible people in the large cities. So the missionaries who now have the Burman fields are taking up this work as an "avocation" as it were. Last year Mr. Grigg was appointed to the Chinese work but just to make sure he had enough to do he was given the English church at Moulmein. Now in desperation a committee has been appointed to deal with the matter, the last resort in the face of an impossible problem. The preliminary report of the committee tells the station missionaries to carry this work together with their other except in the large cities where regular missionaries will have oversight. In other words, carry on.

Last year was begun the new trades school which will be under the mission. They say it is coming along splendidly. One missionary for that work is on the field and two more are coming in the fall, whose salaries, by the way, the school is paying. It is another work which will be a source of pride to all.

Word has come saying that Dr. Robbins is coming out this fall to look us over. We have not forgotten the pleasure of his last visit. He comes now under a heavy handicap in that Mrs. Robbins is remaining at home. But in spite of this Joe seems to make himself liked by everyone even the missionaries to whom he cannot grant all they ask.

Davison Beats Hot Weather

Contrary to the usual condition in summer vacation time Davison church thermometer is rising with the weather temperature. Church attendance has increased, and a spirited Sunday school contest has added materially to our numbers. Points are awarded for lesson preparation, thereby stimulating interest in the splendid lessons on the life and missionary work of Paul.

Pastor A. J. Johns has gathered in twenty-three young men and organized a Baracca class. There also is a fine Philathea class of young women. A picnic July 21, at Potters Lake, a near by summer resort, was enjoyed by 250 people. A big dinner, games and swimming were features of the day. Two Sunday evening community services were held at the lake.

A tennis court on the lawn back of the church is helping to solve the amusement problem for the boys and girls of the whole community.

ILLINOIS

A COUNCIL to advise as to the ordination of Mr. C. M. Miller was called by the church at Salem to meet Aug. 3. Mr. Miller recently came to this church from Macon, Ga.

A General Sketch

Some important churches in Illinois have recently become pastorless or will in a short time. Such as Princeton, Tremont, Lincoln, Carbondale, St. Mary's, Antioch and Benton. These are all fields needing strong aggressive men.

The people who attended the summer assembly were delighted with the meetings from every view-point. 212 were enrolled this year. The board expects more than three hundred next summer. The people who attended the summer assembly feel favorably impressed with Shurtleff College. It shows up quite well at this time and every indication is that it will be a flourishing school the coming year.

The Illinois Baptist State Convention is in probably the best condition it has been in its seventy-seven years history. From every view-point the convention seems to be in a flourishing condition. The general missionaries and evangelists are able, faithful and consecrated men. Rev. John W. Merrill, district superintendent for the western side of the state, Still more encouraging than increase in numbers and interest in the social side of our work is the evident spiritual gain.

Davison is planning to co-operate with the churches of the Flint River Association in a simultaneous evangelistic campaign in the fall.—LYDIA S. ELMER, Church Clerk, Aug. 4, 1921.

IOWA

GALILEE CHURCH, Des Moines, has a young man preparing for the ministry. Prof. E. W. Thornton and wife (a daughter of the pastor) are going from this church as its first missionaries to the foreign field. The church has outgrown its present building.

KANSAS

LIBERAL'S first attempt at a vacation school ran May 31-June 13. Six workers volunteered their services. Enrollment was 122. A. V. Ebersole was superintendent and the school is regarded by him to be a great success.

In writing to our advertisers mention has been in the work one month and has visited quite a number of churches. It is believed that Mr. Merrill can and will do the type of work that is needed on the fields in Illinois. The State Convention Board will probably employ another general state evangelist this fall. The work in extreme Southern Illinois among the former Free Baptists churches is very encouraging. Evangelist T. O. McMinn, who is kept on the field in evangelistic and missionary work for full time, is doing a great work among those people. Many of the churches a few years ago were rather backward but with a little of the real educational and missionary zeal they are falling into line with the state work very nicely. They have much evangelistic spirit, their work is building up and the churches are being strengthened at a very rapid rate.

A large proportion of the pastors in Illinois take no regular vacation or are out for only a week or so. State Convention men and evangelists are entitled to a month's vacation, but most of them do not take a full month at any one time. The superintendent will spend about ten days out side of the state during the month of August.

Announcement

Be it hereby known that Rev. O. H. Walby, Winnipeg, Canada, a member of The Logan Square Norwegian Baptist Church, Chicago, Ill., was on the fourth of August, 1921, excluded from above church and membership of the Baptist denomination, and that his ordination papers were revoked. This was done at a regular business meeting of the church and after a council had duly been called by them to consider his case.

On behalf of The Logan Square Norwegian Baptist Church, Chicago, Ill.

Notes from Shurtleff Commencement

The ninety-third commencement exercises of Shurtleff College were among the most interesting that have been held at the college for some years. More visitors returned than usual and the whole series of events were very much enjoyed.

Dr. Norman B. Henderson, D. D. of Minneapolis was the commencement speaker. His address "Leadership in the New Age" was an eloquent and thoughtful presentation of the necessity for and opportunity of the young people in the days that are before us. Probably no address given here in recent years was more appropriate than this brought by him to our graduates.

The college honored itself by conferring the Doctor of Divinity degree upon Rev. B. E. Allen, Neponset, Ill.; Rev. N. J. Hilton, Minonk, Ill. and Rev. Leonard Trent, Kewanee, Ill.

The financial report given by President Potter showed $140,000 received through personal gifts for endowment of the institution during the last year. $38,880 from the Board of Education of the Northern Baptist Convention and a pledge of $5,000 for each of the next two years from the General Education Board, to be applied on current expenses. It is needless to say that the announcement of these three gifts brought great enthusiasm to the friends of the college.

There were eighteen graduates from the college, constituting the largest class of graduates from the college. Of this number eleven were men, of whom seven had seen service either in the United States army or navy. Several of the ministerial students will go into theological seminaries next fall, while others will go into active pastorates.

The completion of the addition to the Cole Dormitory for women and the remodeling and restoring of the science hall, with the many facilities offered by the new gymnasium makes the year rather notable for the ability to care for the new work which is rapidly developing at the college.

The restoration of the science hall, was originally the building erected in 1832, caused the Trustees to vote to name it Loomis Hall in honor of the first president of the institution when it was known as "Alton College." Accordingly on May 31, the anniversary of Mr. Loomis' birth, a fitting celebration was held on the college campus, in which Mr. J. B. Edwards, a lawyer of St. Louis, and Mrs. G. M. Ryrie of Alton, great-grandchildren of Mr. Loomis, participated. From henceforth the building is to be known as Loomis Hall. It contains two excellent chemistry laboratories, two biological laboratories, a room for physics, a recitation room and storeroom. It is heated throughout with steam and has electric lights and gas on every floor, making a very convenient and adequate science hall.

The Illinois Baptist Summer Assembly held a meeting on our campus, in our buildings, from June 16 to 23 and over 200 people were enrolled. All expressed themselves as having had a good time. Prospects are good for an excellent enrollment next year.

The transformation of the science hall, the new gymnasium and the addition to the girls' dormitory helped the college more than before, to take care of the students.

At its June meeting the board authorized the renovating and repairing of the men's dormitory and that work is being rapidly pushed to completion. Shurtleff opens on Sept. 13, and many students are already signifying their intention to come at that time.

INDIANA

MRS. C. E. GOODELL, wife of the president of Franklin College, died Wednesday night, August 10. She had been in poor health for some months.

INDIANA BAPTIST SUMMER ASSEMBLY was held at Franklin last week with excellent attendance and interest.

Katherine House Scores Success

Katherine House, the Baptist community settlement at Indiana Harbor, is located among foreigners and ministers to them. Few religious agencies in the country, if any, reach and enlist a greater number and variety of races, colors and creeds than one may find assembled here.

During the past six weeks the second term of the daily vacation Bible school held its daily sessions. Miss Sarah Noyes, Miss Otillie Pechous, Miss Ida May Reese, Miss Esther Brown and Mr. Stockwell Sims, the regular staff, were assisted by the following volunteer workers for the school term: Mrs. G. C. Mitchell, Rev. and Mrs. A. H. McKee, Rev. Elias Reby, Mr. John Rodin and Mr. and Mrs. Harry Beggs.

The usual vacation school program was a matter of course, but the mingling of children of many races, including a number of negroes, presented special problems and situations of thrilling interest. Think of trying to make a school out of nearly 200 children, white and black, Greeks, Poles, Lithuanians, and who knows what other kinds. Protestant, Catholic and Jewish, and getting away with it. These Katherine House workers did that.

The hand work was surprising in both its amount and its quality, comparing favorably with the best schools in the country. Hymns, gospel songs, patriotic songs, ditties, drills, memorizing in the Bible and other Christianization and Americanization work were well done and the children took a great interest in the whole program. A general public exhibit of results was given on the closing evening, Thursday, August 11. Nearly 300 people were crowded into rooms that will comfortably provide for 150, and cheerfully sat or stood as fortune willed, through a long and lively program of songs, drills and a pageant of "Run."

These little folks are becoming enthusiastic Americans. They can do the patriotic songs and the flag business with the old-timers and enjoy it. One of the workers said to a little girl, "Your mother is an Italian, isn't she?" "No, she hasn't been for a long time," was the reply.

Winona's Community Church

The Winona Lake Presbyterian Church, Dr. James A. Gordon, pastor, has completed plans for a new building. Four large building lots have been purchased. A building fund which has been growing for the past five years was the recipient of two one thousand dollar gifts and several of five hundred. This quickened the building plans which had been dormant, so shortly there will be a church adequate for Winona's varied activities. The church has a large affiliate membership of the several Evangelical denominations though it is Presbyterian in government.

This year as in previous years the activities of the church has been merged with the great Bible Conference August 19 to 28 with America's foremost Bible expositors and preachers as leaders, and the Bible school, July 4 to August 18 with Dr. G. Campbell Morgan as Dean.

A splendid bronze tablet marking the New Tabernacle as the "Billy Sunday Tabernacle" was put in place recently.

Dr. J. C. Breckenridge, General Secretary is the leader of Winona's present program. Rev. Melvin Trotter, the famous Rescue Mission Man is the Director of Winona's Bible Conference. The fullest co-operation has been given Winona's leaders by the different Evangelical Church bodies.

ELLSWORTH: Rev. Clarence Emery, long the successful pastor at Charleston and more recently winning a remarkable success at Mexico, has been called to the pastorate of this church. Great things are expected for the quality of his service is well known. He will include other neighboring churches in his ministry.

SEDGWICK: Pastor Arnot Dexter has recently welcomed eight members into the church, seven by baptism. The field of this church includes five preaching stations and abundant opportunities for helpful and hopeful labor. In the several Sunday schools over 300 are enrolled.

BAR HARBOR: The church is glad and hopeful in the new pastorate of Rev. C. W. Turner who comes from successful work at Warren. Audiences are increasing and there is a disposition to make every department of the church more effective in its service. The young people's society recently tendered to Rev.

and Mrs. Turner a largely attended reception.

GARDINER: Pastor Winslade, in his successful ministry, finds his men's choir of over thirty members a great aid.

at an early date. It is hoped that a church may be organized soon at Newburg which will increase the field and the opportunity of the Hampden pastorate.

DAMARISCOTTA: The pastor Rev. T. B. Hughes baptized four persons on July 31. Congregations are steadily increasing. Over fifty have united with the church during the two years of the present pastorate. This church will entertain the Damariscotta Association as it knows so well how to do, on Sept. 6.

WINTER HARBOR: Thorough repairs have been made on the church edifice, a new baptistry has been installed and eight persons have been baptized by the pastor, Rev. C. I. Ramsey. Naturally the church is much encouraged.

WINDSOR: The church at Windsor mourns the death of Bro. Edward R. Chadwick. Trained for the ministry but unable from ill health to perform the duties of a pastor, he proved himself exceedingly helpful in all departments of the church work.

MONROE: Mrs. Charles F. Kyle has for the past few months been pastor of the church at Monroe. Her faithful work made possible a revival interest under Rev. E. A. Davis, who recently baptized six candidates into the membership of the church.

BREWER: The pastor, Rev. Howard A. Welch, has recently baptized four young people and extended the hand of fellowship to ten new members. The high evangelical record of this church is being well sustained under its new pastor.

MIL0: Pastor Frohock baptized five young people recently. The work of the church goes forward steadily. Evangelists Harry and Ruth Taylor will begin a series of meetings with the churches of Milo in October.

Additional Suggestions

tee investigated and made a report which was not even discussed though a special time was set apart for the heated and lengthy discussion which was expected. It was adopted with almost no opposition.

At Des Moines another matter was thrown at us about which nine-tenths of the delegates had never heard. Immediately there was tumult and turmoil and scenes, again, which must be long regretted. It is to be hoped that the large and representative committee which now has this matter in hand may find a way to inform our constituency before the Seattle meeting something, at least, of what it will report. In that case there may be "more light and less heat" generated in the discussion.

3. Cannot some way be arranged by which during the business sessions of the convention at least there will be fewer meetings on the side?

It was complained that matters were suddenly introduced when many of the leaders were absent. Whose fault was that? It was the fault of these same leaders who appointed such meetings. It is true that there were matters decided when hundreds of our official leaders were absent. We cannot pass a rule that matters, cannot be presented and acted upon unless certain people are present. But those certain people can see to it that there are no meetings when vital matters of business can be presented and acted upon. The Northern Baptist Convention is supposed to be a democratic body with equal privileges for all. No part is greater than the whole, nor more important. Let the man who wants to have a voice be there and let us not again witness the wasting of the time of 1,500 delegates by allowing some one to kill time until his friends can be rallied from various meeting places to his defense. Such tactics are obnoxious to every right thinking person.

But we ought not to forget that the progress of Christianity has been marked through all the centuries, as it is now on our mission fields, by a removing of mountains not less striking in the judgment of those who care to note such things than the upheaval of a physical mountain would be. Operating through the faith of disciples, and for the purpose of his kingdom's establishment in the world, Christ has from time to time done things as astounding as the statement quoted at the head of this paper would lead one to expect.

ouser," as Alice in Wonderland said, for Timothy finally acknowledged that the old gentleman was living inside a wire strainer Agnes had given him, and that he hopped clear up to the ceiling of this wire house and ate flies! Needless to say we hurried through our favorite desert and dashed out to the yard—and can you guess who Timothy's "old gentleman" really was? This poem will tell you:

Grasshopper Green is a comical chap;

He lives on the best of fare;

Bright little jacket and trousers and cap,

These are his summer wear.

Out in the meadow he loves to go

Playing away in the sun:

It's hopperty-skipper, high and low—

Summer's the time for fun.

Grasshopper Green has a dozen wee boys,

And soon as their legs grow strong

Each of them joins in his frolicsome joys,

Singing his merry song.

Under the hedge, in a happy row,

Soon as the day has begun,

It's hopperty-skipper, high and low—

Summer's the time for fun.

Grasshopper Green has a quaint little house;

It's under the hedge so gay;

Grandmother Spider, as still as a mouse,

Watches him over the way!

Gladly he's calling the children, I know,

Out in the beautiful sun:

It's hopperty-skipper, high and low—

Summer's the time for fun.

Cannibal Beetles on Way from Japan

SPEAKING of insects, you will be interested to know that 5,000 beetles are on the way from Japan to New Jersey where they will be used to fight a pest of destructive leaf-eating beetles that are destroying truck gardens!

In Tokyo these 5,000 beetles were placed in refrigerators aboard the steamer "Tao Maru," but owing to their cannibalistic traits they each had to be placed in a separate container! It is expected that about 10,000 more will have to be sent to the United States in the near future.

a halt, spoke briefly to the people and then we left. I can easily understand her difficulty for she does all her studying and thinking in English and it is no easy task to express her ideas in Visayan, if she has not been trained to do so. This is a very good illustration of how English is getting a hold here. Many of the young people can speak better in English than they can in Visayan, their own native tongue.

This last fact, coupled with the Adventist problem here, makes me put a proposition to you readers and friends in the States. We have no one here with the spare time to write tracts on this problem and we need several, treating with the fundamental tenets of the Adventists. Why not some of you get together and write us these tracts, say of about sixteen pages, and send us about three thousand of each. Most of this propaganda would be for high school pupils. We can put into the dialect those that are necessary. The Catholic theology background out here makes this good soil for the Adventists and in some places they have caused havoc because we lack trained leaders. Where we have these leaders there is little trouble and most of their converts have been among the disgruntled. Just the same you could help us a lot if you would get out these tracts.

OUR MUSIC CORNER

WILLIAM LESTER

AN ADDITION TO YOUR LIBRARY

From a recent issue of "The New Music Review," we clip the subjoined article by Dr. Stubbs and reproduce it for two good reasons to advertise a very interesting book and because of the pungent points brought out in the review itself. Below is the material:

Mr. Harvey Grace's "The Complete Organist," was recently published in London by Grant Richards, Ltd. It is a volume in "The Musician's Handbooks," and has the merit of being amusing as well as instructive. One of the most amusing sections of the book is the imaginary dialogue between a vicar and a church organist as they are smoking pipes and talking matters over. The organist objects to certain hymn tunes, as he objects to shoddy anthems, not because he and the choir dislike them, but on the ground that they are not good enough for the church. The vicar answers: "I can't want elaborate music. I want something simple and bright, so that the service shall be hearty and go with a swing."

The organist: "There you follow the bulk of the cloth in supposing that good music is necessarily elaborate. Good music may be quite simple, and simple music quite good. But there is more than one kind of simplicity—there is that of the genius and that of the idiot. So in music you have on one hand an old psalm tune like 'St. Ann's' or 'Dundee' and on the other the revivalist type of tune." The organist has more to say on this subject.

He tells the vicar that by "hearty" he means "loud." Yes, "good congregational singing may well be loud and strong, but the loudness is nothing in itself. It is a mere by-product. In this matter of 'brightness and swing' I am going to risk your anger by pointing out that we do not find the clergy as a body feverishly anxious to make their part of the service conspicuous for these qualities. Instead, we have too often slovenly reading of the lessons and prayers and careless intoning."

Mr. Grace's organist tells the vicar that if he is right—this he denies—in his argument that "the poorer people of our district" care only for cheap and sloppy music he should logically paint the old oak stalls with stripes of red, white, and blue, for a considerable percentage of the congregation "would think the carving vastly improved with some such scheme of decoration."

The vicar asks who is to decide whether these tunes are bad. It is surely a question of taste, so there can be no argument. The organist counters by asking how do we decide in the other arts. "You would be horrified if I suggested that the choir should sing a hymn, the first lines of which ran:

"I is a awful sinner
And you be just the same."

"You would point out that although the lines contain a statement about which there can be no dispute, the diction is so crude, and the grammar so hopeless as to render the hymn unfit for use, and I should agree with you. Do you know that most hymn tunes of the popular type contain breaches of musical grammar quite as execrating to a musician as the above lines are to you?"

There are chapters on choir boys, accompaniment, congregational singing, recitals "arrangements," hobbies, plain-song, etc.

"The choirmaster who, whatever his age, is still at heart near his youth, will best distinguish in matters of conduct between what is bad and what is merely boyish. Pet a character and he becomes an insufferable little prig. Bully or nag him and his place knows him no more. Treat him with the fairness that you would ask for yourself, plus a slight bias towards leniency, and a knowledge of the right time to turn the blind eye and the deaf ear, and you will find him the jolliest and most willing of colleagues."

"Attempts to make (congregational) singing resemble that of a choral society end in result that has the faults of both and the virtues of neither."

The fashion of aiming at refinement in the wrong place was set, or at least confirmed by "Hymns Ancient and Modern" with its use of expression marks. A drop in power by the choir practically silences the people.

"Too many of us try to take our congregations by the scruff of the neck, so to speak, and haul them from line to line of a hymn tune as if the most vital thing in music were its division into bars of equal length. When Debussy gives us such rhythmical scheme as a bar of four beats followed by one of five, we say, 'How delightfully elastic! When our congregation gives us pretty much the same thing we shoot out our reeds and say, 'No, you don't.' But strict square rhythm in hymn tunes is very largely a mere 'A. and M.' tradition."

NEW MUSIC REVIEW

From The Clayton F. Summy Co., Chicago, Ill.

Nell Flahertie's Beautiful Drake Loomis
The Samhain Feast.....Loomis
And I .....Gaynor
My Love is like a Red, Red Rose.....
.....Bloom
Courtin' Lisa June.....Howard

Another list of effective songs from this busy Chicago publisher: Most attractive are the two arrangements of old Irish tunes which head the list. Mr. Loomis has successfully avoided that pitfall which so often traps the arranger—succumbing to the ever-present temptation to over-elaborate the settings. In these two songs, the essential simplicity of the folksong has been kept. The melodies are characteristically Celtic in mood and outline. The Gaynor song is a sweet melodic strain, very simple in outline, splendidly adapted for use in the early stages of voice study. Robert Burns unwittingly competed with Heine and Bourdillon when he wrote his universally-known love-song; along with "Du bist wie eine Blume" and "The Night has a thousand Eyes," I imagine it holds a record as to the number of times it has been set. Here is still another version. I like it less than the one written by the Chicago composer, James MacDermid, to which it is closely akin in plan and type. But that is probably simply a personal preference, and should have only that value. No doubt the Bloom song will find a ready use both for teaching and for concert purposes, for it has much merit. Dialect songs, especially those with the traditional lilt and dance of the old South, are always acceptable. The last-named song above is of this type—singable, care-free in mood, without any technical problems to trouble either singer or accompanist, and with a refrain that will linger long in the memory.

Pedaling systems vary as much as those for fingering on the piano. After the usual orthodox rules are grasped the system which seems the most comfortable and which gets results is the one to adopt. The individual pedaling systems of certain of our greatest organists are far removed from what we read in methods.

Harold Flammer, Inc., the New York publisher, announces that the concern has moved to much more commodious quarters at 57 West 45th Street, New York City, to which address all communications should be sent. This firm specializes in choral music and songs by modern American composers, and are also Eastern agents for the Chicago firm of Clayton F. Summy Co.

One Mexican's Way—Walking in the Light

BY CARRIE B. ILSLEY

POOR boy, day after day, when working hours were over, he had walked the streets, looking for the sight of an empty house, and each time reporting his find to his American friend to inquire the possibility of securing the rent of the place.

It was always the same answer "Sorry to refuse you, ma'm, but I couldn't think of letting it to a Mexican."

How could one tell the lad, so eager, anxious, that the American people objected to living in the same neighborhood with him? So one subterfuge after another had to be resorted to—the rent was over-high, or the house was too far from school and work; pretty soon, maybe there would be some houses built to replace the old shacks where the Mexicans must live.

But the young fellow would not be put off any longer. He simply must have a house or leave town and he did not want to do that for his "family" were so attached to the day school and to the Sunday school. But the Mexican next door was a profane man. He cursed and swore. Was it right to permit his little sisters to listen to such language? He preferred American neighbors. Privileged America! Her every home deemed a sanctuary 'neath whose walls even the untaught peon of sunny Mexico longs to bring the listening ears of his growing children.

Yes, and he wanted a house because he wanted to buy some furniture for which there was no place in the stuffy little rat hole where he now lived.

Was he going to get married? Married! Not he, so long as mother and the little sisters and the tall, growing brothers needed him. They had had privations enough already since the father's death and the long trip to the States and the setting up housekeeping in the dead of winter with nothing but a cook stove and some beds; not even bed covering, except a cotton blanket apiece. Mucho frio! They were cold nights when one had to sleep with his overcoat on. But things were different now. All the boys had work. And how did the Senora like the hair ribbon he bought for his sister Sarah, when he received his last pay check? With the hand as of a lover he turned the head of the pretty girl, to show off the new finery. Sarah, princess, rightly well was she named for her comely grace, gentle speech and winning ways.

Time and again, when the vexing problem of suitable housing for the Mexicans arose, somebody had voiced the sentiment that it would be poor discretion to move them in among the whites. Maybe so; probably few doubted it, but what sort of Christianity was it that would deny them the use of any dwelling house save that miserable few where children's feet must stand on rotten, gaping floors, under leaking roofs and vermin infested walls?

The railroads provide cars for their regular workers only, having no extra ones for rent. Mexicans come and go at their own pleasure and get work wherever it offers itself, hence must look to their own housing, crowding in, in a most unsanitary way with other families, when necessary.

To the wind with discretion! Desperation must become the better part of valor.

Let the conscience of the public decide where our new Americans should live.

No sooner had the evening daily been delivered and read the day following our boy's last fruitless search for a house, than the voice that had been most emphatic in refusal to rent its owner's property, was heard over the telephone. "I jest ben areadin' the paper. Seems thar's some move afoot to get better houses for these Mexicans.—Yes, 'tis a shame the way they're treated. Say, I guess if you don't mind asking the neighbors what they'd think, you might have that house o' mine."

And that was not the only voice nor the only house offered: "Really, do those people want to live like Americans? I hadn't supposed so."

"They have the same family love that we have? Well, I shouldn't have thought it."

One after another began to realize that, barring the darker skin and the lack of opportunity with the new comer, not much difference existed between him and his white neighbor. Among the former were craftsmen of many trades and trained women as well, a nurse, a teacher, a professional cook all following the lure of the American dollar picked up so freely during war times, along the railroad tracks.

Despite the seeming generosity, the house finally selected, the verandas and upper rooms of which filled the eyes of the girls with admiring wonder, needed much to make it habitable as Americans would consider it.

"Your friends will help you, Francisco." The boy smiled his gratitude as he tapped with a broom handle the precarious looking plaster and viewed ruefully the torn paper and broken screens and glass. The house belonged to a corporation and no repairs would be made at the rent offered.

Odds and ends of wall paper contributed from many sources can be made to do valiant service in the hands of one who knows how. This time it was an ever resourceful Baptist Missionary Training School girl, home on vacation. Dropped ceilings and bright panels pieced out the few rolls of dull oatmeal paper and rooms as cosy as any lover of bright colors could desire, resulted.

"Which room would be best for the dining room?" How fast he was picking up our ways! Few Mexican families of the type seen on the section, sit down at the board together. If there is a table there are not enough chairs to put around it nor room to place them if there were. The tortilla (biscuit dough baked in round cakes on the top of the stove), held in the hand supplies bread and likewise a plate for the indispensable frijoles or beans.

It was not charity in the sense of commodities that the New American family needed but the love willing to take time to show them how to make the best use of what they had. Accustomed to live with necessities reduced to the minimum, the superfluities of northern civilization were slow in making appeal.

How should they know, having never learned, that there is a better way of cleaning painted floors, than wading ankle deep in water? That the curtained dry goods box supplied with a mirror is a much neater place for milady to oil her hair than before the bit of glass hung on the kitchen wall? that window draperies hang more prettily from a wire or rod than from a string, drooping U-shaped?

But O, the joy of learning new things! Sarah painted the beds white while the boys painted the floors. Mother stood in helpful readiness while bright calendars and framed landscapes salvaged from attics went up on the walls between the filmy white window hangings.

And did it all, that last day when the finishing touches were put on have an Americanizing effect, or was it solely the white dresses and white shoes of the visitors? Nobody knows but as each stalwart son of the house came in from work he disappeared quickly only to emerge presently in well dressed trousers and immaculate linen.

"A good place to sit in the evening when we have on our good clothes," said the master of the house as he stepped upon the veranda where flowers and vines would soon be growing.

Confiding his hopes to his friends he continued, "My youngest brother is sixteen. He did not learn to read and write in old Mexico. All they taught him the little while he went was to pray. He must go to school this winter with the girls. You know my second brother? Another Mexican man lent him a Spanish Bible. No, we never did read the Bible down in Mexico; but my brother, sometimes he's so tired he can't go to the Mission Sunday-school but he reads that Bible all the time."

Thus in one corner of Little Mexico the dew-drops of God's mercy are being recognized and his dusky sons and daughters are seeking to walk in the light of Him who is the Light of the world. McPherson, Kans.

the attendance soon became too large for private homes and the meetings were removed to Peterson's Hall in the village and a Sunday school organized. July 31, 1896, the Island Falls Free Baptist Church was organized with 38 charter members. The same year the church building was begun which was dedicated in June, 1898, free of debt. Mr. Miller became the first pastor and served for three years. The church has now become one of the most efficient of the churches in the country and is doing a large work both at home and abroad. A very interesting historical paper was read by Deacon M. D. Estes who has been connected with the church from its organization. Mr. S. C. Spratt for twenty years was the efficient Superintendent of the Sunday school. For several years former Governor Carl E. Milliken and Mrs. Milliken were leading workers in this church. During the exercises Secretary Irving B. Mower, D.D., gave an address and Governor Milliken in connection with pleasant reminiscences gave a very hopeful and encouraging program for the further advance of the church. The veteran Sunday school superintendent, Mr. Spratt, gave a sketch accomplished by the school. The pastor, Rev. W. P. Richardson presided at all the services, baptizing nine in the afternoon.

Fresh from the Field

A controversy on the marriage laws which is proceeding in New Zealand has interesting aspects. The Marriage Laws Amendment Act declares that:

"Every person commits an offense liable on summary conviction to imprisonment for one year, or a fine of £100, who alleges expressly or by implication that any persons lawfully married are not truly and sufficiently married, or alleges the issue of any lawful marriage as illegitimate."

The amendment has been rendered necessary because Roman Catholic priests have gone into the homes of people where a Roman Catholic has been married to a Protestant by a Protestant minister, or by a registrar, and have denied the validity of such a marriage. Such people have, of course, been legally married according to the law of the land, and no more grossly insulting charge can be made against them than that they are living in open sin and that their children are illegitimate.

The newly-published calendar of the Board of Managers of the Foreign Mission Society indicates that regular meetings of the board are to be held on Sept. 20, Oct. 11, Nov. 14-15, Dec. 13, Jan. 10, Feb. 13-14, March 14, April 18, May 23, and on a date in June to be fixed later in accordance with the dates chosen for the session of the Northern Baptist Convention. The board has organized for the year with Dr. F. L. Anderson as chairman, Mr. Mornay Williams as vice-chairman and Mr. W. B. Lippard as recording secretary.

A recent issue of the Lutheran has the following acute comment on the membership of our churches: "Some one says there are three classes of people in the average church—the Reliables, the Unreliables and the Liabiles. The first are like never-failing springs and can always be counted on. The second are like stagnant ponds, ever stale and never refreshing. The third are like weather vanes, turning hither or thither according as the wind blows—liable to be right or liable to be wrong, but who knows which?"

Rev. A. B. Howells, acting pastor at Jacksonville, Ill., has been spending his month's vacation in St. Louis. For the first two Sundays he supplied the West Park Church and was with the Kirkwood Church the last two Sundays. He remarks that he has visited the prayer meetings at various Baptist churches and has found them splendidly attended and full of interest. "A better day must be coming," he says, "when the knife and fork members do not have to be invited to make a crowd."

Dr. Robert S. MacArthur will preach for the First Church, Brookline, Mass., during October. His summer ministry at Tremont Temple, Boston, has been attracting great congregations, as usual. One cannot realize when hearing him and noting his vigor that he has attained the years which constitute his present age.

The New Guinea mission of the London Missionary Society has been celebrating its jubilee in July. Its great apostle was James Chalmers.

A large hotel in Eustis, Fla., has been purchased for the use of retired Methodist ministers. They will be given every reasonable comfort at a moderate cost, and will have for enjoyment the most delightful surroundings in the lake district of central Florida.

The international convention of the Disciples is to be held at Winona Lake, Ind., from Monday, Aug. 29, to Sunday, Sept. 4. The program as announced abounds in inspirational and informational features.

Rev. G. A. Lechlitter, former pastor of the Colorado Avenue Church, Dayton, Ohio, is meeting with unusual success in his present pastorate in Adelaide Street Church, London, Ontario. During the past winter season for fourteen successive weeks the Sunday evening congregations overtaxed the capacity of the auditorium. With a seating capacity of over 1100; yet as many as 500 were turned away in a single night, unable to gain admission. Conversions and baptisms occur almost weekly, some over 200 having united with the church in the two years of the present pastorate. For the past two years this church has led the association in the number of baptisms. For the month of August, Mr. Lechlitter is supplying the pulpit of Westmont Church, Montreal, of which Dr. O. C. I. Wallace, ex-Chancellor of McMaster University and former pastor of First Church, Baltimore, Md., is pastor.

An interesting platform was put forward by an international conference of Friends held in London last summer and attended by about 1000 delegates, in which the ideals of personal and social religion are inextricably intertwined. All Friends were asked by this conference to give serious consideration to a five-fold aim: 1. Further recognition in every relation of life of the Fatherhood of God, the Brotherhood of man, and the vast implications flowing therefrom. 2. An endeavor after greater simplicity in our personal way of life, asking ourselves: How far does my life recommend to others the

Fill a Ship in Fellowship

BY JAMES H. FRANKLIN

Last January, when the Foreign Missions Conference of North America was holding its annual meeting at Garden City, Long Island, one of the secretaries of the Southern Methodist Board gave me a story which warmed my heart, and which must have given him a more comfortable feeling as we contrasted our own condition as guests of a comfortable hotel in America with that of multitudes of people in Europe in mid-winter. This secretary had just come from Newport News, Virginia, where he had seen anchored in the harbor the second ship sent over from Poland, to be filled with clothing, shoes, soap, and other supplies by the Methodist churches in the South for the relief of needy people in a land where there are very, very few representatives of their own denomination.

Five thousand Southern Methodist churches had joined in the offering, a large warehouse at Newport News was secured for assembling, fumigating and baling the large quantities of supplies, and the parcels from churches, mission circles and individuals, collected in various centers, came in by car load. What a superb service! The story of it was thrilling. I confess, however, that it served as a rebuke, too, to at least one secretary of another foreign mission agency who chided himself that he had not suggested to Northern Baptists that a similar effort be made. But it was then January—almost too late for clothing in large quantities to be collected and sent across in time to be of much service before spring would arrive. He did, however, bring the matter to the attention of his fellow officers, and to the board of managers of the Woman's American Baptist Foreign Mission Society, suggesting that we get ready to make a shipment in the autumn in good season to reach the needy in several sections of Europe by the winter of 1921-22.

The matter was presented to the board of managers of the Woman's American Baptist Foreign Mission Society, with a statement that if 2,000,000 Southern Methodists could fill two ships, surely 1,300,000 Northern Baptists might fill one ship. "Fill a Ship for Europe," was suggested as a good slogan. Mrs. Helen Barrett Montgomery quickly improved the phrase by exclaiming, "Fill a Ship in Fellowship." What a happy inspiration! Our woman's board enthusiastically approved the suggestion, and its White Cross Department was instructed to communicate with the circles throughout the territory of the Northern Baptist Convention. Miss Helen M. Hudson, the acting administrative secretary, is already in communication with the White Cross captains everywhere.

Rev. J. H. Rushbrooke, Baptist Commissioner for Europe, has suggested that Northern Baptists give special attention to the need for clothing, shoes and other supplies in Poland, Latvia and Czechoslovakia. Since returning to England, he has written again regarding the needs in these countries. Let Northern Baptists bestir themselves in the fine effort to Fill a Ship in Fellowship! But let it be clearly understood that, while our Baptist agencies will be employed, every effort will be made to furnish relief to the suffering people regardless of racial, social or religious differences. The Master's "IN-ASMUCH" will be our inspiration.

Now what is required? Both new and partly worn garments will be acceptable. It is necessary, however, that they be clean, warm and in good repair. Our people are urged to lay aside good clothing of every description for men, women and children, blankets, quilts, sheets, towels and shoes. Let the collection of these supplies begin at once with a view to shipment to New York soon after Oct. 1. Warehouse space will be secured for the reception of all shipments and the baling of the supplies before they are placed on shipboard. About Sept. 15 full instructions as to the shipment of supplies to New York for transshipment to Europe will be published in the denominational papers. Individuals, churches and societies are requested to prepare to start their shipment as soon after Oct. 1 as possible, and not later than Oct. 31.

Begin immediately the collection of the clothing and other supplies. Prepare to ship early in October. Watch the denominational papers for detailed instructions as to how the parcels should be addressed. Remember the slogan:

Here's Your Chance

A brave pastor and former superintendent of state missions is incapacitated for any work at the present time. Through the years of service and constant reading of the denominational paper the work of the denomination has become a part of his very life. He says that he is compelled to discontinue the weekly visits of the paper he has already come to love. Who will see that this worthy man has THE BAPTIST.

“When I read that Joseppo material and came down to the next to the last line I nearly lost my teeth. I would had they not been the grown-in kind.” With these words our good friend, Miss Isabel Crawford, greeted the editor in a recent convention. This was a near calamity. What an affliction to be toothless and to think that this Kollum was responsible for this alarming possibility. We shall be more careful hereafter—we mean in this present world. THE BAPTIST is set for the defense and confirmation of the Baptist saints. It would do them good and not harm. Forgive us, Miss Crawford. Not for the world would we harm the one who has given so much of her life to the service of the only unhyphenated Americans.

A Censored Press

During the war we became accustomed to a censored press. We read for the most part what the government thought it was profitable for us to read. Some men insisted on writing what they thought was profitable and their journals were refused mailing privileges, and the editors were given a real opportunity for meditation. This was a war measure. There are a few persons numbered among the readers of the THE BAPTIST who much desire a censored denominational press. One such writes: "THE BAPTIST, is seems to me, is on the whole improving." The brother goes on to state, however, that he feels called upon to discontinue the paper because of one article which appeared therein. He does this on account of his "children" and "grandchildren", whom he desires to safeguard from such "effusions". This a most worthy motive. We only hope that he is as exacting in the case of the daily papers and other journals which come to his home. We would suggest also that it would be wise to keep the young folks from the reading room of the public library for THE BAPTIST is upon the table there as it is in hundreds of other libraries, along with other dangerous journals. This incident reminds us of a pastor who came to us in perplexity. A member of his church had ceased to attend his services because he said the pastor used slang. The children of the family were found to be giving their Sunday mornings to the comic section of the Sunday paper and spending their afternoons at the movies. He wanted to know what to do. We suggested that an alienist be called in.

cause I have at heart? 3. The limitation of the return upon capital. 4. The surrender of the absolute control of industry by capital, the furtherance of the spirit essential for co-operation, and the fuller recognition of the sacredness of personality. 5. Some method for giving security of employment to the worker.

The Disciples have a habit of observing each fall a Go-Away-to-College-Day, in which an attempt is made to inspire young people, especially those who are going or who are likely to go to college, with ideals of Christian service. The date chosen this year is either Aug. 28 or Sept. 4, the two-fold date being mentioned so that individual congregations may suit their particular needs. Special emphasis is placed upon the importance of the day owing to the present shortage of ministers and the lack of trained leaders for their religious work.

The First Baptist Church of Mesa, Arizona, is at present in need of a pastor and would be pleased to hear from any Baptist minister who is willing to consider the field. Address all communications to R. B. Schupp, Chairman Pulpit Committee, Mesa, Arizona.

Rev. and Mrs. A. C. Bowers, who have been spending their furlough in this country at their home in Morgan Park, Chicago, sail from New York for their field in Assam on Sept. 3. Mr. Bowers has spoken widely, especially throughout the Middle West, and will be affectionately followed in his work by a host of new and old friends.

Dr. S. Parkes Cadman, the famous Brooklyn preacher who has his own unique way of handling questions from his audience, conducts a very popular forum in the Brooklyn Y. M. C. A. every Friday evening during the season, and Dr. Samuel McCune Lindsay, of the Hanson Place Baptist Church, holds a crowd of young men at the "Y" every Monday night right through the season with a course of lectures which also has the accompaniment of forum discussion following each address.

In an article entitled "The campaign for Souls," Dr. L. R. Scarborough recently had the following to say concerning the evangelistic campaign in the South during the coming year: "The Southern Baptist Convention in its recent great session at Chattanooga endorsed the Conservation Commission's recommendation that a great Southwide campaign be put on for lost souls, and that the movement be a persistent one through all the year. Special emphasis was given to this matter by the appointment of a committee to join with the commission in framing a plan of campaign and reporting back to the convention. This was done, and in a great hour the convention adopted the plan and by standing vote enthusiastically and unanimously committed itself to a Southwide, vigorous movement for the winning of lost men to Christ. Great were the results last year in this line—175,000 baptisms—but we hope far greater will be the harvest this year, and it will if our people will ask God for it in importuning prayer, plan wisely, widely and well for it, persistently and perennially press the gospel to the hearts of men and seek by faith, personal work, purity of purpose, the power of the Holy Spirit."

Exchange and Service Department

Beginning about the first of September, THE BAPTIST expects to start an Exchange and Service Department for the use of our churches, ministers and laymen. What appears in this department will depend entirely upon our subscribers and the things they wish to get from or give to other subscribers. With general co-operation, it may easily become of great value. There will be no charge made for the times used and expense need therefore stand in no person's way. The following are among the uses to which this department may be put.

A church desires to get in touch with a pastor. In this week's issue is a notice from a church in Arizona to this effect. Let such a church state its needs in the briefest possible way and send the request to this department.

A minister for some good reason is unable to establish relations with such a church as he desires. He may state his desires in these columns. In such cases, THE BAPTIST, in order to protect itself and the churches and the ministers themselves, must ask an endorsement from the state secretary of the state in which the minister has last served, not for publication, but merely for its files.

Lay workers are available for particular services. Let us make the fact known. In sending an announcement, send also for our files the endorsement of your pastor.

One church has a set of hymn books, no longer used; another wishes just such books. Use the exchange. The same may be the case with organs or pianos. A reader some time ago spoke of a valuable book she would like to give to some person who could appreciate it. Such a department would help place that book.

A church wishes to have a Baptist physician or business man take some opening in the town. Advertise that in this department.

Indeed the possible service of such a department is almost endless as will become evident as time goes on. Let's start it! Send in your wants now! The editors reserve the right to exclude, of course, material which should properly come under the head of paid advertisements.

McMINNVILLE COLLEGE

Has received $16,000.00 in Liberty bonds at par as part of our New World Movement allotment. These bonds will have to be sold to help defray the cost of the much needed gymnasium which is now being erected. A sale of the bonds in the open market means a heavy loss to us.

Are there those among our constituency of the Northwest who stand ready to buy these bonds at par and be content with a 4 1/4% income instead of 5% or 6%?

We will sell the bonds in any amount from $100.00 up, accrued interest thrown in. The loss to the buyer will be small; the gain to the College will be considerable.

Remit bank drafts or money orders to

CHAS. H. KOPF, Treasurer

Western Washington Pleads for Unity, Harmony and Progress

All Parties Officially Concerned with the Program of the Next Meeting of the Northern Baptist Convention to be held at Seattle, Receive a Striking Appeal

The Baptists of the Northwest, and particularly of Washington, appreciate the privilege of entertaining the next meeting of the Northern Baptist Convention in Seattle, and are deeply concerned as to the program and conduct of this meeting. There is unanimous and hearty agreement in the opinion that the atmosphere of this meeting will mean much toward completing or defeating the denominational program. We believe that unity and cumulative force in the program of the Convention are desirable and possible.

After securing the opinion of many leading Baptists the Board of the Western Washington Baptist Convention, at a meeting held August 5th, gave careful consideration to these matters and passed the following resolution, which is being forwarded to all the national societies, the denominational bodies and groups that are particularly interested in and responsible for the character of the Convention program, and the meetings preceding the Convention.

"RESOLVED, that the national societies, denominational bodies and groups responsible for and interested in the making and conduct of the program of the Northern Baptist Convention, and the pre-convention meetings, be requested to consider the advisability of dispensing with all pre-convention public meetings for the next year, (1922) in order to center the interest energies and efforts of the delegates and visitors on the main convention and its program, looking toward the strengthening of the unity of the constituency and the advancement of denominational program."

Our Convention Board is of the opinion that all matters pertinent to the welfare of the denomination and capable of contributing to the advancement, purpose and program of the Northern Baptist Convention should be made part of the Convention program, and that matters of specific or general interest, however valuable they may be, that will not contribute directly to the unity, harmony and progress of the denominational program and to the making of the next meeting of the convention a great inspirational occasion, should not be attached to the Convention.

We earnestly desire the Seattle Convention to be one of great spiritual value, where the denominational ideals and task will receive first consideration.

According to the instruction of our Board, I am sending this message to you with the request that you, at an early date, lay it before your board, department or committee and inform us of the action taken at the earliest possible date.

May I say that this whole matter is one that has sprung up within the Western Washington Baptist Convention and we assume full responsibility for these recommendations. I will greatly appreciate your personal opinion and suggestions.

J. F. WATSON,
Executive Secretary.

An Appeal to the Christians of America

THE gathering which is to be held in the city of Washington on Armistice Day, November 11, is one whose importance cannot be over-estimated. In the discussions lie the possibility of permanent world peace or a continuance of the armed hostility which has wrought such havoc in recent years. The conference can devise means of lifting a load from the present and of giving future generations a real chance, or it can bind more heavily upon all the nations the ancient burdens. Shall the conference result merely in talk or shall there be real results? Shall the outcome be wholesome and progressive or shall it be another sad compromise? Shall we proceed to make a world in which Christian ideas can thrive or shall we patch up a world in which is imbedded a military ideal which is the exact opposite of the Christian?

In a recent issue of the Living Church, there is an appeal to the Christians of America, written by Harrison F. Rockwell of Buffalo, which is so significant that we print it here in full. He says:

"Every loyal American citizen must be cognizant of the great responsibility resting upon his country in connection with the proposed Washington Conference called by his President. Each citizen too will recognize the awful burden resting upon the shoulders of the appointed delegates, by whom it is hoped future wars will be prevented and the day of disarmament and world peace ushered in. The ideal is tremendous, and, because it is so, anything like failure to achieve will mean a commensurate calamity.

"I should like to appeal to all Christians who will read this. Being such, they believe in prayer. They believe that, since it links the inadequate mind of man with the Divine Mind which created and orders the universe, it is the greatest agency for good placed in our possession. Since, then, it is a greater factor than even the discussions of statesmen, a responsibility rests upon the Christians of America quite as heavy as that to be borne by the conference delegates. If American Christians leave the intricate problems to be solved by the minds of these delegates alone, we must expect a result human in its characteristics. If American Christians will see that they have a signal duty to perform in enlisting the guidance and blessing of God upon the conference, they, since they are Christians, must expect a result in which can be seen the unmistakable direction of the Prince of Peace. President Harding's solemn words over the bodies of returned soldier dead, 'It must not be again,' are something more than a sentimental exclamation; they are a challenge to those who have it within their power to prevent future wars. Not least among these are the Christians of America, some of whom will read this appeal."

THE BAPTIST joins in this appeal. These are days when individual Christians and churches should give themselves to prayer. We need to lay hold of God in importunate prayer that the possibilities of this great moment in the world's history may not be lost. And, even as we pray, we need to lay hold on our senators and congressmen in Washington and on the men who shall represent America in this great conference that they may understand thoroughly that, as good Americans, we wish the world to learn how it has come to pass that the United States and Canada have lived in peace together for more than a century and to apply to itself the lesson. Prayer and works should go together, and there should be no fainting in this campaign. Just before President Harding issued his call for this conference he had received a tremendous petition from the ministers of the country asking just such action. The churches can determine the nation's statecraft if they wish. Is this not the time when they should see to it that the cause of the Prince of Peace does not fail because of their unwillingness to come to his help against the mighty? There will be those present in Washington who benefit from preparations for war, and they will use their insidious methods. The voice of the churches should be yet more persuasive.

Why a Baptist School

IN a few weeks now college doors will be opening once more and hundreds of thousands of young Americans will be flocking through them. Large numbers of these will come from Baptist homes, and will be followed in thought and in prayer by Baptist parents who wish for their children the finest things life may hold, and who certainly hope that as they grow in knowledge they will also develop in their apprehension of things Christian and in their devotion to Jesus Christ and to his service.

Every year brings new opportunities for trained men and women. The world of tomorrow can use all those who bring to it disciplined and well-stored minds. Such are tremendously needed. The cause of Christ also needs the finest men and women who can be produced—the men and women with the best minds, the biggest hearts, the finest vision. An untrained man can do something in the Kingdom, but the more there is to a man, the bigger the accomplishments the Lord can achieve through him. He has made us stewards of our minds as well as of our bodies and will ever demand the very best we can bring him. Christian progress in these days demands trained minds and understanding hearts and in the development of such our schools and colleges play a large part.

Will Baptist young people go to Baptist colleges? Why not? The question is one which should be pressed home to our Baptist people. For it has a distinct bearing both upon the religious life of the individual young people and upon the future of our churches. On page 949, we are publishing an article on this subject, written by a man who is widely known through the Middle and Far West and which deserves a careful reading. Look it over. If you feel like it, write us your opinion of the argument.

In discussing the reasons why there is a shortage of men studying for the ministry, members of the faculty of the Harvard Divinity School some time ago enumerated five reasons. They are the decline of religious life in the home, the attraction of other fields of service that make larger appeal to usefulness, the changes in religious emphasis that have come with changing theological thought, the small pecuniary return, and the reduced social influence of the minister. Others add reasons of yet a different sort. Without entering into any discussion of the others, we commend to the prayerful consideration of our readers the first reason here given, namely, the decline of religious life in the home. If that is true there is at hand a task for every Christian parent which should claim first attention.

Clean the Spring; There Is Death In It

IF UPTON SINCLAIR in his book, "The Brass Check" presented an indictment against the public newspapers as organs of popular misinformation, Walter Lippman in his more recent book, "Liberty and the News" has pronounced judgment of guilt against them—with extenuating circumstances, a plea in abatement, and remedial suggestions.

The situation as he conceives it is thus stated:

"Everywhere today men are conscious that somehow they must deal with questions more intricate than any that church or school had prepared them to understand. Increasingly they know that they cannot understand them if the facts are not quickly and steadily available. Increasingly they are baffled because the facts are not available and they are wondering whether government by consent can survive in a time when the manufacture of consent is an unregulated private enterprise. For in an exact sense the present crisis of western democracy is a crisis in journalism."

Corruption of the press he concedes in plenty; "and yet corruption does not explain the condition of modern journalism," he says. What then does explain it? Mr. Lippman finds the answer in the fact that a new and fundamentally wrong and dangerous conception of the function of the newspaper has arisen. Editors generally have come to believe it their highest duty, not to give an accurate report of the facts on which an intelligent reader may base his own judgment, but to so select and color the news as to produce a state of mind among the people such as the editor thinks they ought to have. That is, practically, an honest and accurate news service does not exist. At least since the beginning of the war the people have been systematically and conscientiously deceived by the newspapers concerning the causes and conduct of the war, the settlement of the peace, conditions in central Europe, the situation in Russia, and other subjects concerning which the fate of civilization itself may depend on the accuracy with which the people are informed of the facts.

"A minority, which is proudly prepared to think for (the country) and not only prepared, but cocksure that it alone knows how to think for it, has adopted the theory that the public should know what is good for it." "A more insidiously misleading rule of conduct was, I believe, never devised among men." "It is a blazing arrogance to sacrifice hard-won standards of credibility to some special purpose"; and the system of public journalism is operated, Mr. Lippman avers, with the set and general purpose of doing just that thing. "The most destructive form of untruth is sophistry and propaganda by those whose profession it is to report the news." "In so far as those who purvey the news make of their own beliefs a higher law than truth, they are attacking the foundations of our constitutional system." Their procedure he thinks is morally on the same plane as Jesuitism, mob law and anarchy.

Thus the author disposes of "The Higher Law of Journalism" in the first chapter. There are only three chapters in the little volume of 102 pages. In the second chapter he discusses "What Modern Liberty Means." Under this head he reasons that absolute liberty in the expression of opinion never existed and never can exist, and that after all it is a secondary matter. The real contention is for liberty to know and communicate the facts upon which vital judgments and actions must depend. If we can protect from corruption the sources of public information and insure it veracity and completeness, liberty of all other kinds will naturally follow.

In the last chapter, dealing with "Liberty and the News," the author takes up the question of practical remedies. Roughly they are protection of the sources of information, by fixing personal responsibility for truthfulness, organization of the news so as to make it comprehensible, and education of human response." He makes a large number of recommendations and suggestions, some of which are absolutely and obviously essential, while others could be proved only by the test of experiment. But after all of his program is in, he brings us up squarely against a stone wall. He may describe it and tell what to do about it in his own words:

News reform will not be secured, "simply by saying that it ought to be. Those who are now in control have too much at stake, and they control the source of reform itself. Change will come only by the drastic competition of those whose interests are not represented in the existing news organization. It will come only if organized labor and militant liberalism set a pace which cannot be ignored. Our sanity and, therefore, our safety depend upon this competition, upon fearless and relentless exposure conducted by self-conscious groups that are now in a minority." And at this point arises a call for heroes. "Resistance to the inertias of the profession, heresy to the institution, and the willingness to be fired rather than write what you do not believe, these wait on nothing but personal courage. And without the assistance which they will bring from within the profession itself, democracy, though it will deal with the problem somehow, will deal with it badly."

Somehow or other, we must "protect and increase the veracity of the information upon which we act," as Mr. Lippman believes. And we cannot begin too soon.

This discussion has a vital religious significance, because churches, schools and the religious press are feeling the clutch of the same sinister compulsion that has incapacitated the secular press for service as an independent agency for the dissemination of knowledge. Facts that might be offensive to certain groups, no matter how vital they may be to the welfare of the people, must not be made known from the pulpit. The school, no matter how effectively it creates in its students the power and passion for accurate research and the ability to weigh facts and to reach sound conclusions, is subject to criticism unless it inculcates those opinions which somebody else thinks the students ought to hold. And the popularity of the ordinary religious newspaper is notoriously gauged not by the breadth and accuracy with which it reports the news in its proper field, but by its success in propagating a certain set of opinions and in serving certain influential partisan or personal interests. The right to know is far deeper than the right to speak; and unless the signs are illusory this right will have to be fought for in the near future in the state, the church, the school and the religious press.

Mr. Lippman has raised a question vital to the creation and maintenance of a democratic order of civilization. Where knowledge is taboo, liberty languishes and disaster is not far away.

On the whole the case may be hardly as bad as it seems. Unreliable news service has always existed. Exact facts are often not available. Neither history nor the news can be coldly scientific at all times. Facts naturally produce feelings in the reporter. Readers learn to discriminate and to discount faults. Corrective tendencies are apparently at work in the newspapers themselves. The public is gradually finding out how fearfully it has been humbugged, and in that discovery is salvation.

God Winks but He Does Not Trifle

GOD is a moral Person. Right and wrong have a meaning to him, though not always, perhaps, the same meaning they have to human thinking.

There is a conventional right which consists in conformity to commonly accepted standards of conduct. There is a legal right which complies with the prescriptions of objective authority. There is a vital right which lies in the promotion of the best life. The first and the second have certain human utilities. They help to regulate human action economically in the absence of a clear and quick perception of vital righteousness. But the last, vital right, is the ultimate righteousness of God.

God's law then is not a set of prescriptions, whatever value these may have at any time as an expression of his law in terms of human speech. It is the constitution of the universe, which exists by virtue of a vital impulse, and to a vital end. In God's sight that is right which is true to that impulse and tends to that end.

God's law and the law of nature are the same and all equally holy throughout. The study of biology is a pursuit just as sacred as the study of the Bible, and so far as it yields ascertained results it is an equally valid revelation of God's law.

Sin is any aberration from the course of the best life. When it is done unintentionally through ignorance, it is error. When it is done intentionally as known wrong, it is vileness. In either case it is the constant accompaniment of human life in the process of evolution from the cradle to whatever outcome.

Everything in the significance and outcome of sin depends on whether the life in which it is exhibited is going into sin or coming out of it. Under the impulse of God's purpose increasingly manifest, the world and every individual whom the Spirit of God leads are emerging, through many vicissitudes, from immaturity, imperfection and viciousness towards maturity, perfection and vital righteousness. This is nature's program because it is God's.

Hence he can afford to be patient and magnanimous towards both the world and the individual. There are times, Paul says, when God winks at men. He waits, he helps, he overlooks, he winks kindly. He chums with mankind in a wonderful way, considering the company he has to keep. His wink is confession, tolerance and encouragement. It says: "Things are going a bit rough. We are shaming the proprieties, we are smashing all the laws that men ever heard of. But we are not going on so forever. Today is badly botched, but tomorrow will be better. For the power of an endless life is at work in us; and neither imperfection, immaturity, nor 'the gates of hell' can finally balk it."

So he judges us by what we are going to be when both we and the world in which we live shall have become subject, not to the conventionalities nor the legalities but to the spirit of life in Christ Jesus; whose life is law to all who believe in him.

Men speak of the relentlessness with which nature exacts penalty for broken law. But the truth is that for purposes of discipline and growth, both nature and God (one in action) are marvelously magnanimous and indulgent toward the world and the individuals wabbling toward the kingdom of God.

Only when, in defiance of light and in wantonness of purpose, men rebel against the best life itself, do God and nature in one voice begin to thunder in tones of damnation.

Those people in our churches who have but little ready money, as well as those who have, who wish to do something to help the suffering people in the various countries of Europe will do well to read and act on the appeal published on page 938. There are few families which have not clothing of good quality and in good condition which could be contributed to the scantily-clad people of Poland, Latvia and Czecho-Slovakia. Northern Baptists are abundantly able to fill a ship with necessary articles and to testify thereby their fellowship with one another and with these people of countries which have suffered severely on account of the war. Now is the time to begin to lay aside articles of the kind mentioned. And please notice, as you do so, that what is not good enough for some manner of use in this country is not good enough for our brethren across the sea. This condition of the clothing suit involves several points. The garments ought to be whole and not less important, they ought to be clean. If it should transpire that you have no clothes of your own to spare, perhaps your neighbor has them, or a gift of money will buy them.

The Kingship of Christ—II. Christ and Education

Real leaders of Christianity fear ignorance. True science confirms true faith in Christ. The church is the mother of the university. True religion and freedom of thought are inseparable. Christian teaching demands Christian teachers

BY SHAILER MATHEWS

FIFTEEN hundred years and more ago a brilliant Roman Emperor lay on his deathbed. He had striven to substitute philosophy for Christianity, but as he lay dying, he exclaimed, "O, Galilean, thou hast conquered!" The words of Julian are much more than an epitome of his own experience. When Christianity moved out into the Roman Empire, it entered a civilization which could boast of a Plato and an Aristotle, a Praxiteles and a Phidias, a Cicero and a Virgil, tragedians, historians, geometers and statesmen. For the first three centuries of its existence it struggled with a world in love with culture and metaphysical speculation. For a while it seemed as if it would be submerged; but when the final count was taken Christ had conquered the philosophers. Greek thought re-expressed for a Greek world the truths of Christianity and gave to the faith of the apostles the protective covering of intellectual beliefs. Christ had appropriated Greek learning.

Jesus the Master of Culture

This amazing fact was a prophecy of an age-long process. Jesus Christ has become increasingly the master of education. He can never be its enemy or its victim. As civilization develops powers it demands a moral control deep-seated in the hearts and minds of men and women. No such control is possible except through education. And no such education as is needed is possible except that which is controlled by the ideals and spirit of Jesus Christ. Pagan lands may have learning, but Christian lands can have true wisdom.

When we speak of the control of education by Christ, we do not mean ecclesiastical control of public schools. Americans will endorse nothing of the sort. Nor do we expect that Christ will control education in any other way than he controls other social agencies. The Lord is the Spirit and in the future as in the past, his mastery of education will be felt through his followers. As they are loyal to him, they can expect that divine guidance which always gives more than human direction and efficiency to Christian effort and service. We become co-workers with God in education as we are loyal to his Son our Teacher.

The history of education and the church make this plain. The great names in the Christian church are almost without exception those of teachers representing the best of contemporary culture. Clement of Alexandria, Origen, and Augustine in the ancient church; Luther, Melancthon, Calvin in the Reformation; Wesley and Schleiermacher in later days, are only illustrations of the great host of highly trained men and women who have served the Master by making Christianity influential through the education of their day.

Culture Native to the Church

Until very recent years the initiative for most educational movements has come from the church, whether one looks at the universities or the Middle Ages or the common schools and colleges of the American colonies. Real leaders of Christianity have always been afraid of ignorance. They have never felt enmity between knowledge and faith in Jesus Christ. They have taught men to study the word and works of God. The Christianity which has failed has been the Christianity which has refused to go on with developing knowledge. Again and again has the church condemned that which seemed to its narrow vision opposed to Christian truth; but many times has it also come to see that increased knowledge of the universe and of human life has been new vindication of the faith it cherishes in the Christ it worships.

The educated man as truly as the ignorant man needs the saving power of Christ. But he must be saved as an educated man and not as an ignorant man. He cannot be forced to give up what he knows to be real. If he be told that Christian loyalty involves the abandonment of the assured results and methods of scientific investigation, he will refuse such loyalty. He knows a better. For if Christ gathers up in himself all things upon heaven and upon earth, he has not omitted the great world now being disclosed by men of science. To this supreme Christ, unafraid of his own handiwork, will the scholar pledge his loyalty.

For he knows that Christ is needed by the thinker and the teacher. Modern education is in danger of overlooking, or at least of neglecting moral elements. The vast increase in human knowledge which has resulted from the earnest labors of the last two generations, has not yet been thoroughly co-ordinated with the principles of religion and morality. Our religion stands in much the same relation to our new knowledge as did Christianity to the culture of the Roman Empire. Sooner or later the two will be united. The process will be delayed and made tragic for many souls by unwillingness of Christian thinkers to appropriate such new facts as have a bearing upon the life of the soul, and by every attempt of anti-religious thinkers to deprive today's intellectual forces of Christian ideals. This double danger is one which every thoughtful person must face. The church of Christ cannot afford to be bigoted or indifferently tolerant, nor can culture afford to ignore Christ. Social well-being lies in the Christianizing of education.

Christ Must Control

Education must be more than scientific. Information may or may not be a blessing. It depends upon how it is used. A knowledge of chemistry has made war terrible. Information and technical skill if used by men and women whose hearts are untouched by the ideals of Jesus, will throw any country and the world itself into hideous conflict. If our new knowledge is not to be a dragon destroying its own offspring, it must produce personalities governed and controlled by Christ. He must appropriate and use modern culture as he appropriated and used Greek culture.

Such wide-sweeping generalities as these bring us face to face with the question as to how Christ is to control the educational process. Regarding this supreme need, the following suggestions are worth consideration:

1. Christianity and the educational process will be combined today in much the same manner as they have been combined in the past; that is to say, the Christian teacher must himself be thoroughly educated in the modern knowledge. It was customary in the formative period of the church for men preparing for the position of teachers in the Christian schools to study the philosophy, science and rhetoric of the already existing schools and universities. Most interesting stories have come down to us from such men of the university life at Athens and of some of the great teachers of the fourth century. These founders of orthodoxy believed that the method of the schools, even though it had been produced by unbelieving pagans, could be utilized for better understanding Christian faith and better applying Christianity to the world in which they lived.

A Fatal Mistake

It would be a fatal mistake for Christians of the present day to adopt any other point of view. Some schools are making this mistake. They are refusing to let their students know the results of scientific investigation for fear lest such knowledge will ruin certain theological beliefs for which the schools stand. Such a policy will divorce religion from all freedom of thought and investigation. It is intelligible in Roman Catholic institutions where even scientific expositions must be in accord with dogma; but for Protestants to attempt this method is to put a premium upon ignorance as a prerequisite for faith. In my experience I have found that this policy is a chief source of scepticism. When young people come to feel that in the name of religion they have been kept from knowing actual facts, they too often revolt from the religion which has feared to stand in the light. Such a mistake is avoidable. Christianity has grown by not being afraid to embody in itself the best of contemporaneous culture. The Christian teacher is the connecting link between the two.

As I write this, there comes back to me an experience in my junior year in college. We were studying physiology under Professor William Elder, one of the most stimulating thinkers and genuine Christians I ever met. I went to him one day and asked him for a book to prove that evolution is untrue. He asked me why I wished to prove it untrue. I knew nothing about evolution and promptly replied that I wished to disprove it because it was contrary to Christianity. Professor Elder then gave me a shock which I am inclined to think was the beginning of what independent intellectual life I may have had. He said, "If Christianity opposes any actual fact given by science, Christianity in so far must be abandoned." I went terrified to the library and got such books as I could. I studied the matter imperfectly; but I came to see that evolution, properly understood, so far from being an enemy of Christianity, is simply one way of God's working in the world. The meaning of religion was enlarged, and from that day I have never feared lest the rising tide of knowledge should drown out Christianity, provided only the two are intelligently and reverently combined.

Historical science has changed the prophets from what Coleridge called "Superhuman Ventriloquists" to most living personalities, who have a greatness of their own, and each his own quality of greatness, and who stand almost highest among the path-makers in the history of the religious and ethical advance of man. It has had this effect by concentrating our attention first upon the work of the prophets in and for their own times; and yet their abiding significance and the permanent factors in their teaching have come into clearer light by this emphasis on their relation to these long past situations and events. — FRANK CHAMBERLIN PORTER, in "The Mysticism of the Hebrew Prophets."

2. But this conviction is only a point of departure. Education, to be Christian, must be entrusted to those who are frankly and openly Christian. Any compromise here is dangerous. The will needs education as truly as the intellect. From one point of view this is a commonplace statement; from another, it is almost revolutionary. While few teachers scoff at Christianity, their interests are too often exhausted in the presentation of their particular subjects, and any keen sense of responsibility for the development of the personal habits and modes of life of their pupils is not dominant. Christian schools and colleges are highly important for just this reason. Scientists are not infallible and science is not complete in itself. The teacher must be something more than an instructor. He can and should become the parent or big brother. He should go about his teaching with something of the missionary spirit. A genuine Christian teacher in any field of knowledge can always find some natural mode of approach to faith through his instruction. He need not formally intrude religion into scientific instruction. The most vital impression of many teachers is made by their incidental remarks and total attitude in class work. Christian attitudes are contagious, while sciences have to be methodically and laboriously conquered. Long after what we teachers have said in our lectures is forgotten, some unconscious act or unpremeditated phrase disclosing our loyalty to Christ, will be remembered.

It is this fact which gives such great importance to the selection of teachers. So long as they are chosen simply because of mastery in a certain technical field without regard to their personal ideas or habits or sense of responsibility for moral inspiration, it can hardly be more than a piece of good luck if their influence upon their pupils is uplifting. Teachers are seldom avowedly indifferent to this need. As a class, they take their calling seriously and not as a mere livelihood; but there are sufficient exceptions to lead one to emphasize the need of appointing as teachers, men and women who look upon their vocation as a means of developing in their pupils sympathy with the gospel, loyalty to Jesus Christ and moral determination to put his ideals into actual practice.

Christianity an Element of Culture

3. The Christian religion ought to be taught as a part of culture. There is of course danger lest such teaching should be perfunctory; but this is no reason why Christianity should be utterly ignored, and boys and girls made to study only the religion of Greece and Rome. To say the least, the Bible is as notable literature as any Latin or Greek classics. The Christian religion is as much a part of our civilization as any other of the great social forces. We owe it to the rising generation to give it an understanding of the church as truly as we owe them an understanding of English literature or geometry. Christ is certainly greater than Plato or Shakespeare or Euclid.

In making this claim we ask no more than fair presentation of the meaning of the Christian dynamic, not theological propaganda. Christ made the everyday experience of his disciples the point of contact for nobler teaching. Such use can be made of the pupil's growing intellectual life. In a true sense all teaching is use of parables. Personally, I should be ready to have the content of every religion of importance set forth, if such an exposition would help pupils to understand better the world in which they live. But it certainly seems anomalous to regard the teaching of Christianity as less legitimate than the teaching of religions of the past. What is a more important element of our civilization than the Christian Church?

If Christianity is to be taught as an element of culture, it should, of course, be properly taught. The school is not a revival meeting. The giving of information, the arousing of sympathy, the exposition of the real meaning of the Christian church as it appears in human history, are calculated to arouse loyalty to Christ. The principles of morality can thus be taught in every school; but in schools under the immediate control of Christians, the distinct teaching of Christianity is imperative and should be easy.

Jesus' Pedagogy Valid

4. Christian education should be inspired with the pedagogy of Jesus Christ. If our educational process is really to be Christian, earnest Christian teachers must help their pupils see that all truth is one, and that even while there is uncertainty, the courageous search for truth is not impious. That was Christ's method as he faced the Pharisee. Teachers with great unwillingness submit to outside control. They believe that they are better judges as to methods and material of instruction than are outsiders. They may over-estimate their competency to manage affairs in which they are regarded as experts; but a Christian teacher who is denied freedom of teaching in the search for truth will either cease to be a Christian or a good teacher. You cannot make men brave defenders of truth by teaching them to fear persons who know less about truth than they.

But Jesus not only taught freely, he taught carefully and progressively. Here again he is an example. Freedom does not mean airing guesses and epigrams. Fathers and mothers are entrusting teachers with their choicest wealth. A conscientious teacher will certainly not play with immature minds, any more than he will undertake to confirm them in their prejudices and their ignorance. His duty is to lead them into a full appreciation of the greatness of Jesus Christ and the power of the spiritual gospel. He must show them that faith is consistent with fearless investigation and that we understand God better as we understand the laws and forces of the physical universe and human history. But if new knowledge is so presented as to break the confidence of the pupils in the God and the Christ of their parents; if the Christian teacher so treats immature minds that increased knowledge is not co-ordinated with Christian thought and experience, he is untrue to his trust and his example. Like Christ, who had many things to teach his disciples withheld from their immaturity, he must often-times check the expression of disturbing truths, waiting until his pupils are ready to receive them. He must warn young minds from hasty and immature conclusions. Intellectual freedom must be the servant of spiritual education. If the Christian teacher has a duty before God to lead his pupils as far as they are capable of going into the realm of truth, he must be a guide and not an agitator. He must show them the religious meaning of their new experiences and their fresh discoveries. Above all, he must make them feel that the recasting of some belief which has been precious to their fathers and mothers but which is not scientifically accurate, is not an abandonment of their parents' faith in Jesus Christ and his gospel. No truth is the enemy of faith.

The Teacher Must Inspire Living

Thus the Christian teacher as a servant of Christ faces not only a notable opportunity but a serious responsibility. He must constantly examine himself and his pupils to see whether he is leading them into larger faith or frightening them away from faith. Progressiveness can be injuriously dogmatic and unsympathetic. If Christ is to work through our educational system, it must be as his spirit leads young men and women through the ministration of Christian teachers given liberty to teach and spiritual passion to inspire young lives.

5. Finally, Christ will control education as education produces attitudes and behavior like his own. According to the gospels, what Christ values is not profession of belief, but a quality of life, a willingness to give justice to other people, and a great conviction that in so doing one is following the Father's will. Jesus Christ progressively revealed to his pupils that intellectual conformity and ritual regularity are secondary to the possession of the love which makes men children of God. The entire rising generation needs to be taught not only science but also the gospel truths that justice does not mean the acquisition of rights, but the recognition of rights; that the conflict for advancement always is in danger of hindering someone's else advancement; that life does not consist in the abundance of things which a man gets or in his economic efficiency, but upon his success in living a life which is in accordance with the permanent laws of the Heavenly Father. In other words, if we are to have a Christian civilization or a civilization that to any considerable extent is Christian, we must make Christ's principles and their expression a part of the educational process. The teacher must embody those principles. Only thus can we hope for a generation ready to reconstruct the industrial order without revolution or oppression.

If Christ is to Conquer

Jesus Christ is to conquer the world, or, much better, if Jesus Christ is to transform the world,—he must first of all transform the people who are going to make the world. And those people are not elderly or, in a good many cases, middle aged men and women, whose minds are nearly or quite fixed and whose lives are tolerably well organized according to principles and view formulated twenty-five years before. The people who will transform the world are the boys and girls in our schools and colleges. There is no more pressing duty than to make their education bring them to a new realization of the dynamics of the Christian religion and the way of Jesus. If they fail the world, the world fails. If they are unchristian the world will be unchristian. If the leaders ignore Christ the masses will be pagan.

Of course the church is a part of the educational process; but as I have used the term I have not been thinking of the indispensable service of Sunday-school teachers and pastors, but of teachers in schools, colleges and universities. To them parents have delegated the task of instructing their children. It is to them quite as much as to the parents that the future looks for the preparation of a generation of men and women unafraid in the midst of a marvelous universe; unselfish in a world of wealth; truthful in a universe of law; and faithful to him who gave his life because he loved the world and left his cross as an epitome of triumphant service.

A Contrast From Japan

*A Baptist shack and a palace of vice sit side by side in Shiogama.
Some day the church will close the palace or turn it to goodness*

By DOUGLAS S. HARING

SHIOGAMA is the Port of Sendai, the metropolis of North Japan. In olden times the great lords of Sendai went down to Shiogama for their "good times", and the port became a city of immorality filled with parasites who preyed on the vices of men.

Modern Shiogama is slightly, not greatly improved. Its improvement nevertheless promises to be rapid. For it has a live Baptist church with a live pastor and some live men who do things. The townspeople respect and honor Pastor Takahashi and his band of faithful men. A deacon of the church is on the Town Council, and not a few movements to "clean up" Shiogama, may be traced to him.

The Live People who belong to this live church have but one thing to be ashamed of: their church building. The picture to the left shows why. It is the only thatch-roof structure left on the main street. It is tiny and decrepit, and we are able to occupy it only because a tenant who pays his rent may not be evicted in Japan.

Two Doors Away is a fine building with a clean white front and every indication of prosperity. It is attractive and conspicuous, challenging attention. It is shown in the picture above.

The Nice, Clean, White Building is a House of Ill Fame. It holds out inducements to the young men of the town and sneers at the dumpy, straw-covered church.

Some Day the little church is going to drive vice out of Shiogama. The Christians aren't going to be handicapped by such a hut any longer. They are raising Four Thousand Yen toward a new building, but that won't build a church in Modern Japan. They are still weak and need a lift. The Foreign Mission Board has generously provided $6000. We have a fine site a few doors down the street. When we find several thousand more a new church, with every feature to attract and hold young people, is going to give a shock to the age-old sins of Shiogama and the men who live by the traffic in vice will quit sneering and fight to save their dirty business.

Among the Zapotec Indians of Mexico

The author is an Indian and a graduate of our Baptist Theological Seminary in Saltillo. He is preaching the gospel to his own people in their own tongue and is supported by the National Baptist Convention of Mexico.

BY SAMUEL J. GARCIA

IN order to push the work in this place I thought of writing to the people an open letter, from which I hoped some good results. Brother Andrew Mendez and I went out about two in the morning of the tenth day of April and posted copies of the following letters on the corners of all the streets:

"To the People of Tlacoachahuaya: Beloved Brethren: By the grace of God I have found the true Christian religion, the religion which is not based on traditions, fables and superstitions, but upon the Book of Books, the sacred Scriptures, the Holy Bible, which is our only rule of faith and practice in life. We thank God because the laws of our country give us liberty to teach the glorious doctrine of the sacred Scriptures. As a gospel minister I have determined to remain in this my own town, a town which I love with my whole heart and to which I have dedicated my whole life to teach the glorious doctrines of the Saviour of the world, pure and simple doctrines which I am ready to defend in any time and circumstances.

Garcia's Challenge

People of Tlacoachahuaya, you are blessed because the doctrines which the divine Jesus of Nazareth preached you will hear in your own language, without adulteration or admixture of formulas. You are as worthy as civilized peoples of knowing the truths of the Redeemer of the world. Do not be alarmed at the names of Protestant and Mason which our enemies have given us. I am neither Protestant nor Mason. I am an evangelical Christian. Those who revile us say that we deny the Virgin Mary. Do not believe it, my people. We respect her and we give her her due place, the place which the holy Scriptures give her. The only thing which ought to concern us is the salvation of our souls. It is time that we leave superstitions, fables, and traditions, and seek the true way of salvation. Christ says, "I am the way, the truth and the light; No man cometh to the Father, but by me." We reject salvation by works.

For the better instruction of the people who have for many years been in bondage under the shadow of ignorance, I have determined to hold gospel meetings as follows: Sundays, Bible school at 10 a. m.; preaching service 7 p. m.; Thursdays, prayer service 7 p. m. I give a cordial invitation to all the people! Tlacoachahuaya, April 1921. —Samuel J. Garcia.

The results of this letter were magnificent, for on that day we had a Sunday school with an attendance of seventeen people. At the preaching service there were not less than fifty hearers.

He Got Results

To announce to the inhabitants that the hour for the meeting had arrived, I light a lantern and put it on the corner of the street a half-hour before services. When this signal has been given the congregation begins to gather little by little. It is altogether made up of men, with the exception of one woman who has become greatly interested in our talks. We hope in a little while to interest the women in our religion. Already some of those who attend know how to handle their Bibles and sing hymns. The favorite hymns of the congregation are "Glory to His Name," and "What a friend we have in Jesus." In time we hope to have more favorite hymns.

On the thirteenth of April we opened the doors of the Baptist night school for adults. This new institution is conducted by my wife. The attendance upon this school has reached forty-nine, who are divided into two classes. The first class is formed of those who do not know how to read nor write and the second by those who know something but wish to learn more. As all the pupils must work in the fields they are always tired after their labors and, therefore, I have agreed to have the classes only on Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays. We have fixed the quota for each pupil at twenty-five cents a month to cover the expenses of chalk, lights, etc., but of all the pupils only thirteen are paying. The most faithful of the pupils are those of the second class, for almost all of them pay. We completely lack equipment for school room, inasmuch as this school does not depend upon any religious corporation but only upon our humble efforts.

I am pleased to make known to my brethren the liberality of Col. Reuben M. Peralta. This courteous gentleman, a Presbyterian, has become interested in the work among the Zapatecs. In the month of May he contributed fifty pesos for the purchase of a horse for my evangelistic work. Before that I had to walk on foot through the country and villages in order to speak to men about the way of salvation. In order to hold meetings in Ixtaltepec six kilometers from this town, I had to go and return on foot, but now, thanks to God and to the liberality of Col. Peralta, I can attend to this work with greater ease. In the month of June I received from this same Col. Peralta fifty pesos toward the construction of our future chapel. The necessity of a chapel in this place is very urgent. The room we occupy, which is part of my dwelling place, is fit neither for meetings nor for the school, because of its location and because it is not large enough. With a little money we could build a magnificent chapel, for in these places the ground and building material are very cheap. I understand that it is the desire of Col. Peralta, as long as he stays in these parts, to give fifty pesos a month for this purpose.

Prayed for Rain, it Came

I give my sincere thanks to the Bible Agency of Mexico City, to the Baptist Publication House of El Paso, to the Bible House of Los Angeles, Calif., and to the American Baptist Publication Society for their gracious remittance of tracts.

My open letter, my meetings, the Baptist night school, and the distribution of tracts has put the priest of this town upon the alert. Calumnies were at once set going. It was said that we scourged the images of the saints; that we paid money to those who came to our meetings; that whoever went by the door of our house would be damned. But the greatest calumny and the most curious was this; that because of me there was no rain. This subject was very much discussed in the town. Some said that in order that it might rain it was necessary that I should be expelled from the town; others that I should be killed. The minds of the people were very excited. They brought from the hacienda of Guendulain a saint, but it produced no effect in the way of bringing rain. On the thirteenth of June they proposed to take all the saints out in solemn procession through the streets of the town. In this they were failing to observe that article of the constitution which says that all religious acts of public worship must be celebrated strictly within doors. But before the procession was held there came a shower which lasted all night. For our part we prayed that the Lord would send rain and thus there would be one obstacle less for the advance of his work. We are now in the midst of a season of rains and our enemies have been put to shame.

Brother Andrew Mendez was the one who suffered most in this persecution, because he came more in contact with the people. Naturally our meetings and our school suffered. Sometimes we had no service and our pupils withdrew from the school. This filled us with sadness, but now, God be praised, the work is growing again.

Certain rumors reached me here that the priest of this parish was speaking of me and of our holy religion, both in this town and in the neighboring towns. I believed it necessary to demand of him some explanation and this gave occasion to correspondence between us. I hope to publish later this correspondence.

Why a Baptist School

Where our young people go to school makes all the difference often between a rich and an impoverished personality through life. How to select, and why

BY OBSERVER

IN these days when all parents of children old enough to go to college are thinking so much of where their children shall go, I want to make another plea for loyalty to our Baptist schools. Before I launch out into my argument, however, I want to frankly admit that there is often another side to this question. We cannot expect our Baptist people to be loyal to certain Baptist schools in the following instances:

Where They Will Not Go

1. Where the opportunities are so limited as not to give the student a fair chance in life. Where the school is called a college but is in reality no such thing. Where an instructor must take private lessons to keep ahead of his class.

2. Where the curriculum is so limited that it will not fit one for or match onto the higher school one expects to attend.

3. Where the curriculum is so limited that nothing can be had that will prepare one for the professional course already decided upon—where all time spent or most of it would be wasted in view of proposed life tasks.

That there are such Baptist schools no one will deny but if the nearest Baptist school falls under any of these considerations others can be found farther away which can qualify as well as any in the land.

I am not going to dwell on the statistics which unmistakably point out the fact that the Baptists are sending a smaller proportion of their membership to higher schools than any other of the great Protestant denominations.

I believe that we ought to support our Baptist schools and send our children to them wherever possible for the following reasons:

1. If we believe that the Baptist denomination is worthy of perpetuity we must realize that it depends upon our Baptist ministry. Baptist schools are the only large and consistent producers of Baptist ministers and missionaries. We need not enter into an amplification of this statement nor state the reason why it is true. There can be absolutely no successful refutation of it.

2. If we are to acquire and maintain a position of religious and community leadership we must not only have an educated leadership in the pulpit but also in the pew. Statistics are too familiar to need repetition here showing that overwhelmingly the educated people are the leaders. One illustration; 55 per cent of all the people found worthy to be in Who's Who are taken from the only 2 per cent of our entire population who go to college.

How We Lose Them

3. We are likely to lose our children if sent to schools of another denomination or to those of no denomination. When a young man or woman at such an impressionable age has received something of value at any college he is likely to be grateful to the denomination or organization which provided those privileges. This gratitude is likely to blossom into active membership with such people. I can recall many instances in which Baptist parents, even preachers, have bemoaned to me the fact that their children have wandered into other churches or into worldliness because they were not sent to a Baptist school, and perhaps not even to a Christian school. One wealthy Baptist layman bewailed to me that all his money would go out of the denomination because all of his daughters had married into other denominations. I investigated later and found that not one of them had gone to a Baptist college.

Mating Time at College

4. The age at which young people usually go to college is the age, as a rule, in which life partners are selected. The great multitude of college people marry within the range of their own college acquaintances. Propinquity at this impressionable age is a large factor in such decisions. Young people who go to a Baptist college are much more likely to marry into a Baptist family and hence remain within our denomination.

5. Many of the arguments which parents advance for sending their children to other than Baptist schools are not correct or valid in all cases. Some of these follow:

(1) It is cheaper to send to the state university where there is no tuition. It is true that no tuition is charged as a rule but examine the other fees and it will be shown that the entire expense is almost always much more than at a good denominational school.

State universities rarely have dormitories. Most Baptist schools do and it is a well known fact that other things being equal, the expense in dormitories is less than where there are none. A Baptist father was recently talking this matter over with me. He is sending his child to the nearby state university. I am sending mine to a distant Baptist college. In comparing expenses we found that my child was paying $7.50 per week for both board and room in the dormitory, while his was paying $10.50 per week for poorer privileges in a private home and that many students there paid $12.50. In other words the extra cost he was paying for board and room would more than make up the long railroad fare that I was paying even in these times of the high cost of travel.

Some Economic Comparisons

(2) Some other school is nearer by. Parents and children cannot bear the thought of being separated for so long a period. This separation is not always an unmixed evil. At this period there are many children who would thrive better by being thrust farther away from home and put upon their own resources rather than to be near enough so that they could call up mother by long distance and ask whether they would better buy light tan or mouse colored gloves to go with that new dress.

(3) "I want my children to have the advantage of the famous professors at the state university says one father. It is more than likely that his child may not even know by sight these famous professors on the day he graduates. These professors who give national fame to their schools usually have to do only with the graduate students. A young friend of mine left a good Baptist school at the close of his sophomore year saying that he wanted his degree at a more famous school and under more famous men. He went to one of our most famous universities in the east and when he began his work he found that his professor in his major subject was a young man who had graduated from the school he had just left only two years prior. More than that it is a well known fact that much of the undergraduate work in our universities is being done by brighter but more advanced undergraduates. Either this or it is true that the classes are so large that the professor can give no personal attention and the pupil is called upon to recite only once or twice per semester.

Some Are Merely Dazzled

(4) Other parents are dazzled by enormous buildings, great libraries and expensive equipment. The biological laboratory has one hundred fine microscopes. The Baptist school which has only ten of these same instruments may be far better equipped in proportion to its students who need them than the other school.

All the way through I am speaking of undergraduate work. It is often the case as intimated that the famous professors, the expensive equipment and the great libraries are available for only those who take graduate work. This equipment is numerous and expensive only because of the numerous graduate and professional departments which demand such things. Very often a careful investigation of a really good Baptist college and a comparison with some much more famous university will reveal the fact that the undergraduate college is far better equipped in personnel and material advantages for the work that it is doing, than is the larger and more famous school.

One Clear Superiority

(6) The spiritual advantages of a Baptist school are greatly superior especially to those having no denominational backing. The percentage of Christians in the denominational school is always much larger than in the other kind. That creates the atmosphere of the school and we must remember that the average student has his life principles formulated as much by his contact with his fellow students as by his class room work. If it is not true that the Christian tone is higher where there is a larger percentage of Christians then there is nothing in Christianity. Then again, in a Christian school Christianity has the official backing of the whole institution. In another sort of college what religion there is is unofficial and voluntary. Worse than that in many such schools there are professors openly antagonistic to all phases of religion.

What should be one of the chief determining factors in every such decision is not alone which institution has the most famous professors or which has the most money invested in material equipment, but where will my child get good advantages in these lines and at the same time receive careful religious training and a great spiritual impulse to do a vicarious work in life. It is the old question of whether we shall be dominated by spiritual welfare or dazzled by piles of brick and stone and mortar, thousands of students and millions in material equipment.

(7) In many of our great universities students are encouraged—practically obliged—to specialize at once on beginning their course. Education for its cultural value is well-nigh neglected. The school of Liberal Arts is a joke. The man who takes that course is a "sissy." Every emphasis is put upon the utilitarian in education and as to whether such and such courses will be useful in the profession already chosen. This is not true to the same extent in the denominational school. A course may be taken there largely for its cultural value without the student being ridiculed.

Shall We Follow the Drift?

Many parents say they would prefer to have their children go to a Baptist school but that the drift is all the other way. Perhaps my own experience with the first of my children who went to college will help. We were members of a church with more than 800 members. The entire drift from our high school was towards the state university, which was a good one. As far as I can recall no student from our church had ever gone to our own state Baptist college. My son was determined to go to the university. No Baptist school for him. It worried us but I did not argue the point. The month he finished his junior year in high school my class in college had a reunion and I wanted to take him with me. On careful estimates I found that taking him would cost $50.00 and I concluded I could not afford it. Forty-eight hours before I was to leave my good wife brought up the matter of his accompanying me again, and I rather testily said that is settled and we could not afford it. But she persisted saying "Look at it not as a junket or pleasure excursion. That boy is approaching the time when he will form decisions for life. Consider that $50.00 as an investment for that boy's future." I saw the point and said "You win." I invited the boy to accompany me on the pretext of seeing some relatives which he gladly did. Part of the time he spent with me in the old college town during commencement week. I never once argued or even mentioned the possibility of his attending that school. However, the following autumn he calmly announced that he was going there after he graduated from high school as though no other thought entered his mind. He did so, graduated and married a fine Christian girl of the college.

If we will bear in mind spiritual values; if we shall not be dominated by "expensive economy"; if we shall study the whole matter with the care that it deserves many more of our Baptist parents will find it possible and wise to send their children to a Baptist school and thereby conserve their best interests and save them to the denomination and to Christianity.

Those Boys and Girls Just Around the Corner

BY HENRY MASON

REALIZING that in the hurly-burly of our present day activities the "Children's Hour" and weekly preparation of the Sunday-school lesson are so frequently lost. I endeavored to discover some method which would give to our children a greater degree of religious instruction than it is possible to give in the regular church school program. In casting about for a solution of a problem I became deeply interested in the daily vacation Bible school idea which seemed to have been so successfully carried on in many churches throughout the New England states.

While primarily the idea was to help "our own," it was immediately realized that probably as much good would be accomplished in throwing the doors open to the "boys and girls just around the corner," and by so doing have them become intimately acquainted with our church in expectation that they would be permanent members of our church school.

In sounding out the general sentiment of the church on such a program very little encouragement was obtained, but being thoroughly convinced that the conducting of such a school would be a step in the right direction, the field secretary was secured to speak before one of our cabinet meetings. The subject was so presented that it soon became evident that the project would have the support of the real church school workers.

As all such programs require considerable financial support an appeal was made to the organized classes and societies of the church, with the result that nearly one half of the estimated cost was pledged immediately. The superintendent from his past experience as a "minute man" presented the subject to the congregation one Sunday morning, with the result that in the appeal for "the other one hundred dollars" the financial success of the school was assured several weeks before the start.

Caring for Outsiders

In making a canvass of the children of our own school it was soon discovered that the estimated capacity of the vacation Bible school would practically be taken up by those of our own congregation, so that it was immediately evident that if the invitation to the "boys and girls around the corner" was favorably received immediate steps must be taken to accommodate them both as regards instructors and supplies.

The original posters advertising the school, and contributed by members of our church school and the distribution of advertising circulars donated by a printer-parishioner and circulated by means of our Free Press, resulted in an attendance of eighty on the opening day, July 5, whereas we had planned for about fifty.

Each Sunday morning the superintendent in his "minute man" talk presented the needs of the school as they occurred, so that at no time during the five-week course was the school handicapped for lack of supplies or instructors.

On the second day of the school the attendance jumped to over one hundred, and during the entire five weeks with an average daily enrollment of one hundred and twenty-five an average daily attendance of one hundred and a fraction was maintained. It is worthy of note that this excellent average was maintained without

This story is presented not because there is anything sensational or exceptional in the success of the Melrose school, but because the story itself narrates so clearly the actual experience of conducting a daily vacation Bible school. Those who are without experience in such work will find here a valuable practical sketch of successful methods the help of manual training or similar hand work which in itself might be entirely foreign to the religious theme of the school.

Method of Organization

The method pursued in organizing and conducting the school might be of interest and help to other churches, as it was somewhat different from the method ordinarily adopted:

Our principal, Miss Mary Berg, who is thoroughly trained in religious work, believed that a curriculum could be prepared which would hold the interest of the scholars without the introduction of work which in itself would be entirely separate from the lessons which she intended to teach. She conducted the primary department, which had an average attendance of approximately thirty-five. As her assistant in this department we secured the services of a mother from our church, whose children were in attendance at the school. The remaining help was secured from volunteer workers serving at specified times on definite days.

To handle the junior department we engaged Miss Hazel Mae Copp of Nashua, N. H., who at the time was a teacher in the high school at Littleton, Mass. Miss Copp had had previous experience in religious work as superintendent of a junior department of her home Sunday school. She has now given up her public school teaching and will enter Boston University in preparation for a life work as a religious instructor. Her high school experience was of inestimable value to us and largely responsible for her success in maintaining the proper discipline in this department which is so difficult to secure in a church school. An assistant was secured from our own church at a nominal salary, and a successful appeal was made to the members of the church congregation for the remaining co-workers so necessary in a department averaging about fifty in its daily attendance.

We secured for the instructor of our kindergarten department Miss Vera Allen, a Melrose young lady who was at home during the summer. We considered ourselves very fortunate in this department as well as in the others, in securing a leader who was specially trained for the work at hand. For the previous nine months Miss Allen had conducted a similar department in an Americanization school of Virginia conducted by the evangelical churches of the community. The twenty children ranging in age from four to six years whom she trained required only one assistant, and this help was given by volunteer workers of the church.

The school met by departments at nine o'clock for its lesson period consisting of the learning of hymns and passages of Scripture, Bible story telling and the foundation work to be used in the Bible hand work which came in the second period.

At ten o'clock all departments assembled in the church yard and were given a regular course in calisthenics conducted by volunteer leaders from our local Boy Scout Troop. This was followed by games conducted by the same organization, and the children at play were supervised by volunteer workers who came to the church for this particular period, leaving the paid instructors an opportunity for preparing the work of the second period.

Following the recess the assembly of the entire school was held in the church school room, and a young man receiving a nominal remuneration conducted the song service and officiated at the piano throughout the entire course. At this assembly the program was varied so that the children did not know from one day to another what was to be presented. One day it might be a patriotic service; the next a missionary subject; and the following day might be devoted to habit talks or character building stories.

At the close of the assembly the departments again repaired to their respective rooms and took up the Bible hand work which consisted of the making of note books illustrated by Bible pictures either purchased for them or secured from magazines or papers donated by members of the congregation. The note books were in loose leaf form and the children designed their own covers which were made largely from wall paper obtained from a generous supply of wall paper sample books donated by one of our friends.

The kindergarten department and primary department were each provided with large sand boxes which were extremely popular with the children and gave them an opportunity to work out relief maps of the Holy Land as well as countries like Japan. In the Japanese scene, for instance, they manufactured paper furniture, houses and vehicles which proved instructive as well as amusing. This would be correlated with a missionary lesson relating to the same country.

Everything Free

No charge whatever in the way of tuition was made; no charge was requested in payment of supplies used; and at the close of the school each child was given the work which he or she had produced. A collection was taken each day in each department, to be used for those daily vacation Bible schools which are not self-supporting. The sum of $25.00 was contributed in this manner.

At the close of the fourth week a picnic was held in the state reservation nearby, where an animal collection, free ice cream, candy and sandwiches occupied the children's attention for the greater part of the day. Transportation to and from the picnic was furnished by volunteers, including a truck from one of the markets in the neighborhood. The refreshments were all donated by those citizens who had become deeply interested in the school as it had been maintained week by week.

Every denomination represented in our city was represented in our school, and this included many nationalities.

The total expense approximated $350, being divided as follows: $200 for salaries; $100 for materials; $40 for advertising; $10 for picnic and miscellaneous expense.

The Light of the Cross

BY A. PIERCE WALTZ

(DECORATIONS: The main thing in this line is a large cross made in box form with white cloth on the front side and electric lights arranged inside to be turned on when proper time comes; a United States flag on one side of the platform and a Christian flag on the other. Other decorations may be had as desired. Some of the material from the industrial work of the school may be used for decorations. Costumes may be used with the different characters to make their work more effective. It is to be noted in particular that all conversation is in Bible quotations. All the work in this program, the songs, the dramatized Bible stories, first aid, and many of the quotations, has been learned as part of the school work during the summer course.)

INTRODUCTION

(The whole school marches onto the platform and proceeds)

SONG: "Holy, Holy, Holy, Lord God Almighty."

FIRST PSALM in unison.

SHORT PRAYER by pastor, followed by the school singing The Lord's Prayer (Aldam).

QUOTATIONS: (Each class leaves the platform as the quotation is given.)

Class No. 1—"The people that walked in darkness have seen a great light; they that dwell in the land of the shadow of death, upon them hath the light shined." Isa. 9:2, 3. (Reference is not given or announced at any time).

Class No. 2—"Thy sun shall no more go down; neither shall thy moon withdraw itself: for Jehovah will be thine everlasting light, and the days of thy mourning shall be ended." Isa. 60:20.

Class No. 3—"For mine eyes have seen thy salvation, Which thou hast prepared before the face of all people;

A light for revelation to the Gentiles, And the glory of thy people Israel."

Luke 2:30.

Class No. 4—(kindergarten department). "The darkness is passing away, and the true light already shineth." 1 John 2:8.

PART ONE—FOREGLEAM OF THE CROSS.

DRAMA: Four or six boys and girls come walking across the platform as though groping in the darkness for light. The room should be nearly dark. As they come on some other one appears on the opposite side and looking at them while shading her eyes with the hand says: "They grope in the dark without light." Job 12:25. (Exit.)

THE CALL OF SAMUEL, dramatized by members of the kindergarten department. (These may not give exact words of the Scripture but give the story in their own words as near the scripture words as possible.) (Exit.)

THE SHEPHERDS dramatized. These come on the platform with wives and appear to be studying the Scriptures (scroll) concerning the coming of the Messiah. Then different ones quote aloud the following passages:

"Who is he and where is he?" Esther 7:5.

"Behold the days come, saith Jehovah, that I will rise unto David a righteous Branch, and he shall reign as king and deal wisely, and shall execute justice and righteousness in the land." Jer. 23:5.

"And there shall come forth a shoot out of the stock of Jesse, and a branch out of his roots shall bear fruit. And the spirit of Jehovah shall be upon him." Isa. 11:1.

"The wilderness and the dry land shall be glad; and the desert shall rejoice, and blossom as a rose." Isa. 35:1.

"Then the eyes of the blind shall be opened, and the ears of the deaf shall be unstopped." Isa. 35:5.

"Then shall the lame man leap as the hart, and the tongue of the dumb shall sing." Isa. 35:6.

"Come now, let us reason together, saith Jehovah: Though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow; though they be red like crimson, they shall be as wool." Isa. 1:18.

SONG: "Though Your Sins Be as Scarlet." (This may be sung as a duet.)

ANGEL APPEARS and shepherds become very much frightened, but angel says: "Be not afraid; for behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy which shall be to all people: for there is born to you this day in the city of David a Saviour, who is Christ the Lord." Luke 2:10, 11.

HEAVENLY HOST suddenly appear (the whole school) and sing: "Glory to God in the Highest, and on earth peace among men." Luke 2:14.

SONG: "Joy to the World," first stanza. (Exit.)

PART TWO—PATRIOTISM

FLAG DRILL by a dozen or more from the kindergarten department. At the end of the drill all this department comes on the platform and sing: "Jesus Bids Us Shine." Then the whole school comes on and sing: "America," 1st and 4th stanzas.

FLAG SALUTE. All march out again.

FLAG EXERCISE: Enter one bearing a banner on which is printed "A Warless World in 1923," but the side with the words must be kept toward the back away from the audience. This will be in the middle of the platform. Immediately following this come one bearing a United States flag and another bearing a Christian flag and stand one on each side pointing their flags toward the banner. In come a dozen or more bearing flags of different foreign nations and circle around the former three. Then there come in about two dozen bearing small Christian flags and circle around all the above. The rest of the scholars then come in and stand back of these circles. Now we are ready to turn the banner toward the audience and all bow.

SONG: "Onward Christian Soldiers, Marching as to War." (Separate to the sides.)

SONG: "America, The Beautiful." (This is sung by the whole audience as the illustrated slides are thrown on the screen. Slides may be had from the Board of Promotion.) All leave the platform.

PART THREE—THE LIGHT OF THE CROSS.

DRAMA: Enter several boys and girls bearing burdens (bundles or rags) denoting burdens of sin. These walk about the platform and slowly different ones repeat the following quotations of Scripture: "My soul is weary of my life." Job 10:1.

"Truly this is a grief and I must bear it." Jer. 10:19.

"We are weary and have no rest." Lam. 5:5.

"I am weary of groaning." Ps. 6:6.

"Our fathers sinned, and are not; and we have borne their iniquities." Lam. 5:7.

NICODEMUS dramatized. As the above burden bearers walk to a back corner, on the platform, Christian comes on with a Bible and as this quotation is given: "There was a man of the Pharisees, named Nicodemus, a ruler of the Jews." (John 3:1.) Nicodemus comes on and toward her with lantern in hand and says: "Rabbi, we know that thou art a teacher come from God." J. 3:2b.

Christian: "Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except one be born anew he cannot see the Kingdom of God." J. 3:3.

THE GOOD SAMARITAN dramatized. As Nicodemus walks off meditatively on comes a lawyer and Christian either reads or quotes and the following conversation takes place:

Christian: "Behold a certain lawyer." Luke 10:25a.

Lawyer: "What must I do to inherit eternal life." Luke 10:25b.

C. "What is written in the law? How readest thou?" L. 10:26.

L. "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy strength, and with all thy mind; and thy neighbor as thyself." L. 10:27.

C. "Thou hast answered right: this do, and thou shalt live." L. 10:28.

L. "And who is my neighbor?" L. 10:29b.

C. "A certain man was going down from Jerusalem to Jericho; and he fell among robbers, who both stripped him and beat him, and departed, leaving him half dead." L. 10:30. (At this point one of the boys tumbles in on the platform. I do not think it a good thing to dramatize the act of the robbers, but from this on.) "And by chance a certain priest was going down that way." L. 10:31a. (The priest comes and passes on.) "And in like manner a Levite." L. 10:32a. (The Levite comes and passes on.) "But a certain Samaritan, as he journeyed, came where he was." L. 10:33a. (Here the Samaritan comes and binds up his wounds, using his knowledge of first aid work.) "Which of these three, thinkest thou, proved neighbor unto him that fell among the robbers?" L. 10:36.

L. "He that showed mercy on him." L. 10:37a.

C. "Go, and do thou likewise." L. 10:37b. (Lawyer passes on.)

BURDEN BEARERS again come forward much burdened and troubled, but Christian hands them the Bible and they find therein these quotations which they give: "As Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so must the Son of Man be lifted up that whosoever believeth may in him have eternal life." John 3:14, 15. (As these and the next quotations are given the light flashes on the cross and goes out again.) "And I, if I, be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto myself." John 12:32.

All repeat: "We wait for light." Isa. 59:9.

Christian: "In him was life; and the life was the light of men." John 1:4. (At this time light is turned on the cross and stays on.)

Burden Bearers: "Let us, therefore, cast off the works of darkness." Rom. 12:13. (Here they lay off their burdens and rags at the foot of the cross and immediately the whole school comes in singing: "In the Cross of Christ I Glory.")

Or, "My Yoke Is Easy and My Burden Is Light," may be sung as a solo.)

What Can Restore the Morale of Peace?

What ails England? While France is sunny in spirit, Albion is sombre. Traveler refused a piece of German backbone as a memento. War-torn fields already reclaimed, but bombs still burst occasionally. "America and France ensemble!"

BY WALTER CALLEY

AT Chamounix I wrote you of some impressions I received while in England. Here at Brussels, the heart of brave and heroic Belgium, I am writing you of experiences on the continent and some impressions made upon me by a visit to France.

It is only twenty-two miles from Dover to Calais, but that brief channel crossing puts you into a new world. A prominent London physician said to me when he discovered that I was not quite "fit," as the English say, "My advice is, get to the continent as soon as you can. You will find it more cheerful in France or Switzerland. Here in England we are in a sombre mood just now." His advice was in accordance with the facts. Even in France there was an atmosphere of good cheer and hopefulness. There were sunshine and music in Paris and many people in the hotels. Some one said that it is not all as it seems, for there are many who are suffering for want of food and there is much unemployment. But the demeanor of hackmen, porters and chambermaids, as well as the guests at the hotels, made one feel that hope had not died and that there were many things worth living for. What does this buoyancy on the part of people in the presence of untold suffering and burden-bearing indicate? We were told that during the war the dance and gaiety were no more in France, but surely she has recovered her tone and cheerfulness in a marked degree. I do not think it explains it, to say it is because of volatile or superficial character. There is a deeply rooted faith in the future and a courageous acceptance of the task which for love of country the French people have assumed. Prices are high and taxes very heavy, and for many years the people will be compelled to give largely of their earnings to pay the cost of the war. Nevertheless, song and laughter are coming back, although a sacred sorrow abides.

At Chateau Thierry

We went out to Chateau Thierry and Belleau Woods, where our American boys it is believed by some turned the tide of the war. We were piloted over the battle field along the front of the second battle of the Marne by an ex-soldier from Boston who had fought in that battle. He was wounded, married a French girl and is hoping soon to take her to America. He drove us out in a Ford car which had seen service throughout the war and was running finely on three cylinders. It made us feel very much at home. We walked with bowed heads and reverent hearts over the wooded hill, never to lose its place in history. There are, after three years, many evidences of the awful struggle—pieces of uniform, buckles, buttons, canteens and exposed skeletons. Our guide picked up a section of backbone partly covered by a German uniform and offered it as a memento, but we declined it. We saw the cemetery at the foot of the hill in which 2700 American soldiers were buried. Many bodies have been removed and sent home. They were at this work when we were there. It was being done as I think loved ones would like it done. It was watched over and participated in by officers of the United States Army who manifested a spirit of respect and solemnity. We were surprised at the rapid recovery of much of this region. Some parts of Chateau Thierry are still in ruins. We saw villages absolutely destroyed, but as far as our vision could compass from the wooded Belleau Hill, the shell-plowed land had been reclaimed and was under cultivation. They were still searching for unexploded shells, for the danger from them is not yet past. During our short stay we heard the noise from bursting bombs.

French Hostility to Germany

There is a feeling in France that the Germans are a terrible people who cannot be trusted and must be watched and guarded against through all the coming years. To them it is armed hostility. They think of them as implacable racial and national foes. If some way, somehow, this blood feud could be abolished, then the menace and the dread would vanish and mothers would not longer look upon their baby boys as destined to be a sacrifice to the national life and honor. One can understand as he comes in touch with actual conditions why Clemenceau did not want France to be subjected to some of the provisions of the League of Nations. He could not trust other nations to protect France in the hour of crisis. His thought was, "France must be prepared! She must be ready. The foe that never sleeps, never forgets, is always plotting, is at our doors." When the other nations are inclined to lessen the severity of the peace terms and to help Germany get on her feet, there is a shudder in France. Can she be blamed? And yet we know this feeling stands in the way of all schemes for disarmament and of world peace. Is there no way out? The statesmen have not yet devised one. We are thrown back again upon the only solution of the problem. The reign of Jesus Christ in the hearts of men. Not churches or church organizations. Churches and priests and ministers, church services and conventions are everywhere. In England, France, Germany. These were not sufficient to prevent an awful world war. They are not equal to preventing hatred and bitterness now. Many of their leaders share in this unbrotherly and unchristian spirit. We know, however, there is a power which when it takes possession of the heart makes these things impossible. It has done it with some. It can do it with all. There is still a call for prophets of the Most High—for heralds of the everlasting gospel who realize in their own lives this spirit of love and brotherhood and who have boldness and power to proclaim it to the world. Not until the nations know Christ and have him dwelling in their leaders, will wars cease. We may do some things to lessen the probability of conflict. We are foolish to think of any contrivance of man as an insurance against national hate and cupidity.

While I have written the above paragraph out of a profound conviction of its truth, I have no thought of denying evidences of the Spirit of Christ in many people, and it is true there are men and women in France and Germany with growing influence who are filled with the Spirit of Christ and who are fired with a passion for international love and understanding. This may be the cloud no larger than a man's hand which may soon water the earth with refreshing rain which will extinguish the fires of hate and destroy forever the power of evil men who foment strife and plot destruction.

Hearts Open to America

We have had uplifting experiences and lessons in the meaning of brotherhood since coming to the continent. In France, to say we were Americans to the man in the village street or in the country, was to find a brother. The face lighted up and the hand was outstretched and there was the glad cry "American!" In a ruined village an old woman who occupied a room in a house which had no roof, no windows, no floors, looked upon us stolidly until I said, pointing to myself, "American." Immediately she was alert, her face beamed. She grasped my hand in hers and repeated, "American! American!" It was a glad hour. One day in a village in Savoy, in trying to make a man understand me, I said, "I speak English." There was no response, just an unintelligent stare. Then I said, "I am an American." At once his manner changed. He took me by the hand. "American!" he shouted. Then he threw his arms around me and we hugged each other. He was a working man with soiled clothes and stubby beard, but we laid our cheeks close to each other, and hugged, hugged tight and hard, and he cried, "America and France ensemble!" The name of Lafayette is a magic one. The French speak it when addressing an American. Americans find it the open door to French hearts. France and the United States cannot fight each other. We are near to each other, because we have rendered each other sacrificial service. There is even a nobler than military service. If we could only hold it that way. It is Christ's way—serve one another. That would make for an alliance, offensive and defensive which would be more effective than great armies and navies.

The Devotional Life

An Illinois Girl Who Never Saw a Bible.

BY GEORGE W. TAFT

RECENTLY I was entertained at a Baptist home in a village of northern Illinois. My host told me the following story of a girl who had never seen a Bible:

Something over twenty years ago a young man was beginning his active ministry as a missionary of the American Sunday School Union. He was assigned to a district in southern Illinois, some twenty miles distant from one of our principal towns. The people of that section were primitive, poor and ignorant. Many of the older people and some of the younger ones could not read. The district schools were poorly organized and somewhat scattered. The missionary was doing house to house visitation selling tracts and Bibles, organizing Sunday schools, and giving gospel talks. Some of the meetings were held in school houses, some in new barns, and some out in the open. The people had few religious privileges, and yet there was a religious vein that seemed to run through the community. At times it was clouded with superstition. The missionary was something of a novelty and appealed to the curiosity of the people as well as to their spiritual needs.

In the course of a few weeks some meetings were under way and the people were intensely hungry and eager for the messages which came from the young gospel worker. My host, whom I mentioned above, was visiting his brother, the missionary, and became deeply interested in the work that was going on and especially in the eager longing of the people for the Bible stories. Usually before the meetings dispersed, opportunities would be given for the folks to purchase Bibles and some other religious literature for a very nominal cost. One small edition of the Bible was sold for ten cents a copy. Frequently where they could not afford to purchase the book, one would be given away.

The visitor's attention was especially called to an old man and his granddaughter who were almost devouring the words of the missionary, when it was said that a Bible that contained the many wonderful stories that had been given could be purchased for ten cents, the girl was overheard saying, "Granpap, kin ye give me ten cents?" "What fer?" "So I kin git one o' them there Bibles." "Child, I haven't got ten cents," and yet the old man was moved and the tears began to come as he seemed anxious to help his granddaughter get the book from which she could spell out the gospel stories. Both seemed very much troubled

The Superhuman in Prayer

Men speak of the element of the supernatural in prayer. Instead of supernatural let us use the term "superhuman." Then we meet with no varying connotations. We agree from the beginning. Supernatural, after all, is foreign to the language of the soul. Nothing can be supernatural to God, why then to us?

In prayer everything but the initial outgoing of desire possesses elements of the superhuman. Many of the things we pray for, the reflex effects of our prayers upon ourselves, the way our prayers are answered, the answers, the entire process from the heart of him who prays to the life of him who is blessed by that prayer, all should be, MUST be superhuman. As superhuman as God's Spirit, power and manner of working is superhuman.

Do WE sufficiently possess the element of the superhuman in OUR prayers. Take our REQUESTS of the last few days. Are folks saying of us, He asks requests in prayer which humanly speaking are impossible. Big orders. Removal of mountains. Why not? Or do we pray chiefly for the things we are more or less likely to get, hesitant or afraid to ask for the things which are impossible unless the superhuman happens. Faith grows no stronger because the nature of our requests does not require it. We limit and disappointment God, we deny ourselves power and joy in intercession, we crawl on in small prayer, all because the superhuman is left out of our requests. "Try me and see," pleads God.

Take our ANSWERS to prayer. How many were humanly speaking impossible without prayer. Let us list every answer to prayer in which the element of the superhuman has been impressively big? Is the list long? Beside our list let us put the lists of those whom God delighted to hear—George Muller, Hudson Taylor and many others. Where is the trouble? If the element of the superhuman is not in OUR requests it cannot be in GOD'S answers. We shall experience miracles in answer to our prayers, when we honor our God with the "impossibles." "If it be difficult in the eyes of . . . this people . . . should it also be difficult in mine eyes? saith the Lord of Hosts." Zech. 8:6.—Milton T. Stauffer, in Chinese Record.

and cast down. The visitor motioped to the girl, and when she came, he most gladly gave her a dime which was quickly exchanged for a Bible. She took it to her grandfather and showed it to him and then indicated to him the man that had been so generous. The tears rained down the old man's cheeks and the looks of gratitude which came both to him and the girl were so pathetic that to this day, our friend believes it was one of the greatest investments he ever made in the service of the King. They had their own first Bible and they could read the blessed stories themselves. The young missionary is now one of our well-known field workers in Nebraska.

How to Use the Bible.

When in sorrow, read John 14.
When men fail you, Psalms 27.
When you have sinned, Psalms 51.
When you worry, Matt. 6:19-34.
Before church service, Psalms 84.
When you are in danger, Psalms 91.
When you have the "blues," Psalms 34.
When God seems far away, Psalms 139.
When you are discouraged, Isaiah 40.
When doubts come upon you, John 7:17.
When you are lonely or fearful, Psalms 23.
When you forget your blessings, Psalms 103.
For Jesus' idea of a Christian, Matt. 5.
For Jesus' idea of religion, James 1:19-27.
When your faith needs stirring, Hebrews 11.
When you feel "down and out," Romans 8:31-39.
When you want courage for your task, Joshua 1.

Never Sounded Retreat

Thirty years ago the Young Men's Christian Association entered some of the leading foreign countries at the invitation of the Christian agencies then on the mission field, to render to foreign young men and boys the same service it was giving to young men and boys of America. In all these thirty years it has gone deeper and deeper into the lives of foreign young men and boys, humbly carrying His message, and valiantly flying the Christian flag. This has not kept it from contact with Mohammedans, Taoists, Buddhists, Confucianists, Shintoists, Hindus and men of no faith, and never once has the call for "Retreat" been sounded! Those who have watched the remarkable developments and are familiar with the evangelistic work and influence of such men as Sherwood Eddy and Fletcher S. Brockman, know that in the estimation of statesmen and missionaries the Association is one of the vital promoters of Christianity in the Far East.

The Bulletin Board

Is the New World Movement a Half-Failure?

The first year of the New World Movement has closed and the program of the campaign is now before us for study and comparison. While the Northern Baptist Convention can report as pledged only $52,000,000 of the $100,000,000. It is to be remembered that its membership numbers but one-third that of either the Southern Baptists or the Northern Methodists, both of whom have gone "over the top" in their campaigns. The actual per capita pledging of the Southern Baptists, however, is $24.00 per member, and of the Northern Methodists, $30.00 per member, and of the Northern Baptists, $43.00 per member. The percentage of payments on the amount pledged for the first year is as follows: Southern Baptists 55%, Northern Methodists 72%, and Northern Baptists 92%.

The Audience's Point of View

In an examination on Rural Sociology by Dr. Craig S. Thomas, of the University of South Dakota, the question was asked: "Why is the rural church decadent, and what are the remedies?"

One student wrote on the side of remedies: "The minister should preach the gospel as well as other intellectual subjects. Better preachers will get better pay."

The Pope's Bible Converts Catholics

Mr. F. C. Glass in "The Neglected Continent" tells how a catholic bible founded a Protestant church:

"Over a year ago I received a letter from a Catholic gentleman in the interior of Pernambuco. He had seen our leaflet offering Bibles for sale, and enclosing about seven shillings, asked to be supplied with a Catholic Bible having the Pope's approval. I replied that such a book would cost £3, but that I could furnish him with the same book, minus the pictures, the Apocrypha, and the Pope's approval yet quite authentic and complete. He replied that he wished a Catholic Bible or none, whereupon I returned his money, adding a few tracts.

"A little later came another letter with £3 enclosed, and with some difficulty I obtained for him a copy of the Catholic Bible. Within three months he wrote again: 'I beg you to ask all the believers in Jesus Christ to pray for my conversion. I have many difficulties.' Hundreds of Prayer-Circle members and others made this a matter of special prayer, while I continued the correspondence with ever-increasing hopefulness. Only a few days before setting out on my long journey to the Caraja Indians, I received a letter from Luiz, telling me that the great decision was made, and signing himself, 'Your brother in Jesus Christ.'

"Since then I have made a journey to his town and found that the Pope's Bible had done wonders indeed. I found a fine Gospel Mission Hall, one of the best buildings in the town, entirely built at Senor Luiz's expense. Much of the decoration, and all the texts adorning its walls, were his own handiwork. Outside the building, easily seen by all who enter the town, he has placed a huge carved Bible, inscribed with the following words: 'Search the Scriptures'."

Negroes in Cleveland

The Committee on Comity of the Federated Churches in Cleveland, O., has been making a religious survey of the negro population of the city. It finds:

Sixty churches and missions ministering to this group—Baptist, forty-six; Methodist Episcopal, three; African Methodist Episcopal, three; African Methodist Episcopal Zion, one; Presbyterian, two; Congregational, one; Protestant Episcopal, one; Disciple, one; Christian and Missionary Alliance, one; Colored Methodist Episcopal, one. Twelve of these Baptist churches are affiliated with the Baptist City Mission Society. The thirty-four unaffiliated Baptist enterprises are known as "store front" churches. They have been so named because they were organized in vacant stores. Some of them have since acquired church buildings, but are not as yet recognized by the City Mission Society. Many of them are still worshipping in these stores.

Some colored people are affiliated with the Christian Science churches and many of them are now leaning toward New Thought and Spiritualism. There is one small society of Spiritualists. The colored people are almost wholly Protestant. A very small fraction of them attend the Catholic church.

These churches have a communicant membership of 15,000 of whom 11,000 are enrolled in the Baptist churches. There are 8,360 pupils in the church schools.

Give Her 100 Per Cent

A girl in Judson College, Rangoon, was taking her examination in English literature. Her answer to our question shows how spiritual values may be found in secular studies. She wrote:

"Of all the selections which we have to study for our I. A. this year, 'Where Love is there God is also' (by Tolstol) is the one which is enjoyed by me. First, while I was going to study the piece, I did not have any mind to read this at all and I did not know why. This very word, 'Where love is, there God is also,' made me dull to study, for I am a non-Christian. Later on, in class, while the lecturer was reading this piece, I listened and I could not stand away from my seat until the story was read through, even though the lecture was over. I would call it the sweetest Christian story that I have ever read (perhaps because I have not read so many). The moral lesson in it, too, is very good and it behooves me not to shun God in whatever position we may be. We must not be disappointed even in our deathbed, for God is always with us."

"According to Your Faith"

A little more than eleven years ago Rev. Joseph L. Lewek of Chicago felt constrained by the Holy Spirit to give up his salary and, without help promised by any man, to go out and establish a new mission.

There was no money for the support of his family or for the hire of a hall. He was compelled to step out on the naked promises of God. This he did, asking no one but our Heavenly Father for money. He began preaching on the street; and with this also began the sustaining mercy of God. The street meetings were blessed, and soon money, without solicitation, began to come in from those who were moved by the Spirit of God, so that a hall was rented and the work begun. God has blessed the work from that day to this. The first year $1300 was received. The next year a larger amount. Year by year, the receipts were increased until last year he received over $5,000, and this year, including part of the purchase money for a new home, $10,308.

Will Back the President for Peace

The Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, in a letter to President Harding pledged its support to the step which he has taken looking toward an international conference to consider the limitation of armaments. The Council declares that a great moral issue is at stake and that it will make every possible effort to arouse the mind of the people on the subject. In keeping with this assurance of support, the Council issued a special appeal to the Federations of Churches and Associations of Ministers in 175 of the leading cities of the country urging them to carry on a vigorous educational campaign on disarmament between now and the time of the conference. When the Federal Council of the Churches, the National Catholic Welfare Council and the Central Conference of American Rabbis joined in designating June 5th as Disarmament Sunday, they urged the President to take the initiative in calling a conference on disarmament.

Mission to the Jews Active

The Hebrew Christian Alliance of America held its seventh annual conferences at Buffalo, N. Y., June 13-17, 1921. It is interdenominational with a wide representation. Rev. John L. Zacker read a paper on "The Jewish Period—the Bogey of Anti-Semitism's International Conspiracy" and the assembly passed resolutions denouncing the Anti-Semitic agitation. Attendance ran beyond 100. It was decided to co-operate with Moody Bible Institute to establish a chair for the training of missionaries to the Jews.

Dr. J. W. Jent of Oklahoma Baptist University will spend the next year at Columbia University completing his work for the Ph.D. degree. The steady growth of Oklahoma Baptist University is due largely to the patient and persistent labors of Dr. Jent, who has been with the institution almost from the beginning.

Dr. S. J. Vaughan, formerly with the University of Illinois, has become president of Hardin College for girls at Bolivar, Mo., in succession to Dr. J. W. Milion who has become president of Des Moines University.

The newspapers stated that 10,000 people attended the funeral of Charlie Walker, the widely known Negro Baptist preacher who died in Augusta recently. Major J. C. C. Black, president of the Augusta Bar Association, delivered an address at the funeral of this great preacher.

Dr. J. D. Moore, in a recent article in the Baptist and Reflector asserts that "in the United States there are 514 colleges and universities, 620 academies, and 200 theological schools now controlled by denominational bodies, as compared with 350 institutions of higher grade supported by taxation, including state and city colleges, universities and normal schools. The denominational institutions have much over half of the college students.

Virginia Baptists have been most cordial in their welcome to Rev. James P. Craft as the new president of Averett College. An attractive pamphlet has just been published carrying a hearty word of introduction of Pres. Craft to the Baptists of the Old Dominion.

Gypsy Smith is to conduct a campaign in Omaha, Nebr., from Oct. 16 to Nov. 13.

Among the members of this year's graduating class of Northwestern University, Evanston, Ill., was Joseph H. Proctor, a blind student, who worked his way through Garrett Biblical Institute tuning pianos. Mr. Proctor came to Evanston from Philadelphia two years ago. For twenty-four months he labored at his books, taking class notes on a raised letter slate and transcribing them on a special typewriter. The enjoyment he secured from college life was equal, it is said, to that of students not handicapped by lack of eyesight.

At a Methodist Episcopal Church in East St. Louis on a recent hot Sunday, the pastor had a 400-pound cake of ice standing on end in front of the pulpit, into which was frozen a large bouquet of flowers. On top of the cake of ice was an electric fan blowing the breeze out toward the audience. The pastor defends the exhibit from the charge of sensationalism, saying it was "purely good advertising for the season."

With the support of more than fifty American universities and colleges and of governmental and educational authorities in Great Britain and on the Continent, the American University Union in Europe, established during the war, is making plans to continue its existence permanently as an international house of scholarship and amity.

Rev. John Roach Stratton, pastor Calvary Baptist Church, of New York City, is to be in Toronto, Ontario, from Aug. 19 to 31, and is announced to preach every evening in evangelistic meetings to be conducted in Jarvis Street Church.

Rev. Ernest N. Armstrong has received the degree Master of Arts from the University of Chicago. Mr. Armstrong, and his sister, Miss K. W. Armstrong, are returning to Rangoon, Burma, sailing from New York on Aug. 20, to take up again the missionary work in which they have had marked success.

The Southside Church in Birmingham, Ala., puts the denominational paper in the budget, sending it to every family. It takes 625. Do you know any church that beats it?

The Christian World of London announces that in October Dr. Reuben Saillens undertakes a new task as director of a Bible Training Institute in Paris. A suitable building has been rented in the suburban town of Nogent-sur-Marne. Here are to be trained young men and women desiring to prepare for service as missionaries, evangelists, Bible-readers, colporters, deaconesses, or otherwise. The institute is to have as its basis certain "fundamental" doctrines, including the "inerrancy of the Scriptures, the fall, the virgin birth, eternal punishment, and the return from heaven of our Lord." The full course of study is to cover two years. In addition to the services of Dr. Saillens as director, a number of other pastors have promised their help for 1921-22. Dr. Saillens, together with Madame and Mlle. Saillens, as well as Pasteur and Madame Antonier, are to reside in the institute and live with the students. There will be room for a few students from Great Britain or America who may wish to dedicate their lives to service in France or in the French colonies.

Dr. C. M. Thompson, pastor at Winchester, Ky., has been elected mission secretary by the Baptists of Kentucky. He was once assistant pastor to Dr. T. T. Eaton at Walnut Street Church, Louisville, later editor of the Western Recorder, and pastor at Hopkinsville. He is a native of Ohio and graduate of the seminary at Louisville.

A note from New Zealand says that Auckland Tabernacle is having great prosperity under the ministry of Rev. Joseph Kemp, formerly of Charlotte Ch., Edinburgh, and of Calvary Church, New York City. All-day prayer meetings and a series of spiritual conventions on Keswick lines have started recently, while 700 persons attend a Bible study class. The ordinary congregations are larger than at any time since Rev. Thomas Spurgeon's ministry.

The Baptist Times and Freeman reports that "a largely attended meeting was held on Tuesday evening, July 19, in the Common Room of the Pastors' College, to say farewell to the Rev. and Mrs. Craighead, American missionaries of the Russian Missionary Society, who were leaving for Roumania to labor amongst the Russian people there. Mr. and Mrs.

Craighead have been in England since November last studying the Russian language, with a view to taking up work in that great country. They have endeared themselves to all who came in contact with them, and it is felt that another link binding us to America was found in them. They are representatives of the First Baptist Church, Albion, Mich., who are undertaking their support."

There were 8,915,241 Baptists in the world in 1920, according to the hand-book recently issued by the Sunday School Board of the Southern Convention, and of this number 6,162,500 lived in the southern states. These figures include the Negroes.

Mr. Rockefeller's wealth is estimated to be $2,400,000,000. His investments are largely represented in oil stock, railroad stock, city bonds, and manufacturing interests.

Caruso's widow will receive $150,000 per year as royalty from records which he has made for the Victor Company. Already he has received $1,500,000 for his work with this company. His records, about two hundred in number, are said to be indestructible.

North Dakota churches, and especially the women of the churches will be glad to know that beginning Sept. 1, Miss Emma E. Anderson of Minneapolis will be transferred to North Dakota by the Women's American Baptists Home Mission Society. Miss Anderson will make her headquarters at Grand Forks, and will work in all the churches as her services may be needed. She will devote her attention especially to the work of our Baptist women.

One day a young preacher in Mississippi College told Dr. Gambrell a woeful story of folks talking about him. Having finished he awaited a reply. Getting none, he persisted. "Brother Gambrell, what must I do?" "My young brother," was the laconic reply, "mud rubs off a heap better when it gets dry."

The Free Churches of England have rallied to the stirring call of Dr. John Clifford to devote a year to a revival among their members of the lost sense of responsibility for "personal evangelism." The doctor, after seventy years of tireless service, is disappointed at the tendency to leave all spiritual work to ministers and at the reluctance of young people to offer themselves for service in the Sunday schools and other agencies. He has not, he humorously explained recently to a friend, "suddenly turned religious" after spending his life in other interests, but he is urging the churches to do what he has always impressed as their duty upon his own people. The idea is to avoid conventional mechanical and sensational methods, but to get back into the churches the feeling that evangelisation is a rank-and-file business, and should not be shunted entirely on to ministers. It is the earnest desire of the National Free Church Council that the churches, when they have taken stock of their resources, and are assured of the active co-operation of a large force of enthusiastic and efficient workers, as the outcome of the year of intensive internal spiritual revival, should join forces in a sustained campaign to reach all classes by methods specially adapted to the circumstances and culture of each class. Now, it is believed, is the psychological moment.

International Uniform Lesson for Sept. 11

PAUL IN ATHENS

Acts 17:16-34. Golden Text, Acts 17:28.

The Lesson Text

Driven out of Berea by the opposition of the Jews of Thessalonica, Paul is conducted to Athens by his friends. The journey from Berea to Athens was made partly by land and partly by sea. This was probably Paul's first visit to Athens. He was well acquainted with Jerusalem, the center of religion and with Antioch of Syria, the center of commerce; but with Athens, the center of culture, his acquaintance up to this point was purely academic. Here the gospel was to face its Waterloo. Intellectual pride is an insuperable barrier to the gospel. Jewish prejudice could be converted, as was signally proved in the case of Paul himself; Gentile ignorance could be enlightened; but Greek pride of intellect and sense of superiority could not be punctured. No church was established at Athens.

The Lesson Taught

What Paul saw, felt and said in Athens will enable us to get at the gist of this lesson.

What Paul Saw

First, Paul saw Athens above the surface. While he waited for Silas and Timothy to come to him from Berea he looked the city over. It was the most famous university center of the Roman empire. Here art and letters found their perennial springs. Poetry and philosophy were at home in Athens, and sculpture and architecture reached their highest development here. Paul saw all that has made Athens the classic city of all generations. He visited the Jewish synagogue, but evidently the Jews were so captivated by the atmosphere of superior Athens that nothing could be accomplished among them. Reasoning in the market-place yielded no results. Paul saw Athens on the surface as a mariner might see an iceberg at sea, glistening with symmetry and beauty and yet full of deadly peril.

Second, Paul saw Athens beneath the surface. He saw in all the mental activity expressing itself in philosophy and art the hunger of the human heart for something which philosophy and art could never supply. He saw the Greeks seeking wisdom with all the avidity and enthusiasm of a miner seeking gold or an astronomer seeking a new star, and he knew that however much wisdom they might find it would never satisfy the heart. There is no moral or spiritual dynamic in mere knowledge. Knowledge must be linked to faith in Christ, and as Peter shows in his second letter, faith must have in it the element of manliness, self-control, patience, love and all the Christian virtues (2 Pet. 1:5-9). The greatest idol of Athens was wisdom.

What Paul Felt

Paul had a large capacity for feeling. Luke tells us something of the feelings of Paul in Athens in the words, "His spirit was provoked within him as he beheld the city full of idols." Paul had the inborn abhorrence of the Jew for idolatry. He could pity the ignorant heathen of Lystra for their idolatry because they were not highly educated like the Greeks of Athens; but the idolatry of Athens provoked him deeply. His whole heart revolted at the spectacle of a city so beautiful and so learned and yet so blind and so set upon its own superiority. His provocation was all the more intense because there seemed to be no common ground upon which he could make his appeal to either Jew or Greek. He tried the synagogue only to fail; he spoke in the market-place only to be called a sparrow, chirping and picking up small particles of food on the street. And yet provoked as Paul was he kept his feelings under control, for in addressing the Athenians his words are sober and well chosen and courteous. There is no great preaching without great emotion. What Athens lacked in heart interest, Paul made up. Intellectual brilliance will never take the place of sympathy for the erring and antipathy for the things which make them err.

What Paul Said

Paul answers three questions in his address to the Athenians: What is God? What is man? How are God and man to get together? Paul answers the first question by pointing out by the Athenian method of reason that God is spirit. Spirit cannot be confined in temples made with hands. Spirit cannot be served by material things such as the offerings which the Greeks offered their deities. Spirit cannot be visualized by idols graven by art and device of man. God as spirit cannot be less than the souls he has created. Therefore idolatry is unreasonable. God is creator. He is creator of the physical universe and spiritual universe, and he is also the preserver and director of his own creation. Therefore idolatry is absurd. God reveals himself in what he has done and in what he is forever doing, and if men would only follow the instinct for God which he has implanted in every heart, they would find him. Therefore idolatry is insufficient. God is Father. Men are his offspring. Therefore to worship a stone or silver or gold, however beautifully carved, is to deny our spiritual paternity.

The second and third questions Paul answers from the basis laid in the answer of the first. Man is a moral and immortal being answerable to a just God who will one day judge the world in righteousness in the person of Jesus whom he raised from the dead to demonstrate that the soul is immortal, in spite of the Epicurean philosophy which said, "Let us eat and drink for tomorrow we die." Therefore the preacher calls upon the Athenians to repent in common with all men, for with all their superior wisdom they are sinners against God. There is no other way of coming into right relation with God but by the route of repentance. There is no appeal but repentance for men who pride themselves in their superiority. Paul failed in Athens, not because his preaching lacked in anything, but because the word was not mixed with faith and repentance in them that heard it.

Making the Bible Real

By CHAS. A. BOYD

Director of Religious Education of Wisconsin

The chief aim of the Sunday-school teacher is the development of Christian character in the lives of his pupils, and his chief tool for this important task is the Bible. In dealing with young people, this "average Sunday-school teacher" is apt to find them somewhat indifferent and all too frequently ignorant of the Bible, especially in its relationships. One of the outstanding tasks then is to make the Bible real to his class and to help young people to see the lives of its great heroes and heroines as real folks, fighting real conflicts and achieving real victories.

All too frequently the teacher uses but one of the many avenues of approach to the lives of his pupils. If he were suddenly presented with a method of teaching which would utilize "Eye-gate" and "Ear-gate" and the impressiveness of action at the same time, it would surely be worth his while to give this new avenue of approach a thoughtful consideration. If, in addition this new avenue of approach contained the very desirable property of storing up in the minds of his pupils some of the outstanding messages of the great heroes and heroines of the Bible, this "average Sunday-school teacher" should hail with delight an opportunity so comprehensive.

It may seem almost too good to be true, and yet it may be said without fear of contradiction that the avenue of approach to the lives of young people which is labeled offers all of these opportunities at once. The presenting of familiar Bible stories, such as that of "Ruth," by an organized Sunday-school class or by a young people's society will certainly accomplish several

Dog Days

ONE by one the cottagers who had pledged themselves to have benefit parties for furnishing the new little Community Center in Still Waters had done their duty, until only the Barkers were left on the list, and one stifling August day they sat on their pretty porch, sheltered by an awning, staring helplessly at one another until "Fido's" wonderful suggestion had come to turn the benefit social that evening into a Dog Pound.

"But it's so logical!" she deprecated, when they overpraised her cleverness, "for isn't it Dog-Day weather? And don't you suppose our guests are feeling a wee bit 'mad' at the thought of prinking up for anything public? Well, the only place for mad dogs is the Dog Pound! Let's borrow the scales from the village store and weigh everybody as they enter, a penny a pound, you know. Then give them a dog license stating their breed—"

In which simple fashion the idea started, to be developed with roaring success that evening; for the little summer community of cottagers were not only friends but were also eager to help on the splendid new branch of work planned by the little village church—so even August humidity could not dampen their ardor!

The dollars cheerfully overflowed the cash box as each new arrival entered a door suspiciously marked, "Dog Pound. 'Cave Canem!'" Those who entered came out another door with cardboard licenses flapping on strings around their necks, and it was presently discovered that there were an equal number of watch dogs, of pointers, of greyhounds and bloodhounds, of fox terriers and skye terriers, and of St. Bernards, all of whom were asked to form themselves into groups and plan for the Hunt.

For it was announced that for each breed of dogs there had been an equal number of objects hidden around the ground floor and porch of the cottage: for example, "watch dogs" were to hunt for paper watches, cut from advertisements (as were all these objects); "pointers" were to hunt for hidden hares (hair tonic advertisements!); "greyhounds" were to hunt for bits of gray material and bloodhounds for bits of red material; fox terriers for pictures of the Victor dog listening to his master's voice; skye terriers for pictures of sunsets and clouds; St. Bernards for pictures of wounded people.

Before starting on this hunt each group chose its own "master of hounds" and selected a "bark" all its own, for when once the whistle blew it was understood that the dogs could only discover their hidden prey, not touch it; putting back their heads they must either howl or bark or bay according to the agreed signal, to inform their particular master of hounds that it was time for him to come and collect his trophy. The first master to collect the required number of hidden objects was to be the winner. Never had there been such merriment and such shouting in Still Waters! Small wonder that the appropriateness of the name of Barker for years to come was to conjure up the hilarious memory of that evening!

It just happened that the St. Bernards unearthed their quota of "finds" first; so, as winners, they were seated in a prim row while everyone else was equipped with pencil and paper and forced to compose original verses of "Dog-gerel" about some one of the beaming St. Bernards posed before them. When these poems were read aloud there was no doubt but that the one on "The Shampoodle" was the prize, dedicated as it was to an energetic college girl in the group who had been earning money all summer by giving shampoos to anyone in their summer colony—the proceeds to go for this very same Community Center.

The St. Bernards, who had been so complacently sitting still while their praises were being put in rhyme, received a shock when they discovered they must continue to sit in the same position until each had propounded a bonndrum about dogs which others in the St. Bernard group could answer!

Amid breathless silence at first, and much sympathetic laughter later on, the audience heard and literally saw these jokes dug up in sheer desperation from memories grown keener by the sad necessity of their owners. You may be amused to note both the old- and the new-timers:

1. Do you know why a watch dog is bigger by night than by day? Because he's let out at night and taken in in the morning.
2. How can you distinguish between a fashionable man and a tired dog? One wears a complete costume, the other simply pants.
3. When is a black dog not a black dog? When he's a greyhound.
4. Why is a dog biting his own tail like an economical housekeeper? He's making both ends meet.
5. Why is a baldheaded man like a hunting dog? He make a little hare go a great way. (Needless to say this was from the shampoo girl!)
6. Plant a puppy and what would come up? Dog would.
7. Why is a dog with a lame leg like a boy ciphering? He puts down three and carries one.
8. Why is a lame dog like the side of a mountain? It is a slow pup.

9. Why is a little dog's tail like the heart of a tree? Because it's farthest from the bark.

When the poor St. Bernards were finally emancipated, several interesting recitations were given by a group of "trained dogs." There was, for instance, the "John Bull-Dog," who said that once a man asked his son whether he'd rather be a well dog or a dog with a broken tail.

"Oh, a well dog!" the boy replied.

"Wrong, my son," said the father, "for while every dog has its day, a dog with a broken tail has a weak end." An Englishman thought this such a capital joke that he told it to a friend of his with this ending: "Every dog has one or two days, but a dog with a broken tail has Fridays, Saturday and Sundays. Jolly joke, what?"

Next, "A Hot Dog," with a palm leaf fan in one hand and a handkerchief in the other, appropriately recited:

"Oh, for a little one-story thermometer,
With nothing but zeroes all ranged in a row!

Oh, for a big double-barrel hydrometer

To measure the moisture that rolls from my brow!

Oh, that this cold world were twenty times colder;

(That's irony red hot, it seemeth to me;)

Oh, for a turn of its dreaded cold shoulder!

Oh, what a comfort an ague would be!

Oh, for a grotto frost-lined and rill-riven,
Scooped in the rock under cataract vast!

Oh, for a winter of discontent even!

Oh, for wet blankets judiciously cast!

Oh, for a soda fount, spouting up boldly
From every hot lamppost against the hot sky!

Oh, for a maiden to look on me coldly,
Freezing my soul with a glance from her eye!"

After this "A Lone Dog" recited with telling talent, forlornly:

"I'm a lean dog, a keen dog, a wild dog, and lone;

I'm a rough dog, a tough dog, hunting on my own;

I'm a bad dog, a mad dog, teasing silly sheep;

I love to sit and bay the moon, to keep fat souls from sleep.

I'll never be a lap dog, licking dirty feet;
A sleek dog, a meek dog, cringing for my meat;

Not for me the fireside, the well-filled plate,

But shut door, and sharp stone, and cuff, and kick, and hate.

But the closing recitation sounded a deeper note, for "Helping Lame Dogs Over Stiles" put into words the spirit which was to rule the daily life of the new Christian Center in Still Waters:

"If there be some weaker one, give me strength to help him on;

If a blinder soul there be, let me guide him nearer Thee.

Make my mortal dreams come true with the work I fain would do;

Let me find in Thy employ peace that dearer is than joy;
Out of self to love be led, and to heaven acclimated,—

Until all things sweet and good seem my natural habitude.

And this is how, at the close of a perfect dog day, those cottagers cheerfully bought the cooling ices and the refreshing beverages—which meant more furniture and equipment for the new building.

My Carpenter Ants

By PEGGY

EVER since Timothy adopted his little "green old gentleman" (grasshopper) as a pet, Bill and I have been looking around for pets of our own. The funny thing about it is that I've always wanted an ant, but in our family all our aunts are uncles! So perhaps it was only natural for me to chose "Ants" for my pets, since they sound alike. Mother gave me a little book about them, and unless you've read about them yourself or watched them out in your back yard you can have no least idea how fascinating they are. No wonder wise old King Solomon wrote:

"Go to the ant, thou sluggard;

Consider her ways, and be wise:

Which having no chief,

Overseer, or ruler,

Provideth her bread in the summer.

And gathereth her food in the harvest."

The lovely part of it is that after mother showed me that verse in the Bible (in the book of Proverbs) I saw some ants do this very thing, and it was wonderful to watch. Perhaps you know how many kinds of ants there are: the red kind that burrow into the soil and build up ant hills, and the white ants who eat the homes of missionaries in the Orient, and big black carpenter ants who prefer to build their homes in the stump of a fallen or partly decayed tree. That is where my ants were found, and the little house they had made for themselves was really marvelous.

These carpenter ants have powerful jaws and they can bore into wood that is fairly brittle, chiseling it and carving it into fantastic shapes. Right in our own back yard was a decayed limb of a tree, with a little pile of sawdust scattered on top of it and several holes leading inside. Very, very gently mother pried out a piece of wood from the top of the stump and it was surprisingly beautiful inside. We could see down almost a foot where the ants had dug a tunnel divided into dozens of rooms and passage-ways. It was like some fairy tale come true to see those tiny cavities of wood, no thicker than coarse paper, yet the clever ants never broke through those partitions in sawing them with their jaws—except, of course, where they wanted to have crossroads. In some of these rooms were the baby ants, barely able to move around, and in the others were eggs.

There were some curious things enclosed in bags that looked like grains of puffed wheat—these were young ants in "pupa cases,"—in a few days they were ready to be regular ants and turned themselves into carpenters, too.

We discovered the mother ants, who are several times larger than the other workers; I thought it was very remarkable to see that "she" was treated exactly like a queen, for the other workers actually waited on her, bringing her food to eat and taking every care of her!

Mother hit the stump gently to show me what would happen; and certainly the ant world knows what "Safety First!" means; for instantly every corridor and crossroads was filled with ants, they had grabbed the young ants and the eggs and were rushing them out of danger! I was really sorry we had had to disturb them so much, but I shall never forget how tenderly they cared for "women and children first!" My ants became very near and dear to me then!

Another thing I loved about them was the way they tackled things too big for them. For instance, I saw one ant go up to a snail in its shell. Then several other ants strolled up. I supposed they decided "snail" would be wonderfully refreshing for supper for Ant Number One began moving it off toward the tunnel just as easily as if the snail-plus-the-shell had been very little, instead of four times larger. I couldn't imagine how they would ever get it into the narrow entrance of their home, but the ants are too clever for words! Some of them ran below the snail, others above, then they rolled it over, turned it round and round until at last it fitted the opening and was trundled down the dark hallway to their home. And I suppose all the little child ants clapped their hind legs and said: "Oh goody, snail for tea! Um-m-m!" Or perhaps, like Solomon's ant, they stored it up for winter use exactly as my mother cans vegetables and fruit for us.

It makes God seem doubly wonderful to me, to know He made such little, little insects so perfectly. An ant is not just an ant to me any more: it's a father, busily working outdoors to provide food and lodging for the children at home. Do start studying them yourself in your own back yard.

A Sky Pilot

"Now in case anything should go wrong with this experiment," said the professor of chemistry, "we, and the laboratory with us, will be blown sky-high. Now come a little closer, boys, in order that you may follow me."

Promptness

Of late you have been early, you used to be behind before, I'm glad to see you first at last.

H. C. L.

"When water becomes ice," asked the teacher, "what change takes place?"

"The price," volunteered a small boy.

The Origin of Slavery

The dull boy in the class unexpectedly distinguished himself in a recent history examination. The question ran, "How and when was slavery introduced into America?" To this he replied:

"No women had come over to the early Virginia colony. The planters wanted wives to help with the work. In 1619 the London Company sent over a ship-load of girls. The planters gladly married them and slavery was introduced into America."

Muleological

On mules we find two legs behind
And two we find before;

We stand behind before we find What the two behind be for!

—Lafayette Lyre.

HOW MANY OF THESE ANTS IN YOUR FAMILY?

(Answers to these questions are words ending in "ant"; the correct list will be given next week.)

1. An aunt who stays home from school? (Truant)
2. An aunt who bends easily?
3. An aunt who is always in a good humor?
4. An aunt elaborately dressed in lovely clothes?
5. An aunt who is as cross as possible?
6. An aunt who says the water is not fit to drink?
7. An aunt who never eats at home?
8. An aunt who grows on a bush?
9. An aunt who has a disease very badly?

REMEMBER

Remember, though box in the plural makes boxes.

The plural of ox should be oxen, not oxes; And remember, though fleece in the plural is fleeces.

The plural of goose isn't geese nor geeses;

And remember, though house in the plural is houses.

The plural of mouse should be mice, not mouses.

Mouse, it is true, in the plural is mice; But the plural of house should be houses, not hlice.

And foot, is it true, in the plural is feet; But the plural of root should be roots, and not reet!

HOW TO MAKE THE MOST OF OUR BIBLES

Ps. 19:7-14.

"Let the words of my mouth and the meditations of my heart be acceptable in thy sight, O Jehovah, my rock and my Redeemer."

To many Baptist people the Bible is a closed book. In many homes the good old family Bible is used as a sort of safety deposit vault for pressed flowers from a funeral wreath or a lock of hair from some departed relative. Many times this writer has been asked to conduct family worship. The service has often been delayed until the duster could be applied. To make the most of the Bible:

1. One must know the Book. A great deal of information about the Bible is a good thing. To know the Book itself is a great deal better. A writer of a commentary once remarked to a devout teacher of the Bible that his writings would throw considerable light on the Bible. The devout professor replied that he rather suspected that the Bible would throw considerable light on the commentary. A wide acquaintance with the writings of the Bible is a striking evidence of real culture.

By the above, we do not necessarily mean the ability of some people to take certain passages out of their context, and thus prove all sorts of theories, fads, etc. The quicker we are rid of such teachings emanating from certain kinds of Bible training schools, the better off we will be for real Bible study.

2. One must use the Book. It is not a thing to be looked at or to merely adorn the parlor table. Certainly it is not something to be adored almost to the point of worship. It is a thing to be used. If properly used, it must necessarily become a part of the very life of the user. One great need of Baptist people today is the need of real Bible study—Bible study in the homes, in the churches. How in the world can we ever know what the Lord wishes us to do unless we turn the pages of the Book for instruction?

3. Christianity's Textbook. The Bible is a book on religion, not on science. For the Christian it is the text book. Fortunately we do not change it with each new incoming school administration. Since the days of the early beginnings of Christianity, people have turned to the pages of the Book and have found comfort, guidance and real strength for their tasks in life. Just now there is considerable fear that somehow the "radical" in religion will take away from us this Book. The fear is unfounded. The Bible is today the most popular book, and most widely read.

4. One must express the Book. Simply to read it and meditate upon it, is not sufficient. We must live it. We must be a walking manifestation of the truths as presented. Business and social relationships must be governed according to the principles laid down in it. Our daily walk in the home, the office, the store, and out in the crowd must be an evidence that "Thy Word have I hid in my heart."

Notes From All Over

TEXAS: Young people's encampment at Palacios was a great success. Approximately 5,000 people attended from every section of the state. State secretary T. C. Gardner proposed the following one year's program, which was unanimously adopted: 1. Add 500 unions to the present number. 2. Issue 15,000 diplomas and seals. 3. Secure 5,000 subscriptions to the Baptist Standard, the state paper. 4. Secure 1,000 subscriptions to Home and Foreign Fields, the missionary publication of the Southern Baptist Convention. 5. Enlist 200,000 in Daily Bible Reading. 6. Call out 500 for special Christian service. 7. Win one for Christ for every B. Y. P. U. member in Texas. 8. Encourage the employment of a B. Y. P. U. secretary in every association. Some program!

BUCKEYE STATE young people have just closed one of their greatest assemblies at Granville. The attendance was approximately 800. Reports showed that the Ohio B. Y. P. U. Gospel team had traveled some 12,220 miles during the past year. This team did a large and constructive work in enlisting tithers, Bible Readers and Life Work recruits. Mr. Eugene Exman, Blanchester, was elected president; Rev. J. P. Hendershot, Granville, vice-president; Miss Emilie Reimer, Cincinnati, Secretary; Alfred Johnson, Dayton, treasurer; Rev. C. J. Bowen, Granville, Transportation Leader; Mr. Ralph Baldwin, Cleveland, State Booster.

PALMETTO WAY: The B. Y. P. U. of S. C. have adopted the following goals for 1921: (1) One Thousand Unions by June, 1922; (2) 25 new associational conventions; (3) 3,000 tithers; (4) 75 A-1 (Standard) unions; (5) 15 One Hundred Per Cent Unions in Biblical Giving. Study courses and daily Bible reading; (6) 500 study courses; (7) 100 groups on Bible Readers' Honor Roll; (8) Every one win one for Christ.

EVERYBODY AT IT: Never in the history of Baptist young people's work has there been such unanimity of purpose and such co-operation in great common objectives. Whether in Ohio or Texas, or South Carolina, we are all moving toward the same goals.

UP IN THE PINE TREE STATE Rev. Alex. Henderson, under date of August 13th, writes: "We are expecting to do some special work among the young people in our state this fall and any suggestions you can give will be gladly received. Many of our societies are C. E. but we are hoping to line them up with the Baptist young people's program."

FOR ALL BAPTIST YOUNG PEOPLE: It is the earnest desire of the Baptist Young People's Union of America to serve all Baptist young people of whatever name. All our young people must be enlisted in our great Baptist program for leadership in the local church, the denomination and the evangelization of the world.

BURTON ASSEMBLY meeting on Vashon Island, Washington, was very largely attended. There were over 300 registrations the first day. The Sunday attendance reached approximately one thousand. Dr. T. B. Frizelle of the American Baptist Publication Society gave the lectures on Sunday School and B. Y. P. U. work.

EVERY ONE WIN ONE, is the slogan of Baptist young people from now until July 1, 1922. Send to Headquarters 125 N. Wabash Ave., Chicago, Ill., or 408 Humboldt Bank Bldg., San Francisco, Calif., for a copy of free leaflet on "Soul Winning," by Dr. F. E. Taylor.

HALF-MILLION WEEK will be observed by Southern Baptist young people November 27 to December 4, in an effort to secure 500,000 titling signatures.

"PLAYING SQUARE WITH TOMORROW" and "World Friendships" are the titles of mission study books for young people for 1921-1922. Circulars on books and young people's missionary materials mailed on request.

OCTOBER 2-9, 1921, will be known as "mission study week." Every effort will be put forth to enlist a large number of individuals and societies for a wide study of missions during the fall and winter months.

"OUR B. Y. P. U." is the title of the B. Y. P. U. Manual to be used this fall and winter. The same may be secured from the American Baptist Publication Society for 75 cents, postpaid.

MANUFACTURING FACTS is out of our line, except where we have the materials out of which to complete the process. Send to the editor of this page a one hundred word article about the doings of your society. This is your opportunity to get your name in the paper.

MONTH-END TOPICS for Baptist young people are given over to a discussion of the finest missionary material published, and it relates to the activities of our own beloved missionaries. Societies using other material than Young People's Service should order a copy of this magazine. Certainly our young people's societies of whatever name should be informed as to our great Baptist missionary program. How can they intelligently give, if they know nothing of the needs of the workers?

Our Own Folks

South Dakota News

By S. P. SHAW.

Our State Convention meeting is to be held in Pierre, October 5-9. A splendid program is being prepared. We shall have a long list of able speakers, and live questions will be discussed. Our church there is making elaborate plans for our entertainment.

On July 24, the writer had the privilege of dedicating the new Baptist church building at Chalk Butte. The building is a neat little chapel, costing approximately $2,500, and all the money had been pledged before the dedication. Chalk Butte is a station consisting simply of the post office and store on the trail half way between Sturgis and Faith, and about sixty miles from the railroad. This being the second church building on this trail of 125 miles. Rev. John W. Wynn led in the enterprise and much credit is due him for the splendid work. Elaborate preparations had been made for the occasion of the dedication. A barbecue was arranged. A three year old ox and three sheep were roasted. There were approximately eight hundred people present on this occasion. One hundred automobiles, thirty-six wagons and buggies, and thirty saddle horses. People came for more than a hundred miles around to attend these services. The writer preached the dedicatory sermon. Rev. John Wynn offered the dedicatory prayer. Rev. Lindblom and Rev. L. L. Mann both preached in the evening. If anyone has the idea that there is no need for home mission work, it would do him good to visit these great prairies districts and see the wonderful opportunities offered for the best sort of home mission work. It ought to be added that much credit is due to the community for its splendid spirit in this enterprise.

On July 17, the writer also had the privilege of dedicating a little temporary chapel on the east side of the river in Sioux Falls. Following this dedication a series of special meetings conducted by Rev. Clay Morris, were held, Miss Mary-Irene Shaw having charge of the music. On Sunday, August 7, a new church was organized, to be known as Emmanuel Baptist Church. Thirty-eight members were dismissed from the First Baptist Church at Sioux Falls, and five members from other churches came by letter, to become charter members of this new organization. Twelve candidates were baptized and four others received for baptism. Thus, they organized with fifty-nine members, and there are others who will doubtless come in soon. Rev. Leslie W. Rogers, who graduated last spring from Baylor University, is the pastor of this church. He also cares for the Beulah Baptist Church in West Sioux Falls. The outlook is bright.

The Rosebud Association recently held its annual meeting at the First Church of Lucas. The members of the church under the leadership of the new pastor, Rev. G. Carroll Berryman, proved themselves royal entertainers, and the associational program was perhaps the best ever given in that association.

The Black Hills Association meets with the Folsom Church Aug. 19-21. A good program has been arranged. The people are looking forward to a great meeting. This association will doubtless receive four new churches this year.

The Swedish Baptist Church at Orleans, and the Danish Baptist Church at Millard, recently expressed a desire to unite and establish a new church at Norbeck. Rev. Clay Morris led in this enterprise and conducted a series of special meetings in the new town, which resulted in baptizing of eight candidates and the organizing of a new church with approximately sixty members.

It is with deep regret that we announce the fact that two pastors in Sioux Falls have recently resigned. After three and a half years of splendid work in this city, Rev. G. Elton Harris has resigned the pastorate of the First Church, to become pastor of the Calvary Church at Kansas City. He will close his work here with the month of September. Rev. H. F. Widen, pastor of the Central Church of this city, has also resigned to accept a call to a church in Massachusetts, and expects to continue his studies in Harvard. He has also done a splendid work here. We very deeply regret the fact that we are to lose these two bright aggressive, consecrated young men, but our best wishes and prayers go with them to the new fields.

There is much encouragement for our work in the fact that we have recently received a long list of recruits in the pastorates of the state. They are as follows: Rev. Leslie W. Rogers from Waco, Texas, to Emmanuel and Beulah Churches in Sioux Falls; Rev. Ralph Nordlund is summer supply at Wagner; Dr. E. F. Jordan, of North Dakota, has become pastor at Parker; Rev. Emil T. Carlson is summer supply at Ramsey; and Rev. Milton Ward is summer supply for the Canova Mission. Rev. E. Hamlin of Illinois, has become pastor at Alcester; and Rev. L. B. Carlton also of Illinois, has become pastor of the Big Springs church. The Danish Baptist church at Dell Rapids has a student pastor in the person of Rev. Mr. Jensen. Rev. S. G. Cole from the Divinity School of the University of Chicago, begins his pastorate with the Vermillion Church September 1. Rev. Boyd P. Milburn, Waco, Texas, is the new pastor at Deadwood. Rev. O. W. Goodin of Louisville, Ky., is the new pastor at Bryant. Rev. C. D. Williams of Texas, is the pastor of our new church at Mobridge. Rev. G. Carroll Berryman of Wessington Springs, becomes pastor at Lucas. Rev. Parker Smith, after nine years of splendid work with the church at Parker, is now pastor at Burke. Our new colporteur, Rev. O. Nestrud, has just established his home at Timber Lake. Rev. John Lindblom has become pastor at large in the White Owl district, and is just moving to the field. Rev. I. Fredmund of Racine, Wis., has just accepted a call to the pastorate at Viborg.

Johnson, who met his death by accident in Aberdeen on June 23. Owen was a fine, popular and Christian young man.

Dr. Craig S. Thoms of the University at Vermillion, was recently offered the chair of Sociology in Crozer Theological Seminary, but has declined the offer. His many South Dakota friends are rejoicing that he is to remain in the state.

Rev. L. A. Miller of Canton, recently assisted Pastor Richardson in a series of meetings at Goodwin which resulted in seventeen splendid additions to the church.

A series of meetings was recently conducted by Rev. Walter Ingram in the Church at Trent. Mrs. G. W. Mingus had charge of the music. As a result of the meeting sixteen new members were received by baptism and one by letter. Pastor Schroder is encouraged in the work.

Pastor H. G. Bens of Herreid, recently baptized twenty-three persons into his church, all young men and women in the prime of life. The pastor reports that the new church building will be ready to dedicate this fall.

Iowa Baptist Letter

By JAY A. LAPHAM

The Pastors' Conference had its first session on Tuesday night, July 19, 1921. President E. O. Rogers, pastor of the First Baptist church of Ottumwa, introduced Mr. William S. Dixon of Wheaton, Illinois, who led in gospel song. Ray E. York who is leading our Baptist church at Iowa City in a remarkable chapter of progress, led the devotional services for the conference. The assembly grounds have never been blessed with more quickening, thoughtful and inspiring messages than Mr. York brought for this important type of service. All who heard him were stirred to a closer walk with God and with a desire to win someone to Jesus Christ.

Pastor O. E. Rogers directed an interesting discussion on religious education. Other speakers were Dr. Howland Hanson and Dr. George W. Cassidy, who remained to help in the assembly. The Northern Baptist Convention was too near for the large attendance of pastors this year at the conference. Mr. Dixon was heartily received as a fine leader in gospel song.

Among the Tents

The bugle call for the assembly echoed through the woods, and, presto! the people began to come, very largely young people, —862 were enrolled and more than 1,000 people were reached in the various services of the gathering. The large majority enjoyed camping on the beautiful grounds. A fine new home with shower bath privileges made the campers happy. The dining hall was managed so well by present Dr. A. W. Caul that all were pleased. The new stand connected with Art and Book Hall, with ice cream and all sorts of goodies, was a Mecca for intermission time and in the evening. The spacious parlors under the trees gave plenty of room to sit or stand.

Dr. Howland Hanson gave us a taste of the Bible teaching that he proposes to give to the students in Des Moines University. Pastors and parents and many others listened in rapt attention. Clear, suggestive outlines appeared on the blackboard to guide the student. The subject matter of the lectures was so virile and illuminating; the fidelity to the "old Book" was so reverent and manifest; the analysis of books and periods was so sane and clear, and the explanations given were so sensible and satisfying as to challenge careful thought and command hearty approval. It was clear that Dr. Hanson is well abreast of what has been said and written in all departments of Bible study, but his loyalty to the Bible as God's supreme message to men, touching life and salvation and immortality, no one could doubt. Fathers and mothers in Iowa and elsewhere will be glad to have their sons and daughters come under such teaching and influence.

Notable Speakers Sound High Notes

Features of the program centered about Bible study, organizing, managing, and teaching in Sunday school; ideals and aims, plans and methods, in B. Y. P. U. life, missionary study and inspirational addresses. Iowa Baptist Convention was well represented, and women's work and the W. W. G. found opportunity for study and expression.

Dr. George W. Cassidy, Iowa's promotion director, got a splendid grip on the large audiences that he addressed, and in the choice Bible teaching that he gave when Dr. Hanson was called away. He is awakening confidence and winning friends for the convention wherever he goes. Dr. H. R. Best of the Forest Avenue Church, Des Moines, and Dr. E. A. Shanks, pastor-at-large helped in excellent Bible studies also. Many good words of appreciation were heard for Dr. Wm. J. Sly, Rev. M. N. Mc Gorrill and Miss Ella B. Weaver, all from the Publication Society. Dr. Sly deepened the interest in our foreign speaking people. Mrs. Adah Boyce of Chicago had practical plans of much worth for the women's hour. Pastor C. C. Browne of Dunkerton won the boys and the young men in his Bible class held especially for them out under the trees.

It is not easy to tell how Dr. M. D. Eubank impressed our people at the assembly. He is a missionary statesman with a marvelous grasp of the world situation. His constant text was "Thy Kingdom Come!" He has a surpassing fund of information about China and all of Asia in its relation to missionary endeavor. He can hold an audience of 500 or a 1,000, and time cuts no figure as he vividly tells what he has seen and heard and experienced in China. He is a born actor withal.

And then came Dr. Sumner R. Vinton with those enrapturing views on the screen. He gave our young people a new world in the views and the songs and the inspiring lectures. To this he added invaluable influence in the fellowship on the campus among the young men and women. The fun he enjoyed and the stories he told with the final goal always leading up to the deep significance of the life of the missionary, captured the young people.

The Vacation Bible School

This was a highly practical part of the assembly life. Pastor C. A. Carman of Shenandoah and Miss Hazel Boyd had a large hearing for the program in the big tent for ten days. Pastor Frederlek Donovan helped in a fine discussion that involved not a little of his own experience and achievement with the children. Mr. Carman knows how to make a school live before an audience in every detail. Miss Boyd is a captivating story teller and she likes to teach the art.

Des Moines University

never had a warmer reception at the assembly. The new president, Dr. J. W. Million, was heartily enjoyed in the fellowship of the campus and in the strong, practical addresses that he gave. His address on Sunday morning before a large audience on "Defective Education" merits the thoughtful attention of every home in Iowa. Fathers and mothers all over the state will be glad to welcome Dr. Million to their homes. He is winning the respect and the confidence of business men rapidly by his wholesome common sense and his manifest knowledge of college affairs. Chancellor L. D. Osborn also had a hearty reception as he told about the internal management and working of the university. Not a graduate school, but a school of colleges is the place that Des Moines University is filling at the present time.

The large number of students from the university served happily for spice. They helped to make the dining hall ring with college yells and songs. In this pastime various B. Y. P. U. groups vied with each other in calling for a hearing. Mr. C. R. Bergren did fine work as a leader from the university. He and pastor J. C. Clark of Oelwein, who was our leader in recreation last year, helped out finely when pastor C. C. Browne was unexpectedly called home because of the sickness of his little son.

The Women's Work

Mrs. J. A. Lapham, state president of the Woman's Baptist Mission Society of Iowa, has had general charge of that work for years at the Assembly. At first a handful of women met out on the grass to talk over their plans. This year at one of their special meetings ninety-one women and girls were present. A delightful W. W. G. banquet and a significant pageant in which a large number of young women took part gave excellent variety to the assembly program.

"Stunt Night"

is the time when fun is let loose and wholesome merriment abounds on the grounds. We all pay twenty-five cents admission—no complimentary tickets. $126.50 was taken in. For twelve years past no registration fee has been charged at the assembly. The offerings from the Sunday schools, a light admission fee for two exceptionally fine entertainments, and a few free will offerings have enabled us to meet all of the expenses of a strong program. We covet the attendance from the churches of the largest possible number of young people and of others, with the least expense to them. Mr. C. A. Carman, Miss Marcia Newton, and Miss Helen Lundy gathered the numbers for the program from the associations represented and from other groups. Mr. Carman called off the numbers—one at the bat and two on deck.

Just Before "Good Night"!

The afternoon recreations, guided by pastor C. C. Browne, were a fine feature of the day, but following the evening address there came an hour of renewed sport of all sorts. The games, the marching, the happy songs and the stories from missionary S. R. Vinton led up to the singing of the gospel melodies and a good night prayer. Dr. E. A. Shanks and pastor W. L. Anderson gave good help. Vespers on the hillside near the river gave a precious hour. Pastor W. J. Coulston of New Hampton and President J. W. Million, led in two of these services.

Some Others

Early in the session President A. W. Caul delivered a ringing address on "The Heroic Christ." This set the pace for the assembly for stimulating thought and earnest presentation. Pastor B. M. Osgood of Mason City gave an illustrated lecture on the old Bible Tabernacle and its furnishings. He showed how wonderfully the eye helps in a knowledge of the Bible. Miss Mary Stickle has had charge of the juniors for several years. Hilkes with her are the acme of joy for the boys and girls. Miss Mate Goodell of Iowa Baptist headquarters has been for some years the assembly's all around helper among the young people. The interest and attention of pastor L. E. Viets of Webster City the treasurer for the assembly, and of pastor C. W. Fletcher of Bedford, have meant a great deal to the comfort and convenience of all who attend.

The Gospel in Song

is one of the fine features of the program. Prof. Ira Deal has helped us as leader for years. His rich experience in directing chorus choirs in evangelistic meetings in Iowa and other states equip him splendidly for this service. The people like to hear him sing and they greatly enjoy the enthusiastic way in which he gets music out of the large choir and from the audience. Withal, the intense earnestness of our brother to make the song service genuine worship of God gives strength and dignity in the midst of much merriment and lighter vein. The musical recital, to which one evening was given, was one of the best entertainments of the sessions. Miss Frances Christian of Clinton made the piano talk with such melodious expression and art as to delight every one. Her playing left nothing to be desired in sacred music. Only a few can sing solos with the expression and power for a great audience that was enjoyed when Miss Lorena Cassidy of Des Moines sang for us at the assembly. Miss Evelyn Anderson of Council Bluffs delighted us all with readings just suited to rest and entertain. She has rare gifts in expression.

The Pow Wow

So many young people had come that it was not easy to provide for all at a sitting in the dining hall, so a pow wow near the wonderful spring was planned. After the marshmallows were roasted and the games and the songs had had full play, the grand old hymns began to echo and re-echo through the lofty trees. A prayer service followed which was a blessed preparation for the

Closing Day of the Assembly

Dr. Raymond R. West of the Promotion Board in New York City had come on to deliver seven addresses. From the first word to the last Dr. West captured the assembly. Invigorating thought, choice diction, and intense earnestness characterized his messages. The young people liked him at once. He appealed to the best there was in them and stirred them to decision. His study of life, what it is, what it may signify, how to use it, challenged young men and women.

Following the preparation noted above, this led to a great day on Sunday, the crowning day in the history of the assembly. Twenty-six young men and women decided to join the Life Service League and came down to the rostrum to sit with the large number who were already members of the league. A meeting followed in the B. Y. P. U. tent just for those who were interested that will long be remembered. Numbers talked informally. Miss Mary Stickel, the president of the league, told of the great joy that had come to her in welcoming the new. A great throng gathered for the evening hour. Dr. West again pressed home the significance of life and four expressed a desire to accept Christ. It was indeed a history-making session of the assembly.

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

REEDLEY—The "Buckle of the Raisin Belt," real estate men call it, is situated in the most thickly populated section of the San Joaquin valley. The very large rural population around Reedley made this point seem a good place for the director of town and country work to do some demonstration work. As the church was pastorless director Bancroft moved his family into the parsonage and has been putting on an intensive campaign for several months. Already thirty-five new members have been added and a number more await baptism. The Sunday school has doubled in attendance and overflowed into adjoining buildings. A good attendance is being maintained even in mid-summer. The settlement of a pastor with a vision and the quality of persistence, then the erection of a modern building, well equipped for worship, religious education and social service, all with the purpose of soul winning, will soon bring this once weak church up among the strong churches of the state.

Rocky Mountain States

IDAHO

REV. W. H. TOLLIVER of Portland, Ore., begins his pastorate at Twin Falls on Sept. 10. During the month of June District Missionary A. L. Black conducted a vacation school with 200 in regular attendance, one of the first put on in our convention.

PASTOR A. V. WILEY of Idaho Falls, assisted by District Missionary J. W. Croft, is in the midst of a tent meeting.

UNDER THE ENTHUSIASTIC LEADERSHIP of its young pastor, Rev. J. R. L. Haslam, the Notus Church has organized a gospel team, composed of laymen who go out and bring in the people to the church services as well as conduct services themselves. Conversions are frequent in the cottage prayer meetings.

The Assembly

The Idaho Baptist Assembly held its second annual session July 5-15, at the assembly grounds near Easley Hot Springs in the Sawtooth Mountains, fifteen miles north of Ketchum. Regular registrations exceeded 200, with a total attendance of near 350. The speakers, besides local talent, were Dr. J. T. Latta of Burma; Rev. Wm. B. Lippard, of the Foreign Mission Society; Rev. W. P. Behan, Rev.

Thomas B. Frizelle, Rev. A. R. Chapman and Rev. W. H. Bowler. The program was well balanced with instruction, devotion, inspiration and wholesome fun. The morning hours were given to class work, the afternoons to recreation, the evenings to inspirational addresses and campfire stunts. The outstanding feature of the assembly was the presence of the large number of young volunteers for special service. The unusual success of this gathering was due largely to the hearty co-operation of our leaders, young and old, with the new director of religious education, Rev. W. A. Shanks.

WHITE TEMPLE, MITCHELL, has several important events that will materialize in the near future. The pastor, Rev. Walter Ingram, is just closing his fourth year in the pastorate with this church and the anniversary is to be marked by a spiritual life conference to be held early in October. Speakers at this conference will be men of note in the denomination. October will also see the opening of the second annual community school of religion, of which Mr. Ingram is founder and president. This school is established on the Evanston Plan and offers a splendid curriculum for Christian workers. A general efficiency campaign will be put on by the church and one of the best years in the church's history is anticipated. The pastor has just returned from a five week's vacation trip, touring in Wisconsin. During his absence the Alethian Bible Class added six sections of Macey bookcases to the church study. —M. E. WEED, Church Clerk.

IOWA

BRO. TH. HANSEN, pastor of the Elk Horn Danish Baptist Church, was ordained to the gospel ministry on June 30 by a council composed of the pastors and delegated laymen from the following churches: Harlan American, Harlan Danish, Atlantic, Cuppy's Grove, Merrill's Grove, and the First Danish of Des Moines. Prof. N. S. Lawdahl served as moderator and Rev. L. E. Petersen, or Merrill's Grove, as clerk of the council.

MICHIGAN

MANY OF THE PASTORS ARE ABSENT from their pulpits during this month. Automobile trips seem to be a favorite vacation recreation. Pastor W. S. Ross of Big Rapids planned a trip of about 3500 miles up "somewhere in Canada." C. W. Kemper of the First Church, Lansing, was stranded one night on his journey toward the Twin Cities with a broken axle—all in a day's work, or pleasure, for Kemper is always ready for an emergency. Director Berry, of headquarters, started his auto to the Southland, expecting to spend some time in Missouri. General Director Hudson spent a couple of weeks with his family up on White Lake, but unfortunately for him, his address was not withheld.

THE MICHIGAN SUMMER ASSEMBLY has passed into history as a period of spiritual, intellectual and physical refreshment. The seventy-five pastors in attendance voiced their heartiest approval of the series of lectures along their lines; while the sixty-four certificates given to young people who completed the required work for the assembly period is evidence of the character of the work presented. All lines of the churches' activity were presented by leaders of nation-wide reputation, and already plans are inaugurated to boost the assembly for 1922.

THE "HOUSING PROBLEM" for many of our pastors is becoming a very serious one. Manistee, by the will of the late E. G. Filer, is enabled to keep up the payments on its new parsonage. First Church, Alpena, added a much needed garage to its parsonage property. Bellevue Church has been given a lot for a new parsonage, but cannot raise funds for the house just yet; however, it knows that "by faith" applies as well to it as to the walls of Jericho. The new pastor, Rev. A. K. Scott, with his wife hunted for days in Nashville but could not find a suitable house; and they are casting eyes on a place two blocks from the church which is for sale—the question is to find the "$500 down." Here is a great field for service, and Pastor Scott is planning for big things during the coming year.

OTHER BITS which have been gleaned from correspondence show that our pastors and people are alive to the great calls for service. The Sunday school at Bellevue, L. D. Pettit pastor, increased 50 per cent during the summer months. Pastor J. R. Stevens is thankful for the daylight saving, which enables him to hold morning services at both Hart and Pentwater, one town using standard and the other daylight saving time. A new piano has been purchased for the Pentwater church. The church at Goodar in the Curtisville circuit started with a charter membership of thirty-five. H. E. McGrath pastor. Rev. John Frank Smith supplied for a brief time at Sand Creek, and among other things in his pastoral duties and pleasures he rejoiced that he won a family to the church by being able to milk a dozen cows when the man of the house was ill. Rev. W. J. Spiers is working out a broad program for the fall work at Kilmaster and Mikado. Rev. C. J. White and his wife have realized fine results from special meetings held at different points about Millersburg with Evangelist Fields. The attendance at the services during the summer months have been very gratifying to Pastor R. S. Sprout at Dansville. Just now special stress is being given toward making needed repairs. In order that there might be no break in the work at Litchfield, Pastor Charles A. Slack stuck to his post during the entire summer.

THE HOME DEPARTMENT of the church at Otsego, T. H. Carey, pastor, is of unusual interest. It has an enrollment of about seventy, conducts a weekly prayer meeting and has a Ladies' Aid Society. The regular Sunday school has an enrollment of over 200, and the church holds a commanding place in the life of the community.

MISS TIRZAH ROBERTS, daughter of our veteran worker Joshua Roberts, was recently married to Dr. R. W. McCandless of Detroit, under appointment as a missionary in China. Dr. McCandless is taking special work in Harper Hospital at present.

THE FIRST CHURCH OF ALBION have as its foreign missionaries, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Craighead who are en route for Roumania to work among the Russians in the province of Bessarabia. Mrs. Craighead's parents, Mr. and Mrs. William Thompson, are members of Albion Church.

THE ANNUAL MEETING of the Alton Association will be held at Upper Alton, Sept. 28-30, instead of at Wood River as previously announced.—M. W. TWING, Clerk.

OHIO

THE ZANESVILLE ASSOCIATION will be held with the Ark Springs Church, Aug. 31 and Sept. 1. A splendid program should ensure a good attendance.

INDIANA

REV. O. B. SARBER of Gary, First, has been recuperating during the vacation season by holding revival meetings.

ROUMANIAN, FIRST, GARY, will soon occupy a good new brick house. This is the famous church which on an allotment of $600 for the New World Movement raised $2000. Rev. Ilie Trutsa is pastor.

Laura Ogle Goodell, wife of Dr. Charles E. Goodell, president of Franklin College, died in New York August 9. Her death followed a serious operation which became necessary after several months of ill health. Mrs. Goodell was a daughter of the Rev. A. A. Ogle of Indianapolis who has long been identified with Baptist work in Indiana. She was a woman of marked ability and exhibited the finest qualities of Christian womanhood. She was director of the White Cross work for the East Central district. The funeral was held at the Franklin Church of which she was a member, on Saturday, Aug. 13, conducted by Dr. Millard Brelsford of Cleveland, Ohio, and Dr. C. H. Hall of Franklin.

MISS GERTRUDE E. TEELE, of Hudson, a graduate of the Gordon School of Theology and Missions was ordained by a council of the Baptist churches of the Framingham Association at her home church, July 21. Miss Teele is under appointment for evangelistic work in Burma, sent by the Woman's Foreign Mission Society. She has the confidence and affection of her home people, as was shown by the beautiful and useful equipment presented to her.

DR. ROBERT T. JONES, long time pastor at Ithaca, N. Y., while spending the summer with his son, Prof. A. H. Jones, of Brown, is supplying churches with marked acceptance. Dr. Jones returns to Daytona Beach, Fla., Oct. 1, to supply the church there. He has for some years sojourned in Florida through the winter.

DR. C. H. WATSON's summer appointments have been at First Church, Somerville; First Church, Hyde Park; at the churches at Peabody and Avon; also at the union service at Medford.

RHODE ISLAND

FIRST CHURCH, WICKFORD, has had a notable year under the leadership of Rev. C. J. Yeomans. More than seventy have been baptized and the chapel building has been renovated.

REV. W. T. BONE reports that the ladies of the Narragansett Pier Church made $425 on the garden fair which is held annually.

SHAWOMET CHURCH, Rev. Frederick Barnes pastor, has taken the lead in these parts and provided on the church grounds, through the generosity of a friend, an up-to-date community playground, with bowling green, swings, hammocks, dangles, slide, sandbox, circle swing, quoits, basket ball, volley ball, tennis court and croquet. Secretary Livingston spoke at the opening of the playground which was largely attended. Allan P. Peacock presided.

THE ANNUAL REPORT of the Lake-wood Church by Pastor Whitman L. Wood, presents by comparison a year of remarkable progress in the number of baptisms, and also the amount of money raised for current expenses and benevolences. A. C. E. Society has been organized; Evangelist Lewis E. Smith has conducted a series of meetings; and a reflectoscope and stereopticon have been purchased.

Union Takes Over Settlement House

THE BAPTIST UNION of Philadelphia has taken over from the former "City Mission" the work at the Baptist Settlement House which for more than ten years has been supported largely by the First Baptist Church. The summer has been very busy, especially in connection with the fresh air work and the dispensary and the school. The number of children sent into the country for brief vacations has been large. The dispensary is free but any who wish to do so and are able pay a small sum for the medicine. In June 223 patients were treated and in July 452. The monthly report says: "A great many of our people are out of work and cannot pay anything, which keeps down our receipts. However, it is not so much the money we are looking to as it is to be able to help those people physically that we may have a better opportunity to reach them spiritually." A newly organized library is bringing much joy to the boys and girls. Attendance at the mothers' meetings is keeping up well as also at the Sunday school.

NEW YORK

LYELL AVENUE CHURCH of Rochester, has had its first experience with a daily vacation Bible school. The school was successful from beginning to end. The enrollment was 156 and the average daily attendance was seventy-seven. The pastor, Rev. William E. La Rue, acted as principal and was assisted by several volunteer workers. The total expense of the school was $192.60. There were forty-six Roman Catholic children in the school and they seemed to enjoy it equally with the others. This church is wholly composed of the working class and notwithstanding the general depression has been able to keep up its financial obligations and hopes to be able to complete the payment on its new building by November 1.

SUNDAY MORNING, Aug. 7, the band of fellowship was given to four new members at the Hannibal Baptist Church, by the pastor, Rev. O. S. Bancroft. One of the new members had been "sprinkled years before! but not being satisfied, was really baptised according to scripture"—"buried with him in baptism" (Col. 2:12). Pastor Bancroft has done a good work at Hannibal, but feeling he has done about all the good he can there, he would consider inquires for another pastorate, or exchange pastorates. Hannibal is a nice incorporated R. R. town. It has a good school, many good stores, and fine churches. The Baptists have a nice church, pipe organ, and give their pastor a large donation besides salary.

CONNECTICUT

THE CENTRAL CHURCH, NORWICH, held on July 14 a public recognition service for its new pastor, Dr. David A. Pitt, recently of Berkeley, Cal. Dr. Clarence M. Gallup of Providence, R. I., preached the sermon and Dr. Wm. T. C. Hanna, father of Mrs. Pitt, gave the charge to the church. Dr. P. C. Wright, a former pastor now connected with the Ministers and Missionaries Benefit Board gave the charge to the pastor. The Central Church is an aggressive, forward-looking company of people and is looking for splendid things in the new pastorate. A daily vacation Bible school has been carried on during July and August. The pastor has been at Northfield during a part of August but is expecting to take up the work with full vigor on Sept. 1.

Obituary

MRS. C. E. GOODELL

The announcement of the death of Mrs. C. E. Goodell, wife of Pres. C. E. Goodell of Franklin College, has brought sorrow to a host of loving friends throughout Indiana and Ohio where most her life has been spent. A hush fell upon the Indiana Baptist Assembly, in session at Franklin College, as the news of her death spread rapidly among the student body. At the chapel hour a committee was appointed to convey to President Goodell the expression of the Assembly's sympathy and the assurance of their prayers in his behalf.

Funeral services were held in the First Baptist Church of Franklin, Saturday, August 13, at 2:30 P.M., and by request of Mrs. Goodell were in charge of Dr. C. H. Hall of Franklin and Dr. Millard Brelsford of Cleveland, Ohio. There was no singing and no announcement. Simplicity characterized every part of the service. Rev. H. McMilland, the new pastor at Franklin, read the Scripture lesson and Rev. R. H. Kent, the retiring pastor, led in prayer.

Dr. Brelsford was pastor at Granville, Ohio, for five years while President Goodell was connected with Denison University. He spoke of Mrs. Goodell from the pastor's viewpoint, and emphasized some of the impressions that had remained with him. In addition to her obligations to the university, she was always loyal to the church and pastor and in most hearty sympathy with every department of the work of the church. Her zeal for the kingdom caused her to go beyond her strength and to be consumed in the Master's service.

Dr. Hall spoke of the life of Mrs. Goodell as he had known her in the class room as a student in college. He emphasized her abounding enthusiasm, her strong sense of right, her faith in God and men, her loyalty to her friends and her convictions of right and duty, and her big heart out of which all these traits of character flowed. Since Mrs. Goodell's return to Franklin as the wife of President Goodell, the same traits of character as in college days controlled her life, only modified and ripened by the experiences of the intervening years.

Mrs. Goodell, as a student in college, was the friend of all, new student as well as senior. It was her ambition to make the new students feel at home in the college and in the First Baptist Church of which at that time her father, Rev. Albert Ogle was pastor.

tistics show that out of a population of more than 105,000,000 in the United States there is a church population of nearly 45,000,000. These 45,000,000 spent last year $50,000,000 for church extension work, $16,000,000 for foreign missions, and $400,000,000 for overhead expenses, such as salaries for workers, pastors, etc. This makes an average expenditure of $10.00 a year for each member to be more exact for 25 per cent of the church population, for they pay the bills; a total spent in America last year for religious purposes of $466,000,000.

Well, that's fine! At first glance these figures look big, startling, pleasing. It proves without a doubt that America is the most religious country on the earth. But wait—I went a little more deeply in this matter. I wanted to see if our churches really should be patted on the back in this manner; I wanted to know if America is really a religious country.

I found that the American people while spending $466,000,000 on the church of Jesus Christ, spent during the year (again I rely on published statistics as being fairly accurate), one billion dollars for candy, $800,000,000 for cigars, $750,000,000 for perfumes and cosmetics, $510,000,000 for cigarettes, $800,000,000 for tobacco and snuff and two billions for automobiles. In other words, we call ourselves a Christian nation and we spent last year twice as much for cigars as for religion, over one million dollars more for cigarettes than for Christianity, and over five times as much for motor cars as for the church.

If America is the most religious country on the earth, and I doubt it not, then, God pity the rest of the earth.

We have no reason to boast because we ARE the most religious country on the earth. God has been more beneficent to America than to any other country on the earth. God is using America as the leader during the time of the Gentiles—making her His "messenger Nation." God has used four messengers to the human race, 1—The Hebrew Nation. God is not yet through with them either. 2—The church. The time of the Gentiles, with Protestant America, the leader. 3—The Book. 4—The Holy Spirit. The Hebrew Nation failed God. They killed their King. They lost their place of leadership and it was passed to the church. America has been given this place of leadership representing the church. Will America fail God also? Verily I believe so.

We thought so much of spreading the Gospel of Jesus Christ to the world that we spent $16,000,000 for that work last year. We spent, at the same time, as a church mind you, $50,000,000 for home extension work. And $400,000,000 for church expense. This is the record of the church. This means that only about 12,000,000 people in America with a population of 105,000,000 care anything for the rest of the earth so far as carrying the Gospel is concerned.

What has the 105,000,000 done? $16,000,000 for foreign missions—$1,000,000,000 for candy—$800,000,000 for cigars, etc. God pity us!

We pray for the return of our Lord—and at the same time prevent his return by disobedience. He said he would return when his gospel shall have been preached in the whole world for a testimony unto all the nations. And America, the "messenger nation" is so obedient to that heavenly trust, that she spends about eight cents a year per person to spread the Gospel.

Among the Books

"The Gardens of Life."

By John Roach Stratton. New York: George H. Doran Company, $1.50.

A volume of sermons by the popular pastor of Calvary Church, New York. We have been happily disappointed in these sermons. From reading newspaper excerpts of the Calvary sermons we were looking for violent denunciations, rhetorical pyrotechnics and flash gleams of colloquialisms to entertain and amuse the reader. But we have seventeen sane, interesting and helpful sermons, "printed as they were delivered," on subjects close to the daily experiences of people. In some of them is excellent exegesis, throwing light on complicated texts. The sermons are enlivened by apt illustrations and pertinent anecdotes which must have been "catchy" in their delivery. The sermons on "Who is God?" "Building the Temple or God's Call to the Church," "The Transforming Power of Christ," are of exceptional interest. All the sermons are practical, clothed in simple language, and readable. We could conceive that a church in the absence of a pastor or preacher could compensate for the absence by having one of these good sermons read.

"Pawned."

By Frank L. Packard. New York: George H. Doran Co. $1.90.

On the jacket of this new novel by a successful author is the publisher's own characterization of the tale—"a story of adventure, love, and rapid-fire incident," which is correct. All that needs be required of this type of book is that the plot be possible, the action swift and vivid, the characters probable, and the setting as bizarre as the author's imagination will allow. "Pawned" certainly meets these demands adequately. The locale flits from a South Sea island to San Francisco, then to New York; Larnon, the master-gambler is an unusual character; the events shown in the unfolding of the melodramatic plot provide all the excitement that could be desired.

much desired results; first, it will interest the average young people's class or society in a worth-while proposition; second, it will inevitably lead them into a richer acquaintance with and appreciation of the great stories of the Bible; third, if wisely handled, it will give to them a new appreciation of the challenge to service in the present day; fourth, it will give to their friends and the people of the church and community an evening of real spiritual uplift, deep impressiveness, and real attractiveness.

Out of a varied experience covering a period of years and touching young people's groups in many states and all types of churches, large and small, city and rural, the author is glad to be able to say, it can be done by almost any group of young people because it has been done in small churches by average young people.

Principles

In order that the above-mentioned desirable results may be assured, certain fundamental principles need to be kept in mind by everyone who attempts this sort of work:

1. Reverence

In all propositions of Biblical dramatization, as well as in the presentation of the dramas, the spirit of reverence should be constantly emphasized. This involves very naturally the elimination of any biblical scene which would require anyone to impersonate the Christ.

2. Simplicity

As the aim in the presentation of biblical dramas is the presenting of the message of the Bible story or character, rather than the displaying of any amount of dramatic ability which may be possessed by any of the group, the whole affair, both as to costumes and scenic settings, should be kept as genuinely simple as possible.

3. Originality

Any group of young people, under the guidance of a wise Sunday-school teacher or pastor, might very profitably make a thorough and detailed study of a Bible story and then arrange it in dramatic form for themselves, utilizing the original talent of the group. This may seem impractical, and in those instances where it does, a limited amount of material already prepared is available.

Dramatization has long held an important place in the field of secular education. It has for a decade been recognized as one of the impressive methods in the missionary phase of religious education. It is beginning to come to its own as a recognized and vitally important factor of the church's program of complete and correlated religious education. When the leaders of our churches recognize its power and its possibilities, we shall not only be able to help the young people whom we already have in our Sunday-school classes and young people's societies, but by the very unusualness of this method, reach and win many young people who are now indifferent.

OUR MUSIC CORNER

MUSIC VS. POLITICS

During the past few years the organ as solo instrument has increasingly become more popular and impressive to the musicians of this country. It is not so many years ago that the bare suggestion to a concert manager that an "organ-recital" would or could interest the public would have been hailed as a poor attempt at humor. In those days, the big bag of whistles was considered merely a more or less necessary adjunct to the Sunday services—and often merely tolerated in that capacity. That this patronizing attitude has largely vanished, and that today we have a keen interest and appreciation of the organ as a musical instrument is largely to be credited to the pioneer recital work of such men as Eddy, Middelchulte, Archer, Morgan, Buck and Warren. Later re-enforcements on the part of Bonnet, Yon, Heinroth, Hammond, Carl, Barnum, Stewart, and many other fine soloists only served to drive home the artistic value of the modern organ. And we must not forget to give credit to the much-maligned "movies" for their part in this new renaissance. Those of us who eat and live with music all our days are apt to forget that to the average man, music is a thing of the passing moment, seldom heard or considered except at such times as it is part of a religious service or picture-show. Even in a city the size of Chicago, the concert-going population numbers not over some ten thousand—this is the strength of the experience of one of the foremost managers.

Hence, any institution which reaches the great American public with music of good quality, music that appeals to the general listener, which has value to both the musician and the layman, any such movement merits the loyal and enthusiastic support of all of us. Such a movement has been the steady growth of the municipal organ and the municipal organist. Such men as Macfarlane at Portland, Me., Lemare at San Francisco, and Christian at Denver—not to overlook Baldwin at the College of New York and Heinroth in Pittsburgh, who, while not officially rated as municipal organists, actually cover that ground—all these talented men, by their arduous labors and their artistic service, are focal points from which radiate an influence for the betterment of music which is too great to be calculated. Readers of this page will remember that in the issue of Aug. 6 we printed a resume of the annual report of Mr. Christian's work in Denver, showing that during the past year he played some forty-five recitals, programming 178 different compositions by ninety-six composers, with a total attendance of 306,000 people.

After such a splendid record of achievement, it is certainly not a very encouraging nor a pleasant task to state that because of the crooked ramifications of what we so kindly call "machine politics," Palmer Christian has resigned from his position in Denver, and another fine artist is severed from a post where he has done a good deal of wonderful things for the development of and interest in good music. We quote below an article from Music News giving details of the scandal—not pleasant reading; but an interesting and disgusting commentary on political conditions in some of our cities. The quotation follows:

A remarkable state of affairs has developed at Denver, Colo., in connection with the work of Palmer Christian, who has been the very successful Municipal Organist for some time.

The Denver News tells at length of a fracas between the mayor of the city and Mr. Christian, and goes into much detail as to the facts that the leading citizens wished Mr. Christian to have a re-engagement dating from next September.

Mr. Christian himself writes us that the refusal of the mayor to re-elect him followed an urgent appeal that he be re-elected signed by the Rotary Club, the Kinewish Club, the Music Dealers' Association, the Denver Musical Society and the Denver Civic and Commercial Associations.

The whole matter is put neatly into a nutshell by the Denver Times in the following editorial:

"There is discord at city hall. City Organist Palmer Christian has quit his job, handed Mayor Bailey the 'retort courteous' and made preparations to leave Denver, an intention which will bring regret to his many friends here, where his musicianship has won him high esteem professionally."

"It has been given out that the mayor has charged Mr. Christian with failure to 'co-operate' with the music commission and the city administration, notwithstanding the fact that organ recitals have frequently had to be postponed because the city has rented the auditorium to various organizations."

"However, we believe Mr. Bailey when he declared the city organist had failed to 'co-operate' with the city administration. We are informed that when Mr. Christian was approached for a 20 per cent levy on his salary to assist in electing Mr. Begole city auditor, Mr. Christian being a mere organ player and not an organization seer, kicked in with only a paltry $50. This is not only lack of 'co-operation,' but a display of political fatuousness possible only in the artist. What did Mr. Christian think—that he had been brought to Denver to hunt for the lost chord on the mammoth console at the auditorium when there are political campaigns to be fought and public jobs to be filled with personal proteges? Serves him right!"

"Unfortunately, Mr. Christian, an admittedly superior organist with a national reputation and a very fine personality, came here with childlike confidence that he had been engaged to play the $50,000 instrument at the auditorium, only to discover that playing the political game was as important in the eyes of the city administration. As a musician he made good, but as a politician he has been a failure. Congratulations, Mr. Christian."

The next municipal organist employed by the city of Denver will do well to ascertain beforehand how much of his annual stipend must be shied into the machine kitty before uncorking the vox humana and hearing its plaintive tones mutter 'Come across!'

Such an occurrence is a disgrace, and certainly is no encouragement to those of us who realize that music is more than a mere idle relaxation for leisure moments, and desire that a sincere love of and appreciation of music be spread throughout the nation. Lemare, the great English organist—a fine gentleman, and a consummate artist—has been forced out of his post in San Francisco to please a political faction. And now Palmer Christian, a splendid organist, and an upstanding man, is the victim of cheap politics in Denver. And the pity is, that more than these men the cities lose by their dismissal and resignation. The writer has the keen pleasure of a personal friendship with Mr. Christian dating back some ten years. At that time Mr. Christian was fresh from his study in Paris, and was the organist at one of Chicago's largest churches—the Kenwood Evangelical. An Easter cantata by the author was to have its first performance at another church here, and Palmer Christian offered to play for the hearing gratis; and also donated a preliminary recital in addition. Such kindly and disinterested aid from a prominent artist to a virtually unknown composer was a gift from Heaven. Afterwards I got to know Palmer as he was and is—a sincere artist, highly competent, a hater of shams (musical and otherwise), a master of his instrument, loyal to his high ideals, and most likeable personally. A big hole was left in Chicago musical circles when he was forced to go west because of ill health; and it was with cordial rejoicing that we heard he had been selected as municipal organist of Denver. We felt that it was a fine thing for that city, and a fine opportunity for Mr. Christian too. And now this ending! Regretful as we may be over such a close to the episode, yet we have even greater respect for the organist now. It is Denver's loss—not Mr. Christian's. Men of his ability are too scarce to be foot-loose long. It will not be long before we will have the pleasure of announcing a greater field for this artist's labors.

It has been the writer's experience that choral music requires good time more than correct notes even though the latter are desirable. Getting the "swing" of a piece is its very soul. Most of the inaccuracy one notices when the average unmusical person whistles or hums a tune comes of insecure time rather than unfamiliarity with the melody. This fact can be proven in any school-room with a few simple experiments. Time is all-important; and when a leader insists upon a full measure of respect for his baton his efficiency speedily reflects itself in his chorus.

Cedars of Lebanon

GREAT forests of mighty cedars which once covered these mountains of northern Palestine and Phoenicia have long since been swept away by human ravage. A few groves remain as remnants of that glory. Will these forests ever be restored?

Fresh from the Field

Rev. J. A. Frey of Latvia, who suffered exile to Siberia during the early months of the Great War, and who made such a profound impression in his remarks at the Northern Baptist Convention, is sailing in September to resume work in his own land. The Baptists of Latvia are to be assisted by the Baptists of England, Canada and the Northern states in America, in co-operative effort as recommended by the conference in London, July, 1920.

Mrs. Lydia Kolator of Czecho-Slovakia and Miss Martha Wenske of Poland, guests of the Woman's Foreign Mission Society during their Jubilee meetings and at the Northern Baptist Convention, have returned to their native countries after doing much in America to deepen the interest of our people in evangelical movements in Europe.

Delegates to the Northern Baptist Convention will remember the deep impression made by the address of Rev. C. G. Lundin, secretary of the Baptist Foreign Mission Society of Sweden, who was a fraternal messenger from the Baptists of his own country to the Northern Baptist Convention. After speaking in various churches across the continent, Secretary Lundin sailed from San Francisco to visit the Swedish Baptist missionary work in China. One of the remarkable achievements among Baptists of modern times is the development of missionary interest among the Baptists in Sweden who now have forty of their own members under appointment for service abroad. This is all the more remarkable when it is remembered that the first Baptist church in Sweden was organized only seventy-three years ago. Our own Foreign Mission Society is thoroughly justified in its assertion that no contributions ever made by it have produced larger returns than the appropriations made to assist the Baptists of Sweden.

Rev. J. A. Ohn, secretary of the Baptist Convention of Norway, Prof. Arnold T. Ohn of the Baptist Theological Seminary in Christiania, Norway, and Rev. Peter Grarup, secretary of the Young People's Work among the Baptists of Denmark, all of whom were fraternal delegates to the Northern Baptist Convention at Des Moines, sailed from New York Aug. 11 on the S. S. "United States," after having spent a week at Northfield, Mass., in attendance upon the conference for Christian workers. Their presence in this country proved most helpful, and did much to strengthen the cordial relationships existing between Northern Baptists and their spiritual kinsmen in the Scandinavian countries.

Dr. J. S. Kirtley, who has recently closed a long acting-pastorate with the First Church, Winnipeg, Canada, becomes acting pastor at the First Church, Pittsburgh, on Sept. 11.

The Patee Park Church, St. Joseph, Mo., gave on Aug. 19 a banquet in greeting to Rev. A. J. Rendleman, the new pastor, and his family. There were speakers representing the church, St. Joseph Baptists and St. Joseph Protestants.

Rev. J. Mason Wells, pastor of the First Church of Ann Arbor, Mich., has accepted the presidency of Grand Island College, and will enter upon his new duties about Oct. 1.

Ruth Evangeline Berry and C. Scott Whitnah were married on Aug. 15 at Seattle, Wash. Mr. Whitnah is a brother of Carrell H. Whitnah of Rangoon College, who married Miss Mildred Page, and Miss Berry is the daughter of Rev. Fred Berry, director of evangelism for Western Washington. Mr. and Mrs. Whitnah will be at home, after Sept. 1, at 422 E. Vine St., Owatonna, Minn.

Brown University is to establish, in connection with the Yangtzeopoo social center of Shanghai College, China, a school of sociology. The budget calls for $20,000 for permanent equipment and $8,200 for annual expenses. The plan contemplates a staff of one Brown professor, a Chinese associate trained in America, and assistants for instruction; a sociological library, a museum, a department of research and a bureau of extension work.

It is interesting to note, in connection with the announced marriage of Clara Smith Hamon to the man who is producing a feature moving picture story which portrays her life story, including the murder of the Oklahoma millionaire politician and oil man, that the film cannot be shown in the city of Chicago, the association of theater operators having voted some months ago to bar it. The theater men are not always unresponsive to public opinion.

Georgia has twelve secondary schools and two standard colleges. Mississippi has only one secondary school and three colleges.

Evangelist John M. Linden, Madison, Wis., after supplying his home church during July and August opened his fall evangelistic work Aug. 30 with a tent campaign at Martinsville, Ind.

Professional men, despite their proverbial niggardly salaries, predominate in sending their daughters to college. Figures made public recently from a census conducted by Mount Holyoke College show that although slightly more than 8 per cent of the entire male population of the country are professional men, yet 33.8-10 per cent of the students there registered their fathers as professional men. While the professional men are most interested in sending their daughters to college, the farmers are least interested, the census showed. Thirty-six per cent of the men in the country are engaged in agriculture, but only 8 per cent of the girls in college come from the farms. Next to the professional men, the tradesmen are most interested in educating their daughters. Ten per cent of the male population are in trades, yet 24 per cent of the Mount Holyoke students have tradesmen fathers.

A son, Truett Alvin, was born on August 22 to Rev. and Mrs. Alvin G. Hulse of the Maywood Church, Independence, Mo. Congratulations! And may the new young man prosper!

The chairman of the pulpit committee of the Washington Street Church, Eastport, Maine, is Deacon J. W. Logan and any communications in connection with the pulpit, just being vacated by Rev. Albert C. Berrie, should be addressed to him.

The Fifth Ecumenical Methodist Conference will be held in London, Sept. 6-16. The last meeting of the kind was held ten years ago. The present meeting will be the first held since the war and consequently urgent problems will be given consideration. The American delegates are to be entertained in private homes. The total number of delegates will be 550 and of these 325 belong to the "western section." The conference is of general interest, both because of what it will do and also because it is representative of a tendency in the denominations generally to come to world-consciousness.

Lyman D. Wright, eighty-five years of age and a descendant of Roger Williams, died on August 24 in Chicago.

Rev. Jacob Meier, eighty-two years of age, pastor of the First German Church, Chicago, died in that city on August 24. He had been a resident of the city for forty-three years and was pastor of the First Church for twenty-seven years. He

The Golden Age Not Yesterday

F. L. Olson of Minneapolis writes: "As far back as my memory runs I was brought up with The Standard. THE BAPTIST is a distinctly different and a better paper mechanically, textually and from a reader's point of view. The same high spiritual tone has been maintained with the other advances in addition. And just a closing word, stick to your Kollum. The readers will stick to you." We of course knew that all this was true but our modesty kept us from saying it. Thank you, Mr. Olson, for expressing our sentiments.

Killam's Kollum

It Can Be Done Anywhere

A few weeks ago there was but one copy of THE BAPTIST in the church at Glenburn, N. D. Today there is a copy in almost every family. What has happened? One of Uncle Sam's mail carriers has recently become a member of the church. He attended the convention at Minot. He has used his opportunity to let the church people know about their paper. He also had the hearty co-operation of another member. They have done a good job for the Glenburn church and the work at large. The men who did the trick are E. J. McIlroy and Emory Rhoades. Watch North Dakota. The convention workers are all on the job.

A Spokesman For Thousands

"I admire your stand on the essential questions and programs of the kingdom work, Brother Killam, including as it does righteousness in industry, real democracy in politics, brotherliness in religion and hearty co-operation in the spirit of the Master. May we all soon come to understand that conceptions may differ while the aim and purpose to make Christ known and accepted as Savior, Lord and coming King are one, that his will may be done on earth even as it is in heaven. May God's fatherhood be acknowledged and men's brotherhood soon be realized from sea to sea and from the rivers to the ends of the earth." Thus writes Rev. L. J. Anderson of Boston.

You Tell 'Em

Our denomination is an experiment in religious democracy. There are more than 10,000 demonstration centers called churches. Godly men and women, pastors and laymen, are studying these communities and attempting to adapt both their message and methods to meet the local needs. Remember—

(1.) That there is safety in a multitude of counsels.

(2.) That no one man and no one church has all the truth. They may have more light upon some phase of it than others.

(3.) All the churches want to know better ways and ought to know the better ways of doing their work.

(4.) You know certain principles of work and have tested certain methods and it will be useful both to yourself and others to tell 'em about your experiences.

(5.) The more than 10,000 experimental or demonstration centers have a common medium for the communication of their combined experience for the common good. THE BAPTIST is that medium. Make use of it and make it useful to the highest degree by helping us increase its circulation to 100,000.

was president of the Western German Baptist Old People's Home Society and of the Baptist Deaconess Home and Hospital Society. Five children, one of them widely known because of his connection with the Sears Roebuck Company, survive him.

When D. G. Garabrant, chairman of the Home Mission Society, returned from his recent trip to Porto Rico, he spoke in the highest terms of the earnest, evangelistic spirit of the society's workers in that island, nearly all of whom he met at the Porto Rican Baptist Association which he attended. He spoke of the closing evangelistic service at which eighteen surrendered their lives to Christ. He recalled the pleasant impression made upon him by the character and condition of Baptist church buildings which he saw, and expressed surprise and pleasure at the generous giving of the Baptist church members. A pleasant incident was his visit to the Garabrant Chapel at Mediana Alta, which he founded about twelve years ago.

After three years service at Ntongo, Belgian Congo, Miss Edna Oden, arrived on board the S. S. "Stockholm," on Aug. 11. It was a long journey from Africa. Miss Oden was traveling for almost three months, eager to reach America in time to celebrate her mother's birthday on Aug. 12. When she sailed in 1918, the country was at war, and Dr. Mable, who was one of the party on board the steamer, had included in her equipment a garment, she called her "submarine gown," of dark material, to wear on shipboard, in an emergency, in case the passengers were called suddenly in the night to leave their state-rooms. A cablegram from Matadi, Congo Belge, sent in November, 1918, by Dr. Catherine Mable, announced the safe arrival of the little party of eight, including Miss Oden. Mrs. Charles Oden, Miss Edna's mother, when she said good-bye to her daughter in 1918, felt that she might never see her daughter again. The birthday celebration in August, 1921, must have been a very happy one, for the daughter had returned safely to America and her mother on her first furlough.

With deep regret the board of managers of the Woman's Foreign Mission Society have accepted the resignation of Miss Sargent who has efficiently served for two years, as the Associate Foreign Secretary, taking the place left vacant by Miss Helen K. Hunt, who sailed in 1919 for Rangoon, Burma. Miss Sargent left the office at 276 Fifth Avenue, on Aug. 12, to join her mother at Delhi, N. Y. They will return, later in the month, to their home at Concord, N. H. Miss Sargent will be missed, keenly, by her associates in the work of the society.

Rev. Frank H. Levering, for more than a generation in charge of the mission field at Secunderabad, India, writes in a personal letter to the editors: "I am no longer in charge of Secunderabad field. Some time ago it dawned on me that a man of seventy-three ought to give over to a younger man the charge of a parish larger by 400 square miles than the state of Rhode Island, and having within its borders more than 100,000 people who must get the gospel from him or not at all. I found the man in my old friend, Rev. C. R. Marsh, of Markapur. Here we are (at Leffric, Kotagiri), in our own bungalow. We have about twelve acres of land. A good orchard is set out with 240 pear trees. There are fourteen apple trees, about 1500 blue gums (eucalyptus), a few peaches of sorts. The house is a good one, about 6500 feet above sea level. The view is the finest in the neighborhood of Kotagiri, and here Darby and Joan expect to end their days. Our near Indian neighbors are one of the hill tribes, the Badagas, of whom there are about 34,000."

Dr. Shailer Mathews of Chicago has been spending his vacation at his old home in Monson, Maine, where his grandfather cleared the land and built the house.

The Baptist Temple, Brooklyn, N. Y., has counted itself fortunate in its supply for the month of August while Dr. J. C. Massee has been away on his vacation. Dr. Daniel F. Rittenhouse, of the First Church, Columbus, Ohio, has been preaching helpful and inspiring sermons during the entire month to large audiences, and the Temple folks have highly appreciated his ministry.

Dr. Albert J. Steelman, who recently completed four years at Newark, N. J., where he organized a church and built an edifice at Springfield Avenue and Nesbit Terrace, has been appointed Baptist instructor on the faculty of the Union Evangelical Seminary of Porto Rico. For five and a half years, Dr. Steelman was a general missionary in charge of Northern Baptist work in Central America and editor of its Spanish paper. He is regarded as especially fitted for the work in Porto Rico on account of his wide experience and training, and his sympathetic acquaintance with the religion and culture of Latin America.

The new postmaster for the city of Chicago is Arthur C. Lueder, for twenty years a real estate man and almost unknown in political circles. He was chosen from a list of more than fifty eligibles who had taken the examination under the new rules promulgated by President Harding. The politicians wonder what the world is coming to.

The School of Methods of the New England Baptist Conference has been in session at Ocean Park, Maine, from Aug. 24 to Sept. 2, with a large faculty, a splendid program and an enthusiastic group of learners. More and more this conference is taking an important place in the religious life of New England. The organization of the conference is thoroughly representative of the six states.

In the Georgia legislature there are as many alumni from Mercer University, a Baptist institution, as from all other colleges and universities combined.

The first woman preacher to be licensed in China has been given the sanction of a Methodist bishop.

An American Encyclopedia of Christianity is being planned, to be issued under the direction of an interdenominational board.

Rawdon College, England, has established a John Clifford chair of theology as a mark of respect for this venerable leader.

Among the American ministers who have been spending the summer in England is Rev. A. E. Harris, of the Bethlehem Church, Philadelphia, who was for

Short Talks on Investments

BY LEE B. DOTY

Stocks as Investments

At a recent Investment Conference, held at Rockford, Ill., Mr. Roy C. Osgood, of the First Trust & Savings Bank, Chicago, in speaking of bonds, mortgages and stocks made some remarks well worthy of emphasis, especially in regard to stock, from which we quote as follows:

"In dealing with the subject of stocks, I think even an experienced investor ought to keep in mind what a corporation really is. It is nothing more or less than a partnership of individuals doing business under a more advantageous form of association and having different legal liabilities than a partnership.

"The only return that an owner of stock can expect is dividends paid by the corporation and in the increase in the actual value of the stock. The increase in the valuation of the stock may be brought about in two ways, by the regular payment of dividends higher than the current loaning rate of money and by the creation of a surplus by the corporation.

"Some corporations divide their shares into stocks of different classes. Where there is only one kind of stock it is usually called "capital stock" or "common stock." Where there is a division of the stock into classes the stocks are usually divided into common and preferred stocks. Preferred stock is a stock in which the holder is promised a definite rate of dividend if it is earned and when it is not earned the dividend becomes cumulative; that is, the preferred stockholder has a right to receive earned dividends in future years at an increased rate until all arrears are made up. Most preferred stocks give the holder a right in case of the winding up of the corporation, to receive the par value of the stock before any of the common stockholders are paid.

"In addition to seeing that stock certificates bear the countersignature of a transfer agent or registrar. It is well to ascertain the standing of the trust company that is acting in these capacities. The more responsible trust companies are careful to look into the moral standing of the corporation for whose stock they act as transfer agent or registrar.

"In buying stock the investor ought to consider the difference between a business risk and an investment. I do not think that an individual ought to buy stock without making practically the same investigation in regard to the affairs of the corporation whose stock is being purchased that he would if he were going to enter a business partnership with the same individuals who control its affairs. He ought to have a clear understanding of the fact that he is entering into a business enterprise with all its attendant risks and that he is not in any sense a lender of money as he would be if he were buying either mortgage investments or secured bonds or notes. He ought to have a clear understanding that when a corporation goes into the hands of a receiver and its business is closed the first mortgage bondholders get paid first, the other secured debtholders next, the general creditors next, the preferred stockholders next and the common stockholders last.

Visions That Beckon

JOAN OF ARC entered into her life work in response to visions which called and beckoned. The source of such visions, often disputed, is of but small concern compared with the fact.

Youth is given to dreaming dreams. Was there ever a boy or girl who did not at some time see himself as the hero of a great career, righting wrongs which need redressing, serving the world in vast ways? The average young man has no difficulty in thinking of himself as a millionaire, and the young girl at least dreams of a world which pays her tribute because of her noteworthy service to mankind.

About this time of year the boys and girls are getting ready for school and college. To get the confidence of one or two of these people will be a valuable experience for any older man or woman. For their thoughts are large thoughts and their courage is unbounded. All things seem possible to them. The man who has not lately shared some young man's thought will be more than surprised to discover the reach of it, the optimism with which life is being faced, and the rapidity with which maturity of thought is entering into all that is passing through the mind. If any person can help the youth in attaining that maturity while he at the same time assists him in keeping the vision he has, he will have done that young person a large service.

Are we not compelled to ask ourselves also whether the ministries of the church have been such as to direct those dreams, those visions, those ideals, towards the thought of service in the name of Jesus Christ? A vast deal of splendid longing goes to waste, so far as Christian effort is concerned, because in some way this connection is not made in the mind of the young person. Men and women who might do valiant service in the church give their effort to other causes because they have not been touched in their imagination while thought was in its formative period.

These boys and girls need to be touched in the home and the church, before ever they go away, with the vision of Jesus Christ and what service in his name may mean. By the story of his life, by some teaching of Christian history, by acquaintance with the great missionaries, by Christian teaching of the sort that appeals to youth, by the direct appeal to the spirit, they should be led to tie up their dreams with the mission and message of the Christ. And Christian forces in the college should carry along the work which has been started.

Let the imaginations of our young people be turned Christwards, let their dreams melt into the vision of him and his service, and the coming days will see no lack of Christian workers.

Selling Sermons

AN EDITORIAL in the Boston (Mass.) Herald bears the title given above. Two points are stressed, one of them having to do with the toil necessary if a minister is to produce really worthy sermons, and the other emphasizing the worth of adequate titles if sermon themes are announced in the daily press. The Herald first quotes the Christian Register as follows:

"Confess, you ministers. Did you not jot down the title that cost you the least mental unrest? You know you did not edgel your brains to the point of creative activity. In the long run, the strength of the ministry lies in the strength of the pulpit; the strength of the pulpit lies in the fresh, stirring sermon, the one the minister has sweat blood to produce. Such a sermon creates its own live title. A dead sermon can not inspire an appealing title."

Headline writing is an art in itself. A theme which attracts cannot be struck off in a moment. One must take into consideration the whole body of the discourse and then give studied thought to the matter if a good title is to be secured. Some men will always attract a congregation, no matter what subject may be announced, because people know that they speak well on any topic. But the value of the title is not to be despised.

The comment of the Herald on the matter is:

"That, we may venture to say, is straight talk and good stuff. We do know that the advertising business is attracting many able young men, for it is a growing business and increasingly influential. We hear that everything must be 'sold' these days. The President has to 'sell' his policies; the colleges have to 'sell' their instruction; art has to 'sell' its creations; merchants have to 'sell' their wares. Some of the finest and cleanest philanthropic enterprises in the world are experts in advertising. Why not apply the idea to the sermon? Preachers must 'sweat blood' in the production of good sermons, then 'sell' them to the public."

The use of the commercial term "sell" as applied to sermons and to the work of the church is not altogether felicitous, and has been somewhat overdone. But the thought is perfectly clear and should be borne in mind by all of us ministers and by the churches also. There is no virtue in presenting the gospel in such a manner that it is unattractive to men. A preacher whom the writer once knew used to justify his almost empty church by saying that he preached the whole gospel, adding, "If you will only preach the whole counsel of God your church will be just as empty as mine is." Somehow that man seems to have missed the secret of Jesus whom the common people heard gladly. It is not a sin on the part of our most popular preachers that they have learned so to present the gospel that their churches are always thronged. Rather is there something here to be studied with the utmost care. Why is it that of two men who preach the same gospel one preaches to empty pews and the other to crowds?

The day will not come when the sermon is not to be magnified. Through the foolishness of preaching men are to be reached and won. But foolish preaching will not gain the end. People discover when a man's thought runs dry. The best of intentions will not then save him. Only by constant study and labor, joined with a true devotional spirit, will remedy be found. Let the churches remember, however, that they cannot make their ministers errand boys and still have great prophets in the pulpit. Men who are busy about many things are apt to present thin sermons. The business ability of the men of the church should take care of the affairs of the church to such a degree that the minister may be free to give himself to his greater duties, of which preaching is one. A working church, made up of people who are taking their faith seriously, can change even a mediocre preacher into a good one. The minister's job is not to save the church or even to keep it going in its accustomed way; the church and its minister, working as a unit, is to give itself to the great task of evangelizing the world. Get the right spirit in the church and it will soon be found that the minister, that is, the average minister, is preaching the kind of sermons people like to hear.

Wanted—a Good Reputation

SOME time ago THE BAPTIST called attention to certain developments of bad omen in connection with the Ku Klux Klan, and stated that as a national organization it seemed to be based on wrong principles and directed towards wrong and dangerous ends.

Keen criticisms of our attitude began to come in; and some went so far as to accuse us of attacking the South, although we were careful to say that we were considering the organization with particular reference to its development in the North.

Since that time we have observed a rising revolt against it in the South. An ex-governor of Georgia, the Episcopal bishop of Savannah, the judge of the Travis county court of Texas, the governor of Texas, forty-nine members of the legislature of Texas, the reputed head of the state organization of the Ku Klux Klan itself in North Carolina and other prominent Southern citizens have denounced the order in stronger terms than we used.

So insistent and so damaging has the tide of public criticism become that the order has bought large advertising space in the newspapers for the purpose of refuting adverse reports.

The newspapers are a poor court in which to try and condemn any man or organization; but when the Ku Klux Klan announced officially the maintenance of white supremacy as one of its fundamental objects, how could there be any misunderstanding of its meaning? Every mob of negro-chasers in Texas or Tulsa or Detroit or Chicago is bound to take new courage in the assurance that it has the influential approval and secret support of the Klan.

If that assurance is mistaken, then it is high time that the order were doing something more convincing than official apologies in the advertising pages of the newspapers.

Since the foregoing paragraphs were written the Chicago Herald-Examiner has stated in its news columns that a woman's branch of the Klan is to be organized. It says:

"The imperial wizard has agreed with his Chicago associates that the women members shall not meet with the men either socially or for carrying out of the plans of the movement. The 'klanswomen' will wear the same hooded garments as do the men and will conduct midnight raids upon women non-members who are found guilty of violating the klan's code of morals and principles."

We pass the report on to the "Imperial Wizard" for such consideration as he may deem proper.

More Than a Man's Task

WHOEVER thinks that the coming conference on limitation of armaments has a light task fails utterly to comprehend existing political and economic conditions.

Note first of all that the conference definitely does not propose disarmament. The slogan, "A warless world in 1923," is not in all its thoughts. It is called, not to negotiate the organization of a world's peace, but to find some way of reducing the economic burden of great armaments.

Consider the difficulties in its way. The imperial governments which are to participate in the conference (including the United States in that class along with the others) are all jealous and suspicious of one another, and the newspapers are diligently fanning the flames of jealousy and suspicion.

Among these governments even if there were the utmost confidence and goodwill, there is an intense economic and political rivalry, giving rise to an endless series of misunderstandings and to almost irreconcilable conflicts of interest. Every one of these empires is so organized economically that it must expand its trade or collapse. But in order to expand its trade it must go into new and undeveloped fields where raw resources offer opportunity for the profitable investment of capital. This is a matter of life and death to every nation that will participate, so far as we know, in the conference. But there is not room enough in the world for the sufficient expansion of all of them. Consequently the capitalists of any nation seeking investment or engaging in trade in foreign lands face the problem of such competition from those of other nations as to threaten their interests. What shall they do under such circumstances? Only one thing is possible: it is to demand from the home government adequate protection from such competition. The home government is bound to extend such protection and assistance, by the use of its political power. Other nations must do the same for their traders too.

The consequence is that in every great open field for the investment of capital, capitalist groups of these several empires face one another in rival efforts to seize business opportunities. To support their interests respectively, the diplomatists of those several empires also face each other on the same fields; the parliaments back their diplomacy; and every one of those empires stands ready if need be to use its army and navy to support its economic interests in any field in the world in which rivalry ripens into fatal conflict.

That is the situation facing every government participating in the conference. The problem will be to secure some agreement for the substantial reduction of armaments, while every conferee government is under the vital necessity of protecting and preserving unimpaired the economic foundations of its empire by an adequate military and naval establishment.

The problem is domestic as well as foreign. Imperialism now as always, in addition to the necessity of maintaining a strong front in foreign relations, faces also the problem of subject peoples and groups, sometimes "silent" and "sullen," sometimes vocal and violent. How far can armaments be reduced by any of these empires without danger of violent internal explosions? This will never cease to be present as a major problem in the Washington conference.

Precisely the same sort of sinister economic and political interests and schemes that surrounded the Paris conference and marred its work will surround the Washington conference. And God help the men who have the task of finding a way out!

As in the Paris conference, President Wilson seemed at times to be almost the only man whose faith in an organization for international peace, did not fail, so it is with President Harding now. He talks idealism, God bless him! but who else is talking so? Public men and the newspapers are largely talking Chauvinism, and warning the people not to expect too much. On the very eve of the conference the empires are bluffing one another with pretentious programs for increased armaments.

Little may be expected unless there shall come a demand from the peoples of these nations for the only program that can accomplish disarmament, namely, the frank renunciation of the whole scheme of economic and political imperialism.

We were told once that imperialism and Kaiserism were the same thing and that the overthrow of the Kaiser would end the rule of imperialism on the earth. The Washington conference will reveal the truth or falsity of that story.

Meanwhile let the churches devote themselves to prayer and propaganda for real and permanent peace.

Churches Have a Good Year

THE year 1919 was a year of unprecedented stagnation in the churches of the United States, and the pessimists founded upon it many doleful predictions. In that year all the churches together showed a net gain of only 44,000.

The year 1920 tells a different story, for the net gain for the year was 712,000. Baptists turned a net loss of the year before into a very large gain, and the story their figures tell is repeated in that of other denominations.

Present indications are that the current year is to see a yet greater advance. For not for many years has the spirit of evangelism been so pronounced and have the churches been reporting such large gains as the result of regular pastoral work and church evangelism.

In all this there is occasion for joy, but not for boasting. Indeed the churches face one of their great problems in times of large ingathering, inasmuch as the new converts must be so identified with the church and with Christian service that they will not speedily slip away. The gains of the front door must not be lost through the drains of the back door. One of the needful things in periods when evangelism is yielding such large results is a church program which shall find in it a place for all the new members.

Is Patriotism a Virtue?

COMMODORE DECATUR (as also several others) is quoted as saying: "My country, may she ever be right; but right or wrong, my country." Albert J. Beveridge was reported in the papers in a public speech: "The love of country must be above all other loves." Shall we accept such standards of patriotism?

Instinct is a vital impulse to action without reference to a reasoned end. Virtue directs action towards vital righteousness as an end. Instincts, however innocent in themselves, never become virtuous until the purpose of vital righteousness dominates them. Patriotism is an instinct, as all natural affections are. Like all other instincts it may be misdirected, abused and perverted to the uses of vice and crime. It may become a cloak for utter rascality, "the last refuge of a scoundrel." The problem is to give this instinct a virtuous quality.

Distinguish between patriotism (the love of one's country and people) and loyalty (the faithful support of the existing government). One's very love of his country may lead him to hate its government; and while one ought to love his country always (indeed the normal person can hardly avoid doing so), he ought for that very reason to hate a government that works damage to his country. There are times when the best expression of patriotism is to criticise government, to seek its amendment, to resist, to rebel and to bring about revolution as the American Colonies did. The worst of all aliens is he who pleads patriotism to cover bad government.

Patriotism has no natural territorial limits. Those limits are fixed in practice by heredity, custom, training, community interest, and a confusion of patriotism with politics. There is a passionate and instinctive love alike for the clan, the tribe, the nation and the world. The higher patriotism is that which includes in its virtuous purpose the larger group and area. The highest type is that of world patriotism.

The virtue of patriotism is created not by the waving of flags, salutations, ceremonies, oaths and legal compulsion; but by a full social understanding coupled with a right social purpose.

Patriotism finds its virtuous expression more in peace than in war. Sometimes war is an utter perversion of this instinct—such a sordid and brutal thing that true patriotism has no place in it. He who loves his country with a virtuous love will not merely shout and fight for it; he will rather think for it, sacrifice his self-interest for it, toil for it and in every way possible serve the welfare of its people.

For Gain or for Naught?

In both Christian and pagan lands many people sneer at "rice Christians"; that is, they have, or say they have an impression that Christians profess to be such in order to secure some worldly advantage

By B. E. H. HARRIS

MANY men might be Christians for a price. I myself, might even consider such a proposition if I could gain as much by it as N. Purushotum has." Rama Rao raised his gray head proudly and his naturally haughty Brahmin face wore a sneer as he made the remark. His companion gazed after the white-clad, white-haired Telugu Christian in question, who had just passed them in the crowded bazaar. "No, Father," Siva Rao protested. "I think you judge Purushotum harshly. I heard him preaching on the street one night last week. His words were good words; they rang true. He is no rice Christian. He preaches often and gets not a pice for it."

Like a Low-bred Donkey

"For that, no, but he loves to hear the sound of his own voice—like any low-bred donkey. He doesn't serve that God of his for nothing, and if troubles should overtake him I doubt if he would serve Him at all. Think how that mission has made him. I well remember, when, out in our village he was only an outcaste, untouchable brat, playing about with the pigs in the mud and eating carrion—when he could get it. Why, I saw him myself at work, when I was going to school. He was little, but he held the leather for sandals between his toes like an old hand at it. Bah! look for yourself at his crooked feet to-day. He may talk like a Brahmin and dress like a Dora, but to the end of his days he'll walk like a Madiga. Even you modern brotherhood and equality folk can't deny facts!"

Siva Rao listened with evident impatience to his father's tirade, but before he could essay any defence of the absent man, Rama Rao continued:

"In the big famine in the seventies, there was not enough rice for such as they, and for a while we thought the whole family had perished."

"How was he saved? Did your father give him some of that store of grain you have often told me he always kept in his granary?"

"No! We had no rice for pigs. The boy was found by a missionary and put into the school here in Co-canada with other outcaste orphans which mistaken zeal had saved from starvation." The younger man was silent a moment, then said,

"Perhaps he did get his start from the mission, but he has supported himself well for years and given back service to pay for the past besides."

"How has he made his living, may I ask?"

"From his land and by teaching, I hear."

"The missionaries got him the land and found pupils for him from among themselves and their government friends. But he isn't having so easy a time now. For five years the war has kept new missionaries and officials from coming out and Telugu pupils are scarce. What business has an untouchable to assume such airs? He ought to be tanning hides or sweeping up refuse, instead of parading the streets with spectacles on his face and books under his arm."

"But Father," protested the gentle Siva Rao, "this is not the modern spirit. If Christianity is raising the outcaste to usurp the Brahmin's place, it is because we Brahmins have neglected or oppressed these weaker brethren; now we are suffering for our mistakes."

"Mistakes—brethren—bah! I will listen to no such talk from a son of mine. These strange notions come from that Christian college. I like them not!" Siva Rao hardly heard him for his attention was fastened on a lurid, sinister glow in the west, first a blackness pierced by crimson, then a blaze.

The Go-downs on Fire

"Come," he said, beginning to run. The grain go-downs by the railroad! Curiosity got the better of dignity, and Rama Rao followed his son.

Social problems were forgotten in the panic-filled moments that followed. The grain was dry, the water was low and the would-be fire-fighters were in each other's way. Ere an hour had passed, the fortune—yes, even the living—of many a man in that region lay in ashes by the tracks. Next morning at dawn, the cars to transport the long-stored rice arrived, just too late.

Among the last of the crowd to leave the scene of the conflagration were Rama Rao and his son, who soon passed an old man listening in silence to the shrill upbraiding of a woman, apparently his wife. Part of the conversation was clear to the passing Brahmins.

"This is what comes of heeding the Doragaru's word and storing your rice. Now our crop is burnt and how shall we live. The Dora has gone to his country. He will not feed us! You listen too much to the missionaries. First you let our boy go to that war country where he can't get proper rice, and now by your foolishness our own rice is gone. Ahyo! ahyo!"

"It is Purushotum and his wife," Rama Rao commented, "You will have to admit that she at least isn't just now making common cause with the foreigners and their faith."

His Wife Had Made it Hot

"Poor man, I'm sorry for him," Siva Rao half turned, "I believe I'll see if—" But his father caught him by the arm and hurried him down another street before he could act upon any noble impulse that might have been his.

Next morning, Purushotum walked the streets alone, with troubled, searching eyes. Now and then, he would return to the barred windows of the empty mission house and look towards them in mute appeal. He wished his Doragaru were there to pray with him in his distress and give him advice as to what to do. His tear-blinded eyes did not see the young Brahmin approaching him until a pleasant voice said,

"Salaam, Purushotum, I hear you lost greatly in the fire last night. I am sorry for you, my friend. I fear that your God, of whom you have told me such good things, is not kind to his servant. He brings trouble upon you. He takes away your living." The old man shook his head and said softly,

"You must not say that. You do not understand. His are the silver and the gold. His are the cattle upon a thousand hills. The Lord hath given, the Lord hath taken away. Blessed be the name of the Lord."

The younger man wondered at this attitude, so unlike the grim acceptance of Karma to which he was accustomed in those of his father's ilk, so unlike too, the modern rebellion against fate of the younger generation of his fellows.

"Thank you for your interest and sympathy," Purushotum went on; as for our living we shall manage somehow. I wanted to give much for the new church; half my crop was dedicated to that purpose. I cannot give much now. My lands I could sell but there is a law-suit, some title business I do not understand. When that is settled perhaps I can sell."

Alas for Purushotum's hopes, the land business was not settled as he expected. Much to his sorrow, Siva Rao had grave reasons for suspicion that his father's clever mind and grasping hands had found the flaw in that title and thus siezed, the living of the hated outcaste. When he was passing Purushotum's house from time to time, the young man frequently heard querulous complainings and once, through the open window he caught the voice of his friend's wife clearly,

What is a Woman Without Pearls?

"You can serve the Lord when he takes away our living, if you wish, but one meal of rice a day does not suit me. I could take my jewels to the Chetties, of course. But I should then be ashamed, for what is a woman without jewels?"

"Be patient," came a gentle voice, "Just a little while and all will be well. I was young and am now old, yet have I not seen the righteous forsaken or his seed begging bread."

"Poor old fellow," thought Siva Rao, as he passed on his way, "he does not believe, even now, that his God is sending him these troubles."

For all his brave words, however, in his own heart, Purushotum was greatly perplexed. What had he done that God should punish him by sending fresh affliction? He was a humble man but as he reviewed his years of faithful Christian service, he could not see why, in his old age, he should be brought to poverty and deserted by those that should have helped him, his friends. They had been sympathetic over the fire, if slightly critical of his unfulfilled pledge to the church. When he had lost his land, though, some had begun to look on him askance, and his wife's attitude was hardest of all. He began to count the days until his son would be demobilized. In him the parents would surely find a solace. Then one dark day a government telegram brought the frightful word,

"Your son killed in action in Mesopotamia."

It was then that Purushotum bowed beneath the stroke. The last tie that held his unhappy wife to him was severed. Her shrieks could be heard for half a mile.

"Ahyo! Ahyo! My son, my son, he is killed. The Dora sent him to the war, but you let him go, You! you! you! Ahyo! Ahyo!" Her stricken husband tried in vain to comfort her. She shoved him roughly aside crying,

*Hold Thou my hand, O Lord; no light
o'erhead
Shows me the path my faltering feet must tread;
To what far depths of darkness and of woe
Might I not fall if Thou shouldst let me go?
Lord, hold my hand!*

*Hold Thou my hand; that tireless clasp means strength,
Patience, and peace, and blessing, till at length
My storm-tossed soul can calmly take its way,
And need no longer in such anguish pray,
"Lord, hold my hand!"*

—Christian Endeavor World.

"Why should I stay in this haunted place any longer and starve? It is full of evil spirits. We have only trouble. I will go to my village!" The following day she left with no kindly word. The grieving husband wandered about the streets half distraught. Once more the mission house, closely shuttered seemed to be consciously refusing his cry for succor. Why was he thus afflicted? The blows of the past month fell again upon his spirit. His missionary had left the station, his classes had dwindled, his crops were ashes, his land was taken away, his son had died and his wife had deserted him, in anger. If only Henson Dora-garu were here he could tell him what his sin was, if sin had brought these calamities upon him. Where could he now turn for aid? At the sound of the bell he turned towards the chapel. There would be comfort surely.

The little group of native worshippers looked at him as he entered. Pity was written on most of their faces, for all had heard of his fresh trials but, here and there the eyes bent on him seemed to hold a look of triumph. Such, alas, was the expression on the face of the leader, Narsaiah, as he took for the theme of the evening's meditation the words,

"Remember, I pray thee, whoever perished being innocent? or where were the upright cut off? According as I have seen, they that plow iniquity and sow trouble, reap the same." Like many an upright, successful man before him, Purushotum had his enemies, and their tender mercies were cruel. He left the church troubled, saddened beyond measure, oppressed with a sense of his unworthiness. Faint from lack of food and the strain of the day's events he somehow found his way back to his lonely home.

It was Siva who, on his way to the bazaar, next day, had seen the house still barred at ten in the morning, and who had reported the fresh cholera case to the hospital authorities. It was Siva Rao, son of a Brahmin who hated untouchables, whom the glazed eyes of the patient recognized first, five days later when he lay, weak and spent from the disease but alive still.

"My Lord Does not Want me."

"You are kind to come," the sick man said faintly, "I do not see why I am alive. There seems to be no place on earth for me and evidently my Lord does not want me in Heaven," he added bitterly. Then he turned his face to the wall and wept. His would-be comforter, surprised at his changed attitude, not knowing what to say or do, quietly slipped out of the room.

When Rama Rao heard that his son had visited the "rice-Christian" in the hospital he said nothing, but the next day Siva Rao was peremptorily sent on business for a month to a distant village. When the young man returned, at last, he could find no trace of Purushotum. The man's last bitter words rang in his ears and he was sorry. He had begun to believe. Now he wondered if, after all his father had been right about the old man. Could he serve God only for gain? As if to read his thoughts, his father remarked one day with elaborate carelessness,

"They say that Purushotum did not go near the Christian church after his recovery. What did I tell you, Siva Rao, about your fine rice-Christian? You don't find him preaching the love of God and the brotherhood of man since his God cursed him and his fellow Christians deserted him."

"Where has he gone?" Siva Rao had not meant to ask the question, but it slipped out.

"How should I know? I interest myself not in the goings and comings of an untouchable." The old Brahmin somehow did not dare to tell his son that he had managed to get hold of the mortgage on the Christian's humble dwelling and that the final blow, the loss of his home had been struck by this his Brahmin enemy, and had led the poor old man to wander forth from the town that had long been his home. He watched his son's comings and goings more rigidly, however, and as vacation time drew to a close he said one day,

"I have new plans for you this year. When you return to Madras to study you must go to the Presidency College. In that Christian College you must study the Bible and you get queer ideas. I will have no more of that foolishness; that is settled." Much to his father's surprise, Siva Rao, with Purushotum's deflection fresh in his mind, had no heart to rebel, or even reply beyond a formal acquiescence to his father's plan.

Queer Mr. No-Name

At a loom of one of the Perambur cotton mills, on the outskirts of Madras, a silent old man, who went by the strange cognomen of Parulaydoo (Mr. No Name) worked steadily day after day. No one knew anything about his past and little about his present. He seemed to understand no English, when addressed now and then by the foreman, but he worked on with the dogged patience of an animal. He lived in a tiny shack in the Palem nearby, not far from the mission church that he and his fellows passed every day, in going to and from their work. One evening, when there was singing inside the church, a group of the laborers entered timidly. Those nearest Parulaydoo saw the dull mask fall from his face for an instant as he listened at the door. Then he turned away and plodded on. Purushotum, for it was he, was denying his Lord daily. That he had no religion was all the information that his associates could gather. They thought him queer, but there was a dogged integrity about him that won their confidence. "God had forsaken him, why shou'd he serve him more"—if he had put his dull emptiness of heart and life into words, they might have been these!

One day, in the troublous times of strikes in which the old man had no interest, the superintendent of the plant rushed into his room. "The peons have walked out," he said to the foreman, "but this note has got to get to Mount Road. Is there any man here you can trust?"

"There is that half-cracked Parulaydoo. He is perfectly honest but so dull looking that no striking peon would suspect him carrying a message."

Some moments later Purushotum found himself on a tram car, facing two Brahmin students in the next seat.

"It is strange," said one, "how much these coolies look alike." His companion glanced idly about as if in confirmation of the remark.

"Yes," he agreed, "it is, even when they rise above the class. See that old man in front? Give him silver spectacles, a round cap and a European coat and he'd be an aged image of an old Christian preacher I used to know in Coconada."

"How did you come to know a Christian preacher?"

Then Siva Rao, for such it was, related sympathetically, in English, the story of Purushotum's troubles and final fall, little realizing that the old "coolie" could hear all he said and that he sat with his head in his hands not from sleep, but from deep emotions that he could not wholly conceal.

If He Had Just Held on

"He was the most genuine Christian I ever knew," Siva Rao concluded.

"Through his preaching and life I was almost persuaded, but how could I go on with the thing when he failed me? Perhaps his calamities unninged his mind for they found his cap and spectacle case by the railroad track one night, and though the body nearby was beyond identification, I fancy there was no doubt it was his. Poor old chap, if he had just lived and held on, my life might have been very different—and his too for that matter—for since my father's death the old fellow's land has come to me, and what would I not have done to?"

Here the two friends alighted and Purushotum, apparently asleep in a corner heard no more. He marked the locality, reached his own destination, delivered his message and returned home as one in a dream. What came to the beaten old man through the watches of that night will never be known, but the next morning when the consecration service was half over at the little Christian church, a stranger, neatly dressed and with little to distinguish him from the others, rose to pray. Those who heard it will never forget that prayer.

Not only are our forces limited but life is short. We must therefore play the game hard with destiny. If as unskilled players we would avoid defeat at the start, we must learn the rules of the game.—JULES PAYOT.

"Father," it began, "I have sinned against heaven and in thy sight and am no more worthy to be called thy son." From the depths of his agonized heart, Purushotum poured forth his confession and his surrender to his Father's will.

"Though thou slayest me, yet will I trust thee," rang the triumphant conclusion.

Came Back Like Job

From that day forward, the hundred-fold of worldly prosperity might have been his for the taking, for with his church letter for which he sent to Coconada, came the news that Henson Doragaru had returned and was calling for him; but, as if by some manner of penance, the old man stuck to his humble manual post and preached here and there about the city in his spare time. No one knew of the burden upon his heart which kept him in Madras and led him to scan so piercingly the faces of the crowds that stopped to listen to his street preaching. For the fourth Saturday he had preached on the corner where he had seen his friend Siva Rao leave the car on that memorable day he had carried the message for the Superintendent. Again two Brahmin youths on their way to their monthly literary club left the car as before. They drifted to the edge of the gathered crowd.

"It's that coolie we saw on the car, last month, I do believe," exclaimed Siva Rao's companion.

"It's Purushotum!" gasped Siva Rao, himself, then, "Hush. Listen!"

Simply the old preacher was telling the story of the Prodigal Son. It was his own story, too, as he gave it, and no less the story of many a man in his shifting audience. The young Brahmin soon made a move to pass on but Siva Rao said,

"You go. I'll follow soon." Siva Rao's heart was singing. A new peace and joy came to him with the preacher's words. His faith in the Christian's God had returned with his faith in his servant. Little did Purushotum know that the Lord had answered before he prayed that day for his dear young friend who had followed him into "the far country but had not yet arisen to go to the Father." But the Lord "turned the captivity" of Purushotum "when he prayed for his friend."

Making the Church Count in the University

By MARTIN S. BRYANT

Baptist University Pastor at the University of Illinois

IT would be a great mistake to imagine that the administrative authorities of the great state universities are unsympathetic to the program of the churches. They are very eager to have them supplement the work of the state by providing the religious training and education which the state is forbidden to do. It is no longer quite proper to say that the door is open to the church at the state universities. We must go further and say that students and faculty alike beckon us to enter the door and to develop a program of service which will challenge the hearty co-operation of the entire university community. Said President Kinley of the University of Illinois in a letter to the writer of this article a short time ago, "I have always believed that no education was complete which did not include proper religious training. I want to see every religious influence possible thrown around our young people and every opportunity offered them to understand and appreciate the value of the spiritual things of life. Anything I can do to promote it I shall do."

generation. An active policy on the part of the church is claiming great numbers of these young men and women to Christ and the church.

Therefore the heart of strategy in this terribly crucial world situation is work among students in this country.

UNIVERSITY BAPTIST CHURCH

Attendance in Tax-Supported Schools

There are over ninety tax-supported institutions of higher learning in the United States with a property investment of more than $200,000,000 and a yearly income of at least $50,000,000. The rapid increase in attendance at these institutions is a striking evidence of the place they have in the life of the various commonwealths. They have come to stay. In 1870 there were 6,694 students in tax-supported colleges and universities; in 1880 there were 10,000; in 1890 there were 22,816; and in 1920 there were over 150,000. If the same percentage holds true today as it did a few years ago, and there is no reason to believe otherwise. No less than 8,700 of these are Baptists.

A Field White unto the Harvest

There is no field where the church is under greater responsibility than in the midst of this vast student population. Here is a place which calls for statesmanlike action and where statesmanlike action is being used. In these centers are being wrought out the destinies of the nation and the nations for the next

An indifferent or indolent attitude would mean a steady loss to the church and to the kingdom of this inexpressibly precious and forceful life. In one great denomination, so far as recruiting is concerned, the tide has been turned so that instead of getting 3 per cent of its recruits for foreign mission service from the state universities and the remainder from the church colleges it is now getting 25 per cent and its program of work is only in its beginning.

Sherwood Eddy Changed His Plan

Last winter Sherwood Eddy, one of the greatest Christian speakers before student audiences in the world today, was on his way to the Far East for the purpose of holding meetings with the students of China, Japan and India. When in Central Europe he changed his mind and decided to return to America at once. He has since been giving his entire time to the American colleges and universities. When asked for the reason of this change he is reported to have said that while the work in Asia was of far-reaching importance the hope of the world today and the real secret of defeat or victory for the Christian forces are in the students of America.

The University of Illinois

Work was begun by the Baptists in the University of Illinois Sept. 1, 1912, when a man was secured to serve as Baptist University Pastor, the work being fostered by the Illinois Baptist State Convention and soon to be followed by the co-operation of the Board of Education of the Northern Baptist Convention. Perhaps fortunately there has been no change of pastorates during these nine years since. It was very soon seen that the only course for the most efficient work was to organize a church. Its express purpose is to minister to the religious and social needs of the 400 and more Baptists in the university and to furnish the means whereby the Baptists of the state can do their part in providing for the religious life of the 7000 students as a whole. The church was accordingly organized and took the name of "The University Baptist Church, at the University of Illinois." All the work and activities of the church were for four years conducted in the rented auditorium of the University Y.M.C.A. In 1916 the beautiful and well adapted church building, a cut of which appears with this article, was completed. The building represents an expenditure of $40,000, is owned by the Illinois Baptist State Convention and is entirely paid for. It contains a handsome auditorium for the services of worship, attractive social rooms, commodious class rooms for the work in religious education, a six-room apartment as the pastor's home and a room for the student who serves as janitor. The building is now fully equipped with the exception of a pipe organ.

Work Many-Sided

In addition to the Sunday-morning preaching service the work of the University Baptist Church reaches out in many directions. First comes the pastoral work. The pastor knows these students. He is their pastor, their friend and their big brother as they are away from home. He calls on them in their rooms and in the parlors of their rooming houses. His study is always open to them and they come to him with their problems in personal conferences.

The work in religious education is growing every year. It is now correlated with the educational work of the American Baptist Publication Society whereby the student works for a diploma in religious education, representing four years of work in the Fundamental Principles of the Christian Faith, Old Testament History, the Life of Christ, the Life of Paul and the Founding of the Early Church, the Social Principles and Application of Christianity, Teacher Training and World Wide Missions. These courses are held both Sunday morning and Sunday evening. Many Sundays last year the Bible-school assembly room would not seat all present. Every year students are baptized into the membership of the church. One Sunday last year more than 100 were received by baptism, church letter or affiliate membership. The Baptist members of the faculty are taking an increasingly large interest in the work. Regular weekly giving is encouraged, there being 160 such givers last year, and the offerings toward the support of the work amounted to $1,400. Every year there are decisions for the ministry and missionary service and the number trained for efficient Christian lay service in city, town and country is large and every year increasing. To many students the church is their only means to a wholesome social life.

Other Denominations

Each of the other leading religious bodies is also doing a large work for its students at the campus, the Methodists leading by far. They have organized what is called the Wesley Foundation at the University of Illinois. They purpose to spend about $1,500,000 in buildings and to provide at least an equal amount for endowment. "There will be in their group of buildings a new church to take the place of their present Trinity Church, a model Sunday-school building, the Social Center Building, a library, a School of Religion, a parsonage and two residence halls." Their Social Center Building has just been completed at a cost of $325,000. The staff of the Wesley Foundation now numbers seven and the budget for maintenance and operation totals $45,000.

A Closing Word

People should not be too hard on the university. It is not "the teachings" of the university which is destroying the faith of our young people. It is the modern social life of our high schools, the reaction from the over-conservatism of too many of our churches and the lack of a beautiful and sacred religious training in the home which are the more responsible, not only for the loss of faith of our young people, but for the loss of character as well. The life of our colleges and universities is just what those who come to them make it. Sometimes it is pathetic to see the kind of material the universities have to work upon.

They are to be praised more than censured for the outcome. But what a glory it is that the church has at least seen its duty and its responsibility and is now co-operating in the making of men!

"I Was in Prison and Ye Visited Me"

A lazy thief, up for grand larceny, lolled in an arm-chair; some sprightly negroes of finer quality than the whites; a few timid Mexicans, etc.

By CARRIE B. ILSLEY

LIKE the haunted house of one's childhood, with its rattling chains and silent treading ghosts, loomed the gray prison walls, whose ivy mantled towers rose from green lawns where gay, brilliant-hued pheasants sported among playing fountains.

The little window, up there among the ivy, that was in the death cell; and beyond, where no eye could reach, was the woman's department.

The fact that hundreds of men were living out their solitary lives behind that pile of masonry, was not what sent the cold shivers creeping up and down the back of one new comer to the prison city. There had been contact with convict men before, in dark, foul-smelling prisons, but the woman convict, that small, segregated group whom the visitor seldom sees—the woman who could quarrel over a cook stove and take her neighbor's life; the woman, who, Ahaz-like could commit the fruit of her own body to the flame, that was a creature of a different mold.

Ran Like Rats to Hide

"Nobody ever sees them," said the townspeople, pointing beyond the death cell. "It makes the women impudent and unruly to pay any attention to them, and when now and then visiting parties do go through their building, they run like frightened rats to their cells and even crawl under the beds."

But, they were women, and born, possibly some of them, to better things. They might appreciate a friendly interest from the outside world. The good chaplain was more than glad to plan the visit to this part of his parish; and the matron—God bless such lonely workers, thronged by sight-seers, and lacking often a single friendly observer—never in all her years of residence had any one come just to call upon her girls. No, the women had no religious instruction of any sort except the Sunday morning chapel where they sat far off in the back gallery, their attention occupied chiefly with watching the men below. She would be delighted to bring her girls in to get acquainted.

Which felt the more restraint, that first afternoon in the big, sunny parlor of the woman's building, the caller or the group of impenitents to whom she wished to minister, is hard to conjecture. A red-haired, brazen denizen of the underworld sat on a couch, arm in arm with another of the same type. They chewed gum the while they laughed and jostled each other back and forth on the divan. A prosperous looking female, with a mouth full of gold teeth, sat stolidly by. A lazy thief, up for grand larceny, lolled in an armchair; some sprightly negroes, of finer quality than the whites, and a few timid Mexicans who could understand no English, completed the company, the larger part of the inmates declining the invitation to come in.

It was not very much of a meeting. They tried to sing, those women with the strained, broken voices of dissipation; and the leader attempted to lead their thinking along ways they had gone but seldom.

"Would you like to have our friend come again next week and talk to us?" the matron asked of her proteges.

Liked the Singing

"Like the singing pretty well; don't care much about the talk," volunteered the possessor of the gold teeth.

The cue was worth following and

Service done to one of the least of his brethren is service done to him, declares Jesus in that mighty parable in Matthew 25. The neglect of one of these needy ones is neglect of him. The inmates of a woman's prison may not have stamped on their bodies the marks of the Lord Jesus. But if he loved them, shall not his followers do the same? If he died for them, shall not those who bear his name be willing to endure shame that the unfortunates may be rescued? The woman who loved much gave much. Our love and our giving have a relation to each other.

thereafter no meeting was held without the assistance of some of the city's best musical talent. It was a novelty, this holding a meeting in a penitentiary, and places among the restricted group of visitors were always at a premium.

Not many weeks passed before the parlor became too small and the organ was rolled out into the wide corridor about which the two tiers of cells faced, and the women who did not care to come out into the open could thus get, behind their cell curtains, the benefit of all that was said and done.

The inmates now began to hurry with their tasks of washing and ironing, bread making and the like, to be on hand when the visitors arrived. There were women of all ages; some old and gray, others that looked for all the world like a care-free group of Sunday-school girls; and when the meeting was over, each, black, white and Mexican alike, with an arm about one of the new found friends, so long as the number of the latter held out, walked to the big gate to say "Good-bye, be sure to come back next week, and don't forget that song I wanted."

Odds and Ends of Humanity

Such varying types of humanity! Stupid little Dolly, the silly dupe of smarter men, cried all the time; said she wanted to be good and read her Bible every day.

There was Mrs. James, (they called her Mrs. in deference to her years,) old and cynical. Reared in a literary atmosphere, capable of making a place for herself in the world, she nevertheless, because of an unbridled temper, slew a man in her haste.

Laughing, careless Alice did frequent penance behind the bars of her cell, because, perforce, she must take every opportunity for a fist fight. "Did you ever try asking God to help you?" inquired a visitor one day as Alice's black, shiny face pressed the bars back of the organ.

"Law, Mis', I's a preacher's daughter. Course I prays; prays all the time but seems like it never he's me a speck. I gits in a fight most every day."

"You must remember that the Lord can not help us very much unless we try to help ourselves. You have to do everything you can to keep from fighting," she was told.

"Now mebbe dat's jest what ails me." The ivory teeth gleamed in their ebony setting. "I neber did try to keep f'om fightin'."

She did learn self control, however, in time and went back to husband and baby to live a chaste, orderly life.

Handsome Myra, with keen, gray-blue eyes, told how, because she wanted money, she left the right path, and, with triumph gleaming in those steely depths, she said, "I got it too." But she never would do so again. She wanted above all things to give her life to helping unfortunates like herself. She wanted to help secure that much needed institution, a federal prison for women. God alone knows how deep her resolve.

Darkey Beulah sat like a saint among the worshippers each week and, in a matchless, high, clear tenor voice, led those of her own race in the crooning, see-saw fashion all their own as they sang "Beulah Land," or "Walk in the Light, Beautiful light, Come where the dew drops of mercy are bright."

But the same saintly Beulah cursed with a sailor's ferocity, when things went wrong in the kitchen.

"Bring Your Leetle Boy"

The demure Italian woman, showing her fancy work, and yearning, mother-like for her children, always asked, when no child accompanied the visitors, "Why you not bring your leetle boy?"

Mary was always gentle and apathetic, a model prisoner too. She was serving life sentence for the murder of a villian who had lured her into wrong. She always listened, like the Athenians, to what seemed a new teaching. "Did you ever, Mary, anywhere, make a profession as a Christian?" she was asked one day.

"No, ma'am, I never was in church; never heard a sermon till I came here.

Where, reader, under the shining canopy of heaven, in Christian America, could a girl grow to womanhood and never once hear the gospel preached till she heard it in a penal institution? She was a ranch dweller from the Rocky Mountain slopes and there are many others like her. And reader, do you know how the women of your own state prison, who, in company with sad-faced, gentle Mary, never learned the one blessed sesame into a conquering life, spend their hours of leisure after the routine of daily housework is done? Do they learn any craft by which to earn an honest living? If illiterate, are they taught to read and write? If unable to cut and make a garment, does some one teach them?

There are some prisons where no such opportunity exists, and if this

"A LITTLE CHILD SHALL LEAD THEM"

By EDWARD MARKHAM

Come, leave your candle, book and bell:

Is the man cursed? His face will tell.

All records since the world began Are written on the face of man.

His lack of love, his lack of awe, Speak his defiance of the Law.

These heresies are all there are, In any heaven, in any star.

O Judges when the doubts begin— "Should he be out? Should he be in?"

Call on some little child to pick With hasty glance the heretic.

For all that have the gift of grace Will have it printed on the face.

Only dark thoughts that darken fate

Have power to excommunicate.

Yet there is danger in my plan Of finding who is under ban.

For what if—looking round about— The child should pick the judges out!

Written as a comment on the tendency of men to judge each other harshly, under the title, "Helps for Courts of Heresy."

putrid stream, which every four or five years is turned back into society, comes, because of its stagnation, more foul than ever, whose fault is it?

But the stream that emerges from the prison wall is not always all black, thank God. There are some like Margie, the pride of her village in her teen years. She came bleary-eyed and bedraggled, but went, clothed, and in her right mind, learned nursing and became once more a pride and joy.

Did the little meetings, held week after week, singing, praying, reading the Word, have any lasting results in the lives of such women as these? Yes, there came times, when a penitent, longing for pardon for her weight of sin, asked to have "the lady," come into the cell to pray with her. Then too, there was that silent, and may be, strongest proof. The discipline was always easier, so the matron said, the few days following a service. Who knows, except the Master who has promised to care for the harvest, how many a poor wretch, like sordid Eliza, caught some gleam of truth and tried to live by it?

She was a fourth-termer, and troublesome beyond description; the only woman who had never sat in the corridor and taken her part in the exercises. Like a moth drawn to the light, however, invariably, about time for the meeting to begin, she would flit in from the garden, flutter along the wall and to her cell at the farthest corner of the hall, apparently out of sound of everything but the singing.

Eliza Tidies Mollie's Cell

One day the lesson was about Joseph, the prince of patriarchs, who, in prison, did always the kindness he was under no obligation to perform. The next day word came that Mollie, Eliza's sworn enemy, now out on parole, was to be returned. These two women had caused unceasing trouble in the discipline of the institution.

When Eliza heard the news she came forthwith to the matron, with the request, "May I get Mollie's cell ready?"

"Why, certainly," responded the matron, with a question in her voice and manner.

"I'd like to fix it up as pretty as I know how," Eliza continued, displaying some of her beautiful bits of crochet which she intended to use in adornment.

"Those religious folks, you know," she explained, putting her own construction upon what she had heard, "said, if you want to make atonement for your sins, do something for somebody, that you don't have to, and I'd like to do this for Mollie."

At the next meeting these two once sworn enemies, sat side by side and continued to live in peace. Mollie became the matron's trusted assistant and Eliza asked the help of others in her effort to lead a better life.

"Depart from me.—I was in prison and ye visited me not," is our Lord's solemn warning.

A Review of Contemporary Denominational Biography

By W. B. LIPPHARD

A GREAT university like Yale, as a general rule, confers but one honorary degree of Doctor of Divinity at each annual Commencement. It is a high honor and justly coveted, for it signifies exceptional service in the Christian ministry. More than thirty years ago Yale conferred this honor on one of her graduates, Augustus H. Strong, who even in those early years had already acquired fame as a preacher and a theologian.

A gracious providence has dealt most kindly with this grand old man of the denomination, honored, revered and loved by thousands of men all over the world who have sat under his teaching, or whose lives have been influenced by his thinking. The caller at Dr. Strong's home at Rochester, N. Y., invariably finds him, although now in his eighty-sixth year, seated in his well-equipped library, busily studying some recent theological treatise or planning his own next literary production or anticipating his next trip abroad or his winter in California. Notwithstanding all these other interests, the visitor never leaves that home in Rochester without being made conscious anew of the secret of Dr. Strong's great life, his mighty influence and his spiritual power. Jesus Christ is the center of his life.

Here is a contemporary of the great men of the past, like Henry C. Mabie, Henry L. Morehouse, George C. Lorimer, A. J. Gordon, Edward Judson and others whose names are sacred in Baptist history. Nevertheless, Dr. Strong belongs also to the present generation for his spirit is youthful, and the youngest seminary graduate and indeed men of every age find unspeakable joy and inspiration in his companionship. What a wonderful earth this would be if all men could approach the western horizon of life as Dr. Strong has done and thus make old age seem a sublime achievement greatly to be desired.

He was born in Rochester, the son of Alvah Strong, one of the outstanding Baptist laymen of his generation. He was educated at Yale, from which he was graduated in 1857, nearly sixty-five years ago, and from Rochester Theological Seminary in 1859. It is well within the realm of probability that Dr. Strong may some day hold the distinction of being the oldest living Yale alumnus. Upon his graduation from the seminary, he served as pastor of the First Church of Haverhill, Mass., for four years, and at East several years ago, where he had the joy of seeing so many of his former students engaged in making Christ known to the uttermost parts of the earth. Only recently he returned from a tour of Europe where he had visited all the battle fields on the western front.

During these seminary years he also produced a large amount of theological literature. The best known of his many books include "Philosophy and Religion," "The Great Poets and Their Theology," "American Poets and Their Theology," "Christ in Creation and Ethical Monism," "A Tour of the Missions," and "Union with Christ." The most widely known is undoubtedly his "Systematic Theology," in three volumes. This has gone through seven editions. For generations to come this monumental work will be recognized as one of the great contributions of the past century to theological thought.

Dr. Strong has also been active in the general work of the denomination. He has served as preacher at the May Anniversaries, has been a member of several boards and committees, and for three years was President of the Foreign Mission Society. For five years he served as President of the General Convention of Baptists of North America. Dr. Strong has shown a remarkable ability in analyzing denominational tendencies and developments. Those who recall his great address at Philadelphia in 1911 on "The Denominational Outlook will readily appreciate in the light of developments since then how prophetic was his utterance.

Obviously to estimate Dr. Strong's influence and the contribution which he has made to his day and generation is impossible in a series of brief sketches such as this. More space is necessary and more time must elapse in order properly to appraise the unique place which he occupies in American ecclesiastical history. How true it is that the grandeur of a mountain is best appreciated at a distance, when it is silhouetted against the western sky and its inspiring majesty towers above all the surrounding peaks. Yet today his brethren delight to do him honor.

AUGUSTUS H. STRONG

the First Church at Cleveland, Ohio, for seven years.

In 1872 the trustees of Rochester Theological Seminary elected him as President of the institution, to succeed the late Dr. E. G. Robinson. His subsequent record has proved that the Board acted with unusual wisdom and had evidently been divinely led in reaching their important decision. For forty years he served this great training school for Baptist preachers, and upon his retirement in 1912 he was made President Emeritus. During those forty years a thousand men entered and were graduated from this seminary. One can almost say that there is not a country on earth today which does not have at least one former student of Dr. Strong in its list of ministers. He has traveled extensively in all parts of the world for some years making annual trips to Europe. One of the greatest experiences of his life was his visit to the mission fields in India and the Far

Dr. Wayland and Some Fundamentals

By W. H. MORSE, M. D.

IT was forty-four years ago. An American medical student was traveling in Europe. Born in Massachusetts, a wealthy farmer's son, his environment had not been of a character to produce religious impressions, and up to the time of his majority and the tour that signalized it, he had given no thought to his eternal welfare. At Geneva, however, his heart was touched. He had viewed with indifference the cathedral where John Calvin used to preach and declare the "horrible decrees" of God; but in an old church close by the cathedral he found an ardent young Italian preacher named Teofilo Malan, who had a congregation of Methodists of his own race. Speaking English, and having acquaintance with Greek, Hebrew, and Latin, upon meeting the American, a cordial friendship sprang up between them. The Italian was interested in matters in the United States, and especially in the return to the homeland of immigrants with the open Word in their hands and hearts; and consequent upon the intercourse of the two young men, the student went one Sunday to hear the other preach. He did not understand Italian, and the preacher knowing this, on giving out the text, "Seek ye the Lord!" repeated it in English for the visitor's benefit. Several times during the sermon he did the same. As a result the student went away with the words in his mind, and near to his heart.

Tradition and the Bible

The following day, or soon after, he went on to Italy, there to witness the clinics of Unna, the specialist in cutaneous diseases, at Rome. While there, and with the Geneva impression still with him, he fell in with a Roman Catholic who was also at the clinics. The two came to talk of religious matters, and the first thing that the American knew, he had become imbued with Romanist views. These found fertile ground in the heart that had been touched at Geneva, and among them was "tradition." The Romanist argued that tradition is on the same plane as the Bible, and that it merits equal esteem. In the way peculiar to his kind, he pointed out the fact that Protestant (and Catholic) observance of the first day of the week as the Lord's day is due to the tradition of Ignatius, "the disciple of John the beloved," who averred that it was so done in his day. "And as we take the first day of the week as the Lord's day, because of tradition," the Romanist pursued, "then the other traditions must be accepted, for these are the fundamentals." On the fifteenth of August he took the student to mass, and explained the Feast of the Assumption of the Virgin Mary, which was being celebrated. The student came away, almost, if not quite ready to believe the tradition that Mary was translated, body and soul.

When he returned to America the doctrine troubled him. With a little more persuasion he might have become a Roman Catholic. He felt, in consequence of his Geneva experience, that he should identify himself with the church, and a quandary as to which church it should be, filled his mind. On the steamer he decided that he would find out from Protestant authority as to that "fundamental" tradition. He shrank, however, from speaking to a minister about. But a bright idea came to him. Why not write "a letter to the editor" of some religious paper, and get an answer in print?

He did so. The paper to which he wrote was the National Baptist, and he signed himself "a divinity student." The question was as to the proof of the mooted "fundamental." As was to be expected, the editor, Dr. H. L. Wayland, replied in his issue of March 7, 1878. But before this answer came, the young man had taken the step across the threshold. Entering the Albany Medical College, when obtaining board, he sought it in a Baptist family, so that he might have access to the National Baptist, so as to get his answer. The family induced him to attend church with them, and he thus came under the preaching of the Rev. Frank Rogers Morse of the Tabernacle Church. On the first Sunday of January he was baptized by Mr. Morse. It may be that he had settled the "tradition" question by this time, but when the answer came, he read it with zest. It read:

"I regard a judicious use of the Fathers as being on the whole the best reliance for any one who is in the situation of my querist. The advantages of the Fathers are twofold: first, they carry a good deal of weight with the masses; and, second, you can find whatever you want in the Fathers. I do not believe that any opinion could be advanced so foolish, so manifestly absurd, but what you can find passages to sustain it on the pages of these venerable sages. And, to the common mind, one of these is just as good as another. If it happens that the point you want to prove is one that never chanced to occur to the Fathers, why, you can easily show that they would have taken your side if they had only thought of the matter. And if, perchance, there is nothing bearing even remotely or constructively on the point, do not be discouraged; get a good strong quotation, and put the name of the Fathers to it, and utter it with an air of triumph; it will all be just as well; nine-tenths of the people do not even stop to ask whether a quotation bears on the matter in hand. Yes, my brother, the Fathers are your stronghold. They are Heaven's best gift to the man who has a cause that cannot be sustained in any other way."

Some Achievements of Last Year

DURING the past year four new buildings have been erected in Latin North America. The first of these was a chapel, costing $11,000 for the town of Juncos in Porto Rico. For ten years we have had a congregation in this town, meeting now in one rented hall and now in another, and rarely able to find adequate accommodation. Now at last we have a home for our church designed by Mr. Merrill of the Department of Architecture of the Home Mission Society. This substantial and commodious building is an indication of the generosity of the Baptists of the Northern States. Rev. G. A. Riggs, general missionary, writes: "We most earnestly thank the home churches for their remembrance of us in their prayers and their financial backing. We crave the continuance of both, for either without the other would mean failure."

The two story addition to our church in Mexico will afford rooms for Sunday-school classes and provide for our rapidly growing work in the large capital of the Republic. This addition was completed the last of August.

Another achievement of the year is the completion of the church and Christian center in San Juan, Porto Rico. The building contains, besides the auditorium and Sunday school rooms, comfortable living quarters for the pastor and his family, industrial and kindergarten class rooms, library and reading room, a dispensary and court for recreation. It is situated on the main thoroughfare leading from the center of the city eastward, with the Carnegie library and Y.M.C.A. buildings in front and to the right of it. The building was dedicated in June of this year.

The Preaching Mood

By CHARLES A. COOK

THE preaching mood may be said to be that condition of mind and heart which the preacher should have when he preaches so that he shall have freedom and joy in preaching, and shall preach impressively and effectively. Without a proper preaching mood the chariot wheels drag heavily in the act of preaching. Without a proper preaching mood the preacher has the distressing experience of beating the air in a vain endeavor to accomplish something for Christ and the good of men. When lacking the real afflatus of a genuine preaching mood the preacher will probably put forth more gymnastic efforts to make an impression than when he is impelled by a deep inner spiritual momentum that puts force into every sentence uttered.

Necessary for Power

A proper preaching mood is necessary to the most effective preaching. We preachers are ever anxious that our preaching shall not be in vain. We sincerely desire that every sermon we preach shall actually count for Christ and the good of men. As true ambassadors for Jesus Christ we cannot be satisfied with ourselves, nor with our ministry, when our sermons neither grip our own souls nor stir the hearts of those who hear them. We are not always in the best mood for preaching. There are times when we shrink from the duty because we do not feel that constraining, or impelling of the Spirit of God, which makes us eager to deliver God's message to men. Such experiences may not be frequent but what preacher is wholly a stranger to them? It is one thing to have a conviction and a consciousness that one verily has a message from God for the people, and be under a real pressure of soul to deliver that message; but quite another thing to go into the pulpit in a sort of mental bondage and inactivity or under a cloud of spiritual depression. Then preaching is a hard fight from the first to last.

The Dynamic That Impels

A proper preaching mood is certainly essential to the preacher's own comfort and joy in preaching. It is the dynamic that impels and inspires. Without it preaching becomes a depressing treadmill experience in which we feel that we go through the motions but do not get anywhere. It is true that sometimes we may at the first be like the soldier in the trenches, nervous and shrinking from the solemn task, but when once we get into action all that disappears and we go forward with eagerness and even enthusiasm.

The message we have to deliver demands a genuine preaching mood. It is the greatest message that can be uttered by human lips. It is the message of infinite love and grace to men, the message of an all-sufficient atonement for the sins of the world, a message concerning God, and Jesus Christ the Saviour, and eternal life through faith in Him. It is a message that has to do with the present and eternal welfare of those to whom we preach. Such a message demands a proper preaching mood. To deliver such a message in a cold and perfunctory way is little less than criminal. It should be delivered under the constraint of the love of Christ, in the power of the Holy Spirit and with a deep concern for the souls of those who hear it.

The great purpose of the preacher's ministry demands a proper preaching mood. It is not to entertain men but to win them to Christ and build them up in Christian knowledge and character. The preacher is to be an advocate of righteousness in every realm of life and activity. He is to be no trimmer of the truth to suit the whims and prejudices of his hearers, but, like the prophets of old, he is to be bold and outspoken in declaring the whole counsel of God.

It may be said that, as a rule, the sermons that do the most good are the sermons which have most deeply gripped the soul of the preacher, and have been delivered under a consciousness of the power of the truth in the preacher's own heart. Of course much depends upon the people whether they are in a proper hearing mood. They will get more from a poor sermon when they come to God's house with prepared minds and hearts, and are in a receptive attitude, than they will from a sermon that might be classed as one of the greatest when they are not in the right state of mind to hear. When the preaching mood and the hearing mood are both absent how hopeless to expect any results of value.

How shall the preacher possess and maintain the preaching mood? There are of course many answers to this question and we can only suggest a few.

The preacher needs always to take his task seriously. We preachers are only human and are apt to sometimes lose sight of the high and holy character of our calling as ministers of Jesus Christ. Ours is the most exalted and solemn ministry ever committed to men. When from any cause our preaching work sinks to the low level of the common-place it will be impossible to have a proper preaching mood.

We need to often meditate upon and appropriate the promise of our risen Lord, "Lo, I am with you always." His presence is evermore our source of inspiration and our only hope of real success. "Without me ye can do nothing." We must be Spirit-filled men if we are to preach in demonstration of the Spirit and of power. The one hundred and twenty were in the preaching mood on the day of Pentecost because they were all filled with the Holy Spirit and spake as the Spirit gave them utterance. Are we ever in a proper preaching mood, the mood in which our Lord would have us be for preaching, unless we are endowed with the Holy Spirit?

The remembrance of our authority to preach will help us maintain a preaching mood. We do not go to this task at our own charges. Nor is our authority from the church. If we are not called of Jesus Christ himself to preach we are without authority. But if he has called and commissioned us to preach he is back of us with all the authority given him in heaven and on earth. In the consciousness of that authority how can we do else than preach with flaming zeal, with compassionate tenderness and unflinching boldness? The Master himself made much of the fact that the Father sent him. He ever taught and preached under a deep sense of the fact that the Father was back of him and with him. He says to us, "As the Father hath sent me even so send I you."

Prayer, much prayer; a devout study of the word of God thereby keeping one's soul in abiding fellowship with the Father; a sympathetic heart interest in our own sermons so that they will affect our own lives before others hear them; sometimes the reading of a sermon by one of the great preachers such as Spurgeon, McLaren, Jowett, will help keep the preacher in a proper preaching mood.

Bringing Together the Preacher and the Church

By C. H. DICKEY

IN 1918 I resigned the pastorate of my church in the West, attended the Chaplain's Training School at Fort Monroe, Virginia, and afterwards went with a unit of the Expeditionary Forces to France.

From an experience in many cantonments in this country, and many months spent abroad in England, France and Germany, I naturally met with a great number of other chaplains from all over the United States, and from almost every denomination.

When the war was over and we all came home, anxious to get back into the pastorate, how different were the methods by which we secured our locations! The chaplains from certain denominations merely reported to their respective denominational H. Qs., and within a short time, were comfortably domiciled and at work in a parish. Some of them had said to me in conversation that they had no fear as to what they should do when they should be discharged from the army; because their denomination would abundantly take care of them.

This gave them a comfortable feeling that the Baptist chaplain never had. He didn't know what would become of him, if he ever got back home. Likely he might find a church; probably not. He knew that he could expect little help from his denomination; for it had no system by which the pastorless church and the preacher without a church might be brought together. And, especially, if he were young and unknown, he had many restless thoughts as to the probability of ever getting located upon his return. Of course, when he went away to a probable death, they all wept on his shoulder, and said that nothing would be too good for him when he returned. And judging by the way our denomination let us alone when we did get back, I suppose that "nothing" was too good for us.

Now, all of this and other considerations have suggested to my mind that our denomination should take some step to be of service to its preachers without churches; and to its churches without preachers. For the church which has no pastor is as anxious to find one, as is the preacher without a location, to find one. But, according to the ethics

Taking Criticism..

By J. M. STIFLER

FEW things show us so plainly how much of the mind of Christ we possess as the way we bear criticism and disappointment. When our hearts are warm with a freshly conceived plan, and ardent to see the accomplishment of it, then to be met with disparagement of our hopes or criticism of ourselves is bitter. Worse than this, it not seldom happens that the ardor of a pure purpose is suddenly transformed into the heat of an angry resentment. What can we do to fit ourselves to meet the test of criticism? It is not sufficient to say that we must always be prepared for opposition, for if we follow this stoical counsel we are likely to put our minds in a case-hardened state against all outside suggestion. Such suggestions, even when they are unwelcome, are often useful. An unkind critic is sometimes the best helper we have, and a determined opponent may be a genuine impetus for us.

If we are quite sure that, in spite of all that is said to the contrary, that which we propose or have done is for the best, then we may with easy conscience stand by our colors. But if the judgment of others, though unkind, happens to be just, as it often is in spite of its unkindness, and if we then open our minds to the good that there is in it and by Christ's grace extract the venom from the unkindness, we have achieved a genuine victory.

For the most unprofitable possession in the world is a grudge against a fellow-man. With our differing hereditary traits, educations, experience, and ways of living and thinking, it is quite impossible that there should not be collisions with those with whom we are living or working. We are like a number of trains trying to go in different directions on the same track. Congestions are certain to come, but a congestion need not degenerate into a collision and a wreck if we will remember that there are plenty of sidings. Now a "siding" is a sort of abbreviated second track whereby trains going in opposite directions may pass each other in safety. In material railways they bear various names; on the invisible pathway of life they are all called Love. Sometimes they are nicknamed forbearance, tolerance, patience, or common sense; but these are all translations of the same thing. So in case of danger, remember the sidings. It is true that we are not always responsible for others' mistaken notions, but we are evermore guilty if we have wilfully allowed a wreck of peace.

This should by no means be taken to mean that we should surrender everything at the first challenge. We are bound by conscience, by faith, by the light which Christ has granted us, to do, as nearly as we possibly can, what we think best. But usually we shall get our journey's end quickest and easiest by not demanding the whole right of way. In this, as in every other practical question on the art of making progress, we must look to Jesus as our great example. His public life was one long series of bitter oppositions, yet he "did no sin, neither was guile found in his mouth: who, when he was reviled, reviled not again; when he suffered, threatened not; but committed himself to him that judgeth righteously." When the Gaderenes will not listen, he leaves them; when accused and abused, with superhuman self-control, knowing that he was truth incarnate, he leaves the matter with the Father as the witness.

Work in Sunday school and church, conducted as it is by the voluntary service of such differing characters, is a great test. Pupils are not always attentive, nor officers grateful; teachers are not always equable; plans are often upset by carelessness or wilful opposition, and support is often withheld when it ought to be given. These things are hard to bear; and the greatest testimony to the power of Christ to reproduce himself is that we do keep together and keep going forward.

The man who loses his temper, or resigns, or balks when opposed, though he were absolutely in the right—which is unusual—has put himself absolutely in the wrong. Some wise man has said that no man ever yet accomplished anything by resigning; and a yet wiser has written that the "wrath of man worketh not the righteousness of God."

The Thrall

*I WEAR around my neck no ring of brass,
As thralls—in days of old,
With graven letters—telling all who pass
Whose slave it holds.*

*I go not to my tasks, my duties, urged
By cruel lash and blow,
Nor seek at night a wretched pallet,
Scourged
In uttermost of woe.*

But Thou, hast locked my fetters, oh, my Lord!

*With love that passeth all;
And graven on my heart the bonding word.
"I am God's thrall."*

*And I go forth to serve Thee, oh, my God!
As eager hinds arise,
With feet that haste, even when they have trod
The way of sacrifice.*

*And proudly, as a jeweled badge, I wear
His mark, who's Lord of all;
Deep graven on my heart the vow I bear.*

"I am God's thrall."

—HENRIETTA JEWETT KEITH in

"Four-o'-clocks."

So far from being the course of weakness, the course which Christ teaches can be followed only by summoning all our strength and manhood, and adding thereto abundant grace and forgiveness. The unthinking may see it as a constant yielding, yet, followed as he marked it out, it is both sweet and irresistible. That cloud of witnesses, the saints who have run and won, bear abundant testimony to the grace of Christ in the manner in which they endured criticism. The very best of men have had to endure biting criticism, and to hear their motives impugned; and they have shown their title to greatness in no better way than the manner in which they bore their cruel load. It is hard to think, for example, that one so beloved and honored as was Phillips Brooks should ever have had to endure this trial. Yet after his election to the bishop's office, the attacks upon him were so virulent that they invaded the peace and quiet of his spotless life and became a burden. Dean Farrar, in "Men I Have Known," records that once, on seeing a caricature of himself in a certain journal, Brooks wrote:

"And this is then the way he looks,
This tiresome creature, Phillips Brooks?
No wonder if 'tis thus he looks,
The Church has doubts of Phillips Brooks!"

Well, if he knows himself, he'll try
To give these doubtful looks the lie.
He dares not promise, but will seek
Even as a bishop to be meek;
To walk the way he shall be shown,
To trust a strength that's not his own,
To fill the years with honest work,
To serve his days and not to shirk;
To quite forget what folks have said,
To keep his heart and keep his head,
Until men, laying him to rest,
Shall say, 'At least he did his best.'"

The little glimpse that these lines, half humorous and half pathetic and wholly sweet, give of the Christ-like way in which this man, as a man, bore the "contradiction" that comes to the greatest as well as the least, gives a broad hint of the real grandeur of his character.

The one thing that we ought not to do when opposed or criticised is to balk and refuse to do anything. The best advice that any one can have who is tempted to do this is to reread every one of those lines of Bishop Brooks which begin with the word "to." To be in this world means that Christ's followers must often wear the crown of thorns crushed upon them by unthinking hands; and to be "in Christ" means that we shall be kept from hating those hands; in the world but, kept from the world's besetting sin of unlove. —From "The Fighting Saint."—(Copyright, 1909, Fleming H. Revel Company.)

The Bulletin Board

North Dakota Springs to It

The whole program adopted by the Northern Baptist Convention at Des Moines, was adopted at Minot with certain definite objectives for North Dakota. These objectives are:

500 added to our churches by baptism by May 1, 1922.

500 members enrolled in Stewardship Leagues.

$60,000 paid on account of New World Movement by May 1, 1922.

The whole program, together with the state objectives will be widely circulated among the churches in September. Copies may be had by applying at the state office.

Expulsion of "Pernicious Foreigners"

With reference to the procedure of the Mexican government in expelling certain foreigners from its domain, Revista Mexicana offers the following explanation:

"In the exercise of the authority conferred upon the President by the Constitution of 1857 and repeated in that of 1917, President Obregon has recently caused several persons coming under that designation to be expelled from the country summarily and by Executive order. Two of these were Americans, several were Spanish, and others were Russians, etc. The Constitution of 1917 also contains the following provision in this connection: 'No foreigner shall meddle in any way whatsoever in the political affairs of the country.' The persons expelled have violated the Constitution in this respect. Every country in the world exercises this same right."

"The Southern Baptist Handbook"

Dr. E. P. Alldredge, secretary of Survey of Statistics and Information, Sunday School Board, Southern Baptist Convention, has put forth a little volume under the above title which should be on the desk of every pastor, secretary and church member who is charged with promoting intelligence among our Baptist church members. It includes a list of Southern ministers, and furnishes a directory to our whole Southern Baptist organization in one handy volume which can always be within arm's reach of those who have need for such help. The price is $1.

How Can We Help Them Better?

Certain prominent leaders in the Baptist denomination suggest that Baptists throughout the United States unite in praying for the three Baptist men at the head of the British and American governments, namely, Lloyd George, Mr. Hughes and President Harding. They suggest that at the noon hour we lift our hearts praying for these men, that they may have wisdom to meet the critical questions that come to them continually. One of those who originated the suggestion asks: "Can we give the matter publicity?"

I do not know just what is the wise way to do. Certainly these are Baptist men and it would be a helpful and beautiful thing for Baptists everywhere to pray that they may have wisdom." It seems that Rev. John Erb ought to have credit for originating the suggestion.

Begins to Recognize Its Friends

The American Federation of Labor Convention in Denver, in appreciation of action taken during the year on the open shop movement by the National Catholic Welfare Council, the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America and the American Conference of Jewish Rabbis, resolved, thereby expressing its highest esteem to the above mentioned religious organizations for their most splendid efforts to acquire full information as it relates to the industrial situation and its effect upon the wage-earners and their dependents; therefore be it; and further, "that the declarations by these organizations are hereby recognized as intelligent and most humane documents of inestimable value to the organized workers and the public in general."

What do They do With it All?

The New York State Department of Labor gave out on July 27, a statement concerning the wage changes for the preceding month and the preceding year in the ten chief industries of the State. The present average weekly earnings are as follows:

Stone, clay and glass .....	$26.94
Metals and machinery .....	27.79
Wood manufactures .....	24.85
Furs, leather and rubber goods ..	25.22
Chemicals, oils and paints .....	26.61
Paper manufacture .....	26.47
Printing and paper goods .....	30.33
Textiles .....	20.78
Clothing .....	23.28
Food, beverages and tobacco .....	24.48

It will be noted that in four of these industries, including food and clothing, the average is below $25.00 a week. The average for all industries is only $25.71. Even so, the average reduction for the entire year is only $3.06 a day.

Refugee Children in Manchuria

The story of how refugee children in Harbin, Manchuria, are being cared for has reached this country. They came from middle Russia, from Siberia and from nearer towns where unsettled conditions had broken up their family life. They were found in cold, miserable quarters which they had taken up in old broken box cars. Some had undertaken to make their homes underneath these cars by slinging up pitiful bits of matting to protect them from the chilling wind.

A committee was organized to help these refugees out of what would have been a winter of terrible suffering. It was composed of the wife of the manager of the Chinese Eastern Railroad, the daughter of General Rominsky, a former governor of all Eastern Siberia, the head secretary of the American Y. M. C. A., and the superintendent of schools.

The army supplied some barracks for sleeping quarters, good hearted citizens provided warm clothes, and refugee Russians volunteered as school teachers. Every morning at nine o'clock the children gathered at the Y. M. C. A. Hut where the lessons were taught. But before these began, hot tea with milk and sugar, and white bread were served. At noon time rye bread and hot soup were provided. The children were, on first attending school, shy, lifeless and pale. Now they are rosy-cheeked and happy, with high spirits and genuine hope for the future.

Not Afraid of This Creed.

The "Social Creed of the Churches" has been translated into Spanish for the use of the churches in Chile. This is the first work done by the new Sub-Committee on Social Service of the Committee on Co-operation in Chile. The committee has made something of a sensation and the President of the Republic has called for extra copies of the pamphlet.

"Our Cooperative Cafeteria"

An adaptation of the Rochdale plan for consumers' co-operation has been meeting with a significant degree of success in New York City during the past year. "Our Co-operative Cafeteria" was started as a co-operative enterprise in April, 1920. It is incorporated under the laws of New York State and its capital stock of $4,400 is divided into 880 shares at $5.00 each.

"Honest goods, at cost; through democratic control." This is the goal which the cafeteria has set itself to achieve.

Membership is always open with shares at par and the only requirement for membership is the purchase of two $5.00 shares of stock and the payment of an initiation fee of 25 cents. No member may hold more than 40 shares or $200.00 worth of stock. During the first year of operation, completed April 1, 1921, the membership grew to 397. The members and patrons include many religious and social workers.

Luncheon and dinner are served at the cafeteria and the food is sold at market prices. Under this policy seven to ten per cent of the gross income remains as "net earnings."

The indebtedness incurred for the opening of the initial venture was cleared off by the fall of 1920 and by February, 1921, the condition of the business warranted the opening of a second cafeteria. The net earnings for the year were $5,950.00. After the deductions for the interest on shares, reserve fund, educational fund, and Federal taxes, $1,788.32 was left to distribute in rebates to members.

"Zion's Herald" Insults the Baptist Denomination

(Reprinted from the Watchman-Examiner of August 25, 1921)

Zion's Herald, of Boston, one of the most influential Methodist papers in the land, openly and flagrantly insults the Northern Baptist Convention. We are charitable enough to believe that its editors are uninformed rather than malicious, but ignorance that can be avoided does not justify wrong doing.

We print the entire editorial of Zion's Herald, which appeared July 27 under the heading "Funeral Expenses of Fundamentalism." The editorial follows:

It cost exactly $1,750,000 to bury fundamentalism, but the price was moderate considering the service rendered not only to the Baptist denomination but to the rest of the Christian world. The acceptance by the Home Mission Society of this amount with its creedal attachment from an anonymous donor, and the approval of this action by the Northern Baptist Convention at its recent session in Des Moines have settled the case of fundamentalism.

In an editorial three weeks ago, entitled "God or Mammon?" the Herald pointed out the outrageous ethics of this transaction, but it was little dreamed at that time that the reaction against the whole cult of fundamentalism would reach such astounding proportions. The foremost church leaders in the various denominations and the editors of the leading religious journals of the country are unseparably in their denunciation of ecclesiastical bribery. Even secular magazines and newspapers have joined in the outcry against this attempt to stifle Christian thinking. The most auspicious sign of all in connection with this incident, however, is the commendable arraignment of the ark-savers by the progressive leaders of the Baptist Church itself. "The Baptist," the leading journal of that church, comes out in a recent editorial under the caption "Fundamentalism Is Dead." Elsewhere in this issue readers of the Herald will find an extract from an incisive little pamphlet, "Shall Baptists Adopt a Creed?" written by Professor Richard M. Vaughan, of the Newton Theological Institution. Dr. Vaughan sounded the warning of this pamphlet at Des Moines and tried with other strong men of his stamp to save his denomination from the threatening disaster, but the money power was too strong and the day was lost. The Herald was reluctant immediately at the close of the Des Moines meeting to comment at any length on this incident for considerations of denominational courtesy, but now that Baptist leaders have spoken so plainly, the whole matter appears to be open for the widest discussion.

The ratification by the Convention of the acceptance of the gift to the Home Mission Society has revealed fundamentalism in such a bad ethical light that even the sinful old world turns from the incident with loathing. It was an attempt to rule by force, and therefore an open confession of weakness. Finding that fundamentalism could not win on its merits, by the sheer power of its ideas and ideals, its disciples resorted to money. Had the Convention been held a few centuries ago they would have sent troops.

Fundamentalism is indeed dead and buried. We may hope now for the wider spread of vital Christianity and the larger prosperity of the unification movement whereby all the various denominations may be brought closer together under the leadership of our Lord and Master.

The Watchman-Examiner has had for Zion's Herald admiration and respect, but we solemnly declare that the foregoing editorial comes perilously near to placing Zion's Herald outside the pale of decency and respectability. A partisan political paper would hardly descend to so low a level. It charges Baptists in Convention assembled with having sold their liberty for filthy lucre. It holds up a great Christian denomination to scorn and ridicule.

It not only distorts the facts but publishes for the facts statements that are contrary to the facts. By a vote of almost two to one our Home Mission Society (one of the co-operating societies of the Northern Convention) commended its board for accepting a certain large gift to which doctrinal conditions were attached. This is the action that causes Zion's Herald to froth at the mouth. This is the action that causes Zion's Herald to forget denominational courtesy and Christian fraternity.

What is the animus of this action on the part of Zion's Herald? Why should the editors of a paper of one denomination lose their heads and hurl insults at another denomination in this age of Christian fraternity and good-will? The editorial printed here explains it all. Zion's Herald hates fundamentalism and fundamentalists as it hates the devil. It has learned that the conservatives were in the majority at Des Moines and that the commendation of the action of the board of the Home Missions Society in accepting the gift with conditions is counted a conservative victory. It dares to impugn the motives of this conservative majority and maliciously declares that their mode of procedure would in earlier days have taken the form of "troops," that is, of armed force!

Now the preposterous thing in this intolerable editorial of Zion's Herald is that the editor agrees with the editor of The Baptist that "Fundamentalism is dead." It says: "The Baptist, the leading journal of that church, (sic) comes out in a recent editorial under the caption 'FUNDAMENTALISM IS DEAD.'" Doubtless this is where Zion's Herald got its information. Having heard from "the leading journal" of the Baptists that fundamentalism is dead the Herald proceeded to write its brilliant editorial on "The Funeral Expenses of Fundamentalism." Brilliantly it declares that "the ratification by the Convention of the gift to the Home Mission Society has revealed fundamentalism in such a bad ethical light that even the sinful old world turns from the incident with loathing." We must admit that The Baptist's pupil has gone much farther than The Baptist itself, but probably now The Baptist will see the danger of trying to startle the world by sensational headlines.

Beyond the shadow of doubt we have fallen on evil days. The faith of our fathers is rejected by many who are called by the name of Christ, and those who are seeking to promote the faith of our fathers are held up to ridicule and scorn. What shall be done? Shall those who hold to the faith of our fathers, in the interest of peace give up the battle? "Why cry peace, peace, when there is no peace?"

This paper dedicates itself afresh to the cause that it has espoused. It stands unhesitatingly and unequivocally for the Confession of Faith adopted at Des Moines. It will continue to stand for fundamentalism, which according to The Baptist is dead, and which according to Zion's Herald is buried.

N.B. 1. The Baptist now confesses that it did not exactly mean that fundamentalism is exactly dead.

N.B. 2. Under the circumstances, maybe Zion's Herald has been a little too precipitate with the funeral oration and the burial.

[THE BAPTIST also is jealous of the honor of the denomination, and resents any intimation that our Baptist brotherhood in its action at Des Moines was actuated by any but the most honorable Christian motives.

In view of certain confusing references to THE BAPTIST in this article the editors wish to call attention to the following facts:

1. In our issue of July 9 and consistently ever since this paper has accepted, indorsed and recommended the Des Moines Confession as a representative statement of Baptist doctrine.

2. Before the meeting of the convention, THE BAPTIST discussed the advisability of accepting gifts with creedal conditions attached but neither during nor since the convention has it said anything in criticism of the action taken nor of the actors on either side. The caption "Fundamentalism is Dead," was not used in connection with the consideration of that subject.

3. THE BAPTIST believes that the denomination as a whole is conservative. It has consistently represented this great body whose history and faith it exalts and whose mission and program it will continue to promote. Its only offense has been that it has refused to follow extremists whether they were called "modernists" or "fundamentalists."—The Editors.]

Dug Up Herod

The New York Times correspondent was informed recently that Professor Garstang, director of the British School of Archaeology at Jerusalem, was preparing a report on the discovery made in the excavations at Askalon, where the buried Biblical city is being investigated.

Digging is now going on around the famous cloisters which inclosed the great court built by Herod. A description of the wonderful workmanship of this court is given by Josephus. It is only one of the many splendid buildings which the ambitious Herod set up. Besides the court some enormous statues have been unearthed. Among these are figures of Apollo, Venus and Victory and a giant statue of Herod himself.

Falling Into Line

The opposition of the Pittsburgh Employers' Association to the Young Women's Christian Association, had a measure of success in Los Angeles and Pittsburgh, where budget campaigns were unsuccessful. Throughout the rest of the country the reaction has been favorable to the Association and a large number of people who were not likely to contribute under the old regime are now coming forward with help. The big business men of Chicago who are connected with the Association, after looking the social creeds over pronounced them all right and gave the signal "Full speed ahead." It is rumored that the Pittsburgh employers themselves have requested the resignation of the secretary, Mr. Long, who was responsible for the boomerang.

International Uniform Lesson for September 18

ABSTINENCE FOR THE SAKE OF OTHERS.

I Cor. 10:23-33; 3:16-17. Golden Text:
I Cor. 10:31.

The Lesson Text

This scripture is designed to serve two purposes, viz., to keep the student in touch with the life and letters of Paul and to provide a text for the regular temperance lesson. Paul had many questions to answer when he wrote his first letter to the Corinthians. Among the many questions was one concerning the propriety of Christians eating food that had been offered to pagan idols. The answer is very clear and convincing. Common sense must dictate the Christians' attitude and action in any given case. The general principle must always be recognized that in all things in which moral law is not involved the Christian is free to indulge or refrain according to his best judgment. Many things in this category must be left to the occasion and to the good sense of the persons affected by the particular circumstances. That is Paul's position on all matters not fundamental and vital to the Christian faith.

The Lesson Taught

There are three reasons for abstinence, viz., for the sake of self, for the sake of others and for the sake of Christ.

For Self

Self has its rights. The word, "selfless," may serve to indicate unselfishness for lack of a better word, but in reality nothing connected with human life and action is selfless. The self is the basis of all personality, individual consciousness, moral responsibility, social fellowships and religious life. The second great commandment recognizes this principle as basic in guiding social love by self-love. "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." Therefore the first motive for abstinence is self-preservation, self-development, self-improvement. This is the basis of appeal in 1st Corinthians 3:16-17, and 6:19-20. The body with all its powers is regarded as holy, as the temple was regarded as holy. The things that defile, disintegrate, destroy the body and its remarkable powers must be abstained from. That is abstinence for the sake of self. Paul himself practised this principle. In this same letter to the Corinthians he tells them that he buffeted his body and brought it into bondage lest after he had preached to others he himself might be a castaway. (1 Cor. 9:24-27.)

For Others

Abstinence that ends in self-preservation also ends in self-centralization.

There is still a higher motive for abstinence than self-improvement, health and longevity. The lesson suggests that abstinence for the sake of others is the Christian principle. For the sake of the weakness of others is the first consideration. Paul was so clear on moral distinctions that he could eat anything fit for human food without conscientious scruples. Good beefsteak had not lost any of its food value by having been offered in sacrifice to idols, because an idol was nothing. Therefore Paul was free to eat it. But he makes it perfectly clear both in his letters to the Corinthians and to the Romans that if a weak brother is likely to take offense or stumble, or if his action is in danger of being misunderstood he will abstain out of deference to the limitations of others. That is the fine spirit of Christianity. The application of this principle will suggest itself in all modern matters which involve the conscientious scruples of Christians who have grown neither in the grace nor in the knowledge of Jesus; but who insist that things purely incidental and indifferent are of the highest moral importance. Some good Christians do not believe in jewelry as a part of one's dress. Shall we offend them by wearing our jewelry among them? Or shall we not rather lay it aside out of respect for their conscience? If we are among Catholics shall we abstain from meat on Friday on the principle of abstinence for the sake of others? How far shall we carry the principle of abstinence for the sake of others? No academic answer can be given to this question. It is left to the liberty and good sense of the Christian to adopt himself to the circumstances as they arise. Christian liberty is a precious boon, and there is only one thing greater: that is the surrender of liberty for the sake of others.

For Christ

Abstinence for Christ's sake is the highest possible motive of self-restraint. Christ himself is the loftiest type of abstinence for the sake of others. He abstained from exercising his rights and prerogatives as the Son of God when he emptied himself taking upon himself the form of servant and being made in the likeness of men. He abstained from the exercise of power when His enemies taunted him, tormented him and finally nailed him to a tree. He had in mind the ignorance that contributed to his crucifixion when prayed "Father, forgive them, they know not what they do." Jesus abstained from judgment and retaliation. When we practice abstinence for the sake of Christ we are living his life over again, and demonstrating to our own satisfaction and to his honor that the kingdom of God can be extended among men only as those who claim to be Christians abstain from every form of evil and from many things that are not evil because they are not expedient or not constructive. This is the thought Paul had in mind when he wrote to the Corinthians about reforming from certain practices for the Gospel's sake. The Gospel and the Christ of the Gospel are judged by the world on the basis of those who profess to follow Christ. If the practice of self-restraint and abstinence and poise is lacking, and we are all the time insisting upon our rights and our liberties, the world will have cause to conclude that either we have a poor brand of the Christian religion or the Christian religion itself is largely a theory incapable of practice. The honor of Christ is involved in abstinence as well as in action.

Things the Pastor Sees from the Pulpit

1. Some folks always coming in punctually late.
2. Others always in the same place where they seem to belong.
3. Some irreverence at the beginning of the service; not much, but some, and some is too much.
4. Strangers without any hymn books and no one offering them any. It makes him feel nervous. How would you feel?
5. When the offering baskets are passed, some folks look at them as if they had never seen them before, and wondered what they were.
6. Once in a while a few people come in after the baskets are passed. I do not think they do it on purpose.
7. There are faces that are a benediction to look at, and a few, only a few, that seem to be mourning over the money they lost yesterday.
8. Once in a while a man, now and then a woman, who seems to be asleep; but appearances are deceptive.
9. Folks he has baptized, and married, and laughed with and cried with. He does not always see them distinctly.
10. And many other things he sees from the pulpit; and let us hope that most of the things he sees help him to preach when he rises to give his message.—Dr. Charles M. Sheldon, in "The Christian Herald."

*"O Thou to whose all searching sight,
The darkness shineth as the light:
Renew my heart—at pants for Thee;
O burst these bonds, and set it free.*

*"Wash out its stains; refine its dress;
Nail my affections to the cross;
Hallow each thought; let all within
Be clean as Thou, my Lord, art clean."*

On The Trail of The Lonesome Pine.

The Meeting Which was Half-a-Mile Long!

THE second day of my visit at Lucinda's she received an invitation in the mail which surely was the last word in alluringness; and since, right beside the prim little green pine tree, it especially stated that a friend would be welcome also, she asked me to come with her to the September meeting which the invitation said was to be "half a mile long," namely, from the end of the Ellsworth Avenue car-line along something the committee called the "Trail of the Lonesome Pine"! We thought it sounded right unique, and I, for one, was keen to go, although back home in Dudley you couldn't get wild horses to drag me to one of their missionary meetings. You see I've never had my eyes opened to anything but the dreary Dudley dullness, we being awfully set in our ways. Back home, "moveable meetings" were simply unheard of! as well as other new things I never felt called on to change.

Well, promptly at 2:30 'on the day set, Lucinda and I turned up at the designated spot and there were several dozen others already there, buzzing so cheerfully that my spirits rose right up.

"This won't be what you'd call a meeting, Cindy," I whispered, adding a "Glory be!" to myself.

"Now just you wait, Dinah!" said she, smiling. For of course Lucinda knew her hostess, while I didn't.

When it became certain that we were all there, the committee hung a green cardboard pine tree around each of our necks, the necklace being a long green string. On the pine tree was written the itinerary of the half-mile meeting as follows:

ON THE TRAIL OF THE LONESOME PINE.

- Stop 1. The Trees of the Wood Shall Clap Their Hands.
- Stop 2. Beside Still Waters.
- Stop 3. The Root of the Whole Matter.
- Stop 4. The Lonesome Pine.

On the back were the words of a hymn, as I will tell you later on.

The committee led the way and we scuffled through the crisp autumn leaves behind them until we came to a great oak tree where we sat down on fallen logs and piles of leaves, for what strictly speaking was to be the "devotional exercises," but not the "dead as a door nail" kind we have back home, when we sing with meek in-growing voices and pray as if we were being terribly cheeky to come at the Lord again for the same old things. Now that I've visited Lucinda I begin to see there are more real things to ask for than the smattering we used to plaster over things in general. For when the mellow afternoon sun glinted through the oak leaves it seemed as if "the leaves of the tree really were clapping their hands." They clapped and clapped. I didn't wonder when I heard all the thankful reasons the leader gave!

She began by reading a wonderful chapter from Isalah which goes like this in spots (no doubt you know all of it yourself!) "Ho! Everyone that thirsteth, come ye to the waters, and he that hath no money, come ye, buy, and eat.... seek ye the Lord while he may be found.... let the wicked forsake his way.... my word shall not return unto me void but shall accomplish the thing whereto I sent it.... ye shall go out with joy.... all the trees of the wood shall clap their hands.... instead of the thorn, shall come up the pine tree...."

No sooner was she done reading those striking words, just made for outdoors, than she picked up an acorn saying (straight at me, unbeknownst to her!) "Perhaps you're wondering why the trees of the wood clap their hands and whether instead of the thorn, has come the pine tree! I think," said she, "that this acorn typifies the true reason for the hand-clapping. As Dr. Lyman Abbott once did, I hold this acorn in my hand and it seems to say to me: 'By and by I'm going to be a place where birds of the air can build their nests! By and by I'm going to be used to build great houses and men will warm themselves beside me on cold winter evenings. By and by I will be the ribs of a great vessel and the tempest will buffet against me in vain as I carry men over the oceans!' But I said: 'O foolish little acorn, how canst thou be all this?' And the little acorn answers: 'God and I: .... God and I!'"

Can't you picture us sitting there peering up into the great sturdy branches of the overshadowing oak, while the leaves of the tree clapped their hands at recalling what a mere acorn had become? Then in her clever, earnest way she showed us as great a marvel—how in the year 1871 a few Baptist women, amid disapproval and scoffings and discouragements galore, organized a Woman's Foreign Missionary Society—oh, such a small beginning, yet they too dreamed deep dreams of what they would one day become. And from that 1871 acorn of faith, has grown a great denominational oak tree! Instantly up jumped five other ladies to name the five branches of that woman's missionary oak:—the educational branch, the evangelistic branch, the medical branch, the asylum branch, the miscellaneous branch. This isn't the time to report all they said about their special branches, but I shall never forget how each of them closed with the same words as she pointed to the leaves falling from her branch: "Oh women, nothing is ever wasted in the economy of God; even as that falling leaf goes back to enrich mother nature and help other things to grow, so every pupil leaving our Baptist Schools (or patients leaving our hospitals, etc.) goes home to spread the wonderful richness of life in Christ Jesus."

Do you wonder that with those branches visualized and with those autumn leaves silently lifting their hands in prayer, we Baptist women below suddenly knew how to pray for blessings to result from each smallest activity?

We walked along to our next stop singing "The Morning Light is Breaking;" then we reached a lovely placid little stream, all speckled with sunlight and dabbled with leaves, beside which stood a young woman draped in several yards of cheesecloth, put on in the fashion of a Hindu Sari. Before she spoke we sang the verses of the hymn written on our green cardboard programs:

"As pants the heart for cooling stream
When heated by the chafe,
So longs my soul for thee, Oh God,
And thy redeeming grace!"

Then, as we sat on convenient rocks and boulders and banks she told a very wistful and beautiful true story called "The God of the Pill Bottle."* With tender words she painted the picture of a bent Hindu grannie into whose village one of our women doctors had come for one brief day, not only to bring healing medicine but also to tell the good news of the True God. Yet alas, so brief was the visit and so surprising, that no one of those hungry ignorant heathen could ever recall His name, and eventually their thirst for Him caused the poor old woman to set out a pilgrimage to find this God of the Pill Bottle. It was a warm, gripping little story—an example of "Ho, Everyone that Thirsteth." Imagine what a climax it was to hear soft music and a voice singing (at the close of the story) that marvelous aria from the "Elijah" oratorio:

"O that I knew where I might find Him...."

* This story may be found in booklet "The Blue Cotton Nurse" issued by Lit. Dep't., Board of Promotion, 276 Fifth Ave., New York.

If with all your hearts ye truly seek Him...."

(You see, they had put a Victor machine into the automobile which carried the luncheon!)

Do you wonder we marched on to the next stop singing with real fervor, "We've a Story to Tell to the Nations"? At this next stopping place stood a girl in a Chinese costume, who told us another true story in quaint broken English about the days of persecution in China when the Boxers ran riot. The girl was gifted with enough dramatic skill to make the simple little tale a living episode for all of us.*

By this time you can picture me, as used to be "agin" all meeting, waxing warm-hearted over this visible demonstration that a great oak has slowly emerged from a very little missionary acorn, that every smallest leaf on the tree of life counts in redeeming the world, that millions of people are thirsting for the water of life, that the roots of devotion to Christ are grounded in a love of His word!

It is true that we ate a very delicious luncheon under the Lonesome Pine, but I was day-dreaming all through it, wishing the folks in my church back home could have a meeting half-a-mile long! And do you know, I don't see why we couldn't; for there are lots of nice woodsy walks all around the edge of town with suggestive trees and even our most unathletic ladies might be enveigled to set out on the trail of the Lonesome Pine. I've got a talisman in my pocket this minute, so that when I get cold feet over planting this new idea in our conservative community I pull out a little acorn and it whispers to me: "God and I!... God and I!"

The B In Bill's Bonnet!

BY PEGGY

NO sooner had Timothy a grasshopper for a pet than I adopted a colony of ants, so poor Bill began worrying over HIS lack of a pet.

"What'll I chose, anyhow?" he would keep saying, until Uncletim solved the problem by saying at breakfast one morning: "Bill, my boy, you've got a B in your brain!"

"And in his bonnet," I added.

"Bees it shall be, then," said Bill, "but I don't know where to find them, do you?"

Uncletim smiled knowingly, and after breakfast we all filed out after Uncletim to the yard, where, under the leaves of the bicycle house, we saw a curious little bee "house." Uncletim told us all about it, how the mother bee is just as much a carpenter as the ants I told you about last week, for after she selects a house she begins biting out pieces of wood with her strong, cutting jaws, which have very very strong muscles to bore really wonderful tunnels. We were lucky to find one at work, and she seemed almost human as she moved round and round in her little hole to make all sides of the "hall-way" even. It was the nicest little hall-way, about as long as she herself, and very smooth.

From this entrance hall she began boring tunnels several inches long which we could not see, of course, but we could see the sawdust and chips which her back legs kept kicking outdoors! Uncletim says there are stiff bristly hairs on these hind legs, which serve as brooms to brush the clutter away. Isn't that marvelous?

In these little tunnels were many separate rooms (nurseries, really!) which the mother bee made by glueing together bits of sawdust and chips to form partition walls. In every such separate "nursery" she placed a loaf of bee-bread, which Uncletim says is made of pollen from flowers held together and sweetened by honey. All my life I have seen the little "busy bee" buzzing from morning-glories to hollyhocks, then into the honey-suckle vine, then over to the clover, but little did I dream what she was up to!

"You see," explained Uncletim, "when she finally goes home, her hind legs are covered with pollen dust, and from this she must make about a dozen loaves of bee-bread, about the size of a kidney bean! It takes time for her to gather all that pollen and that honey, just as it takes your mother lots of time to go marketing. When all the "bread" is ready she puts one in each nursery cell, and a bee egg is laid on top, which soon develops into a grub."

"What a name!" cried Bill, "what does this grub do anyhow?"

"Just eats and eats and eats all day, until it turns into a worm. What? do you mean to tell me that you and Peggy don't know that that worm (or larva, which is the real name!) lives in the nursery cell all winter long? Why, it's a marvelous story, that! Then when the warm spring days come it will grow some gauzy wings, ready to sail outdoors and be a carpenter bee itself."

Timothy and Bill and I stood there speechless! To think we had had baby bees in nursery cells in our own back yard all last winter, and didn't know it. Uncletim promised Bill a book on bees by a famous man named Henri Fabre; so next summer we will know a lot more to tell you about the queen bee, the drones, swarming and other things in the life of a bee. Don't you really think we have even more interesting pets than kittens and puppies and ponies could have been? They are such helpless animals! Imagine a puppy making a clever little house and sweeping it out with his hind legs!

Or a pony making bread! Or a kitten collecting honey! It simply isn't "done" in the world of animal pets. Although someday soon I want to tell you about the beaver Uncletim took us to see!

A "Sting" Contest

(All words end in "sting")

1. What sting is good for tired boys? (Resting)
2. What sting cures hungry boys?
3. What sting tidies a girl's room?
4. What sting does the cook use for cooking meat?
5. What sting makes your mother laugh?
6. What sting makes marshmallows brown?
7. What sting is never boring?
8. What sting believes every word it hears?

(Answers given next week.)

A "Bee" Contest

(All words begin with "be.")

1. A bee that takes off your head. (Be-head.)
2. A bee that says "look out! danger!"
3. A bee that gives something away.
4. A bee that explains the reason why.
5. A bee in the 5th chapter of Mathew's gospel.
6. A bee that is always very early.
7. A bee that is always very late.
8. A bee that is always starting something.
9. A bee that is never up above.
10. A bee that always acts correctly.
11. A bee that sees things.

(Answers given next week.)

Answers to Last Week's Contest

How many of these aunts in your family?

1. Truant. 2. Pliant. 3. Pleasant. 4. Elegant. 5. Termagant. 6. Stagnant. 7. Restaurant. 8. Currant. 9. Malignant.

Bees and Honey In the Bible

1. What land is described in the Bible as flowing with milk and honey? (Exodus 3:7-8)
2. What is sweeter than honey and the honey-comb? (Psalm 19:10)
3. What very strong man found honey in a peculiar place? What riddle did he make? (Judges 14:5-9, 12-18.)
4. What does Solomon say about wisdom and honey? (Proverbs 24:13,14.)
5. What is told of Jonathan and honey? (1 Samuel 14:24-29.)
6. Who ate locusts and wild honey in the desert? (Matthew 3:4-6)

Things Are Not Always As They Sound

The pipers are not made of pipes,
And cowards are not made of cows;
And lyres are not made of lies,
While bowers are not made of bows.
The wickets are not made of wicks,
And candles are not made of cans;
And tickets are not made of ticks,
While panels are not made of pans.
The cattle are not made of cats,
While willows are not made of wills,
And battles are not made of bats.

Topic for September 18.

SINS OF THE TONGUE

James 3:1-12

"So the tongue also is a little member, and boasteth great things.

Behold, how much wood is kindled by how small a fire!"

1. Untamable this! The author of this chapter must have had some bitter experiences with the "tattling" brethren and sisters of his home church. He states you can tame most any kind of bird or beast; creeping things and the like, but the tongue, not so. The author has done us a real service in keeping before us a warning against this fire-brand. When the writer was a lad in the hills of south Mississippi, we used to have very dry seasons. The neighborhood constantly dreaded the breaking out of a fire. There were many dead trees; the underbrush was thick. Occasionally such fires would break out and the whole countryside would be called in to "fight." The fire would climb the tall, dead trees. Burning pieces of chaff would be blown for hundreds of yards and set fire to other timbers. Thus the fire would go for miles at times, threatening everything in its wake. James says this is the sort of "member" the tongue is—uncontrollable.

2. What are some of the sins of the tongue? Falseness, deceit, misrepresentation, exaggeration, flattery, gossip, verbosity, criticism, etc. Who of the human race have not suffered from one or more of these?

3. Good people guilty. Seemingly some of the best people in our churches are guilty. Even the grace of God does not seem to have straightened out this kink. A man or woman of the extreme type can almost wreck the best church in the land. To such sources may be traced the reason why some churches have a "procession" of pastors. The usual announcement that brother so and so has moved on account of his wife's health should be replaced by the bald truth that some brother or sister or both could not control their tongues.

4. How overcome these sins? The same way any other sin is overcome. It takes discipline with a heart full of genuine old-time religion. Some people are of the gossiping type now because they started tattling when they were young. Now, they cannot help it. We will just have to excuse them and ask the Lord to forgive them. If you as a young person find yourself falling into any of the above mentioned sins, stop right now. Ask the Lord to help you. Else in later years you will have many heart sorrows. Be positive. Say something good about some body when you are tempted to say unkind things. Call the attention of your young friends to the fact that it is sinful and very harmful to gossip. Begin now among your schoolmates. Learn passages from the third of James and quote to them when the occasion justifies a rebuke.

Your Question Answered.

What is the test of a good officer? His willingness and ability to do the thing for which he is chosen. Either neglected, he is inefficient. If the young person is willing and lacks training there is every opportunity for overcoming this lack. Intensive study over a short period will be of inestimable value. The young fellow who is qualified but has "no mind to work" is a failure unless he changes his attitude of mind. To be sure, we expect to find in every officer a fine spirit of consecration and loyalty to Christ. But consecration and loyalty both involve a working program. And a working program involves study and work.

What are the duties of group captains? They must have oversight of all members of the group. They should not always lead the group in the meetings, but must always be on the alert for leaders within the group. When discovered, these young people must be pushed forward to lead and to help in preparation of programs. Under the direction of the group captains. The captains should serve as members of the program committee; represent the groups in the executive committee; cooperate with membership committee and suggest ways and means for building up the group; provide groups with proper material; see that accurate records are kept; push all social plans and take a leading part in promoting daily Bible reading and study, also mission study courses.

What committees are essential? A well-organized society should have the following committees: Program, membership, missionary, finance, educational, music, social and social service, each composed of three members or more. Special committees may be appointed when necessary.

What are some special books on young people's activities? "The Efficient Young People's Society," by Case; "Baptist Young People at Work," by Detweiler; "Re-Statement of Baptist Principles," by Jones; "The Church a Field of Service," by Rust; "The Young Christian and the Early Church," by Whitaker; "B. Y. P. U. Handbook," by White; "You and Your Church," by Kirtley. All of these may be secured from our own American Baptist Publication Society.

What shall we play? You will find the answer to this question in the following books: "Ice-Breakers"—Geister; "Just For Fun"; "Social Plans for Young People"; "The Book of a Hundred Games"; "Bright Ideas for Entertaining." (From "Our B. Y. P. U.")

Specials.

THE MICHIGAN-WANUS tribe of Michigan Baptist young people raised over $600 last July to take the Roumanian Band with them to the Cincinnati Convention. Mr. Glading of Detroit writes that plans are now under way to raise $1,000 to send all Detroit pastors to the St. Paul convention of 1922.

THE MIAMI clan of Hoosiers held a great B. Y. P. U. rally at Franklin, Sunday, August 7. This was planned in connection with the regular summer assembly. The attendance was large. Enthusiastic reports were given of the Cincinnati Convention. Mr. M. M. McGorrell had charge of the young people's group during the assembly program.

THE LONE STAR STATE: Secretary Gardner's annual report shows that state B. Y. P. U. workers visited 237 unions during the year; 451 B. Y. P. U. diplomas were issued; 132,483 enlisted in Daily Bible Reading while 1,321 dedicated their lives for special Christian work.

INTERMEDIATE B. Y. P. U. work during the Washington Assembly at Burton, Vashon Island was directed by Miss Nan Heflin of Tacoma. Intermediate interests hold a large place in the thinking of Western Washington young people. They know the senior union must have recruits.

B. J. BADGER

of Tulsa, Okla. was elected one of the vice-presidents of the B. Y. P. U. of America. Mr. Badger is only twenty years of age. The story went the rounds at the Cincinnati convention that Mr. Badger borrowed a pair of Secretary White's hose to keep his pompadour in shape for the sessions of the big convention.

Visitation of Mission Fields

Foreign Secretary, Rev. P. H. J. Lerrigo, M.D., of the Foreign Mission Society sailed from New York on July 16 for England, where he has been holding conferences with the British Baptist Missionary Society. From England he went to Brussels, where he conferred with the representatives of the Belgian government, particularly with the officials interested in all phases of work and progress in their Belgian Congo territory.

From Brussels Dr. Lerrigo sailed for West Africa, and at this very moment is doubtless near his destination at Matadi. He plans to visit all of the mission stations of the Foreign Mission Society in the Congo, and in addition, will see something of the missionary work done by other denominations.

After attending the interdenominational conference at Bolengi far up the Congo River, which is scheduled to be held in November, Dr. Lerrigo will return to America, probably arriving in January. This is the first time that our Congo mission has received an official secretarial visit, authorized by the board of managers, although a general commission visited the field about a dozen years ago.

On August 20 Foreign Secretary, Rev. J. C. Robbins, accompanied by Mrs. Robbins, sailed from New York for British India. Dr. Robbins will likewise confer with the British Baptist Missionary Society, particularly with reference to mutual problems in missionary activity in India. From England he will proceed direct to Rangoon, Burma. His itinerary includes the four missions of the Foreign Mission Society in British India, namely, Burma, Assam, Bengal-Orissa and South India. In addition to attending the mission conferences he plans also to attend the National Missionary Council to be held in Bombay Presidency in January.

Any reader of the secular press can well imagine that there are grave and pressing problems emerging just now in India because of the new awakening; and these problems are destined to have far-reaching effects on the conduct of missionary work. Secretary Robbins has an unusually difficult task before him, and all friends of missions will be deeply interested in his study of our work in India.

Northfield Conferences

By AMBERT E. MOORE

Conferences are founded upon ideals. They attract leaders and people accordingly. Those that have to do with the greatest things attract the greatest men. Each in its own field of effort seeks the leaders best fitted to present its ideals—each organizes its efforts and arranges its plans for the greatest possible degree of efficiency.

That a most successful season is closing at Northfield cannot be doubted. The intensifying of spiritual power is the underlying ideal. Men of wide repute well known for their erudition and spirituality were secured as leaders, and the Spirit gave them power.

The judgment of brief retrospect is that most unusual blessing has been received. A continuous recognition of the presence and power of the Spirit was evident, and the memories carried away will be a perennial source of inspiration to the thousands that have sat at the feet of the leaders.

The wonderful stories told by Rev. Dr. F. B. Meyer as a part of his addresses, the face and figure of this aged and saintly divine, the earnestness of his appeal, his eloquence and the deep spirituality of the man gripped and held the audience intensely. The Rev. Charles Inglis, also of London, brought his own intimate acquaintance with the Master into such spontaneous evidence that no one could fail to recognize it and be convinced that he was in the presence of one of God's servants.

The ministers were addressed in meetings for them only by Rev. Dr. Harris E. Kirk of Baltimore, who gave a course on "Preaching for the Times" and by Rev. John A. Hutton, D. D., Glasgow on "Personality and Equipment." This portion of the work has never before been made so prominent and it was so much appreciated and highly valued that the ministers passed a resolution unanimously expressing their gratitude and the hope that this feature would be permanent. Not only was the management thanked but deep appreciation of the men who had given the lectures was also indicated.

The contribution by other preachers was very large and effective. Rev. Charles E. Jefferson, Broadway Tabernacle, N. Y. City, preached on two of the three Sundays of the General Conference and addressed the ministers once. Rev. John McDowell, New York City, gave a most practical and inspiring series of sermons on "Christ and the Present Unrest."—Social, Industrial, National and Personal. It was Dr. McDowell's privilege to point out to his audience the solution of all the problems to which he alluded, many and serious though they are, according to the principles of Christianity.

Time after time there flashed through Dr. McDowell's thought and that of many other speakers this summer, the sublimity and comfort of that divine philosophy "All things are possible with God." We may not see how nor when, but on that unshakable faith humanity depends, while hoping and fighting on.

Rev. Charles R. Erdman, Princeton, N. J., was a most effective preacher; he spoke the first word of the Conference and made several strong, evangelistic appeals.

Rev. J. Stuart Holden, London, gave a series of addresses on Aspects of Christ for the Life of Today.—Christ the Teacher; the Saviour; the Healer; the Social Reformer; the Comrade. He also gave a series of addresses on "Christ and

The Gospel and the Plow

In the picture Sam Higginbottom, the author of the "Gospel and the Plow" (The Macmillan Co.), is shown giving directions to one of his students on the mission farm. Here in Allahabad he is not only making a successful demonstration of how to run a big farm, he is making many Christians out of his students. The book is one of the most inspiring ones on our reading list for the present year. It won't be hard to get it read; it will be hard to put it down unfinished. Exactly the same kind of work which Mr. Higginbottom is doing at Allahabad Mr. Case is attempting in Burma and our other missionaries are beginning in South India, where Miss Katie Failing, a graduate of an agricultural college has been asked by the government to supervise rural schools.

"The Gospel and the Plow" may be obtained from the Literature Bureau, 276 Fifth Avenue, New York City. Every one ought to read it, to be in touch with one of the great needs on the mission field and one which touches all denominations.

the Ordinary Things of Life."

Mr. Melvin Trotter, who speaks from his heart the things he has seen and heard, brings a blessing to all who listen to his earnest words.

The ministry of song was brought by the Lotus Male Quartet of Boston, and Mr. Homer Hammontree of Grand Rapids directed the singing and also spoke the words of a Christian evangel.

The last word was spoken by the Rev. Charles E. Jefferson, and the Conference dissolved. Though no longer in session the great teaching, the devoted spirit, the splendid idealism and the call to faith in a God for whom all things are possible, remain and must go on forever.

The throngs are leaving Northfield now and the halls will be silent—no, not silent for already is heard the noise of preparation for other hundreds who will soon be here to fill the Northfield Schools. It is almost literally true that not a day of idleness exists for these great institutions. One after another, through the year, the streams come and go bearing the Northfield ideals to the ends of the world.

WESTERN WASHINGTON

THE WESTERN WASHINGTON SUMMER ASSEMBLY was held at Burton, Aug. 9-19, and was very largely attended, there being 715 actual registrations, while scores of others were present who did not register. A very large program was presented by such well-known speakers and lecturers as Dr. John Snape of Oakland, Cal., Dr. E. N. Poteat, of New York City; Dr. and Mrs. Rider, of Los Angeles, Cal.; Dr. H. R. Chapman, of Ann Arbor, Mich.; Rev. T. B. Friezele, of Philadelphia and local workers. Besides the strong program presented some of the main features of the assembly were the good fellowship, fine sports and recreation and the goodly number of young people who pledged themselves for definite Christian service for the home field as well as for foreign countries. Mr. Carl B. Forland, of Mt. Vernon, was re-elected president.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

DEDICATION SERVICES for the new edifice of the First Church at National City were held on Sunday afternoon, Aug. 21. The opening address was made by Mayor Fred Hertel of National City, and the dedication sermon was preached by Rev. W. F. Harper, secretary of the convention. Others who had part in the exercises were Rev. F. O. Belden, Rev. R. E. Brown, Rev. W. J. Beaven and Rev. L. B. Valentine. The new edifice is commodious and spacious and has all known modern conveniences for the comfort of the congregation. Twenty large-sized rooms are included in the building which was erected at a cost of $20,000 and dedicated free of debt.

THE FIRST CHURCH OF ONTARIO was delighted with the splendid message brought on August 21 by Rev. Anton Hok, of the First Czecho-Slovak Church of New York City. His solos also were much enjoyed. Recently a party of evangelistic workers from Los Angeles, under the direction of Mr. T. H. W. Liddecoat, a layman who founded the Midnight Mission of that city, addressed the church and carried through a program which was largely musical. During the Sunday-school hour recently there was presented a missionary pageant with an appeal for India. Following the pageant each class presented gifts, most of which were suitable for use in a hospital. There were seventy-three pounds of cotton, towels, bandages, etc., besides $29 in money, all of which has been sent to Dr. Chas. Manley at the Clough Memorial Hospital, Ongole. Attendance at the young people's meetings during the summer has been encouraging. More than eighty were in attendance at the various groups on a recent Sunday. Young people of the high school age not long ago took charge of the evening service at the town of Chino.

SOUTH DAKOTA

FIRST CHURCH OF WAKONDA, after having read and considered the confession of faith adopted at Des Moines, adopted the confession and ordered that no one shall be permitted to hold the office of pastor or deacon or Bible school teacher who dissents from it, and no money passing through the missionary treasurer of this church shall go to any society or board or institution, to pay the salaries of those who dissent from it.

OHIO

REV. F. A. TWining has resigned at the First Church, Loudenville, and accepted a call to the First Church at Sandusky where he began work on Sept. 1. It was with the greatest reluctance, and only in view of the increased opportunities for usefulness, that the Loudenville Church accepted his resignation. A large farewell reception was given Mr. and Mrs. Twining on the evening of August 24, at which time the people tried to show appreciation of their splendid service in the work here. Mr. and Mrs. Twining have been helpful in every department of the church, leaving it much stronger materially and spiritually than when they found it, and go to their new work with the prayer of the people for God's richest blessing upon them.

Dayton Has a Shower

On the afternoon of August 11, women of many circles of Dayton Baptist Association gathered at the First Church of Dayton, Ohio. A "shower" had been announced and Weather-man and Baptist women vied with each other in causing a descent of water and of gifts upon the person of Miss Elizabeth Hay of Now-gong, Assam. She is the only representative of the East Central District in that country and has just finished her first furlough.

Women of all the Dayton Association churches have been busy during the past weeks, shopping, hemming, embroidering and writing poetry that Miss Hay might take back with her the silver, linens, lingerie, even a typewriter and trunks which she not only needs but deserves.

Miss Hay, herself, was the program, telling in a simple and charming manner of the many joys and some of the difficulties of the work to which she is so eager to return. At one side of the platform there was a huge umbrella covered with the forget-me-not blue of the W. A. B. F. M. Society and the ivy of the East Central District. To the chair beneath, Miss Hay was conducted and as she pulled the blue ribbons and opened the parcels which she found attached, she listened to the good wishes and "God-speeds" which were given by the circle whose gift was being unwrapped. To each and to all she gave with her "thank you" some added comment, serious or gay.

The constant patter of the rain outside but made this "shower" more realistic and all went to their homes refreshed.

KANSAS

ON JULY 31 W. E. HOLDREN of Wamego was ordained by the Mt. Union Church to the gospel ministry. There were representatives present from the Junction City and Wamego churches, and several of the state workers. Mr. Holdren passed a very satisfactory examination. He is the pastor of the Mt. Union Church.

REV. J. C. STANDLEE of CARLTON held special meetings recently with the South Side Mission in Aurora, Mo., with fourteen conversions. He is planning to take up evangelistic work in the fall.

MISS EMILY SPAIN, a graduate of the Kansas City Training School, is taking charge of the church at Weir. Weir is in the coal mining district of the state, and will afford a fine opportunity for service.

REV. J. F. LANMAN of Pueblo, Colo., has been called to the pastorate of the Raymond Church, and enters upon the work at once.

REV. T. W. BRYANT is the new pastor at Hanstom. He is a promising young minister and is taking hold of the work with good purpose.

THE OAK CREEK CHURCH has arranged for Rev. J. D. Kelley of Downs to preach every other Sunday in the afternoon. It is projecting aggressive plans for the work.

THREE DEACONS WERE ORDAINED by the Galena Church recently. Rev. W. E. Stilson is the wide-awake pastor.

REV. H. C. MURPHY of Oklahoma has just been called to the pastorate of the Caldwell Church. This is a difficult field, but the outlook is encouraging at present.

REV. A. E. COATS has accepted the pastorate of the Pleasant Hill Church in the south central part of the state. This has been a struggling church but has taken on new life lately.

THE GARDEN CITY CHURCH has just extended a call to Rev. J. S. Umberger of Colorado. He has accepted and takes up the work hopefully. He has held a number of pastorates in the state before, but has been in Colorado and the Northwest more recently.

REV. C. T. LAWSON of Oklahoma has been called to the pastorate of the Codell and Turkville churches. He is on the field and is formulating a program of advance.

THE SARON CHURCH, northwest of Concordia, recently observed its fiftieth anniversary. Rev. H. P. Cox of Vicksburg serves this church as pastor for half time.

REV. J. P. HENSON, for a number of years the successful pastor at Girard, has accepted the call of the Altamont Church.

REV. W. H. FLETCHER is closing his work at Central Church to accept the Mt. Zion Church near Winfield. He will take up the work on the new field Sept. 1.

REV. R. S. SARGENT of Winfield has the sympathy of his many friends in the death of his wife recently. He is pastor at Floral and Hackney.

DR. P. W. CRANNELL, president of Kansas City Seminary, has been spending the summer in Colorado for the most part at Palmer Lake. He has been busy until recently writing the S. S. lessons for the Vest Pocket Commentary for 1922.

REV. P. H. SEISE, a graduate of the Southwest Theological Seminary, is the new superintendent of city missions in Kansas City. He began the work Aug. 1.

THE DEATH is noted of Rev. J. R. Rallden who has held a number of pastorates in the state during the past twenty-five years.

THE ASSOCIATIONAL PERIOD is on in the state. Several have been held already, and the information is to the effect that they have been well attended, with fine spiritual outlook and progressive program.

REV. O. L. WEIR of N. Topeka is spending a week or two in a hospital in Kansas City for special treatment. It is hoped that he will have a speedy recovery.

A FUNDAMENTALS CONFERENCE is being planned to meet at Topeka just prior to the meeting of the state convention. Steps are being taken to secure Dr. J. J. Ross, of Chicago, as the principal speaker of the conference, who will also speak several times in the convention.

CHURCH VACATION SCHOOLS are being conducted at Northside, Pittsburgh, under the supervision of Mrs. M. A. Mitchell, and at Downs under the direction of Pastor J. D. Kelley. There have been nineteen schools conducted in the state this year either by our Baptist churches or in which Baptists had prominent leadership. They have been successful.

VERMONT

FAIRFAX CHURCH, Rev. Elisha Sanderson pastor, recently received three new members by baptism. This church is exceedingly fortunate in its summer supplies. The Rev. A. F. Ufford, missionary to China, and Rev. Rolla Hunt of Richmond Hill, N. Y., both of whom have gone out from this church, have preached during their summer residence there. Dr.

A. S. Hobart of Yonkers also preached at a union service. Extensive repairs are being made upon the parsonage including the painting of same.

WEBSTERVILLE has secured Rev. W. G. Cooper of Wilmington, Del., for its pastor and the work of pastor and people is being blessed. Eight have already been received into the church by baptism and others are in training for church membership. Pastor Cooper is also preaching at Granitville.

NORTH TUNBRIDGE, Rev. J. C. Mitchell pastor, has recently put a new roof on the church edifice and built a concrete platform and steps.

REV. J. C. LAWRENCE of Mechanic Falls, Maine has accepted a call to the church at West Halifax, and is to begin his work on that field September 1. Pastor Lawrence will be the only settled minister in the entire town and will have a splendid opportunity for service. The church and community are already painting and papering the parsonage and making other extensive repairs on the same.

WEST CHARLESTON, Rev. R. G. Greengrass pastor, is accomplishing much. On August 7 the ordinance of baptism was observed and as the candidates came from the water Deacon J. B. Holton presented each one with a white carnation. The Ladies' Aid Society recently cleared about $50 from selling ice-cream, candy, etc., in connection with the Chautauqua held in the village. Pastor Greengrass is now enjoying his annual vacation.

REV. C. H. FRY, pastor of the churches at North and South Mt. Holly is to close his work September 30 and remove to Virginia where he has already accepted a pastorate. Pastor Fry is a faithful and indefatigable worker.

THE WORK OF RECONSTRUCTION at Vermont Academy is rapidly progressing and on September 5, 6 and 7 the buildings will be open for the ministers' conference and school of methods which promises to be largely attended by the ministers, missionaries, and members of the boards. The school proper will open September

Pastors' Summer Conference

At the suggestion of Rev. Charles Briggs, of New York, the Director of Religious Education for the state, the pastors of western New York met for a conference of five days at Keuka College, on the banks of beautiful Lake Keuka, August 8 to 13. There were 214 ministers and their wives who enjoyed these days of inspiration and profit. Mornings and evenings were given to study and the afternoons to recreation. Rev. G. A.

Briggs, of Buffalo, Mr. Benjamin Starr, Revs. S. L. Roberts, A. A. Forshee, A. E. Alton, Dr. W. A. Granger and Mrs. Frederick W. Tomlinson planned for and conducted five days of intensive work as members of the faculty. The vesper services at twilight every evening were a delightful feature of the week. These services were in charge of Mr. Briggs, of Buffalo, and he was very wise in his choice of speakers. At the last vesper service a very impressive baptism occurred when Mr. and Mrs. Truax, of Keuka Park, were baptized in the lake. Pastor Nichols, of Herkimer, proved himself to be a past-master in the art of managing the sports. He began the fun on Monday with a general social and finished on Friday afternoon with a great stunt program. The guests had been divided into Indian tribes and each tribe was down for a stunt. Probably the most popular was the presentation of "Joseph and His Brethren," in which Dr. W. A. Granger, of New York, took the part of Jacob. Rev. Gordon H. Baker, of the First Church, Schenectady, presented a series of resolutions of appreciation for these days of delight and asking for a repetition next year.—HARRY W. BARRAS.

EASTERN PENNSYLVANIA

IN CONNECTION with the work at Mehoopany, Rev. M. A. Reinhardt has recently organized a Sunday school and started a preaching service in a church building at Golden Hill, which had been abandoned.

AFTER TEN YEARS of successful service as pastor of the Upland Baptist Church, Rev. Bergen D. Stelle has accepted a call to the Kennett Square Church and begins work there October first.

THE NEW BEREAN CHURCH, Philadelphia, Rev. George Lockett, pastor, broke ground for its new building at Fifty-ninth and Pine Streets, Sunday, July 31. Superintendent George E. Kilpatrick, who has led the Sunday school from its beginning, dug the first spadeful of earth. The new structure will be a modern Sunday-school plant, costing about $50,000, and is very much needed, as the church has been carrying on its work for years in a frame building to which additions had to be made from time to time to accommodate the growing Sunday school and congregations. The new building will house the church as well as the school until such time as a church building can be erected on the lot adjoining.

A National Christian Council in China

The ninth annual meeting of the China Continuation Committee has just been held in Shanghai. In this committee, hitherto one third but now one half of the sixty-five members being Chinese, the diverse Christian forces in China are actually, though informally and unofficially, represented. This means that the members come from the North, South, East, West and Centre of China; that they include missionaries of British, American, Canadian, Continental and Australian, as well as Chinese nationality; that there are Anglicans, Baptists, Congregationalists, Lutherans, Methodists, Presbyterian and members of other ecclesiastical families among them; and that they represent all the chief forms of missionary work, medical, literary, administrative, educational and evangelistic. The Roman Catholic and Eastern Orthodox forces are not represented, although this committee owes its origin to the World Missionary Conference held at Edinburgh in 1910, in which the outlook was that of the whole Christendom as over against the whole of the non-Christian world.

The Committee has no legislative or mandatory power whatever being purely consultative and advisory; but its influence is for that very reason all the greater and more significant.

The Chinese Renaissance

More than one day out of the five days of this annual meeting was given to the consideration of "The Chinese Renaissance" or "New Tide of Thought," which during the past year has assumed extensive proportions. Four most thoughtful and carefully prepared papers on this subject were presented at the meeting,—two by Chinese and two by foreigners,—dealing with the origin, characteristics, achievements and dangers of the movement. It was clearly pointed out that the movement is unorganized, that it is without formally chosen officers or members, but that it stands everywhere for certain things, for example:—

1. An attitude of criticism and enquiry toward established traditions, and indeed toward everything, new or old. The conservatism of the nation's leaders has withered before it. Everything, Chinese or foreign, social or political, ethical or

More than a hundred, possibly several hundred newspapers and magazines, and original and translated books on a vast variety of subjects, have been issued in this plain language, and this has produced a veritable literary revolution whereby the common people are coming to their own.

3. Loyalty to democracy and freedom. Autocracy in government or in society is no longer to be tolerated. The worth of every individual, and his right to be considered and to be heard on all questions that concern him must be recognized. No one man or group of men is wise or strong enough to act for all; and every man must have liberty to speak and act within wide limits; according to the light that is in him.

4. Love and service as the supreme principles of life. These must be to international and inter-racial as well as to individual and family interests.

5. The scientific spirit and the effort to nationalize all life.

This movement is obviously fraught with far-reaching significance to the Christian church in China, and it was hailed as opening a new day of opportunity for wide usefulness and influence. It has obviously great dangers also, and these were carefully considered. A resolution was adopted without dissent expressing the interest of committee in the movement and calling on all Christians to study and pray for it.

The China for Christ Movement

Much attention was devoted to this movement, which embodies the desires, especially of the younger Chinese Christians, for a nation-wide, interdenominational effort under real Chinese leadership but in hearty co-operation with missionaries to bring unitedly to the whole Chinese people the blessings of the Christian life.

Chinese Phonetic Writing

Everyone who knows China at all realizes that the difficulty of the Chinese written character is one of the chief obstacles to China's progress. The special committee on the Promotion of the National Phonetic reported important progress during the year. The Government Board of Education, which devised and proposed the system, is pushing it in both normal schools and primary schools under government control. All this aids, though indirectly, in securing the great objective of a Bible reading church.

National Christian Conference of 1922

In some ways the most important work of this annual meeting was the consideration of plans for a national Christian conference in 1922. Preliminary plans were made at the previous annual meeting, and a strong committee has worked hard on preparations and plans throughout the past year. Many difficult questions have been dealt with, the most difficult being those which concern the due representation in the conference of the various churches and missions. A guiding principle has been that the conference should represent officially and formally, as far as possible, all the several churches and missions, and that one-half the delegates should be Chinese. Hitherto there has never been an officially delegated conference with such a proportion of Chinese members, the nearest approach to it having been in 1913, where one-third out of a total 120 members were Chinese; whereas in the great centenary conference of 1907, where some 600 delegates were present, and in all previous conferences, there were only foreign missionaries as delegates. The meeting planned for 1922 will thus mark an immense step forward in the development of Christianity in China, and if carried out as planned will deserve the name of a Chinese National Christian Conference.

A Message from the White Cross

The White Cross Department of the Woman's Foreign Mission Society sends out a call to the churches to collect for shipment before Oct. 31, clothing for all ages and both sexes, gifts and garments for destitute Europe. If the shipment starts in November the gifts will cross the Atlantic and reach Poland, Czechoslovakia and Latvia before Christmas. It is a beautiful and inspiring idea, that in the name of the Christ-child, suffering may be relieved before his birthday is celebrated on December 25.

The Christian Movement in Japan

By CHARLES B. TENNY

Plans for the approaching Conference on Pacific and Far Eastern Questions, and Disarmament, are on foot. The eyes of the world turn towards Washington, D. C. and the interests of all peoples are bound up in the decisions there arrived at. For the first time in modern history "The Far East" takes its rightful place in world affairs, the place to which its long history, its teeming population, its vast resources give it rightful title. Americans generally seem interested in these questions and in these lands as never before. But the missionary from the Far East home on furlough is impressed with the colossal ignorance of many Americans with this great and historic East. It is of the highest importance that the Christian forces of America be both interested and informed, and that the best traditions of Christian America find expression in the coming conference. Christians the world over must be united in prayer that the spirit of Christ dominate all that is said and done.

In view of these considerations, and of the growing interest of American Christians in world kingdom-building, it gives one pleasure to be able to recommend a book just fresh from the printer, "The Christian Movement in Japan, Korea, Formosa." This is the nineteenth annual issue (1921), and continues a series that has won recognition among students of missions the world over. Baptists will remember that our own representative, the late Dr. John L. Dearing, was for a number of years editor of this great work. This year's editor is the Rev. Robert Cornell Armstrong, of the Canadian Methodist Mission. Dr. Armstrong was formerly president of the Methodist College in Kobe, and is now engaged in evangelistic work in Tokyo. He is a scholar of the first rank among the Japan missionaries and has rendered a fine service in this last piece of work.

The book includes a general review of progress during 1920, including a table of important events; comparative religious conditions, Buddhist, Shintoist and Christian; sections on evangelistic work, educational work, work for children; reports on sociological and co-operative activities, and other features. The book covers, in order, conditions in Japan, Korea and Formosa. The appendices containing statistics, charts, mission directories greatly add to the value of the book. Among the obituaries in this number are found those of Dr. Charles K. Harrington and Rev. J. C. Brand of our Japan Mission.

The book may be obtained in America through The Missionary Education Movement, 160 Fifth Ave. or World's S. S. Association, 216 Metropolitan Tower, New York City. The price is quoted at Yen 2.50 (about $1.25) but the book will be found exceedingly valuable to the man or woman who will take time to peruse it carefully.

Bringing Together Church and Preacher

of our profession, some of the brethren will scowl upon us if we candidate for a church. So, what is a fellow to do? If we are mediocre preachers, the churches over the country do not know us; if we are young preachers they do not know us; and if for some reason, such as the one offered in the opening paragraph of this article, we are without a pastorate and want one, nobody knows it; and few people seem to care.

Now, if there were some way by which the pastorless church could know of this preacher, who for a good reason has no church, then the two might be brought together. But in our denomination, this is not the case; although it is true in certain other denominations. And in the meantime, the Baptist preacher waits, hopes and prays; for he knows there is little use to appeal to his denominational H. Qs., for they do not not him either; and, if they did, they are not in position to help him, because they have no system whereby it can be done. So, as the days come and go, he waits; and his family waits with him. And this is often the saddest aspect.

It seems to me that the time has about come when the denomination should begin to give some thought to this problem. I remember when I was teaching school, just after leaving college, there were teachers' agencies, which made it their business to find all the young men and young women who expected to teach that year; but who, as yet, had not been located. At the same time, they made it their business to know of all the schools in their territory, which had not, as yet, secured their teachers. So, by the payment of a small fee from the prospective teacher, the school and the teacher were brought together.

I do not make this as a suggestion; but for the sake of the preacher, especially the young preacher, and for the sake of the pastorless church; and for the sake of our denomination, I do believe that some thought should be immediately given to this phase of our large work.

OUR MUSIC CORNER

CONDUCTED BY

WHO IS WHO IN MUSIC—No. 2

In the musical world, as in everyday life, advertising pays. The artist or composer fortunate enough to keep his name constantly before the general public will naturally in course of time loom much greater in import and importance than perhaps a much more gifted man who has not had the advantage of newspaper push. To the average non-professional music-lover, Paderewski is the greatest pianist, Caruso the first tenor, Galli-Curci the prima soprano, Kubelic the fore-front violinist; all this largely because these artists have been the objects of very successful publicity campaigns. Whether or not this naive estimate of the above artists is justified by facts is quite another matter! Let it suffice for our argument that the efficacy and value of personal advertising be allowed.

The average composer suffers more than any other class of artists in this matter of publicity. Contrary to most people's ideas, few composers make much money—unless they devote their energies to the products of "tin-pan alley." It may be stated as an axiom that the financial rewards from a musical composition will be in reverse ratio to its artistic and aesthetic value. Truly, the creative instinct needs to be its own reward, for it seldom gets much more. And since publicity, like most other things in this world, is governed by financial supply, the average composer has to be content to let the gradual development of his personal fame come from the intrinsic worth and spread of his own achievements.

Adolf Brune, composer, pianist, critic, and theorist, the subject of this informal sketch, is a case in point. He can be conservatively hailed as one of the two or three greatest creative minds to be found (at least in this country) today; and how much better known is the latest find of any phonograph company blazoned all over the nation as a mouther of cheap jazz tunes! But nevertheless true merit and worth is superior to these trivial eddies of popular favor. We can rest assured that such a fine musician and unusual intellect will reap the reward. His achievements to date are inspiring; as the circle of his contact expands with the years, they will steadily become more so.

Adolf Brune was born June 21, 1870, at Bakkum, in Hanover, where, during his boyhood he received musical instruction from his father, who taught him piano, organ, violin and some theory. Later he received lessons in Osnabrueck from Brennecke (organ); in piano from Wellerswist; and in violin from Walter. Mr. Brune came to this country in 1889 and held a position as organist and teacher in Peoria, Ill., for some five years. In 1894 he moved to Chicago, where he continued his piano studies under Emil Liebling. In 1898 Mr. Brune joined the faculty of the Chicago Musical College as a teacher of theory and composition, remaining there for some nineteen years. At present he is teaching privately in Chicago, devoting himself to the efforts of a large class of pupils and to his own writing.

His compositions for orchestra comprise three symphonies, four overtures, two symphonic poems, a symphonic fantasia, variations on a theme by Beethoven, scherzo, Elegie, two piano concertos, and a serenade for wood-wind. The roster of works for chamber music lists five string-quartets, sextet for strings, quintet for piano and strings, quintet for strings, trio for piano and strings, sonata for piano and violin (this has been published). Mr. Brune has written an oratorio, several cantatas, a "Saxon War-Song" for male chorus and orchestra, a large number of choruses for various combinations, a six-part mass, and a setting of the 84th Psalm for chorus and solo. For piano we have two suites, two sets of studies, two ballads (published), Concert piece in F minor, scherzo, and some smaller works. This imposing list is further augmented by a tremendous Passacaglia for organ, a Fantasie and concerto for the same instrument, and some seventy or more songs.

Such an awe-inspiring roster of results as is indicated above might serve to give the reader the idea that Mr. Brune is a somewhat unapproachable person, impressed with a keen recognition of his own achievements, and because of this overly intense ego, not very tolerant toward the beginner in the path of music. But this is not so. Those of us who are so fortunate as to know Mr. Brune personally, especially those of us who have sat at his feet as pupils, we know him for the kindly soul that he is. The bigness of his artistic vision never blinds him to the humanness needed by the pupil.

His works have been played by the greatest artists and performed by the most prominent organizations in this country and abroad. The Flonzaley and the Kneisel quartets have performed his chamber-music. Orchestral works have appeared frequently on the programs of the Chicago Symphony Orchestra, the Cincinnati Orchestra, The San Francisco Orchestra, The Musical Art Society of Chicago and The Madrigal Club of that city have done his brilliant "Gypsy-Life," and such artists as Theodore Spiering, Ludwig Becker, Leon Sametini, and Hugo Kortschak have listed his violin numbers on their programs. The singers so far have not equalled their instrumental colleagues in their recognition of Mr. Brune's works. Burton Thatcher, the well-known baritone has markedly programmed the virile "First Love," Grant Kimball, tenor, gained fine success with "O Sweetest Mother," "My Little Pretty One," "Ye Banks and Braes," and "It Was Not in the Winter." Margaret Lester has also programmed some of the above songs. If some of the American singers who fill the pages of the musical journals with their wails and requests for new repertoire-material would only program some of the Brune songs, they would make for more musical contentment—they would do themselves a favor. And the same advice applies to the pianists. Such an authority as Leonard Liebling writes in "The Musical Courier,"

"Adolf Brune has put forth two ballades for piano, . . . which must be reckoned among the most significant contributions to modern piano literature since the Brahms's works in the same form appeared."

And Walter Knupfer writes in the Chicago "Staats-Zeitung,"

"The Ballade in F minor has a position of its own in modern piano music. . . ."

Certainly music which calls forth such high praise from two authorities well merited careful examination at least. Great music usually permeates the mass more slowly than the frivolous variety, and sometimes this gradual spread of that which we know is first-rank material is too slow to suit our desires. But we need to remind ourselves that this gradual evolution has occurred throughout all musical history. Really fine music, virile with the strength of true idealism, well-grounded upon the solid rock of developed technical equipment, the product of the true faith of a sincere artist—such music lives eternally; such is that which has come to us from the past, and such will be that which we will hand over to the future. I, for one, am confident that much of Brune's music will be a valued heritage to the future.

a number of years assistant to Dr. Conwell at the Temple Church. When crossing on the Adriatic he was known as "the man with the children," because he was seldom seen without a group of children around him. Dr. Harris has preached at Llanthwy Road, Newport, Mon., Memorial Church, Bloomsbury, Fuller Chapel, Kettering, and Regent's Park.

Dr. George W. McDaniel, pastor of the First Church, Richmond, Va., is to be the special speaker for the Convention of Ontario and Quebec, which meets in the Center Street Church, St. Thomas, Oct. 14-21. Our Canadian friends, knowing Dr. McDaniel's reputation as a fine preacher, fervent and evangelical, are looking forward with much interest to his coming.

By heroic efforts the Disciples churches have raised the sum of $600,000 in order to pay their share of the Interchurch debt. Some of the people favored the repudiation of this debt but a group of the leaders took up the matter, secured the earnest co-operation of the churches and succeeded in raising the entire amount. Considering the difficulties in the way this is really a great achievement.

Miss Anna Gordon, president of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, has returned from a visit to several South American republics. In a recent address she spoke in hopeful terms of the temperance situation on that continent. She states: "We prophecy that not many years hence the blessing of prohibition will come to the twenty sister republics of the Pan-American union; will come to the Orient with its unawakened millions; will come to Europe; will come to Great Britain and her sturdy colonies, because the United States will have made good in the enforcement of the eighteenth amendment, the securing of which is one of the greatest moral victories the world has ever witnessed."

The Chicago Sunday Evening Club reported an aggregate attendance of 86,700 persons at the Sunday evening services held in Orchestra Hall from October, 1920, to June, 1921, an average of 2500 attendance at the 8 o'clock service, and an average of 2175 present at the 7 o'clock Bible talk and song service led by the president of the club, Clifford W. Barnes. The Sunday Evening Club robed choir of 100 men and women, with a quartet of soloists, added greatly to the success of the past season. Beginning fourteen years ago with a few volunteer singers, the choir now consists of the best professional and amateur voices in the city, and is the largest organization of paid singers in Chicago, on a par with the best choral societies.

That Protestantism is making itself felt in Europe is evident from the alarm sounded by several Romanist periodicals. They see not only direct religious aggressiveness such as the aid extended to the Protestant churches of France and Belgium, but also indirect influence through organizations such as the Y. M. C. A. and Y. W. C. A., which they say tend to promote the reading of the Bible and the exercise of individuality in religion—facts hostile to the Romanist faith. Even the Red Cross and other relief agencies are regarded as fostering a spirit of independence of Catholicism. Evidently the distressed peoples of Europe are awake to the fact that they have to thank the Protestant element in America and England for relief, just as in heathen lands Christianity comes as a saving and serving agency such as the native religions have never shown themselves to be. And so Romanism is in self-defense urged to live a true Christian life—on Romanist lines, of course—and to match Protestants in unselfish good works.—Record of Christian Work.

It will be of interest to many of our readers to know that Clara Boice Bush, author of "The Grinding," published last month by Henry Holt and Co., is the daughter of Dr. James R. Boice, for many years professor of Greek in Brown University, University of Michigan and Chicago, and author of many Greek text books. She is the sister of Mrs. Nathan E. Wood, of Boston, and Mrs. Julius A. Johnson of the Englewood Church, Chicago. The book, a romance of the southland, had a large advance sale.

A lady missionary was teaching a class in general English and the poem of the day was Scott's "Lochinvar." "He swam the Eske river where ford there was none," she quoted, then asked, "What is the meaning of 'ford'?" The pupil was a little tired or perhaps the Ford he had driven in Mesopotamia was the only kind he knew, for he replied, "A motor-car." The teacher was the only one in the room who took exception to the answer.

A missionary writing home of a tour in the mountains of Burma made mention in passing of "dacoits" and "barking deer." The old folks at home were curious enough to inquire whether "dacoits" were a kind of delirium tremens and whether the deer ate the bark off trees or had a voice like a dog.

A large party of missionaries in the service of the two foreign mission societies sailed from Vancouver on the steamship "Empress of Asia" on Aug. 18. They included the following, all of them en route for China: F. J. Bradshaw, Dr. F. J. White, Rev. and Mrs. J. P. Davies and two children; Rev. and Mrs. J. H. Griffin and four children, Miss Minnie Milne, Miss Dora Zimmerman, Miss Anne Harris, Miss Emilie M. Schultz, Miss Jeannette Monroe, Dr. and Mrs. C. H. Barlow and three children, Mr. and Mrs. C. S. Gibbs. In the same party were Dr. E. M. Poteat and daughter.

The following missionaries sailed from Boston during the month of August: On Aug. 13 on the steamship "Assyria," for South India, Dr. and Mrs. W. L. Ferguson and two daughters, Miss Susan C. Ferguson and Miss Helen Ferguson. On Aug. 20 on the steamship "Winifredian," for Burma, Rev. and Mrs. C. H. Heptonstall.

The policy of organic union between the Congregational, Methodist and Presbyterian Churches of Australia having failed for the time being, the plan of co-operation is now to be tried. A Council of Co-operation has been formed, officers and committees have been appointed, and rules for the regulation of the operations of the council have been adopted. The council consists of thirty-six members, elected (twelve each) by the State Assemblies or Conferences of the three churches. The avowed object is to promote the union of the co-operating churches by encouraging inter-church relations and co-operation in all matters in which common action may be practicable. The council has no executive power. It makes its recommendations to the various denominational departments of administration in the churches concerned, and it is for these departments to give effect to such of the recommendations as commend themselves to their judgment. Sub-committees have been appointed to report as to the possibilities of co-operation in the following departments: (1) Home mission and church extension work (including immigration); (2) secondary education and hostels; (3) young people's departments (including religious instruction in public schools); (4) training of candidates for the ministry; (5) temperance and morals; (6) devotional fellowship and evangelism. Very effective co-operation in ministerial training is already being carried on by the theological colleges.

Ninety per cent of the total number of cadets at the United States Military Academy, West Point, are members of some church. This record is said to be higher than that of any other non-sectarian institution in the country. It is also a higher rate of church membership than is found at Annapolis. Among the denominations the Protestant Episcopal Church claims the largest number of cadets, the Roman Catholic and Methodist Episcopal tying for the second place, with the Presbyterian denomination third.

The Missionary Voice is authority for the statement that in Japan, out of every 200,000 new girl workers who enter factory life each year, 13,000 fall victims to tuberculosis. The death rate among these women is three times the normal.

The "Save a Life League" has compiled a list of 12,000 suicides in the United States during 1920. Seven hundred of these were boys and girls, averaging fifteen years for the former and sixteen for the latter.

The gifts of Protestant Churches in America to all purposes during the year 1920 amounted to more than $200,000,000.

The American Bible Society reports a net loss of $35,000 last year, because the price of Bibles was not increased in proportion to the cost of labor and material. The society since its organization has issued 140,000,000 copies of the Bible.

A petition, signed by 20,503 clergymen and representatives of the leading denominations, was recently presented to President Harding, urging him to call a conference of the leading nations at the earliest possible moment to secure, if possible, a reduction of armament. His action in this matter followed almost immediately.

The number of convictions for drunkenness in England and Wales during 1920 was 65 per cent more than in 1919. In the United States arrests for drunkenness in the same two years decreased 60 per cent.

The output of the British and Foreign Bible Society for its last year was 8,655,781 books, an increase over the previous year. Portions were published in ten new languages—one every five weeks—raising the total in this one society's table of languages to 538.

Mr. and Mrs. John Imrie, singing evangelists, have just closed a meeting with Rev. J. F. Pennock at Las Animas, Colo., at which Dr. Stroup of Alton, Mo., did the preaching. Mr. Imrie can help at once any pastor who needs an experienced song leader. Write him at Las Animas.

LEONARDO da VINCI is thought by some people to be the greatest genius who ever lived, for the reason that he seemed to have equal talent for architecture, sculpture, painting, music and poetry, to say nothing of his skill as an inventor and a diplomat; but the world knows him best as a painter. He painted only two pictures that are distinctively religious; but these two have enriched sacred art for all time to come. They are the "Last Supper" and the "Madonna of the Lily." Though the Madonna has wonderful grace and beauty and lofty devotional expression, the "Last Supper" takes the higher rank. No scene in the life of Christ has been represented with more feeling and reverence than this one.

Rev. A. P. Howells, who has been acting pastor of the First Church, Jacksonville, Ill., has been invited to become permanent pastor and has accepted. To make their invitation more persuasive the brethren purchased a new parsonage of which Mr. Howells will be the first occupant.

Rev. W. E. Harris, recently pastor at Whitehall, Wis., has accepted a call to the church at New London, Ohio, and is now on the field.

Dr. Benjamin Otto, secretary of the Chicago Executive Council is now occupying his newly-erected house at 211 Linden Avenue, Oak Park, Ill.

Rev. C. B. Jones has closed his pastorate at Piqua, Ohio, and will begin on Sept. 11 at Michigan City, Ind.

Pastor M. P. Boynton of the Woodlawn church, Chicago, has been spending his summer vacation at Little Point Sable, Mich. He will begin his twenty-fifth year at Woodlawn on Sept. 11.

Rev. B. E. Allen of Neponsett, Ill., supplied the pulpit of the Woodlawn church, Chicago, during Pastor Boynton's absence, preaching to large and appreciative audiences.

Coach John M. Thurber of Franklin College goes this fall to the Missouri State Agricultural College, to become head of the English department. His place at Franklin is taken by Mr. Will Nelp, an alumnus.

At Lebanon Junction, Ky., Rev. C. B. Jones of Piqua, Ohio, assisted pastor T. Libern Jones in meetings, Aug. 2-21, with thirty additions.

During the absence of the pastor, Rev. W. S. Stewart, on his vacation, the pulpit of the First Church, La Grosse, Wis., was supplied by four different laymen of the church, one for each Sunday. One is an optometrist, one a traveling salesman for a grocery house, one a teacher in a business college and one a bond salesman. All were very acceptable to the congregation.

The Baptist Institute for Christian Workers, Philadelphia, has found it necessary to provide additional accommodations and an adjoining property has been purchased as an annex. In this will be comfortably housed the resident faculty, and the lot will give the needed space to complete the main building which will be done as soon as funds will permit. The capacity of the building now in use has already been over-registered and the new building will enable other students to be accommodated.

Rev. C. T. Holman, pastor at Normal Park, Chicago, having spent some weeks in Canada, has returned and occupied his pulpit Sept. 4.

Mrs. A. W. Clarke, of Southwest Harbor, Maine, who died on August 12, willed about $16,000 to the different Baptist societies.

Principal Moton of Tuskegee states that the total number of lynchings during the first six months of 1921 is thirty-six. This is twenty-four more than the number for the first six months of 1920, and seven more than the number for the first six months of 1919. Of those lynched, two were whites and thirty-four were Negroes. Two of the latter were women. Eleven of those put to death were charged with the crime of rape. The states in which lynchings occurred and the number in each state are as follows: Alabama 1; Arkansas, 4; Florida, 4; Georgia, 9; Kentucky, 1; Louisiana, 2; Mississippi, 10; Missouri, 1; North Carolina, 2; South Carolina, 1; Tennessee, 1.

Rev. Paul Dwight Moody has been chosen president of Middlebury College, Vt., as successor to Dr. John M. Thomas. Mr. Moody, who is the younger son of the famous evangelist, has of late been associated with Henry Sloan Coffin in the pastorate of the Madison Avenue Presbyterian church, New York City. During the war he was one of the three leading chaplains at American Headquarters in Chaumont, France. He has taught in Mt. Hermon School, Vermont, where he was at one time a pastor in St. Johnsbury, will welcome him back with joy.

Rev. C. W. Gawthrop of the Hamilton Square Church, San Francisco, Cal., has resigned and finished his work on Sept. 1. Correspondence in regard to the filling of this vacancy may be addressed to O. H. Gertz, 1372 Pine St., San Francisco. The church is anxious to get in touch with some strong minister who would like to go to the coast. Mr. Gawthrop has taken a state superintendency of the Anti-Saloon League. The five years work at Hamilton Square has firmly established the reputation of this church in San Francisco and among Baptists visiting California as "the home-like church." The membership is organizing definitely to maintain the

ARE USING THESE BOOKS

Principles and Methods of Religious Education

These volumes are convenient in form, scientific, popular in presentation, treating of subjects of vital interest, and are invaluable to all who are engaged in religious education. They should be in all public and Sunday-school libraries, as well as in private libraries of ministers, Sunday-school superintendents, and Sunday-school teachers.

The Dramatization of Bible Stories. By Elizabeth E. Miller. $1.25, postpaid $1.35. Children like to make believe. This popular book has brought joy and help to many perplexed teachers as it tells how to impress religious truth by dramatization of Bible stories. It gives information about arrangement of materials and includes a number of stories already prepared for use.

The Church School of Citizenship. By Allen Hoben. $1.25, postpaid $1.35. Suggestive programs of what may be done to develop right civic attitudes in the various grades of the church school.

Graded Social Service for the Sunday school. By W. Norman Hutchins. $1.00, postpaid $1.10. A series of suggestions for concrete activities for all grades, from the kindergarten to the young people's society, which are adapted to develop social helpfulness in the religious life.

Handwork in Religious Education. By Addie Grace Wardle. $1.25, postpaid $1.35. A progressive program of handwork appropriate to each stage of intellectual and religious development in children and young people.

Recreation and the Church. By Herbert W. Gates. $1.25, postpaid $1.35. Discusses the place of recreation in human life and particularly its value in religious education and its inevitable influence upon the development of character.

A Survey of Religious Education in the Local Church. By William C. Bower. $1.25, postpaid $1.35. This book aims to help Sunday-school workers make a careful survey of the work of religious education in the local church.

The City Institute for Religious Teachers. By Walter S. Athearn. $1.00, postpaid $1.10. Every Sunday-school worker should study this practical plan of gaining efficient teachers and should work for the application of it in his own community.

The Sunday-school Building and Its Equipment. By Herbert F. Evans. $1.00, postpaid $1.10. The author here presents the plans of well-designed buildings, large and small, and accompanies them with a discussion of the principles of Sunday-school equipment.

The Constructive Studies (graded lessons) comprise volumes suitable for all grades, from kindergarten to adult years. They have due regard for fundamental principles of pedagogical method, for the results of the best modern biblical scholarship, and for those contributions to religious education which may be made by the use of a religious interpretation of all life-processes, whether in the field of science, literature, or social phenomena.

A Serious Mistake Somewhere

The Record of Christian Work for September under the caption "Current Thought" (italics our) has quoted from this Kollum. There is a serious mistake somewhere. No one has ever before so much as insinuated that it took "thought" to run this department. We have started an investigation and hope to soon locate responsibility for this break. THE BAPTIST is interested only in the propagation of the truth.

Commendation Three Thousand Miles Long

"Dear Baptist: You are growing better all the time. Keep it up. Young people from Maine to California are now taking a vital interest in the paper. We know by the correspondence coming into our office." This note is from Dr. James Asa White, and who is there among us in better position to speak accurately on the vital interests of our Baptist young people?

Not a Christless Creed

From Idaho we received the following: "You probably get some 'kicks' these days. Please register a 'pat'. You are doing just fine. THE BAPTIST is O. K. The only creed we have out here is a Christlike life." Creeds are usually hard to fully understand but there will be no misunderstanding of the Idaho creed. We trust that it may be generally adopted among us.

A Liberal Education For $3

If a college could be defined as a log with Mark Hopkins at one end and a student at the other we may be excused for suggesting that with the open Bible, the surveys brought down to date, the prayer lists, THE BAPTIST and MISSIONS every man and woman in our churches can secure a liberal education in the work of the denomination. Making possible new contacts they will increase the interest in usefulness and incidentally multiply the individuals joy in service. THE BAPTIST and MISSIONS will cost you $3. You probably have a Bible and the other helps will be furnished without cost. Will you not help to increase the number of "stutents" in your church. The tuition is but $3.

Goodness is Caught Not Taught

A well-known educator speaking of the functions of a democratic school said; "The democratic school must teach its children what democratic nobility is . . . fidelity to all forms of duty which require courage, self-denial and zeal, and loyal devotion to the ideals of freedom, serviceableness, unity, toleration, public justice, and public joyfulness." We all know that faithfulness and devotion to such ideals are caught not taught. For this reason in the curriculum of the modern church the denominational periodicals have an increasingly large place. On the one hand they keep the needs of the world before us and on the other the men and women who are the need-meeters. It is the needs of the world and the examples of heroic service which challenge our boys and girls to give themselves to the work of the kingdom. You pastors and teachers, anxious that your church furnish its full quota for the ministry and missionary work, remember the Every Family Canvass for THE BAPTIST and MISSIONS this fall. It will help you to reach your goals.

fruits of the pastorate and to push to a successful conclusion all programs.

Already communications are being received from churches, in response to the appeal "Fill a Ship in Fellowship." Mrs. T. B. Garrett, the White Cross Captain of the Rocky Mountain District, has sent in a request for 700 shipping tags, stating that the City Union of Denver has undertaken to conduct a vigorous campaign throughout the State of Colorado in the interests of this relief program. A committee has been appointed and there is every indication that Colorado will enthusiastically respond to the appeal for clothing, shoes and other supplies for the destitute people of Europe.

Charles Gibbs holds the distinction of being the first bacteriologist to be appointed by the Foreign Mission Society. He sailed for China Aug. 18, 1921. Mr. Gibbs, was born in New Hampshire, educated at Bates College, Lewiston, Me., and received his master's degree at Yale. He has been assistant bacteriologist in the Connecticut Agricultural Experiment Station and has been an ardent student of nature and animal life. With a splendid Christian and educational background Mr. Gibbs goes out to open up a new field of service in China, working in connection with Nanking University.

In a letter just received from Dr. Charles B. Tenny of Tokyo, we are informed that Dr. and Mrs. Harry E. Fosdick arrived in Japan on their Oriental trip, were met by a party of missionaries, including Miss F. Marguerite Haven, a former member of Dr. Fosdick's church in Montclair, and were accompanied to the Mable Memorial at Yokohama where Dr. Fosdick, in his usual inspiring manner, addressed the student body. Accordingly Dr. Fosdick's first public address in the Far-East was made in the Mable Memorial School, the splendid Christian school for boys, whose construction and work has been made possible through the New World Movement.

Rev. O. Brouillette, under whose direction the Foreign Mission Society is carrying out its relief program in France, writes that he recently visited a group of Russian war prisoners in the vicinity of Metz who had been left in Alsace since the armistice. A splendid religious revival occurred and many were converted. Several wanted to prepare themselves for Christian service and an appeal was made to Dean Bokmelder of the Russian Bible Institute at East Orange, New Jersey. Friends of the Home Mission Society contributed 15,000 francs toward passage expenses and eleven of these former prisoners sailed for America in July. Mr. Brouillette acted in the capacity of an agent of the Home Mission Society, thus for a time serving both national societies, and made the necessary investigations and went through the numerous formalities at the various centres of officialdom in Metz, Nancy, Paris and Havre until he saw these eleven Russians safely on board the ship. Here is another splendid illustration of co-operation between our great home and foreign mission societies.

For the first time in its one hundred and seven years history the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society has appointed a dentist for service in the foreign field. Dr. Morton Yates of Framingham, Mass., is to open up work in the West China Mission where the need for a dentist has long been felt. He is leaving a large practice in this country to undertake this new branch of service in West China. This untried type of work offers opportunity for unlimited possibilities not only in the west China Mission but in the other missions under our board, and Dr. Yates' success will be followed with much interest.

That ministers are, as a rule, long-lived has illustration again in the annual necrological report of Princeton Theological Seminary. During the year ending March 31, 1921, seventy-one former students of the seminary, including Dr. B. B. Warfield, passed away, at an average age of sixty-seven years one month and twenty-four days, which is a high average for so large a group. Among them was Dr. Samuel Spahr Laws, who was the oldest living alumnus, and who attained nearly ninety-seven years. One other passed ninety, sixteen others passed eighty, twenty-five others passed seventy and sixteen others passed sixty. The average age at which these confessed Christ and became communicant members of the Church was sixteen years.

Dr. Clarence A. Barbour, president of Rochester Seminary, has been preaching in Lafayette Avenue Presbyterian church of Brooklyn a series of Sunday evening sermons on the topic, "Whose Name Was John." Under this head he has taken up men who in the past have strongly influenced religious thought. Two recent talks have been on John Milton and John Wesley.

The father of our beloved foreign secretary, James H. Franklin, passed into rest at his home in Pamplin, Va., on August 14. Delegates to the convention at Des Moines will recall that as long ago as at that time the illness was critical. Mr. Franklin, a Confederate veteran, was a typical son of the South, embodying the high character and splendid courtesy for which that section is noted. His death brings to a close a relationship between father and son which has been particularly intimate.

Rev. Clarence E. Lapp of Granville died at the Toledo Hospital Aug. 30. He had been supplying in Toledo and was stricken suddenly in the pulpit Sunday evening, Aug. 14. A year ago he was given up by the doctors, but he made a brave fight and had been preaching for about two months prior to his death. He had been in the Baptist ministry more than thirty years, having held pastorates at Newark, N. J., Greenwich, N. Y., Austin, Ill., Flint, Mich. and Norwood, O. In later years he supplied pulpits of pastorless churches or during vacations. He won high esteem as a minister and as a man. He leaves his wife and one son at Granville, and a married son and daughter all active members of Baptist churches.

The great Pan-Presbyterian meeting will open in Pittsburgh on Sept. 16. There will be present representatives from the various Presbyterian and Reformed churches of the world, speaking in a measure for 20,000,000 people. Three great subjects will be presented to the body. The first has to do with the Lambeth proposals. A minority report, representing mostly the Reformed churches of the United States and the Southern Presbyterian church, is opposed to the whole business. The majority report will propose that Presbyterians and Episcopalians get together and confer on the matter before it is carried to other religious bodies. Presbyterian union is another of the great questions. If these millions of people could form anything like a real union, they would be a tremendous force in the world. The woman question will also be debated. The English Presbyterians have allowed women to be ordained as elders although they have not been given the privilege of preaching; this is a decided innovation and there is much opposition.

Dr. C. J. Rose died at Granville, Ohio, Aug. 20, after an illness of about three days. Funeral services were held on the 23d. Dr. Rose was born in Pike, N. Y. Dec. 30, 1849, and was a graduate of Des Moines College and of Rochester Theological Seminary in the class of 1881. After pastorates in Kingsville, Oberlin and Mt. Vernon, he became in 1903 general secretary of the Ohio Baptist convention and removed to Granville. He served in this capacity for twelve years, retiring because of ill-health. In his work here and also in anti-saloon work he was known for his tireless and efficient service. He was for many years a trustee of Denison University.

In his regular quarterly report Rev. K. W. Strzelec, director of relief for the Foreign Mission Society in Poland, states that he recently visited fifty-nine different towns and villages and witnessed more than two hundred baptisms, of Russian and Polish converts. Baptist leaders in Poland reported to him that approximately 1,000 persons have been baptized since the beginning of the year. In one section the population has experienced almost unbelievable suffering. Their land was devastated, first by the retreat of the Russian army, then stripped of everything transportable by the German army, and since the establishment of peace, the district has been the scene of repeated conflicts between the Bolsheviks and the Polish army. Some families who were driven from their homes in 1915, six years ago, have only recently returned, finding their property in the possession of others. In many cases entire fields are now buried beneath weeds, shrubbery and dense bushes. Under such circumstances relief from America for a long time to come will be necessary. Mr. Strzelec further reports the purchase of 250 cases of condensed milk with money contributed by American Baptists, with which he has been able to save the lives of hundreds of Polish children. It seems that when money is given to parents it is used for the purchase of black bread and potatoes, the only available food, and the little ones are compelled to get along without their necessary milk. Mr. Strzelec operates a plan whereby tickets are distributed to the children, and on certain days a can of milk is given for each returned ticket. This method has proved very satisfactory. He is also working out a scheme whereby in the future relief work will be centralized in places where conditions are promising for religious revivals and where the people have no difficulty in gathering around their simple yet consecrated gospel preachers. The chief problem will be the securing of adequate meeting places, especially in sections where there are no houses and where so many people live under ground. Naturally Mr. Strzelec welcomes with great enthusiasm the purpose of the two foreign mission societies to send to Europe in November a shipload of clothing, shoes and other supplies for distribution prior to Christmas.

In the Spirit of Christ

IF ANY man have not the spirit of Christ, he is none of his." Such words startle when one reads them in more than a perfunctory way. "What," cries one, "have I not prophesied in the name of the Lord, have I not fought for him a mighty fight through many years?" And there answers a voice which says, "I never knew you." Many men shall in the day of the great revealing say, "Lord, Lord," and shall point to the great works which they have done, only to be reminded that to talk and to contend are easy, but that to live ever in the spirit of the Master is the true test of life.

Testing one's views and one's contentions by the word of the Apostle may sometimes be humiliating. Each man had better do it for himself. The finger of another placed on a sore spot may cause us agony which will not be so shameful when our own finger does the probing. Have I lived in the spirit of Christ today? Have I behaved towards my brethren as he would have me? Have I brought my every thought into captivity to him? Has my old man, that man of pride and envy and selfishness and conceit, been proved dead by my doings? Have I looked on all people with the compassion which was in the Master? The questions come fast enough. Welcome each one and put it with something like fairness. Do the events of the day prove that you are "one of his?"

In all our relations in the churches we should not hesitate to apply the same strict test. One of the dreadful things about theological controversy is that men so often forget of what spirit they are. They contend for the truth, but not in love. Who has not been present at meetings where there has been a tenseness in the atmosphere which was not of the Lord? Who has not felt rising a spirit of intolerance, a spirit which would put its hands about the necks of others and compel them to one's will? Only with shame do Christian men confess it, but the fact is too evident. Discussion is excellent when it is done as in the presence of the Master. The moment it betrays a spirit which is unlike his, it becomes a dreadful thing. And no specious words can ever prove that he will approve. In days like the present, when denominational matters cause difference of opinion, it behooves us to remember whose we are. We are not politicians, our gatherings are not partisan conventions; we are Christian brethren and are anxious to bring forth fruits worthy of the leading of the divine Spirit.

There are a number of words of the Scripture which may well, as the winter months come on, challenge our attention and thoughtful study. One of them we have quoted in our opening sentence. Another is that phrase, "in Christ"; another still that which was in the mind of the inspired writer when he said, "Christ in you."

The Child in the School

CONVERSION is followed by a period of training and growth. The new-born babe in Christ is to develop into the man or woman who can digest the strong meat. The beginner in the ways of the Lord is to grow up in all things into him who is the head. Christians are exhorted to work out their own salvation with fear and trembling, remembering always for their comfort and hope that it is God who worketh in them. The period of training in Christian things covers the whole of life. There will never be a time when new light may not be expected to break out from God's Word, when one may not expect to see before him fresh possibilities of growth. Therefore there is a place in our church schools of every sort for the adult who desires to feed on the Word.

Naturally, however, the Sunday school is thought of as the place where the children are instructed in the Word. Christian parents desire their children to follow them in their love for the Master. They know that the Word is the sword of the Spirit. They will, therefore, by careful teaching and training put this sword into the hand of the Spirit; they will furnish the child's mind with the subject matter which shall one day be a mighty force in bringing him into definite allegiance to Jesus Christ.

Men's thoughts of education have broadened and deepened in recent years. The child has been studied with more care than was formerly given to him. We know better the processes of thought which go on in him. Avenues of approach are better understood. And all this has had its effect in the development of the Sunday school and its methods. Churches are desirous of serving the Lord intelligently through their schools. Religious education is being given a larger place in the thoughts of people and so in the budgets of the churches. We have no right to do anything less than our best in the Lord's service.

All this is in the background of the minds of the editors as THE BAPTIST brings out this week a special Sunday-school number. Our desire is to serve the churches and to help them do their work with greater efficiency. We are rather proud of this number. There will be found in it an article on a church program, showing the place of education; there is a stirring article on the subject of Sunday-school music and yet another of the utmost value, suggesting how churches which cannot afford a special Sunday-school building may yet adapt their present quarters to the demands of the school. Attention has been given to the place of special days in the school year and to the various forms of work possible. There is here information concerning many practical matters of method. And there is gathered also from the various state information regarding the pupils in our Sunday schools and young people's societies and the goals which have been set for the coming year. This is a number to be studied by all interested in the educational work of the church, and then to be laid aside for future reference.

In including so much good material of a special kind, the editors have been obliged, much to their regret, to curtail some of the regular departments and especially to cut down the volume of church news. For all of this, they hope to make amends in the next issue.

Saloon Men Used to Say the Same Thing

MINISTERS need large quantities of advice to keep them from going astray, and get it. The Herald-Examiner of Chicago, essays the role of counsellor to the clergy, and goes about the part in this fashion:

"His hearers have gathered to worship, not to discuss sociology, economics or politics. . . . Christianity sets its face against dishonesty, unfair dealing, cruelty, whether physical or economic. But is the view of an individual minister, in highly disputed problems, concerning what is dishonest, unfair or cruel, to be accepted and incorporated into Christianity? We can not see it."

That is one side, well said—as well as it used to be said when ministers began to crowd the saloon business too hard for its comfort.

But there is another side.

Audiences gather in the churches not merely for worship, but also for "instruction in righteousness"; and large questions of right and wrong lie in the fields of sociology, economics and politics. Where, except in those fields does Christianity find the "dishonesty, unfair dealing and cruelty" against which it sets its face?

No, the view of the individual minister ought not to be accepted and incorporated into Christianity; but when he knows what Christianity says on a vital subject, it is his business to try to secure the acceptance and incorporation of that teaching in the life of men about him, both individually and collectively. It is his business as a teacher of righteousness to see clearly and to say where the right is to be found on many issues in which the moral vision of other men who specialize on self-interest is clouded, and to show the way to peace where other men blindly strive. If not, what is he hanging around the community for?

The minister cannot wait to speak until warring factions shall have given their mutual consent to his message. He must deliver it when and where it is needed. In fact the real ministers of God's word have been trained like athletes for twenty-five centuries in talking frankly to the world about things concerning which the world wants them to keep still. They are used to taking this hazard with all of its dangers of both blundering and suffering. And they are not at all likely to retreat.

Note this:

When the war broke out leaders in politics and business cried loudly to the ministry for help. They told us that the war was a great humanitarian struggle for liberty and all human rights. They assured us that America had aligned herself with Christianity and that after the war, the forces of government, business and the church would be joined to create a better order of civilization. And they called on the ministers by everything holy to take the moral leadership of a great crusade.

The ministers, many of them, felt a trifle skeptical of this sudden conversion; but as a body they accepted the profession as genuine, rallied to the support of the war, and with few exceptions stood by till victory was secure. Then they were coldly informed that their advice was no longer required, that the reputed ideals of the war were a mere sham, and would the clergy please to step aside while the political and business interests of the nation proceeded to gather in such available gains as lay in sight!

The duped clergy are exhibiting restlessness over this repudiation of a high moral compact. And now the men guilty of it are whispering to the churches, "Sh! the church has nothing to do with sociology, economics and politics. Let them stick to religion."

Professor Harry Ward has recently asked, "Will the church stand fire?" Just wait and see. Any man who thinks to silence the clergy while Baal and Mammon and Mars are re-enthroned as the nation's Gods, is preparing for himself a great surprise.

Restoring the Constitution Inch by Inch

PERSONAL friends of Postmaster General Will H. Hays, without regard to party, are not surprised at his attempts to put the constitution of the United States into effect once more in the management of his department. He comes of that kind of stock and was so brought up. Down in his native haunts of Sullivan County, Indiana, the superstition prevails generally that the constitution was made to live by.

His recent orders for the restoration of the mailing privilege to those unlawfully deprived of it by official usurpation during the war and after, and his assurance that wanton espionage, censorship and the opening of private mail at the whim of subalterns are to cease, are among the most reassuring symptoms of returning public sanity.

One of the most damaging results of the war was the reckless suspension of the constitution by irresponsible official action. It will be a long time before liberty in America recovers from that blow.

But Mr. Hays is doing his part towards hastening its recovery. As soon as he succeeds in restoring the constitution in his own department, let him be transferred to some other one in which medieval darkness still reigns.

What Is "Modernism"?

WHAT is this thing called "modernism"? To a turbid deluge of words about it let us add a rill of clarifying definition.

It has no organization authorized to speak for it. Consequently the only way by which we may arrive at an authoritative definition is to take the picture of it as given by certain spokesmen of the organized Fundamental movement who have specialized on the discussion of "modernism."

The picture which they give shows it to be a system of thought exhibited in denials of a personal God, of revelation, of Christ, of the Bible, of the atonement, of salvation by faith and of practically the entire range of Christian truth which is involved in these central conceptions. Its essential notion is that modern rational and scientific investigation have superseded and invalidated faith in any revealed religion.

"Modernism," therefore, is a system of philosophy which, in the name of modern reason and science, denies the essential truth of the Christian religion.

A vast amount of talk and some temper will be saved by keeping this definition clearly in mind. In the light of it, will all Baptists who are "modernists" and all who have accused some Baptist of being a "modernist," please to stand up and be counted?

Hoover to the Bat Once More

HOPEFUL in the highest degree is the effort of the national government, now for the first time definitely undertaken, to find a practical solution for the problem of unemployment. Thoughtful people, not making allowance for the natural ineptitude of governments in providing for the general welfare with insight and foresight, have wondered why the necessity for such action had remained so long hidden from the eyes of statesmen.

But the inevitable discovery is made. Secretary Hoover has announced to the world the mystery hid from ages and generations, that unemployment and imminent starvation in a country with boundless resources and industrially organized, are not normal, and that the way to employ the unemployed is to employ them.

Hitherto governments have gone upon the theory that if the state will take care of the interests of business, business will take care of labor; that is, prosperity at the top will gravitate to the bottom. But practical experience has a habit of putting a hitch in the operation of the theory.

Normal prosperity does not gravitate from top to bottom it circulates from bottom to top like sap in a tree. When a plant shows signs of drought, the sensible remedy is to water the roots. Economic drought calls for a similar procedure.

Glad to Pass It On

UNDER this heading the Alabama Baptist, in a fine brotherly mood surveys the situation as follows:

"The Baptist in its issue of July 16 notes the fact that in the Northern Baptist Convention there were 106,000 baptisms last year. There were 175,000 in the Southern Baptist Convention. But since there are 2,961,000 white Baptists in the South and only 1,293,000 in the North, the ratio in favor of the North is 12 to 17.

"The question is then asked: 'In the light of these facts, do they honestly think that Northern Baptists are as bad as some of their papers make us? Will those papers pass the tidings along to their readers and ask them to believe that we are not wholly God-forsaken?' Sure! We are glad to pass it on and incidentally make one or two remarks.

"First, we are profoundly grateful that in the Southern Convention there were so many baptisms. Secondly, we are grateful that the Northern Convention had grace and energy enough to beat us in the good work. Thirdly, when both are taken together there is no room for boasting, though we may devoutly thank God for the total number of baptisms in the two conventions. Last of all the editor of the Alabama Baptist expresses scant sympathy with the men in either convention who relegate all other men to the region of Pluto who do not use their language and see every point of policy and doctrine from their own viewpoint.

"So long as Baptists are free there will be diversity of opinion. And the good brethren who wish to cast all minds in the same mould have on their hands an impossible task."

That is the real spirit, old fellow; and a little cultivation of it all around will help mightily towards Baptist unity and progress.

Fill a Ship

THE thought of filling an entire ship with clothing and other necessities for winter life in Poland, Latvia and Czecho-Slovakia is fast taking hold of the imaginations of Northern Baptists. No rummage sale can compare for a moment in interest with the possibility of giving the things one does not really need for use in countries where people must suffer without them. The Christ who said, "I was naked, and ye clothed me," stands before them, and in the person of his suffering little ones they are delighted to minister to him.

It should not be necessary to urge that only goods which have an actual value be shipped to New York, that particular attention be given to the directions issued by the Foreign Mission Society, and that care be taken to organize the churches in such a way that the largest and best results can be secured. We have learned in recent years the value of good organization and are not likely to return in this matter to a haphazard method.

THE BAPTIST will publish from week to week information regarding this ship. Note it carefully. If any questions arise in the minds of our readers, we shall be glad to answer inquiries which may be sent either to this office or direct to the offices of the Foreign Mission Societies, 276 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

The Service and Exchange Department, of which mention was made a few weeks ago, will be inaugurated in our next issue. Once people see the possible value of this new service THE BAPTIST is preparing to do for its readers, there will be no lack of items for this column.

Sometimes it is said that the men are not in the churches. Study for a few minutes the pictures of the typical men's classes which appear in the center of this paper, remember that there are hundreds more just like these among the churches of the Northern Baptist Convention, recall that this growth has been largely a matter of the last few years, and you will be convinced that not only are men connected with the church life now but that they are destined to take an increasingly active part in it. No movement in recent years holds more of encouragement for the churches than this.

Remodeling Church Buildings for Sunday Schools

How the little old church may become a thing of beauty and service—Akron plan a failure—Keep your Sunday School out of the basement—Send curtains and movable partitions to the junk pile.

By JOSEPH HUDNUT

THE development of church planning occasioned by the new types of Sunday-school organization and of teaching has been rapid and, of course, largely unforeseen. Only a few years ago a single room sufficed for church services and for Sunday school; after that came the basement room used for both Sunday school and social meetings; and then, in the decades 1885-1905, the "Akron" Sunday school, with its radiating class rooms opening with folding partitions into a central area. Then came the modern phase: the introduction of specially designed class rooms and assembly rooms adapted scientifically to the uses of each Sunday school department.

Naturally the church buildings of the country have not as a whole kept pace, in their physical aspects, with these rapid developments in Sunday school requirements. Church buildings cannot be re-built in a day; they last rather for generations; and even when they become outworn there are often sentimental reasons (which rightly should be considered) which prevent reconstruction every quarter century, whatever may be the demands of scientific teaching.

In any case, only the more progressive church communities would desire to meet these demands. Churches are still being built with basement Sunday schools or with the "Akron" scheme—or with some specious compromise between these. Thus they are obsolete as soon as they are built: a condition to be deplored, but one which is, under the circumstances, quite natural and even inevitable.

The illustrations which accompany this article are not intended as plans for church buildings. They are merely diagrams whose purpose is to make clear the points brought out in the article. The author is advising architect for the American Baptist-Home Mission Society.

FIGURE ONE

Thus it happens that there are thousands of church buildings, ill adapted to the uses of a modern Sunday school, which cannot immediately be replaced by buildings which are so adapted. Obviously, there should be, in such cases, some middle course between a complete replacement, on the one hand, and on the other hand the continued use of an existing building which lays so great a burden upon the Sunday school; and such middle course may often be found in remodeling or building over the present Sunday-school structure.

There is such a variety in the types and sizes and construction of Baptist churches that it will be difficult to offer any very practical advice respecting the different ways in which this remodeling may best be carried out. The practical course is to study each case independently; and for that work the Department of Architecture of the American Baptist Home Mission Society (23 East Twenty-sixth Street, New York City) is especially equipped. The plans of the church building, some photographs of its interior and exterior, and a general account of the situation to be met should be submitted to this Department, whose advice, based on special experience and knowledge applied to the specific case in question, would of course be far more valuable than any advice which could be offered in an article so general as this. I am considering here only some very general aspects of the problem.

Subdividing an Auditorium.

Let us consider first the one-room church building. I believe that it is unwise to attempt to subdivide such church rooms by means of curtains or folding partitions: first, because these are very little practical use in isolating the different classes and, second, because they are unsightly. It has been demonstrated over and over again that efficient class-room work cannot be carried on in rooms separated by folding partitions. I think it is hardly necessary to labor that point here.

There are, in such cases, two alternatives to the use of folding partitions: first, the subdivision of the auditorium by permanent partitions, and second, the construction of a wing or addition containing the Sunday-school rooms.

Figure 1, "A" and "B", illustrates a method of subdividing a one-room church which was so large that it could still serve the church community even after this reduction. "A" shows the plan of the church before remodeling, "B" after remodeling; and it will be seen that no less than six Sunday-school rooms have been added: two of them at either side of a new sanctuary, two at the entrance of the church, and two in a mezzanine, where they are reached by stairways leading from the vestibule. Toilets for the little children (a very necessary feature) have been provided, two of the class rooms have been so arranged as to serve as dressing rooms for the baptism service and as choir rooms.

Building on a Wing.

But suppose that the auditorium, being just large enough for the services, cannot be thus subdivided. In that case it may be practicable to build on a wing.

Now a wing will of course very greatly affect the appearance of the church; for that reason alone it ought not to be built without the advice of an architect; and besides, it will require in each case some expert study to determine just what kind of a wing (or wings) should be built to meet a particular condition. The existing plan, the shape of the lot, the exposures, the direction in which the building is approached, the architectural style; the materials, the number and enrollment of the classes—all these have to be considered. It ought to be perfectly obvious that no rule could cover conditions which can be so varied and so complex and which involve so many technical matters. The Department of Architecture exists primarily to advise individual churches concerning these problems, which, by their very nature, are bound to be individual in character.

But, generally speaking, I can say that a wing ought to lead from the narthex or vestibule of a church or, if that is impracticable, then from the side; and that the least desirable arrangement is a wing which leads from the rear of the pulpit platform.

When a wing leads from the narthex or vestibule, as in figure 2, "A" or "B" the "circulation" of the church—that is to say the means of getting from one part of it to another—is concentrated around a single unit (the narthex) and that unit is directly reached from the main entrances. In other words, you can go directly from the main entrance to any room without confusion or without passing through other rooms; the building has a "backbone"—is organized compactly and efficiently. If there is a general Sunday-school assembly in the auditorium, the various classes can pass from the auditorium to their class rooms easily and without confusion; and all the rooms can be lighted, ventilated, and isolated from each other.

But the conditions of site, of architectural beauty (an important one), or of exposures may make a side wing preferable. Figure 3, "A" and "B" illustrates such wings: "A" being parallel in axis to the auditorium, "B" being at right angles in axis.

"A" has this advantage: that all the rooms on the first floor can open directly from the auditorium, so that a side aisle of the church can serve as a corridor or passage between them. If this aisle is sufficiently wide and if it leads directly to the entrance vestibule the arrangement is tolerable and affects a considerable saving in the cost of construction without creating a great congestion in circulation.

"B" is better in that it provides a less congested circulation (and circulation, next to lighting, is the most important consideration in school room planning (but a separate Sunday-school entrance should be provided; otherwise children must pass through the auditorium to reach their class rooms. This additional entrance serves to separate the circulation into two parts, one for the church, one for the Sunday-school, and that is not a serious disadvantage when there is no general assembly; but it does tend to destroy the complete unity of the building as a whole, and if the auditorium is used for Sunday-school work or social purposes the congestion in going to and from class rooms and auditorium might become quite acute. "B" often gives a good exterior effect and provides an additional exit for the auditorium.

Still another method of adding to a church is a wing built at the pulpit end. But except where the site or other conditions especially demand it, this is the least desirable way in which to build on new rooms. This is true because, (a) it is impossible to unify the circulation of the building—no one system of corridors or halls can serve all parts of it, (b) the new wing is inaccessible from the front of the building (presumably its main approach) and (c) because access to the class rooms from the auditorium is to be had only from the front. In addition to these reasons is the fact that it is extremely difficult to make a rear addition look well and it is apt to injure the interior aspect of the auditorium by cutting off the light from the Sanctuary or introducing doorways on either side of it.

I have considered now only the one-room church, but of course wings can be built on churches having more than one room, and these wings can be one or two stories high.

Subdividing a Basement.

A common type of the church has more than one room is the church with a basement Sunday-school. During the decades when it was thought improper for children to meet in the auditorium and when Sunday-school instruction was largely unorganized and confined to little children only, the basement offered a practicable and economical space where the Sunday school, in one mass, could meet. The progress of Sunday-school management and organization, of the sciences of ventilation and acoustics, and a truer understanding of child psychology have rendered such methods of teaching obsolete; but the basements remain.

Now whenever it is possible to do so, these basements should be immediately abandoned for Sunday-school purposes. They may become club-rooms; meeting places for adults; drill halls for boy scouts; banquet halls for church suppers; but no Sunday-school work should be permitted in a basement, if that can be avoided.

It may be, however, that a church is compelled, because of its limited means, to make a temporary use of the basement for its Sunday school—or for a part of its Sunday school. In that case the basement room may be subdivided.

If only a part of the Sunday school is to remain in the basement, I recommend most strongly that this part be the senior young people's, and adult, classes. We can put only two classes, let us say, in a new wing; then let those classes be the beginners' and primary classes.

Figure 4, "A" and "B", illustrates two ways of subdividing a basement, "A" having a wing which provides beginners' and primary rooms above ground, and "B" having all of the classes in the basement. "A" has a social hall—a large room for meetings and dinners—while in "B" this is not possible, since all the floor space is needed by the Sunday-school rooms.

Obviously, "A" is much the better of the two; and the reason for this superiority is the fact that we have given so large a proportion of floor space to the one large room. A basement under an auditorium is necessarily ill suited to a plan which calls for a large number of small rooms because all of these small rooms have to have outside walls. The central part of the basement cannot be cut up into small rooms unless, as in "B", these are deep and narrow—that is to say, unless they are poorly lighted. Besides, one has always to consider, in arranging partitions, the position of the posts which support the floor; these, combined with the rigid boundaries imposed by the shape of the church above, make it very difficult to work out a "flexible plan," one in which the sizes and shapes of the rooms are determined by their use rather than by some structural requirement.

be reached directly from the stairs; if we are to make these units into class rooms some means of access must be provided to them from the stairs.

A semi-circular corridor is built to extend from stairway to stairway just in front of the line of the gallery and over this is a similar corridor, both being separated from the central space by a solid partition. From these corridors open the class rooms and assembly rooms which replace the old class units.

The columns and beams of the old structure are left undisturbed; only the light partitions are to be torn out and rebuilt in the manner shown; and it will be seen that all the departments are provided for except the juniors; and for the juniors there is left what was formerly the central space of the Akron room. This space is now a semi-circular room with a very high ceiling, lighted by a skylight and ventilated through the stair wells (or by a blower)—not a very desirable room, certainly, but one which could be used for the junior assembly provided there are, as in this case, junior class rooms across the corridor.

In what is now the second story, in order to do away with the sloping floors of what was the gallery, I would build the new corridor, if possible, on a level with the rear of the gallery and then bring all the floors up to this level by blocking. That would give low ceilings; but these are not a defect in a small room.

I believe that we shall eventually build such independent buildings or wings for every Baptist church in the country. We are beginning to understand at last the immense seriousness of this problem of religious education; we want to meet fairly and generously the responsibility which rests upon us to properly instruct our children in the fundamental truths of Christian doctrine and conduct; and for that end only the best equipment will answer. Remodeling can seldom give us that best equipment; but it is, at least, a step in the right direction.

So, even if we do not consider the lack of good air, or any psychological reasons, the basement is still a very poor place for a Sunday school.

Rebuilding the "Akron" type.

The "Akron" type of Sunday-school room had at least this merit: that it lifted the children out of the basement. Beyond that little can be said for it.

The remodeling of such a room presents some almost insurmountable difficulties. Take for example the room illustrated in Figure 5—a typical Akron room. You will notice first that all of the light and air is monopolized by the individual class units, leaving the central space (when the folding partitions are closed) dark and close. Observe too that only two class units on the main floor, and two in the gallery, can

Sunday School Music—Asset or Liability?

Will the adult prefer the beauties of "He Shall Feed His Flock" to a rumpetty-um-tum with ill-mated words and a pious air?—A church in Chicago shrieks

By WILLIAM LESTER

IN these days of flux and change, when so much that the past held important has been proven unstable, and new values are being read into unfamiliar ideas, it is well for us to re-estimate the use and intrinsic merit of the things close to hand, of the influences that meet us in our own lives. Hence the motive for this brief survey of the subject of music in our Sunday schools, what it largely is, what it can be, and what it must not be. I am well aware that innumerable papers have been written on this subject, and that there has been much earnest discussion around the question; the music theoretician has damned conditions in fervid fulminations; the "gospel-hymn" publisher, with his natural commercial interest in the matter, has worked the immense field for his own profit; many sincere souls have bravely faced the particular problems embodied in their own community conditions, and have pragmatically accomplished what they could. But little has been said or written about the most important angle in the whole situation; or so it seems to me. My justification in writing this article is that I am looking at the matter unbiased by prejudice or personal motives. I am trying to present the view point of an active church organist—perhaps the type of person most involved in interest, and least articulate. My points may not be new or original; the viewpoint may have value as novelty.

Melodious Bow-wows

We hear much of the present low level of church music. To pick up the professional journals of the church musicians is to get the impression that we have failed, and have gone to the bow-wows! Admittedly, congregational singing is at a very low ebb. Music in many of the churches has become a mere concert session, limited only by the necessary choice of sacred or would-be-such texts. Choirs have become concert companies, and organists perpetrate memories of the movie-house. And we all unanimously blame the musicians, and then feel that we have done our whole duty.

Brethren—and, more emphatically, sisters—the responsibility lies at our own door steps. Fundamentally, we are the arbiters of what we shall get from the choirloft. The soloists and instrumentalists will give us what we call for, what we pay for, if we INSIST! What is needed is not a new generation of professional musicians, but rather a higher sense of what properly constitutes church music, music for devotional purposes, throughout our general membership; and the vision and consecration necessary to realize that high aim—education and action, not pessimistic piffle.

What is the Purpose

Fundamentally, the only valid reason for the presence of music in the church service is to heighten and deepen our sense of reverence, and more vividly to express our devotion than can be done by words alone. That is our duty to the Creator. We should endeavor to give of our best, for, in so doing, we reap what we sow. I stand with that great influence for better church music, Sir John Stainer, when he declares that the sole use of a choir is to do well what is too difficult or too elaborate to be handled by the congregation, but not simply as a work of art. Religious feeling must be the motive and inspiration of the solo and anthem as much as the minister's prayer or the general hymn. Too often we confuse difficulty with value. Simplicity and barrenness are no more equivalents than artistic worth and a plethora of notes. In music, as in speech, what counts is the idea expressed. Great art consists in expressing the most in the simplest possible way.

In the field of language, established rules for grammatical and rhetorical construction are vitally necessary; they are not arbitrary nor fashioned by sudden whim. They were evolved by usage as the speech channel itself grew. So in music we have definitely right and wrong things to consider. We have badly constructed ungrammatical music, written by men who either lack proper training or have not sufficient artistic ideals to practice proper self-criticism; and we have some well-built, clearly and beautifully expressed work produced by musicians who have polished and developed their natural gifts until their product meets the strict tests exacted by their own artistic consciences. Which shall we have in the church? If clumsy, uncouth, slangy, irreverent maundering is not the proper thing for the pulpit, why should we expect that we can attain a reverent state of mind if our music is of that level? If the sermon must not be first cousin to a cheap vaudeville monologue, why should we tolerate hymn tunes that so blatantly display their cheap origin?

Admittedly church music is in a poor state today. Whether it is better than ten years ago, or a generation ago, is not the point. What I am stressing is that the average church of today exacts a high standard from its minister and is complacently satisfied with a grade of music which differs from the cabaret variety largely in increased dullness. Only a few weeks ago I passed by a large Chicago church during Sunday school time, and I can assure you that the hymn tune that was being shrieked out would have made a most effective finale to a cheap musical comedy. It is no valid point to claim that the cheap music is easier, more practical. A poorly built, badly co-ordinated machine gives neither service nor ease of operation as does a finely built one: so with music.

As the Twig is Bent

This brings me to my long-delayed point, that we can permanently raise the standard of church music in only one way. "As the twig is bent, so the tree inclines." What musical ideals I instil in the child will determine whether or no the adult will prefer the beauties of "He shall feed his flock" to a rumpetty-um-tum perversion of a cheap jazz tune with ill-mated words, given a pious air by its use in a Sabbath school session. We do not train a child for college by giving it "Joe Miller's Joke Book" and a subscription to the Police Gazette, with the Hearst newspapers for collateral reading. Neither can we expect the child's musical sense to develop healthfully on the tonal equivalent of such a diet.

Understand me: I am not arguing that the untrained child mind must be fed a diet of Bach, Beethoven and Brahms; though each of these great composers left much that appeals to such primary appreciation. I am contending simply that to protect the fresh adolescent pleasure houses from the negative influence of unsound, crude, perverting and debasing tin-pan-alley products, only good music shall be used. And by that expression I mean also the texts. These last must be sincere, devotional, of poetic value, adapted in idea to the child mind. Hair-splitting points of theology have no appeal to the mind of youth, and the hymn text should respect that point. Appropriate texts must be fashioned to suitable music; which, in turn, must be singable, practical, grammatical and devotional. A very definite line of cleavage must be evident between music for secular purposes and that intended for religious use.

What to Sing

We must use careful judgment in the use of these hymns. It is injudicious to ask young voices to strain at tunes which call for much sustained singing, extreme range, or are of much harmonic complexity. The hymns of such men as W. H. Jude, John Goss, Arthur Sullivan, Sir George Elvey, Wm. Bradbury and W. H. Doane afford many excellent models of the ideal mating of worthy poems to singable music. What is not practical is not worth bothering about but practical availability is not the sole criterion. The religious value and grade of musical vesture must also be considered.

Wherever possible the music in the Sabbath school should be divided into three divisions. For the youngest children a stock of unison songs, carefully garnered and chosen, should be provided. A treasure house of such material is to be found in "Hymns for the King's Children," edited by Edward M. Fuller, and Published by the Judson Press. For the next division comprising the bulk of the school, I would recommend the use of a book such as "The Popular Hymnal," issued by the Judson Press, or "Hymns for Today," from the press of the Fillmore Music House. During the middle period of the Sunday-school course, and by means of these books or the like, the developing sensibilities will become increasingly conversant with the best of the "gospel-hymn" type and also a grounding in the famous old bulwarks of hymnology such as "Sun of my Soul," "Abide With Me," "All Hail the Power," etc. In a school where it is impractical to make more than two divisions this bi-part course would answer. But wherever possible, I would advocate that the upper classes sing from the regular church hymnal, thus becoming familiar with that material and generating the habit of singing on the hymns. When these young recruits add their vim and enthusiasm to the church-hymn sing, things will move, and we will soon get over our nervous chill about the deadly state of congregational vocalising.

The child who grows up with a mind unstored with the beautiful hymns of the Christian Church has my sympathy. He or she has been cheated out of a priceless heritage of the past church life. The great hymns have come out of the momentous spiritual combats of the past, and the vital cosmic urge so aptly and so powerfully set forth by the departed stalwarts can and must be communicated to our young recruits if the church is not to lose a tremendous power for good.

Orchestra and Carols

If an orchestra or even a few solo instruments, are available for service in the school, by all means enlist such aid. Effective, easy hymn orchestrations can be secured at a low cost, usable in all combinations. Some few favored churches boast the equipment of an organ to assist in the music of the Sunday school, and this is to be imitated. No piano can compete with even a small organ when it comes to the question of giving adequate support for mass singing. But most of us will have to get along with a piano: only, let it be as good an instrument as possible. I have played on Sunday school pianos that deserved a fitting cremation some time before the Civil War; poor relics that gaped with missing keys, that produced most startling chord combinations. The best is none too good. Whenever possible, and occasion warrants, have some special music; cajole or bribe the regular church choir to prepare and deliver fitting music. Such little effort pays both ways: in interest in the school, and in tilling fertile soil for future appreciation in the church.

One of the hobbies of the present writer is carol hunting. Out of the dim past, from the most unlikely sources, we can disinter beautiful, quaint, appealing carol melodies, usually just as they have been handed down from generation to generation, finally coming to rest in the notebook of some amateur music lover, attracted by their tender humanness. Much of this crude material is racy with the strength of the soil. It takes loving interest and keen appreciation of their potential beauties to effectively reset and prepare for general use once more. Usually just the melody alone, with mere fragments of text attached, exists. It is the duty and pleasure of the trained musician to renovate this folk material so that it is again available for all. Clarence Dickinson has been eminent in such labor, as have such men as Weckert, Ferrari and David S. Smith; not to forget the efficient labors of Stainer, Chapell, Duncan and Gevaert.

Some Carols Available

Some two years ago, in an effort to make more widely available some of this little-known material I wrote a cantata for Christmas use, published by Carl Fischer under the title "The Little Lord Jesus," the music of which is based on sixteen of the loveliest old French and German Noels and Carols. Last Christmas, at the instance of Doctor Stifler, I arranged two medieval carols for inclusion in the official Sunday school service issued by the American Baptist Publication Society, which service was widely used throughout our denomination. And for this coming season, the H. W. Gray Co. are publishing a set of "Eight Old Carols," collected and arranged by the writer, a group of exquisite old melodies ranging back as far as the tenth century. In this carol material we have ideal matter for use in the Sunday school. The melodies are instinct with vitality, otherwise they would not have come down to us; they have been worn into artistic symmetry by the usage of time; their naive simplicity is the clarity of cosmic expression, not any poverty of statement. A thousand minds and a thousand enthusiasms have gone to make up one of these simple tunes. They are the essence of true faith expressed in music; more than man-made, the real inspiration from God, filtered and expressed through the multitudinous aspirations of heaven-looking humanity! The carol should fill a large part of the musical literature of the junior church. Once heard, they haunt the memory.

If the musical influence of the Sunday school does not so elevate the taste, and strengthen the spiritual sensitiveness of the church itself, it is a liability, not an asset. The Sunday school of today is the church of tomorrow: shall we climb or coast?

The Ashtabula Church Program

Many good Sunday schools have waited for a practical and complete scheme of religious education which has been proved in actual experience. Here it is.

By HERMAN LANG

For a nation to be permanently great it must be intelligent and religious. Secular education imparts intelligence but only incidentally religion. Mr. Athearn well says, "A skilled hand and an informed mind must be united with a good heart to produce a citizen safe for democracy." Citizenship must be cultured and religious. Self preservation demands an educational program that will give equal educational opportunities to the youth of our land. "No child shall be damned to illiteracy because he chanced to be born in one of the waste places of the nation." Splendid progress is being made along the lines of secular education. But how about religious education for America's youth? This too should concern us greatly and all the more since greater emphasis is to be placed on secular education. Can we be permanently great and continue to exclude the Bible from our educational program? We must put greater emphasis upon religious education in our educational efforts.

But in our country there is complete separation of church and state. We do not ask for definite religious instruction to be put into our public school programs. While the Bible is read at the opening of public schools in some states by request, in others, by permission, no formal religious instruction is given in connection with the public curriculum. Wherever the Bible reading is done it can hardly be considered religious instruction.

Must be Done by the Church

As things now are, this great work must be done by the church. The first responsibility rests upon the local church. But its responsibility must not stand in the way of a spirit of co-operation with other denominations. This is necessary if we would succeed in such a big task.

It is a hopeful sign to see many interested in religious day schools, in credits for Bible study by the public schools, in churches conducting regular week-day classes and co-operating in maintaining community schools, like that of Gary, Indiana; Van Wert, Ohio; Evanston, Illinois; Des Moines, Iowa; and a number of other places; and in the special week-day church school, known as the daily vacation Bible school. In institutes and conferences conducted by specialists on religious instruction.

It is encouraging to know that there are at least a dozen cities, and probably more, in our country which are meeting with success in the conduct of religious educational work in connection with public schools. However, the Bible school has been the chief agency to which the church has confined its efforts almost exclusively until in recent years. In this country over sixteen million are coming under its influence. However, this great effort does not meet the demands in thirty-minute periods of instruction. It does not reach the twenty-seven million children and youth under twenty-five years nominally Protestants who are not enrolled in it and who receive no formal systematic instruction.

Nearly all the work done outside the Sunday school is irregular and limited in scope. The great majority still depend upon the half-hour period on Sunday provided by the Sunday school. Very few get even the benefit of fifty-two lessons a year for in the experience of most of our Sunday school scholars, the periods are reduced.

Sessions

The local church must give more time to this work. She must invest dollars where she is now putting pennies. Every local church large or small should have a committee on religious education. The first work of this committee should be the correlating of the educational activities of the local church, and in some way connecting them with the religious educational activities of the community. This committee should put into effect a unified agency known as the church school in which all the educational activities of the local church would be unified. This committee should have its power increased until it would appoint the Sunday-school superintendent, director of B. Y. P. U. and the directors of the various educational activities of the local church.

There must be some organization—some educational agency—by which the local churches' educational activities will be correlated. This will enable the church "to construct from the material now being prepared and the organizations of proved worth now in existence, for religious education (and quite definitely along the line indicated by our forward thinking men) a program of education, which, while meeting the needs of the particular church, will be both co-ordinate and church-centered as to organization, and will be adequate both in material and variety of activities, and in actual time given to class work to meet the needs of all the people for whom that particular church feels responsible." This committee will have an unusual opportunity to give our churches the benefit of our splendid Baptist publications as well as our denominational papers and other publications.

The possibilities in religious education in the average local church are tremendous. Do not wait until you can do some big thing. If we develop a little further what we already have, splendid progress can be made in a few years. The educational opportunities in almost any local church are sufficient to enable one to begin building a program that will be wonderful in its results. Pastors must stay in a church from ten to fifteen years if real success is attained in the great work of religious education. Any pastor who puts emphasis on religious education can easily prolong his stay in a church.

How Ashtabula Does It

The following program was carried out in the First Baptist Church of Ashtabula in 1917 with very few changes. This church has given this work unusual attention for nine consecutive years. The war and conditions following made some changes in this program. Last year a community school was added; this summer two daily vacation Bible schools, one working with many foreigners and conducted by real experts.

The work for the coming fall and winter will have many interesting features. This program is given by request and to show what is possible for a local church along the line of religious education.

The pastor of the church is the official director of religious education. Other general officers are secretary, registrar, treasurer and librarian. The faculty is composed of the acting committee on religious education, and all who are engaged in the educational activities of the church. The pastor is responsible for efficient instructors.

Terms of the school year run from October 1 to December 31 and from January 1 to April 30.

Must Put in Time and Money

Sessions of the church school are held as follows:

Sunday sessions, 11:15 A.M. This is the Bible school session, a department school, with beginners, primary and junior department, each of which meets separately with its own superintendent. The intermediate and senior departments meet with the adult department in the opening exercise. The brotherhood Bible class meets by itself. The international graded lessons are used in every department for which material is available. The Bible school session is recognized by the church as the principal educational opportunity in the church school, and it is also recognized that the first work in this department is the teaching of the Bible.

Sunday session at 6:00 P.M. This is the B. Y. P. session, the young people's department of the church school in session. The director and the educational committee have correlated these courses with the educational program of the church school. Here the Bible readers' course as outlined in "Service" and the young people's meeting topics are considered with the regular missionary topics as given in "Service."

Monday session 7:15 to 8:15 P.M. Two class periods provided as follows: a first class period in charge of pastor, 7:15 to 8 P.M.; a second class period 8 P.M. to 8:45 P.M. in charge of public school teachers including superintendent of schools and other local educators.

Thursday session 7:15 to 8:15 P.M. This session is in charge of the pastor—the regular prayer-meeting night. This work in no way hinders the devotional part of the meeting.

Other sessions are held in connection with the monthly meetings of the women's missionary society and with the adult Bible classes under the direction of the director of religious education and the church school.

Biblical Course

The schedule of instruction comprises the following courses:

(1) The Bible as a Book and as Literature. Text book, "The National Introductory Course."

(2) Manuscripts of the Bible and Early

Translations: Septuagint; other translations, Syriac, Arabic, Latin (Special attention given to "Vulgate"). Text book, "The Parchments of Faith," by Merrill. Reference books: "History of Bible," by Mutch William; "The Baptist Teacher Training Manual—Introductory Book."

(3) History of English Bible: early manuscripts, John Wickliffe, William Tyndale, The Great Bible, The Bishop's Bible, The Authorized Bible, Revised Bible. Text book, "History of English Bible," by Pattison.

(4) The Life of Paul. Text book, "The Student's Life of Paul," Gilbert.

Professional Course

(1) Religious Education. This course deals with religious education in the local church. Special attention is given to the department school, graded worship, graded curriculum, and graded expressional activities. Text book, "The Church School," by Athearn. Reference, Weigle, "The Pupil and Teacher."

(2) Sunday School Pedagogy: the teacher's person and preparation; the principles and methods of teaching. Text book, "The National Teacher Training Text Book"; Weigle, "The Pupil and Teacher."

(3) The Modern Church. In connection with this a careful study of the local church will be made. Text Books: "Bible Manual," by Rev. Herman Lang; "Short History of Baptists," by Vedder; The Work of the Northern Baptist Convention; The Graded Bible School of the First Baptist Church of Ashtabula, Ohio. This course is given after a series of special meetings.

Missionary Course

The Bible school missionary teaching in Keystone Series of Graded Lessons and special instructions in special denominational missions by superintendent of missions, are part of the missionary course. The missionary conquest course as given in "Service" for young people's society is included in the missionary course. "Comrades in Service" is to be the text book (during the second term of church school) of a large young ladies' class. "Efficiency Points" is studied by the brotherhood Bible class at the regular class hour, instead of lesson reviews.

At the monthly meetings of the woman's missionary society the standard missionary books for our women are used. In addition to this, the church school circulates missionary books allowing ten points for every missionary book read. We give five points for attendance upon the meetings of the woman's missionary society and ten points for a paper read at the monthly meetings.

Missionary sermons, missionary prayer meetings, and distribution of our denominational literature, and the training of men and women for every member canvass, add much to the efficiency of this course.

Evangelism

This course is the first course given in the second term. Students are expected to enter with the pastor into three weeks of special evangelistic efforts for which credit is given in the unit system. (The pastor also invites to this course those who have entered the "One-to-Win-One Fellowship.") In this there are now over fifty enrolled.) A public invitation to attend will be given to any who wish training in evangelism. This course has for its object training in personal evangelism.

It aims to train for efficiency in soul winning in the local church.

There will be two class sessions for this course. Monday evening, 7:15 to 8 P.M., will be a conference session. At this session such topics as the use of the Bible in evangelism, the Bible class in evangelism, evangelism in the Bible school, will be considered. Thursday evening, 7:15 to 8:15 P.M., we will study the revival: in preparation, in action, in conservation. Text books: "Taking Men Alive," Trumbull; Pastor Lang's "Notes on Evangelism." Reference books: "National Teacher Training Text Book"; "Evangelism Through Bible Study," Goodman; "Pastoral and Personal Evangelism," Goodell.

A Laboratory period follows when the trained workers enter into three or four weeks active evangelism in nightly sessions. Credit is given for this work. Every year for ten years Pastor Lang had a revival due in a great measure to this educational work.

Reading Course

This course is given under the direction of church school and no book is circulated that is not recommended by director of religious education. Books in this reading course are either text books or reference books bearing on the correlated educational program of the church school. Five points are given for a book read and ten points for the reading of a missionary book.

All sessions are held at the First Baptist Church and are open to the public.

I am indebted to a few books I would like to recommend: "World Survey," revised preliminary edition; "Religious Education Journal," June, 1919; "The Church School," Athearn; "The City Institute of Religious Education," Athearn; "A National System of Religious Education," Athearn; "A Survey of Religious Education in the Local Church," Bower; "The Week Church School," Cope.

Wearers of Baptist Shoes

By WILLIAM B. LIPPHARD

WHAT are Baptist shoes? It seems strange to think in terms of ecclesiastical footwear. Nevertheless, the children in the accompanying photograph will most positively affirm that they are wearing Baptist shoes. Did not their shoes arrive in Poland on a steamship from America? Were not their shoes sent last winter by the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society? Were not these shoes purchased with money contributed by American Baptists in response to the appeal on behalf of the suffering people of Europe? How, then, can they be other than Baptist shoes? Regardless of ecclesiastical phraseology, these children appreciate the shoes. Their feet were warm and comfortable during the winter and they now express to Baptists here in America their profound gratitude for assistance.

Readers of "THE BAPTIST" will recall the unusual announcement which appeared in the issue of December 25, regarding the purchase of several thousand pairs of shoes by the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society for shipment to Poland. Some people doubtless wondered why a foreign mission organization should be in the market for shoes. These were bought from a well-known shoe manufacturer in Beverly, Massachusetts, and a substantial part of the order had been made possible by the relief contribution from the First Baptist Church of Beverly, of which Rev. C. W. Chamberlain, a member of the Foreign Mission Board, is the pastor. These shoes were sent to Rev. K. W. Strzelec, under whose direction the relief work of the society in Poland has been administered. The accompanying photograph shows a group of Polish children, who have just come from Sunday school, all of whom are wearing these shoes.

Announcement has recently been made concerning the unique plan for relief which the two foreign mission societies have adopted for the coming fall. A huge ship is to be filled with supplies, including clothing, underwear, shoes, stockings, blankets, towels, soap and baby-clothes, and sent to Czechoslovakia, Poland and Latvia early in November for distribution just prior to Christmas. Secretary James H. Franklin, in his recent article in "THE BAPTIST" has outlined the plan and further information will be published as soon as detailed arrangements have been completed.

A year ago the Southern Methodists sent to Europe two shiploads of supplies which furnished help to multitudes of destitute people and which undoubtedly saved thousands of lives. Surely if two million Southern Methodists could fill two ships, one million, three hundred thousand Northern Baptists can fill one ship. Secretary Franklin proposed the idea to the boards of managers of the two societies, and already the woman's board has taken action pledging its enthusiastic co-operation and enlisting its White Cross Department.

Warehouse space near the steamship pier is to be rented temporarily and arrangements made for the assembling and packing of these supplies. It is hoped they will be forthcoming in large quantities from Baptist churches in all parts of the territory of the Northern Baptist Convention. This material should be assembled immediately in various homes and churches, and packed for shipment by parcel post or express prepaid in October.

Here is a great, practical opportunity presented to Northern Baptists to come once more to the assistance of not only their denominational kinsmen in Europe but to all poverty-stricken and destitute people in these three countries, regardless of religious affiliations or racial differences who are in need of help. Mrs. W. A. Montgomery is the author of the appropriate slogan which has been adopted for this relief work: "Fill a Ship in Fellowship."

Special Days in the Sunday School

The Educational Value of Special Day Services in the Sunday School

C. HAROLD LOWDEN.

The right kind of services for special days in the Sunday school, rightly used, are of unmistakable educational value to the school which uses them.

What do we mean by the right kind? Just this: a service definitely planned upon a subject of peculiar interest to the young people of the Sunday schools, with the songs, scripture readings, exercises and recitations, etc., bearing intelligently upon the subject. If a publisher sits down, opens up a folio of songs that have been collected during the past year or so, picks out two or three because they are "march" songs, two or three because they are "waltzes," two or three because they are "two part" and a couple because they are "novelties," then sends the lot to one, two or three word writers and when they come back jots down a half dozen or so titles and chooses one by the process of elimination, certainly that service can hardly be of much educational value to the school that uses it. That picture is not overdrawn, for it is the method very often used in the making of services. The interesting thing about it is, that, while such a service can be "discerned from afar," many schools select their services with no more intelligence than the publishers who make their services as above described. Pretty soon the school discovers the emptiness of the particular service and then all services suffer.

But are not services, as a rule, rightly used? Sometimes they are; many times they are not. The writer has gone to many a Sunday-school festival where every song in the service was used and everyone rendered in precisely the same tempo and without regard to the varied messages they were to convey. By the time every recitation and exercise was given and every song used, and a half hour's address given, the only impression that has been made is, "Gee, let's get out of this. Never again." Schools should bear in mind that about double the number of songs are given in a service in order that all varieties of taste may be satisfied. The program is only suggestive and should be rearranged to meet the needs of local conditions and talents. Then the leader who has no more ability or judgment than to interpret each song the same way rather than bring out the individual message, ought to be "fired with enthusiasm" or just plain "fired."

Many wonderful songs have been born in a service. It will probably surprise many to learn that the writer's "Living for Jesus" appeared first in a Children's Day service where it was very popular, but in its later form with the heart-reaching poem by T. O. Chisholm its use has become worldwide

Rally Day Program

As used at First Church, McPherson, Kansas

A chorus choir and abundance of good music suited to the scenes depicted, Old Testament, Christian, the world to come, made this program a success. A reader called the numbers and, by bits of explanation united all into a harmonious whole. Two suggestions, "ancient rally days," and "the rally days of the future," were taken from A. B. P. S. literature. On these the following was built.

Reader: Rallying a Biblical idea, both for times of joy and those of sorrow.

Scene: King Solomon and courtiers, choir as worshippers, represent dedication of temple. King offers as prayer, while audience bows, selections from I Kgs. 8.

Reader: In contrast to glories of Solomon, the refugees from exile.

Scene: Ezra reads from scroll, extracts from Deut., as 5:29, 6:6-9, 10:12, 14:2. Choir responds as in Neh. 8:6.

Choir: "Guide, Me O, Thou Great Jehovah."

Reader: Three standards about which S. S. rallies today:

1. Evangelism—Three minute address, "Bring the little ones to Jesus;" Exercise by primaries.

2. The Word of God—Three minute address, "Young people and the Bible."

Reader: Roll-call of heroes of the faith, greatest names in history.

Eighteen or twenty young people represent seekers after and defenders of truth, in all ages. All stand together on platform. Reader calls for each and by question makes clear to audience the place in history and the character of the one responding.

Example of question: "Zoroaster, fire worshipper, in the gray dawn of history, did the Almighty leave himself without witness on your soul?" Response: "All the paths I take join the road that leads to Thee." Thus follow Plato, Job, David, prophets, wise men, Paul, church fathers, Reformation heroes, modern poets and philosophers.

3. Missions. Three minute address, pantomime, "Heathen Altars and Devotees." Choir, "Send out the Light."

The "Rally Day of the Future" is presented by the choir robed in white. Two represent the Elder and John, with question and answer as in Rev. 7:13-17.

Choir. Jerusalem the Golden," with obligato.

Audience. "In the Sweet By and By."

"Are You a Quartus"

Referring to the request in your issue of Aug. 6 for successful plans tried out on rally day, I believe the Greeley, Colo., Baptist Sunday school had one of the best last year that we have ever had. Here it is.

Three weeks prior to rally day we had posted in various places about the church the following slogan, "Are You a Quartus?" No reference was made concerning these words from the platform, and no one was informed as to their meaning. On the second Sunday all entered into a merry contest as to who could extend the greatest number of "Quartus" invitations, reporting the following Sunday. We purchased from our own Publication Society five hundred felt badges, "Rally Day." We gave these out the preceding Sunday with the invitation; come to rally day next Sunday and find out, "Are You a Quartus?" The newspapers gave us a lot of publicity on account of the quaintness of the slogan, and business and professional men began greeting the pastor, S. S. superintendent and his secretary with, "How-d'ye-do Brother Quartus," which also aided in publicity.

For the rally day program, the school by departments dramatized the life of Joseph, which also illustrated the actual work being done in our graded school: The beginners, taking the part of Joseph and Benjamin listening to their aged father relate the ladder experience; the primary, the casting of Joseph into the pit and taking the coat of many colors; the juniors, the selling of Joseph into captivity; the intermediates, Joseph's life in captivity; the seniors, Joseph telling King Pharaoh the meaning of his dream, King Pharaoh making Joseph the head ruler of the realm, and the subsequent meeting of the family. Of course in each succeeding act Joseph must be a little larger boy. The work was divided into departments, the educational committee tying the acts together to make one beautiful whole. At the close the people were told who Quartus was, Romans, 16, 23—"A Brother."

From an average attendance of about two hundred and fifty we had about seven hundred present that day.

Try this and send us a slogan for 1921. —M. H. Lowe, S. S. Secretary.

Typical Men's Bible Class

THE Stiles Bible Class of the First Church, Middletown, Ohio, was organized on March 13, 1921, with twelve charter members, and within ten weeks has reached a total enrollment of 350 members.

This is a remarkable record, especially as this is strictly a young men's class and only those between the ages of twenty and forty-five are eligible for membership.

The class is highly organized along business lines, and this together with the very forceful and interesting way that the teacher, Rev. Franklin A. Stiles, interprets the lessons, accounts for the rapid growth of the class.

The class is divided into four main divisions, each in charge of a captain. The divisions are subdivided into sections containing fifteen members and headed by a lieutenant. It is therefore a simple matter to keep in personal touch

THE Brotherhood Bible Class of the Roger Williams church, Providence, R. I. was organized on October first, 1920 with twelve members. A young business man, William E. White, was elected its first president and with him a full list of officers to serve one year. With the energetic work the men put into the organization it grew month after month until the present enrollment is 110. Ninety men present in one Sunday session for strictly Bible study is the record made this year. The men desire an enrollment of 200 by Christmas and believe they will reach their goal.

The presence of these men in the Bible Class every Sunday has brought the other members of the family into some department of school. One boy who had not been in the Sunday school for years has returned since his father joined the Brotherhood and he brought five of his chums to the boys' class with him. There is a class for young men who number forty-two which has been built up because the fathers have taken such interest in their own organization.

the East and Middle West

with members who are absent or sick. A unique method of recording the attendance each Sunday has also been worked out.

Monthly social and business meetings are held on the second Monday of each month. The men's chorus is progressing rapidly and plans are being made for a class orchestra. Athletics are encouraged and baseball teams have been formed in each division. A debating team will be the feature of the program this fall, as well as a dramatic team.

The following officers are in charge: President, R. E. Crim; vice president, H. W. Jones; secretary, L. D. Valentine; treasurer, J. W. Holman.

The Brotherhood has a banquet the third Friday evening in every month which provides for 150 men. Among the speakers last winter was Dr. J. Foster Wilcox, executive secretary of the National Baptist Brotherhood of New York. The Brotherhood is a part of the whole school and is under the care of the superintendent like all the other classes. The men are present at the opening exercises, contribute their strength and money and in every way are a power for good. The weekly international Sunday-school lesson is studied with the aid of maps and diagrams in which the men freely discuss the lesson.

The pastor, Rev. Samuel D. Ringrose, is the teacher of the class. The officers are: President, Williams E. White; first vice-president, Fred Martin; second vice-president, Frank R. Miller; third vice-president, Charles J. Procter; secretary, Raymond S. Thornton; assistant secretary, John Barnes; treasurer, John Crossland.

Agencies of Educational Advance

*The Publication Society has organized a department of religious education.—
Vacation schools are a fixture; teacher training a necessity—how to meet it*

Religious Education and our Publication Society

By GILBERT N. BRINK
General Secretary.

The only effective solution of our industrial, social and political problems will be found to be one that is Christian in the essence. The hope that such a solution can be found rests upon and is limited by the extent to which the principles of Christianity actually control the thought and life of our people.

Among the many enthusiastic reports received, there has, at times, sounded a note of sadness. One pastor wrote: "A vacation school has long been my dream, but this year funds were unavailable, and our volunteers could not, at the last moment, see their way clear to help."

Why not plan for your church vacation school now? Make it part of next year's budget. It should not be an addendum. It gives real returns. Plan for your teaching force, now. Select the supervisor, departmental superintendents, and helpers. Train. Even where workers are conduct their own schools, or (2) it is quite possible to appoint one general superintendent, who will organize, plan, and supervise the community movement, while the junior department is held in one church, the primary in another, and the beginners' in yet another. In this latter plan, responsibility is divided, while community needs are met, and denominationalism is not projected into the department or school. Although held in a denominational center, the department is part of the whole community movement.

Were we to sum the work of the year, it might be stated briefly, as follows: a new departure in courses of study in which correlation of hymns, scripture, habit story, and all forms of expression, with the lesson truth, was the key word; greater state and city co-operation with denominational plans; marked increase (about 50 per cent) in number of schools, and of children in attendance; more pastors assuming responsibility; better grade of work; closer correlation with Sunday session of church school; a great year, yet but a forerunner of the awakening of our denomination to the greater task of the church in religious education.

Religious Education is essential to the development of a Christian citizenship; and an actual preponderance of a genuinely Christian citizenship is the only guarantee possible of that "righteousness that exalteth a nation." Religious Education is a fundamental importance to the nation, for it is basic in the development of character. Religious Education must take its full share of responsibility for the development of man's religious life, that normally and fully he may come to realize his own life's highest possibilities.

These convictions have led the American Baptist Publication Society to establish a Department of Religious Education, and enter into co-operation with Baptist State Conventions and Standard City Mission Societies in developing the departments of religious education. The Publication Society is served by Dr. W. E. Chalmers as Secretary of Religious Education. An Advisory Committee, drawn from the religious educational leaders of the denomination, acts with the standing committee of the board, of which Dr. W. Quay Rosselle, of Malden, Mass., is chairman.

Church Vacation Schools

Mrs. ELIZABETH M. FINN

The year 1921 has placed a new milestone in church vacation school history. Realizing its value, churches are incorporating the vacation school into their educational plans. Wide-awake pastors have visioned the church school in its broader outlook and wider field of opportunity, with its three sessions, Sunday, week-day, and vacation, and their "all year round" plan for religious education.

gleaned at the last moment, results are remarkable. What then might we not expect where the finances are planned, and teachers ready?

Wherever possible, the pastor is the keyman for superintendent. He will thus become better acquainted with his field than in months of visitation. Pastors who have planned their vacation with the school in view are outspoken in their enthusiasm.

Community co-operation is desirable, but denominational responsibility must be felt. With this end in view, either of two plans might be followed. (1), Denominations, so far as possible, should

Why Train Teachers of Religion?

By SELDON L. ROBERTS

The modern Sunday-school movement has to its credit some great achievements which are both its glory and its peril. It is the one ever-present form of religious work. It enrolls more people as attaches or attendants than any other religious gathering. It is the one religious service among Protestant churches that ministers to every age and condition of people. It is said to account directly or indirectly for more than half the additions by profession of faith to Protestant churches of the evangelical type. It has the largest active, unpaid, wholly voluntary working force of any religious institution. Its achievements are in every way notable. Recently a great metropolitan journal in beginning a campaign for rousing new interests in Sunday-school work characterized the modern Sunday school as one of the most important and the most democratic institutions for the promotion of social health and right-living Americanism. Its very success is at times its greatest peril. Just because so much has been accomplished by popular mass meeting methods, where every body and any body leads and teaches, whether prepared for the work or not, much better methods and larger results have at times had to wait. So much has been done by traditional methods that to many they have seemed all sufficient.

Class that did the largest amount of training work last year of any in the Northern Baptist Convention

But there are some very important matters which a well conducted church school should accomplish which have not been done. It took the shock of a great crisis such as the war and pestilence of 1918 to reveal the weak spot, and the searchlight of such inquiries as that conducted by the Inter-church Survey and the Y. M. C. A. inquiry into the religious educational attainments of army men to reveal to the masses what serious minded religious educators have long known, that the traditional methods of our Sunday school in which any good person who wished to help, could teach, were not, doing and indeed could not do what was needed in the educational work of our churches.

The unfinished, almost untouched, educational task of Protestant churches was revealed by twenty-seven million nominally Protestant people wholly untouched by the Sunday school. A generation of Sunday school attendants pitifully ignorant of any well organized knowledge of the Bible, the church, or religious doctrines and institutions; far better courses of study and plans of work neglected or dropped after a brief trial because they do not fit in readily with traditional methods. The very fact that traditionally any one who cared to do so could teach in a Sunday school if he was fairly intelligent and not objectionable in conduct and character were in themselves indications of weak spots in the whole system which has resulted in so large an amount of unaccomplished work in the midst of such great achievements.

The basis of the work of the modern Sunday school has been witnessing rather than teaching. It has accomplished what it has done largely through the power of personal influence and testimony rather than instruction and training in the Christian religion. It has done a great work and it has done much of it well, but when we look at the undone task we can but exclaim, "This ought ye to have done but not have left the other undone."

Jesus commanded his people both to witness and to teach. The church at its peril neglects either. Any one who knows can witness, no one can teach except he both knows what he is to teach and also how to teach it.

Because of this the churches have been content to do the easier and necessary part, and to greatly neglect the more difficult but none the less needed work. We must if we are to fulfill our mission and obey our Lord have a great revival of real teaching in our church schools.

But that cannot be had until people are taught to teach. Whatever may be the natural gifts, whatever the good character and the good intentions, however successful and winning the personality, no one can do continuous and constructive teaching without careful study and well directed training both in the materials to be used, and in the essential factors of method involved in the complicated and difficult task of teaching.

Nothing that we are now doing that is bringing results should be abandoned. No one whose influence is wholesome and helpful need resign, but if the church is ever to accomplish her whole mission in a day that is crying aloud for intelligent and well trained Christian workers, we must add to the personal work and the personal worth of a Christian witness, the slowly acquired by wonderful power of the trained teacher. While continuing and conserving the fine traditions and the wholesome personal influence which has brought Sunday-school work to its present high state of usefulness, every church must begin at once a carefully planned campaign of training which will add to this the effective help of careful instruction in Christian knowledge and training for effective Christian living and service.

What has been done during the last few years in an ever increasingly good way, has been the establishment of week-day schools for religious teaching, consisting of one or more sessions. These should become general with all churches.

Week-day Church Schools

By THOS. S. YOUNG,

Director Division of church vacation and week-day schools, American Baptist Publication society, 1701 Chestnut St., Philadelphia, Pa.

The past summer has seen the greatest work in church vacation schools, of their history. In the number of schools, attendance, interest, results, and pastors supervising their own schools, no year has in any way approached.

One result of this will be that pastors and churches all over the country will be seeking channels through which to perpetuate the interest aroused, and to parallel this character of work during the year.

In the past, what has been known as continuation schools, have been held on Saturdays or after the public school day. These have been a real continuation of the program of the church vacation school.

tional? What time shall be used? The answer of these questions will determine the plans to be formulated.

If these schools are held aside from the public school day, the simplest and most natural method will be, each church carrying on its school independent of all others. Even in some cases where public school time is used, the schools are promoted without formal community co-operation. It is a practical certainty, that, regardless of the time, individual organization and courses of study, better work will be done for all concerned, if there is formal community co-operation. It may be that this co-operation can be at first in but a few lines, but even these are well worth the effort.

Community Denominational Schools

There is no reason why a community board of religious education could not be formed in any community desiring to do religious educational work. This board would function in standardizing efforts, hours for schools and training classes for teachers. Additional avenues of co-operation would open out in the development of the movement. This may all be done and yet each denomination determine its own administration and courses of study, thus fully maintaining the integrity of the denominational life. Incidentally, in many large communities, no denomination could provide for the pupils available. Nothing but a community school in administration and courses of study, could supply the need. The community board of religious education makes possible both the community denominational and the community school, under the same organization. After a careful study of the field, we have yet to find the first community where the existing work would not be materially improved by a formal co-operation through the community board of religious education.

Time Aside from the Public School Day

Schools are being held at present at the following hours: A very few preceding the time when pupils from the first grade through the high school can be sure of ability to attend the sessions of a church school.

c. The leading public school educators all over the country are ready for it and are trying to push the churches into its use.

public school day, many following that day, many on Saturday afternoon, an increasing number some evening of the week. We suspect the coming year will see a tremendous increase in the number of schools established in connection with "church night," to the great advantage of both. We anticipate that in the near future courses of study will be offered for use in "church night" schools, in addition to the present courses in missions and teacher training for adults, as well as for boys and girls and children. Experience has shown that programs of these church nights should be serious, worth-while work, and not having a large element of entertainment. Motion pictures except in a very limited way for educational purposes, are better omitted. The church night school may well have its full place even if public school time is secured for the week-day church schools.

Public School Time

Whatever else we may do, the problem of adequate religious education will not be solved without the use of public school time. May we not consider it settled once and for all that this should not and does not contemplate in any form or to any degree an organic relationship between a public school and a church school. A few cities, because of local conditions have secured such use of the school buildings or teachers and in some places of both, as to form something of an organic relation. This is to be deprecated, and we believe such conditions are an enemy to the real advance of the work. There are at least four reasons why we should have a portion of the public school day for religious education:

a. In order to change the attitude of mind of pupil, teacher and parent toward religious education. At present this subject is without dignity or importance in their thinking.

b. The public school day is the only

d. The results following the use of public school time are such as to justify it beyond all question.

NOTE.—The W. R. E. and C. V. S. Division of the Religious Educational Department of the American Baptist Publication society, 1701 Chestnut St., Philadelphia, will be glad to answer questions and assist communities desiring to consider this work.

Summer Assemblies

The denominational summer assembly is in fact a summer school of religious education. Assemblies were held this year in twenty-two of the states of the Northern Baptist Convention, the American Baptist publication society co-operating, through the director of training school promotion, Rev. T. B. Frizelle, with the state organization to make the schools successful. Practically the same plan is followed in each assembly. Courses are offered under trained instructors in Bible, mission study, Sunday school and young people's organization, teacher and leadership training. Much is made of the daily devotional hour. Opportunity is given the young people to enlist in the Life Service League.

It is too early to have reports in from all of the assemblies, but of those so far reported, the largest registrations were Ohio with 900, Iowa with 862, West Washington followed closely with 715, and Pennsylvania, whose three Assemblies totaled 500.

There is a noticeable increase in the number of young men in attendance this year, and in the group of young people in their late teens. Directors report more certificates granted for the lecture courses than ever before, higher grade work planned and more earnestness shown by all in attendance. In several instances there was a course in recreational leadership.

These few quotations from the reports will serve to show the assembly spirit:

"Perfect weather, no accidents, no illness, one beautiful boat trip."

"Never was a more earnest, studious, orderly and jolly assembly."

"Program was splendid."

"The young people manifested a deep interest in denominational life."

"Five girls in training for missionary service."

"100 per cent increase over last year was general opinion."

"Restricted to capacity of plant, only worth while folks welcomed, everybody happy."

"Class work high."

"Six decisions for ministry, sixteen for mission field, 167 for other Christian callings."

State Convention Department of Education

The Southern California Baptist convention is organized into three co-ordinate departments, one of which is the Department of Education. To this department is committed the work of religious education in all its different phases, including

A Fine Record for Judson College

Miss Helen Hunt writes from Rangoon: "I am so happy over the success of our Judson College boys and girls had in their college exams. Every one of our candidates for B. A. passed—boys and girls. Our college and the Government College now are the only two colleges constituting the new Rangoon University. The other college did not succeed in passing all their B. A.'s. As for the I. A. class (Intermediate Art), we passed over 76 per cent of them and the other college passed about 73 per cent of theirs. As for the girls, three girls, all Burmans, from Judson College got their B. A. in March. And of the twelve girls who tried the I. A. exams, ten passed. Of the ten girls who passed, five were in the First Division, and the other five in the Second; none in the Third.

Teachers Join League of Empire

The League of Empire movement in the interchange of teachers between Great Britain and Canada promises much mutual benefit. Already about one hundred Toronto teachers have gone to England, where they will be assigned schools under the direction of the London County Council and their places will be filled here by out-coming English teachers. Mutual observation of methods of instruction, as well as first-hand information of both countries will doubtless contribute to the general good of scholars and teachers.

A Business Man's Eulogy of Faith

In the American Lumberman of August 6, Mr. E. C. Hole, the editor, presents the following beautiful call to faith in God and Our Country:

"Faith removed mountains, and built the Panama Canal—the faith of a great statesman and a great engineer. Money, machinery and men were merely the agencies through which faith triumphed over apparently unsurmountable obstacles. Faith and America are almost synonymous. By faith Columbus turned the prows of his tiny caravels westward, and when his terrified and almost mutinous crew implored him to turn back, each day gave the unchanging command: 'Sail on!' Three hundred years have passed since by faith the Pilgrims 'moored their bark on the wild New England shore.' By faith the signers of the Declaration of Independence took their lives in their hands and defied King George the Third. By faith Washington and his ragged Continentals endured the hardships of Valley Forge, and ultimately achieved our national independence. By faith the pioneers subdued the wilderness, and by faith the empire builders of a later generation linked East and West, North and South, with highways of steel.

"If, then, faith is our most priceless asset, as individuals and as a nation, how shall we strengthen that attribute if weakened by the pressure of untoward circumstances, or regain it if lost? This is vital, for without genuine, robust faith industry must continue to languish. In the opinion of the American Lumberman that faith which is the very lifeblood of business may, if weakened or lost, be strengthened or restored by looking to the sources: To God 'the author and finisher of our faith'; to the record of divine guidance from the beginning of our national existence; and to the solid and tangible grounds for faith, courage and optimism that lie all about us."

Here to Stay and Grow

Vacation Bible schools this summer have met with increasing success. With 200 each in Chicago and New York and more than 150 in Philadelphia, the total has approximated 3,000. Instructors have been employed from forty colleges. The movement is increasingly co-operative, and organized with business methods. It is estimated that as many as 300,000 children have been drawn in from the streets. The vacation school is spreading to foreign mission territory, and there seems reason to believe that the success gained in America may be repeated elsewhere.

Sauce for Goose and Gander

The Mexican Review satisfies some curiosity on the land question in Mexico in the following exposition of the land laws in the republic:

"Notwithstanding the persistently circulated statements that the laws of Mexico forbid any foreigner to acquire title to lands without first becoming a Mexican citizen, some 2,023 citizens of other countries as a matter of fact bought lands in various portions of the Republic in the year 1920. In the same period exactly 169 foreigners became naturalized as Mexican citizens, of whom 73 were Chinese, 32 Germans, 14 Spaniards and 12 Japanese. Although the greater portion of the foreigners acquiring real estate were Americans and British, only seven of the former and none of the latter were naturalized. As hitherto explained with such frequency as almost to be trite, the only requirement as a condition precedent to the acquisition of lands in Mexico by foreigners, is that they shall first sign a pledge to abide by the laws of Mexico, and in all matters pertaining to the lands in question shall be considered as on the same base as Mexican citizens.

Fighting for a Foothold in Salvador

Mr. Keech, American Baptist missionary, writes that he has opened up several new preaching points around the capital city of El Salvador, but not without a struggle. The Jesuits were never so active and determined in their opposition to the work of our mission. They are seeking great things in the assembly that it now meeting to frame a constitution for the union of Central America. For several years the Baptists have been at work in Santa Tecla, a city about twelve miles from the capital, but up to the present it has not been possible to secure a house for religious meetings. Recently one of our meetings was held in a home on the outskirts of the city. The next morning the people who loaned their home were driven out and one old lady somewhat injured. Mr. Keech writes that he intends to keep at it until he gets a foothold in that city.

For the Ends of the Earth

A large party of missionaries in the service of the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society and the Woman's American Baptist Foreign Mission Society sailed from New York on the steamship "Albania" last Saturday, August 20. They included the following, all of them en route for Burma: Miss Julia G. Craft, Mrs. Julia M. Craft, S. Wayne Gard, R. E. Henderson, Miss Mabel F. Ivins, Miss Malinda K. Miller, Miss Julia E. Parrott, E. E. Sowards, Miss Margaret P. Stevens, Miss Gertrude E. Teele, Miss Helen L. Tufts. In the same party were Secretary and Mrs. J. C. Robbins of the Foreign Mission Society. Dr. Robbins, as has already been announced, will spend a year in a careful study of our missionary work in the British India fields, and will devote particular attention to some of the large problems now emerging as a result of the world readjustment following the war.

On the same day, Dr. and Mrs. William H. Leslie and their son, Richard R. Leslie, sailed from New York on the steamship "Lapland" for the Belgian Congo.

Other sailings during the summer from New York included the following:

On July 15, on the steamship "Carmania" for the Belgian Congo, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Hill, Henry Erickson, Mr. and Mrs. A. V. Wakeman, Miss Florence Crane, Dr. P. H. J. Lerrigo.

On July 21, on the steamship "Saxonia" for South India, Rev. and Mrs. W. A. Stanton and daughter Katherine.

On August 13, on the steamship "Carmania" for Burma, Mr. and Mrs. R. J. Journey and infant, Mr. and Mrs. G. E. Blackwell.

It will be of interest to know that there are now 914 foreign missionaries in the service of the Foreign Mission Societies, the largest total ever reported. Since the beginning of the New World Movement, April 1, 1919, 218 new missionaries have received their appointment.

The Best Seller in a Cellar

"AND above all, my dear," said Miss Genevieve McMasters to her friend, "I want to see something to-day that the usual run of globe-trotters never see in China! I do want to go home with one thrilling tale which every one else in our party won't be able to boast about, too. Now you've lived here long enough to know the ins and outs of this topsy-turvy town, even if you are a missionary, Jane. So what would you recommend?"

Jane looked at her college friend pensively. "I think I will recommend Amazing Grace for such as you," she laughed quietly, and patted her arm. I haven't the ghost of an idea what she will show you, but Amazing Grace is a perfect little Chinese tea-rose of a woman. You'll adore her, Genevieve, and she'll scare up a thriller for you somewhere, I know."

"Of course," said Miss McMasters slowly, "I don't want her to lead me into actual danger, you know, nothing that will involve the police, or—or international diplomacy, or—or a lot of red tape."

"I quite understand," twinkled Jane, the missionary, "and Amazing Grace would never dream of hurting a single hair in your marcel wave, dearest. Just wait till you see her and her her delectable English."

Jane left Miss McMasters, who moved around fingering the books on the table, surprised all over again that a missionary in China could keep so up-to-date. A quiet pat-pat on the matting floor warned her that she was not alone. She turned and saw a quaint little figure, in blue jacket and trousers, bowing politely.

"Miss Heavenly Teacher do got me for showing you the all things," she beamed. "Shall we make big steppings outdoors,—honorably yes?"

Miss McMasters felt her first thrill immediately. "How simply delicious you are!" she cried, and stepped out into the street of a thousand odors. This was where China could be vastly improved, she thought, as she clapped her smelling-salts to her aristocratic little nose.

Amazing Grace trotted along beside her. "Miss Heavenly Teacher have made special urge for showing you the what-no-body-else-sees. Now I will pour questions into your ear: should it be somethings for your honorably self to buy, or just somethings for making your glorious eyes flutter, or somethings to make merry in your worshipful heart?"

Miss McMasters smiled into the pretty yellow face. "Oh, I could hug you, Amazing Grace, you're such an understanding sort of guide! Could—could you, perhaps, combine all three things so that my eyes will flutter while my heart makes merry?"

Amazing Grace balanced herself on a little cobblestone to think it over. Finally she squinted up at the stranger. "Ah," she nodded solemnly, "it are just come into my head!" Whereupon Miss McMasters smiled into her smelling-salts happily. What a truly delightful guide!

Then they began a zigzag walk down crooked streets, very, very narrow, where long gaudy shop signs flapped overhead, and where men were trundling wheelbarrows laden with vegetables and babies and a meek little wife. Sedan chairs jostled the crowds, and every one was picturesque and dirty and oriental. Miss McMasters knew she would never forget it, and could hear herself telling her friends: "My dears, they do everything outdoors, everything. Once I saw some chair coolies bump into a barber plying his trade right in the middle of the street. My, such squabbling and tongue-twisting! . . ."

Presently Amazing Grace led the way down a gloomy, narrow street and turned into a dark, shadowy doorway. If Miss McMasters felt any fear she did not care to show it, for Amazing Grace dusted off a chair in the most matter-of-fact way and begged her to "honorably sit."

For a dramatic moment she stared at her guest; then she began: "You do please got to listen a story," she begged, "a story of the family who are once lived in this here house. So big a family as you could not count on my two hands, with grandfather and uncles and childrens, nice little laughing childrens what are full of happy all days. You could to see them in this room as the honorably old man are prop his big horn glasses on his honorably nose and are make readings from the Christian Book of God. That was why they are got full of happy—see?"

Miss McMasters nodded.

"Well, there was a day. Celestial sun shining over the roof; grandmother sitting by the fireplace full of peace; mother cooking rice in the pot; little children full of happy; Da Ngen sweeping floor in the Christian's way. Then tramp! tramp! tramp! came marchings in the street. 'Ah me!' sighed that mother, and are calling the childrens into her arms in fear. She are know what is. Then bang! bang! came knockings on the door. 'Let us in!' sounded yells without."

Amazing Grace moved to the door, swung it open dramatically and said: "Honorably step!" Miss McMasters had the uncanny feeling that shadowy people were really stepping inside—people with an evil purpose. Then shutting the door, Amazing Grace continued:

"Five men have stepped inside. Mens by the name of Boxers, and they are scowl with great fierceness all times. Then the captain are draw his sharp sword from the belt around him and are shout loud: 'Speak up—is anybody in this house Christians?' Well, the honorably grandmother stand up to bow and say with proudness: 'We are all that.' Then quicker than flashes the Boxer captain are wave his big sword: 'Stand in a row!' he are shouting. So the family are stand in a row,—honorably grandfather at one end and the plump baby to the the other end."

Amazing Grace showed the very spots where they had stood until Miss McMasters visualized every one of them: the dear old grandfather peering through the horn glasses propped on his nose, the trembling grandmother wondering what was the matter, the frightened uncles and aunts summoned from other rooms, the astonished children, the unconcerned baby, plump as a pin-cushion, in his padded jackets. Then with another dramatic sverve Amazing Grace pretended to be the Boxer captain. Leaning over, she drew the sign of the cross on the earthen floor with her finger.

"He are draw the cross this way with his glittering sword and on it he are put the dear, dear Bible. Then he sneer; 'Step on it, you Christians, and I are saving your lives for you. Come on, stamp on it good and heavy, one by one!' But no, the honorably grandfather, he are not make that steppings. As for the feeble grandmother, no, no, not to save her poor white hairs woud she put stampings on the dear Saviour's Bible. And the uncles all shook their heads, no; also the aunts—no, no! Not on that honorably sign of the cross nor on that so precious Book. Then it are the turn of the little bits of children, so full of happy ten minutes ago, so full of scare now because of glittering swords. But no, they are not make any stampings on their onliest story book; not the boys; not the girls. And not that littlest bit of plump baby either—he wobble his surprised little head; 'No! no!' he babble, just like everyone else, although he are got no idea what it are all about."

Miss McMasters held her breath, and her heart beat painfully fast. "Oh!" she cried brokenly, "surely—surely that dreadful Boxer didn't dare to kill them? Oh, Amazing Grace, not all of them?"

Amazing Grace nodded silently. "Mostly all," she said in a smothered voice, "but there are great confusion arose. So many in the family, and only five Boxers, so Da Ngen are by the door and are slip through, snatching three of the little bits of children with her. Which are the way she did not see the awfulness, for there are queer cellar under this house, where grandfather merchant used for to hide his mostly precious merchandise. Only a big hole in the earth, but there Da Ngen hide with the poor childrens. How shall I told it? How her heart was sore with heavy inside her; how all day she are crouch with the childrens inside her arm. Then when night came she are creep out to get foods—ah! I cannot speak what she saw."

Miss McMasters was crying as if her heart would break. "Right in this very room?" she sobbed.

"Yes," answered Amazing Grace softly. "But you are not rightly to cry, Miss Honorably Stranger, this are to put a happy in your heart to know how the Lord God are got Chinese who love him so hard they are willingly to die with pains. There is only proudness for that family, when I tell you the beautiful endings. For Da Ngen are found the Bible in the ashes of the fireplace, so she are taking it down into the cellar and are hidden it safe. Boxers come snooping, but are got no sight of nobodies. One, two, three days pass, then Da Ngen venture out to get foods for empty stomachs; four, five, six more days, out again for more foods. And so on, weeks on end. Then danger are over and neighbors are make discover of starving childrens. Surprises are no word for them. My! My!"

Miss McMasters broke in impatiently: "Then what happened?"

Amazing Grace said beseechingly: "I like you should understand properly how Da Ngen are earn money for feedings those childrens. This way: those heathen neighbors are full of curious. They wags their polite heads but cannot understood how Christians will die instead of stampings on Bible. So they got desires for touching that Book with their curious hands and for reading it with curious eyes. Well, Da Ngen she do charge so many bits of cash for climb down in cellar to reading her Bible saved from ashes. Are it give you a painfully shock?"

"No, no!" cried Miss McMasters, her eyes shining, "I think she was the pluckiest girl I ever heard of to manage to save those children and feed them. Where is she now, bless her heart?"

Amazing Grace squinted shyly at Miss

McMasters. "Why, she are me!" she said bashfully, "Da Ngen are my Christian name, which means Big Grace, or Amazing Grace, as the Miss Heavenly Teacher call me, when it are done over into American talk. As for the childrens, the brother are study for being minister, the sister for being teacher, while the little bit baby are all growed up into nice school-boy. For the Boxers did come ten year ago, what you call 1900, yes?"

Miss McMasters looked in astonishment at Amazing Grace. "You're too little and frail and young to have lived through such terrors, my dear. What do you do now?"

"There aren't nothings to tell, I are just the same me, as usual. But I do got a fine husband, who are selling Bibles every day. For ever since those Boxers, the Chinese are got a big curious for to own the Book what could make ten thousand men and women into brave martyrs. My husband, he are selling and selling and selling that Bible all up and down the country. There are no book like it, it are the best seller over everything else. But for me, I are liking best the Bible in the cellar. Will you honorably step to see it?"

As in a dream Miss McMasters followed Amazing Grace down into the dark, damp hole in the earthen floor. Their only light was a thread of flickering flame from a little taper, but it was enough for her to see the book which Amazing Grace thrust into her hands—a little ugly warped Bible, burned and tattered at the edges, its cover loose, many of its pages gone. But she looked at it passionately, then very reverently she clasped it against her heart and whispered: "God forgive me, but I did not dream any one could care enough for the Bible to die for it! Ten thousand Chinese in one short year of terror—oh, Amazing Grace, I will tell of this when I get home! It's too wonderful to keep unspoken, isn't it?"

Amazing Grace nodded her wise young head, then opened her tattered old Bible at the book of Daniel, and said: "But the wonder are all from God," she said, "see it are all written here!"

And Miss McMasters read: "The people that do know their God shall be strong, and do exploits."

indoors, anyhow. You ought to have an indoor pet, motherest, to keep you company while you mend."

"I move we lay the matter on the table, pro. tem," said Bill, who belongs on a committee at school where they talk like that all the time. Rather roundabout, it seems to me. For instance, how much more comfortable to say: "Let's wait awhile!" But business is business, of course.

But alas, mother's "pet" did not lie on the table; no, he wandered in and out of our winter clothes and left provoking little holes behind him! Nobody knows how he could have escaped the moth balls and camphor cakes that mother keeps here and there; but oh me! oh my! he must be a strong and lusty pet, with a ravenous appetite. We know he can't help but be mother's special charge because his name is half-way her name: Moth!

"A moth is such a fairy thing
So lightly through the air it floats,— Who'd think that it subsisted on Our heavy winter overcoats?"

Someone sent that poem to mother after hearing what a peculiar "pet" she had adopted, but the truth of the matter is that the moth itself can't do any damage at all! It's just a glistening little light yellow creature fluttering around on slender fringed wings, with no parts to its mouth so that it can eat. But this is what it does do: it lays its little whitish eggs in woolen or fur, and from these harmless-looking eggs hatch tiny tan caterpillars whose mouth parts are formed of sharp jaws, which cut into whatever material they may find themselves on.

We think it very surprising that here is a baby who builds its own cradle! For the first thing this little new caterpillar does after hatching from the egg is to cut into the fabric on which it lies, then from the loosened tissue forms a comfortable little case held together with silken threads from its own body. As the caterpillar grows it makes its case larger and larger,—which is wiser than any human baby, you'll admit! Another curious thing is the way the caterpillar moths weave colors into their cradle cocoons: from my little red and green plaid tam (which Uncle Tim brought me from Scotland) the caterpillar chose only the red patterns, leaving the green untouched!

Another interesting thing is that if my tam had been in "cold storage" that egg would never have been hatched, for under sixty degrees these sensitive little insects can't grow or develope, which is the reason our mothers send the more expensive furs to some cold storage place. Even if the eggs are in the fur they simply can't hatch out! And the Insect Book that mother read says that moth balls and camphor aren't really any good at all unless the garment was put away "perfectly clean." Which is the thing that makes me blush! For do you know? it was my job at housecleaning time to give all my own clothes a thorough brushing and sweeping and airing in the sun—but I grew tired of it and my tam, my leggins

The Baby That Made Its Own Cradle

By "PEGGY"

ONE of the results of our adopting "pets" in our family was that none of us could feel contented until father and mother had some, too! It was all very well for Timothy to have his grasshopper and for me to have my ants, and Bill his bees, but we gave father five minutes at breakfast one morning to name his pet and settle that matter forever and ever.

Bill has a wonderful dollar watch which he laid on the table to keep time, but long before one minute was over father's eyes began to twinkle merrily: "Daddy-Long-Legs!" he shouted.

"Oh, aren't you clever!" we all cried, for of course it fitted him very well, since he is so tall and spindly! Unfortunately we could not find a daddy-long-legs high nor low, but father insisted there was one "down at the office,—I play with him in the safe, you know!" And made up the most comical stories about those games, and how he hoped nobody would ever leave a "leg-acy" to him, he had enough already, etc.

But mother's pet was harder to chose.

"I think I'll choose a fly!"

"No! No!" we begged, a fly is so dirty and horrid, and they have no business

Topic for September 25

AMERICANS ALL

Mark 6:34; Matt. 25:31-46; Gal. 3:28.

Instead of presenting this week a discussion of the missionary topic, we are taking the liberty of publishing material on missionary method. This came to us from Rev. H. Hines of the Department of Religious Education of Illinois. This material has been studied over a period of years. It certainly deals with one of the most vital problems of the Baptist denomination. The Editor of this page invites correspondence and further suggestions for a completion of the outline. The question under consideration is of great concern to all young people's workers. Additional copies may be secured for free distribution by addressing B. Y. P. U. of America, 125 No. Wabash Ave., Chicago, Illinois.

MISSIONARY METHODS FOR BOYS

1. There exists a vital need for raising up a generation of Christian men whose vision of the kingdom is world wide and whose dominant passion is world evangelization.

2. The teen age being formative and therefore crucial it is of the utmost importance that missionary information be imparted and missionary interest awakened during this period.

I. Principles

Every church should have organized work for its boys. When no organization exists one should be formed. The importance of this cannot be overestimated. The form of organization is not material; it should depend upon the local situation and the judgment of the leaders. Adequate work for boys in the local churches includes: (a) Athletics—baseball, basketball, track and other games; (b) Scouting—hiking, nature study, etc.; (c) Social life—meetings, feeds, parties, etc.; (d) Service—doing a good turn, etc.; (e) Religious activity—prayer, Bible study, work in Sunday School, etc.

Every successful work for and with boys has grouped itself about these activities. Sometimes one has been predominant, sometimes another. Those most commonly left out are the most important—Service and Religion.

To existing agencies such as boys' classes, clubs, scouts, etc. and to the foregoing activities, the missionary idea should be added, thus making missionary instruction a part of the all-around development of the boy and tying it up in his mind with all his life interests. While it would be impossible to hold a real boy by the missionary appeal alone, and this should not be attempted, there is nothing in modern life that has more of the heroic in it than modern missions; the great missionary pioneers have a tremendous appeal to the pioneering instinct in the boy. To fail to use this method of approach is to lose one of the greatest opportunities, for doing what must be done if the men of tomorrow are to have a world vision or are to do better than we have done in world evangelization.

II. Methods

As to the best way of getting a maximum of missionary information into the minds of the boys of our churches the following plan is proposed:

1. The enrollment of local boys' classes, clubs, etc. with the proper denominational agencies as chapters in the ——— (Can you suggest a name?)

2. The giving of degrees and badges to individual boys for the meeting of certain specified requirements, as outlined below.

III. Enrollment

Any organized group of boys connected with a Baptist church declaring its purpose to include missions in its program and whose leader shall agree to introduce missionary activities may be enrolled as a chapter in the ——— (Name to be supplied) and will receive a certificate of enrollment.

IV. Requirements

I. A BRONZE BADGE shall be awarded to any boy, twelve years or older whose leader certifies that he can meet the following requirements: 1, Explain the meaning of the seal on the badge (possibly the seal of the A. B. F. M. S.); 2, Repeat from memory the Great Commission—Matt. 28:19, 20; 3, Give the modern stations of the Cross (Mission Fields); 4, Know the story of Adoniram Judson and John M. Peck; 5, Know the religious beginnings of his own community.

A boy entitled to wear the bronze badge shall be known as a First Degree ———.

II. A SILVER BADGE shall be awarded to any boy who has earned a bronze badge and has met with the following additional requirements: 1, Memorize one of the following missionary hymns, "The Morning Light is Breaking" (Suggestions solicited); 2, Tell the story of Joe Taylor's thrilling escape at Chengtu during the Chinese Rebellion; 3, Identify the following pioneers—"The Father of Modern Missions" (Carey), "The Missionary Explorer whose heart is buried in Africa" (Livingstone), "The Martyr for the Oregon Country" (Whitman), (Suggest two more); 4, Train another boy to meet the requirements of the First Degree or read a missionary book suggested by leader;

5, Become a regular contributor to missions.

A boy entitled to wear a silver badge shall be known as a Second Degree ———.

III. A GOLD BADGE shall be awarded to any boy who has met the previous tests and who in addition can: 1, Explain our denominational missionary organizations; 2, Explain different types of work—evangelistic, educational, medical, industrial, etc.; 3, Explain the effect of the modern mission enterprise upon the Baptist denomination in America—

(a) The Judson-Rice Challenge and its results.

(b) The results of Baptist pioneering in the West; 4, Explain the effect of missions upon life of the people, i.e., the social aspects of missions; 5, Participate in a missionary pageant or drama.

A boy entitled to wear a gold badge shall be known as a Third Degree ———.

MERIT BADGES shall be provided for advanced reading courses and for work above the Third Degree such as reading missionary books, doing local missionary work, signifying intention of becoming a volunteer.

V. Explanations

I. OF FIRST DEGREE REQUIREMENTS—

1. Explain meaning of the seal on the badge.

The seal on the badge has as its main feature an ox standing between an altar and a plow, and above it the words, "Ready for Either." This teaches that just as every real boy is willing to serve or sacrifice for the things that are most worth while, so the Christian should be ready either to work or to sacrifice himself for the cause of the Master.

2. Repeat from memory the Great Commission—Matthew 28:19, 20.

"Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost: Teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you: and lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world."

3. Give the modern stations of the cross.

The Via Dolorosa in Jerusalem, the traditional road which Jesus trod from the Ecco Homo Arch where Pilate said "Behold the Man," to Calvary, is marked by fourteen places called "Stations" signifying events connected with them, as for instance, the spot where Jesus sank under the weight of the cross. These fourteen stations represent the resting places of the cross on the Master's vicarious march to victory. Ten of these are outside the Church of the Holy Sepulchre, four within. The modern stations of the cross are the fourteen mission fields where

International Uniform Lesson For September 25

REVIEW

Golden Text: Galatians, 6:10

By JOHN A. EARL

The Lesson Text

In the quarter's lessons we have covered virtually ten chapters of the Acts of the Apostles, from the eighth to the seventeenth inclusive. A rapid survey of these chapters reveals the emergence of Paul and the eclipse of Peter in the primary leadership of the churches.

The Lesson Taught

Paul as a persecutor, pioneer and preacher are the outstanding facts.

Persecutor

Three things account for the fact that Saul of Tarsus was the first great leader in the persecution of Christians, viz., his times, his temperament and his religion. Saul was the creature of his age and environment. Such protection as we now enjoy in the exercise of our rights as freemen were unknown in the first century of the Christian era. Jesus was crucified after a mock trial in a Roman court when he was absolutely innocent. Could his followers, therefore, expect any better treatment? Saul of Tarsus seemed to have a carte blanche commission to persecute innocent Christians to the death, and there was no appeal and no protection. On the other hand Saul, moved by the psychology of his day, thought that the most effective way to stamp out a hated heresy was to torment, imprison and kill the heretics. But he did not know that the blood of the martyrs is the seed of the church. Saul's temperament was such that he had to be active in whatever he undertook. He was a born leader and as a Pharisee living according to the orthodox faith of his fathers, and believing that faith to be final, it was the most natural thing in the world for a man of Saul's disposition to hunt down the hated traitors to the faith of the fathers and put them to death. His zeal for the preservation of the ancient faith, according to his own confession, made him a bitter persecutor.

Pioneer

The radical nature of Saul's conversion is seen in many things, but in nothing more than in his determination to build his faith on no other man's foundation. In order to find release from his former manner of life, he went to Arabia and remained long enough in seclusion to work out and pray out for himself the place and power of the Christian religion in its relation to Judaism first, and in its relation to the pagan world second. His letter to the Galatians is his pioneer contribution to the spirituality of the religion of Christ as contrasted with the formality of Judaism, and to the gracious freedom of the religion of Jesus as compared with the heavy bondage of the law. In these things he early caught the spirit of Jesus who came to bring grace and truth to a people heavily laden with the galling weight of legal observances. Paul also discovered in his pioneering that while salvation came through the Jews it was to be given to Jews and Gentiles alike on the same conditions. In his letter to the Ephesians he makes this principle as clear as a sunbeam, and in fact, he claims that this is the mystery hid for so many ages and now revealed to him. Therefore he became the pioneer missionary to the heathen. With spiritual religion in Christ, freed from all the limitations of Judaism and designed to meet the needs of all mankind, it is little wonder that Paul became a flaming torch in Asia and Europe, kindling gospel fires from Antioch in Syria to Rome, and had it not been for the frustration of his plans by his last imprisonment he would have carried the gospel as far west as Britannia.

Preacher

Paul was preeminently a preacher. In his power of adaptation to the different peoples with whom he dealt, in the clearness with which he grasped the truth and in turn made it clear to others, in his ability to see the few great principles that govern action and in his power to give them emphasis, in his untiring activity, in his passion for humanity, in his mighty emotional nature, and in his exclusive devotion to Christ as the center and substance of his theology, Paul takes first rank as a great preacher. His letters, aside from the more personal of them, are sermons of the highest order. The scraps of his sermons preached to varying congregations and reported in the Acts are always courteous, constructive, convincing. Paul will handle Elymas the sorcerer without gloves, but that was a private matter between them. In his sermons to the people he now indulges sermon to the Athenians, but when the in invective or ridicule. The old version for a long time misreported Paul in his sermon to the Athenians, but when the revised version of the New Testament appeared, Paul was correctly translated as saying, "Ye men of Athens, I perceive that in all things ye are very religious," thus paying the Athenians a compliment instead of arousing their antagonism by calling them superstitious. The same fine sense of the fitness of things and the desire to make his approach to their attention and confidence by the line of least resistance, mark Paul's sermons in the synagogues of the Jews. His sermons and letters always reveal the true gentleman

Paul was. And yet he never permitted the necessity for courtesy and the value of courtesy to weaken his convictions or tempt him to exploit his good will. He was a student, a thinker, a worker, and he had little use for the parlor philosophers of Athens who spent their time hearing and rehearsing some new thing. The philosophy which Paul accepted was only a means to an end, and that end the salvation of men and the regeneration of society. He never closes a letter without the practical appeal.

Missionary Methods

the cross is temporarily planted in its triumphal march throughout the world, ten under the direction of the Foreign Board and four under the Home. These are Assam, Burma, India, Bengal-Orissa, Japan, China—east, south and west, the Congo, Philippines abroad; and the Antilles, Central America, Mexico, and Western Frontier under the Home Board.

4. Know the story of Adoniram Judson and John M. Peck.

The purpose of this requirement is not to stuff the boy with a lot of details about the lives of these two men but to enable them to identify Judson and Peck as pioneers who in a daring and novel fashion did new and original pieces of work, defied danger and won out through sheer pluck. Some of the heroic adventures in their lives should be familiar as Judson's prison experiences at Ava and Aungmye and as Peck's experience in coming west in getting a foot-hold for his work.

5. Know the religious beginnings of his own community.

The beginning of religious work forms an interesting story in many communities. It would be of value to the boy to know this and would have the value of making definite and practical the whole missionary idea by linking it with the place with which he is most familiar. It would be well to have the boy write up these facts. If he cannot get these facts by inquiry or reading he may substitute a written account of 50 to 100 words of some missionary hero, book, or address. (Similar explanations are to be worked out for Degrees II and III.)

VI. Promotion

This work having as its object the awakening of missionary interest comes naturally under the department of Missionary Education of the Northern Baptist Convention, at the office of which local classes, clubs, etc. shall be enrolled and through which all information, certificates, and badges shall be given out. Provision for promotion in the states can be made through the proper department of state conventions.

Our Own Folks

The Ohio Baptist Assembly

By W. A. HOLMES.

The 1921 session of the Ohio Baptist Assembly was generally conceded to have been the best in our State Assembly history. The buildings and grounds of Denison University in Granville afford an ideal meeting place. President Chamberlain and his assistants see that every facility is provided for the accommodation of the assembly management and patrons.

Three special features characterized the work this season. The courses have been arranged in a logical three-year cycle plan. By this method, a wider range of work in religious education and training is offered, and students are enabled to secure that which will be most helpful. Certificates are given for twenty or more periods of lectures or conferences with satisfactory note-book work. Some students presented good notes on thirty or more periods. A blue seal is attached to the certificate for a brief written review of some good book on religious education. A red seal is given for satisfactory work in a leadership course. A gold seal is given for a review and work in a leadership course. On the completion of three years work and the presentation of a paper on some theme in religious education and a statement by the student that he or she has had one or more years of experience in some line of church work, the assembly diploma is granted.

The second feature was that of the leadership courses, offered for the special training of leaders for teacher-training classes, mission study classes, music and pageantry, recreational activities, B. Y. P. U. work, W. W. G. work, etc. Including the work in the pastors' conference and in the women's mission hour there were twelve of these courses in charge of able leaders, and the enrollment was almost three hundred.

The third special feature was the work in music. The management has felt that the assembly could help people to make more of the music in Sunday schools, prayer meetings and in church worship.

A special course in church music was given by Rev. E. E. Harper, who also conducted a chorus rehearsal each day, and on the last Saturday evening a very delightful concert was given. The success of this venture warrants its continuance as a part of our work in religious education.

The assembly work was thoroughly organized and every thing moved with clock work precision. Mr. R. O. Carver of Cleveland, a leader in Lakewood church is the wide-awake and hard working president. Mr. Stanton Caldwell of Cleveland is secretary. Mr. W. A. Holmes, the state director of Sunday school and young people's work is dean of the training school. These officers are supported by a board of trustees comprised of men and women vitally interested in the work.

The assembly opened with the program of the Ohio B. Y. P. U. Convention session on Friday, Saturday and Sunday, July 29-31, and the training school work started on Monday, Aug. 1, and closed on Sunday, Aug. 7.

The total registration was about 900. This included some who came for the young people's convention or for two or three days only, and some of the Granville people who could attend but few of the day meetings. The training school registration was 434, and the number presenting satisfactory note books was 253. This was the largest graduating class in our history. Eight diplomas were granted for three years' work and certificates were granted as follows: thirteen certificates with gold seals, one certificate with blue seal, one hundred and fifty-six certificates with red seals, sixty-five certificates without seals and fourteen cards of recognition. It was highly gratifying to note the large number taking the leadership courses, although this work was not required.

The entire program comprised 222 different numbers and the instructors and special lecturers numbered thirty-two.

Over one hundred people had parts in the conferences, concerts, etc. The total attendance at the day lectures of the training school was 11,285.

The Life Service League membership already over 200 was increased by twenty-five recruits.

The faculty was high grade and the students were enthusiastic and faithful in attendance and work.

The speakers in the young people's convention were: Pres. L. S. Gaines, Dr. Chas. L. Williams, Pres. C. W. Chamberlain, Mr. Milton McGorill, Mr. Ralph Baldwin, Miss Helen Crissman and Dr. Allyn K. Foster. Miss Zoe E. Barnhouse and Mr. W. A. Holmes were conference leaders. Rev. T. G. Erler and Dr. T. F. Chambers conducted devotional services. Rev. E. E. Harper was in charge of the music.

The training school lecturers were as follows: Dr. H. E. Tralle, Rev. A. B. Strickland, Dr. W. P. Behan, Miss Zoe E. Barnhouse, Miss Hazel Boyd, Miss Ella B. Weaver, Mr. M. McGorill, Dr. E. Y. Mullins, Rev. H. T. Houf, Miss Helen Crissman, Rev. Isaac Higginbotham, Miss Freada Koeker, Rev. E. E. Harper, Rev. J. O. Newton, Dr. W. J. Sly, Miss Pauline G. Vegh, W. H. Thompson, Mrs. E. E. Harper, Miss Mary Cook, Mrs. F. A. Lippert, Mrs. D. A. Terradell. Rev. Sumner R. Vinton gave two illustrated addresses. Hon. Clinton N. Howard gave one evening lecture.

Evening concerts were given by the Garner Jubilee Singers, the Granville Women's Music Club, the Crawford Adams Company, the Zedeler Symphonic Quintet, and the Assembly Chorus. The Stunt Night program was a new feature this year and quite a winner. Dr. Foster was the preacher on the first Sunday and Dr. Mullins on the second Sunday.

The vesper services were very helpful. Mr. Harper was in charge of the music, and the leaders were as follows: Pres. C. W. Chamberlain, Mr. McGorill, Mr. Higginbotham, Rev. John T. Latta, Rev. Sam'l. D. Bawden, Dr. F. G. Cressey, Rev. C. M. Eddy, Rev. H. T. Houf. The World Wide Guild girls had charge of vespers one evening, the Life Service League one evening, and the young men of the missionary teams one evening.

The training school recognition services were held on the last Sunday morning at the hour of morning worship. On that Sunday afternoon a missionary program was given in the Baptist church with good messages by Rev. S. D. Bawden of Kavali, South India, Rev. John T. Latta of Thonze, Burma, Miss Harriet Davis of Mather school, Miss Julia Rogers of Benedict College, Miss Margaret Seasholes of El Cristo, Miss Ruth Hopkins, Americanization worker, and Miss Sophia Yeager of Cleveland. It was good to hear from these home and foreign society workers the stories of their fields, peoples and work.

The assembly session will live long in the lives of those who came under its influence.

Go It, Nebraska

By GEORGE SUTHERLAND

Grand Island College

For just one year Grand Island College has been without a president. To provide for the interval which might be long or short, the trustees organized the administrative ability and the experience of faculty and trustees, and showed their wisdom in so doing. The past year has been one of encouragement. The attendance was thirty per cent larger than that of the year before. The scholastic work was of a high order. In the various intercollegiate, oratorical, debating, and athletic contests Grand Island College was well toward the front.

To prepare for the coming school year, the buildings have been repaired; considerable equipment for library and laboratories has been secured and all professional vacancies have been filled. During the past year professors visited many parts of the state and interviewed many young people, securing their promise to attend the college. The representative of the Department of Institutional Education of the State Convention spent three months in the field soliciting the young people likewise to attend an institution of higher learning. The results, a month before the opening of school, show that more new students have paid their reservation fees for rooms in the dormitory than the whole number who roomed in the building last year, and that about as many have indicated their purpose to enter the freshman class from the local high school, as were enrolled altogether in the freshman class last year. The increase in attendance the coming year should be quite marked.

Rev. J. Mason Wells has accepted the presidency of the college and will enter upon his duties about October 1. Mr. Wells is an A. B. of Amherst; an A. M. of Yale; was pastor of an important church in Pennsylvania for nine and a half years; has, for the past five years, been pastor of the First Baptist Church of Ann Arbor, Michigan, having helpful relations with four hundred Baptist students attending

CHILDREN OF THE MISSIONARIES TO THE INDIANS.

THE NEW CHURCH AT RAINY MOUNTAIN.

Oklahoma Indian Association

By BRUCE KINNEY

The session of this organization for 1921 met with the Rainy Mountain Church August 11 to 14.

In many respects it was the most encouraging gathering for several years. The weather was warm but not unmercifully hot as it had been just prior to those dates.

An unusual attraction was the dedication of the new brick church at Rainy Mountain on August 11. The sermon was preached by Prof. H. H. Clouse of the English Bible Department of Bacone College. For twenty-five years he was the devoted missionary on this field and under his leadership this building was nearly completed. It was carried to a successful conclusion by his successor, Rev. F. L. King, formerly among the Arapaho. This new building cost about $10,000. The money was all raised by the church with the exception of $500, given by the American Baptist Home Mission Society.

Under Bro. King the work continues to be in a flourishing condition. The camp was arranged in a systematic manner and in many ways the best one we have ever had. Never before have we seen so many American flags. They flapped in the breeze from nearly every tent, teepee and brush arbor. Participation in the late war by so many of the young men no doubt had something to do with this.

We had the biggest attendance since the association divided several years ago. For some years there have been some discouraging features in connection with our work. Whether the war, the usual cause assigned by white churches for this slump, had anything to do with it, or not, the discouraging period was about the same. For two or three recent years two of our tribes where we have done much work were very conspicuous by their almost entire absence from the association meetings. This year both tribes had quite a large representation present. As far as it goes that is a hopeful sign of a revival of interest in our work among these tribes. There are other signs of encouragement.

The reports showed that there had been ninety baptisms during the past year, which was twenty more than the year previous, an increase in this way of six per cent, giving a membership of 1514.

The evangelistic services at the association were well attended and of great interest. At the last such service on Sunday morning over sixty people "took the chairs." Of course some of these were reclamations but it was the largest number I have seen in my fifteen years of these meetings. After careful examination of the candidates sixty-one were baptized. Others are to be baptized at home later. All told, most careful estimates show that over 1,000 Indians were in camp.

Another encouraging feature was the young people's meetings in English. Rev. R. D. Licklider, who has rendered this same service several times before gave the Bible and doctrinal studies in English. The average attendance at his classes was about 100, possibly more. These young people in their understanding of the English language, their mental processes, their dress and deportment, are scarcely distinguishable from white young men and women unless it be in their better deportment.

The country had been somewhat in need of rain which came in gracious showers on Saturday night and early Sunday morning. This rain accomplished two things. It practically assured the making of all the pending crops and it prevented great crowds of white people who would have come as mere curiosity-seekers, and to that extent would have hindered the work. The Indian is reticent in the presence of strangers and does not like to make a show of himself to satisfy mere curiosity.

It seems strange that white men calling themselves Christians will crowd into the big tent during the solemn Sunday morning services (as I have seen them do) with their hats on, and smoking cigars, and then laugh and jest at the "show."

Stranger still it is that white men will prowl about on dark nights in a camp when Indians have come to worship God, for the purpose of selling them illicit booze. Several were no doubt guilty of attempts to do this and one man was caught by the sheriff red-handed with several quarts of the stuff in his possession, and then taken off to jail. It is a sad commentary on our own race and white civilization that we are obliged to say that the greatest hindrance to the spread of the gospel among the Indians is the treatment meted out to them by many of their white neighbors.

During my own active acquaintance with the Indians running back over twenty years, I can see many changes for the better. If we do our part to evangelize them I can foresee still greater changes in the future and look forward to the time when the Indian will be no longer an object of curiosity, but looked upon simply as an American and no better nor worse than his white neighbors.

The Home Mission Society sent this year, as their special representative to this meeting, Mr. H. B. Clark a business man of North Adams, Massachusetts. This was a departure for I have never known an official of the society nor a board member to be sent who was not a distinguished D. D. Bro. Clark was the first layman. He made a fine impression for his straight forward business way of looking at things, and his transparent Christian devotion. Incidentally I believe the meetings made a great impression on him.

Next year the associational meeting will be held at the Post Oak Mission, which is conducted by a branch of the Mennonites, who are so similar to the Baptists, that they have cordially co-operated with us for several years. Rev. Bro. Becker is the efficient missionary.

the university. During the absence of the regular professor at Swarthmore College, Mr. Wells lectured for a semester upon History of Philosophy. For two years he was president of the Combined Charities of Ann Arbor and led in a $35,000 campaign for funds to replenish their treasury. For five years he has been a manager of the Swarthmore Chautauqua Association, has conducted many local Chautauquas, and has been a frequent lecturer on Chautauqua and other platforms. Mr. Wells is a scholar, an orator, and a man of affairs. He comes to Grand Island College in the full vigor of his young manhood because he sees in the institution, with its great field, boundless possibilities of development in the interest of the kingdom of God.

Baptist Headquarters

Baptists headquarters at Grand Island has plenty of room, and furniture and facilities well adapted to the needs of our state work. Board meetings, committee meetings, visiting national leaders, official conferences, stenographers, bookkeepers and the click of typewriters make it a place of incessant activity.

State Secretary Fowle carries a great burden and is a very busy man both in the office and among the churches. Assistant Secretary Sharp brings to his work a life time residence in Nebraska and a wide and intimate acquaintance with Baptist men and the Baptist affairs in the state. Rev. J. D. Collins, Director of Religious Education, is found at his desk once in a while, but spends practically all his time among Sunday schools and churches in his endeavor to raise their standard of efficiency. These leaders are now endeavoring to develop a policy of conservation and aggressive church extension, not on paper, but through, and accompanying its practical operation on the field.

The Grand Island Association

The Grand Island Association has just held its annual meeting at Polk. It is a mother of associations. In former years it dismissed churches sufficiently numerous to constitute the South Central Association, and the greater part of the Custer, and what is now the North Platte Associations. It still has as many churches and church members as at any time in its history. The association, just closed, had the largest attendance and probably the best program within the memory of the oldest Baptist present. Special measures were taken to increase the student attendance at the college, to go over the top in the New World Movement, to conduct an evangelistic campaign, and to induce every church in the association to put into its budget funds sufficient to provide THE BAPTIST for every family on its church roll. The Polk church has done this and the Polk church says it pays.

OHIO

REV. P. S. CALVIN of Akron, formerly pastor of the Calvary Church there and later a supply and interim-pastor at the First Church, has accepted a call to come to the First Baptist Church of Hubbard as pastor, and will come on the field the first of September.

KANSAS

THE BAPTIST CHURCH at Mount Union, Pottawatomie Co., Kans., called a council to meet at the church July 31, 1921, for the purpose of ordaining Bro. W. E. Holdron to the gospel ministry. Members were present from First Church, Topeka, Wamego and Junction City. Council organized with Rev. J. T. Crawford moderator and J. M. Gurley as clerk. After a thorough examination, council recommended that church proceed with ordination which was done. Bro. Holdron baptized one candidate after the service. He will continue to serve Mount Union Church as pastor this is one of our country churches about thirteen miles from the railroad.

COLORADO

AFTER A SUCCESSFUL PASTORATE of nearly two years in the old historic First Baptist Church of Golden, (the first Baptist church organized in Colorado), Rev. Frank A. Kelley tendered his resignation to take effect the last of August. It was with mingled feelings of love and regret that the church accepted this resignation. The church will settle another pastor very soon. Rev. Mr. Kelley has not decided as yet where he will go. He came to us from Illinois but wishes to remain and keep his family in the West for the time being.

Thirty-second Anniversary of Black Hills

The Thirty-second annual meeting of The Black Hills Association of Baptist Churches convened at Folsom August 19, 1921. After the preliminaries of the first session, an address was given by Rev. John W. Wynn, on the subject "Faithfulness Rewarded." After this followed the reception of new churches organized by Rev. Wynn. These churches are: Golden Church, at Clough; Chalk Butte Church, at White Owl; and Thornton Memorial Baptist Church, at Red Owl. Rev. A. B. Claypoole was elected as moderator for his fourth term, and O. H. Jacobson was chosen as clerk. At the evening service the annual sermon was preached by Rev. J. M. Hupp, of Lead.

At the Saturday morning meeting, some of the Baptist programs, as laid out by the state convention, were presented, and immediate church problems were discussed. The afternoon meeting was turned over to the women, being led by Mrs. G. W. Mingus, state secretary-director, of Sioux Falls. In the evening, Mrs. J. S. Gardner, secretary of missionary education, Sioux Falls, told of the valuable work of Christian education at Sioux Falls College and Rev. B. P. Milburn, Deadwood, delivered the doctrinal sermon.

The association met with the Folsom Sunday school on Sunday morning, after which Dr. S. P. Shaw, state secretary, gave the morning sermon. The afternoon session was devoted to reports and discussion of the work of the Sunday school and the Baptist Young People's Union. Sunday evening, after a brief song service, all committees were heard from. The association voted unanimously to thank the people of Folsom for their generous hospitality and for the many good things they furnished to eat. Mention was also made of the finely equipped basement in which the guests were gathered twice each day for a bountiful meal. The association also drew up resolutions in which it made plain the fact that it stood opposed to dancing and also to questionable picture shows. It was unanimously decided to hold the meeting next year at Hot Springs, S. D.—B. P. MILBURN.

RHODE ISLAND

REV. CHARLES B. FISHER of Killingly, Conn. began his pastorate at the First Church, East Providence, on Sunday, Sept. 4.

THE CHURCH at BRADFORD under the leadership of Rev. F. J. Caterer, has been making progress during the past year. Seven have been baptized and a lot of land has been offered the church for a new building, which is very much needed.

OUR RUSSIAN BRETHREN have been conducting open air services in Providence and Woonsocket. Brother Puhovsky has been doing constructive work: two are to be baptized in Woonsocket on Sept. 4 and two in Providence, Sept. 11. A Russian wedding took place in the old historic First Church of Providence, Sept. 3.

Fresh from the Field

A cablegram has been received by the Foreign Mission Society, announcing the safe arrival at Liverpool of secretary and Mrs. J. C. Robbins en route to the mission in British India in company with a large missionary party sailing from New York Aug. 20. The entire party should reach various ports in British India about Oct. 10.

The Foreign Mission Society has received a cablegram announcing the safe arrival of secretary P. H. J. Lerrigo at Matadi on the West Coast of Africa. From Matadi Dr. Lerrigo plans to proceed up the Congo River a distance of 800 miles, visiting mission stations along the way, and also to go far south along the Kasai River and its tributaries. Our people will follow Dr. Lerrigo with deep interest.

Upon the recommendation of Commissioner Rushbrooke the Foreign Mission Society has arranged for Rev. Charles Osolin to sail from New York Sept. 13, his ultimate destination being Latvia, his native country. Upon the invitation of Baptists in England, he will spend a year of special study in that country before taking up his work in Latvia. Mr. Osolin graduated last June at the Newton Theological Institution.

State Convention Department

Sunday school, young people's work, teacher training, missionary education, vacation school, and all other lines of study and instruction included in the programme of local church life.

This department is directed by a commission of nine elective members from the board of directors of the convention. This commission is charged with the responsibility for plans and limits of co-operation between the University of Redlands, the Baptist Divinity School at Berkeley, and the convention, and also is required to keep in close touch with the life and work of the University of Redlands and render to the convention annually a report of the religious, educational, and general financial condition of that institution. It is also responsible for the dissemination of information concerning, and the cultivation of interest in, ministerial education, and the securing of volunteers in the churches and educational institutions for the ministry and the missionary field.

This departmental plan has proved to be very effective in bringing together and correlating the various denominational agencies that have heretofore been doing something in the way of educational work in the Convention field. This commission is required to maintain working relations with the American Baptist Publication Society and the General Board of Education. In arranging its programme for the convention field, it is able thus to have the counsel and co-operation of these other agencies, and so to organize its programme as to avoid duplication of effort.

EXCERPTS FROM BY-LAWS OF THE SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA BAPTIST CONVENTION

2. Department of Education

Sections 1. The Board of Directors at the first meeting after its election shall elect nine of its members to constitute a Commission on Education; three members to be elected for a term of one year, three for a term of two years, and three for a term of three years. The Executive Secretary of the Convention, the Director of Education, the President of the University of Redlands, and the Superintendent of each standard City Mission Society within the Convention Field shall be ex-officio members of this Commission. The nine elective members shall be divided equally between pastors, laymen, and women, as far as practicable and shall be selected for their interest in and their fitness to serve in an educational capacity.

Sec. 2. The Commission of Christian Education shall promote and direct the work of Religious Education in its different phases, including Sunday school and Young People's work, Teacher Training, Missionary Education, Daily Vacation Bible Schools and all other lines of study and instruction included in a comprehensive and balanced program of Christian Education for the local church. No scheme of training or organization shall be promoted in the territory of the Convention in the name of the Denomination without the approval of the Commission. The Commission shall recommend to the Board of Directors plans and limits of co-operation between the University of Redlands, the Baptist Divinity School at Berkeley, and the Convention.

Sec. 3 The Commission shall also be the medium of the Convention for the dissemination of information concerning, and the cultivation of interest in, ministerial education, and the securing of volunteers in the churches and educational institutions for the ministry and the missionary field.

Sec. 4 Within ten days after appointment, the Commission shall meet and elect its own chairman, vice-chairman, and recording secretary and shall establish and hold regular meetings monthly and may hold special meetings if deemed necessary in the prosecution of its work.

Sec. 5. The Commission shall make an annual budget of expense deemed necessary to carry on its work and report the same to the Finance Committee at least one month before the close of the fiscal year of the Convention. The Board shall adopt or change the same according to its discretion. Within the limits of the budget authorized by the Convention Board all expenses incurred by the Commission in carrying on its work shall be paid from the treasury of the Convention, after being approved by the Commission and the Executive Committee of the Convention Board.

Sec. 6. The Commission shall render a full and detailed report to the Convention Board quarterly and through the Board to the Convention annually.

Sec. 7. The Commission shall maintain working relations with the American Baptist Publication Society and the General Board of Education of the Northern Baptist Convention, in order to participate in the denominational plans for religious education.

Sec. 8. The Commission shall have the right to recommend to the Board of Directors a Director of Education, who when elected by the Board of Directors shall be the Executive Officer of the Department of Education for the execution of such plans and policies as shall have been approved by the Commission and the Board of Directors.

Sec. 9. The Commission shall keep in close touch with the life and work of the University of Redlands, and render to the Convention annually a report of the religious, educational, and general financial condition of that institution.

Reports from the States giving a survey of the Sunday-school and young people's work in each and the several goals for the coming year, held over with other material for want of space, will appear next week.

if not the greatest in history. The situation is made all the more tragic by reason of the numerous difficulties which beset any attempt to furnish relief. Some of those difficulties are pronounced almost "unsolvable," but most earnest efforts are being made to find a solution. The American public is familiar with the statements of Mr. Herbert Hoover, Chairman of the American Relief Administration, and with the letter of President Harding with reference to conditions in Russia, and many are asking what should be done to meet the situation.

It has been the writer's privilege to attend the conferences in Washington City and in New York, where the latest information from Russia was presented, and where most careful consideration was given to the question of the duty of the American people at the present hour. Very fortunately, under the leadership of Mr. Herbert Hoover, the American Relief Administration has reached an agreement with the Soviet authorities with reference to the distribution of supplies from this country, and money is already available for use in the immediate future in meeting the needs of the children and the sick especially as rapidly as problems of transportation can be solved. It is not deemed advisable to solicit more money at present.

The Board and officers of the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society are giving their best attention to the situation in Russia, and they have established connections which they believe will insure the receipt of authentic information. It is not anticipated that full information will be available until some time perhaps late in September. Meanwhile, the writer feels justified in suggesting to our people that they do not contribute funds for relief work in Russia except as they may feel sure of the trustworthy character of the organization soliciting money and of its ability to reach Russia with supplies and distribute them in that country under present conditions.

Our Cover Illustration

Every art lover who travels in Italy regards it as a misfortune, if for any reason, he fails to visit the beautiful and historic City of Milan and look reverently upon one of the world's masterpieces in painting—The Last Supper—by Leonardo da Vinci.

This picture was painted near the close of the 15th century on one of the walls of the refectory of the Dominican Convent. It took the artist two years to complete the painting, and it is said that he was so absorbed by his work that he would remain on the scaffold from sun-rise to sun-set without eating or drinking.

Though now faded by dampness and begrimed by smoke, the outlines of the life size figures and the delicate coloring are still discernible. On an adjoining wall the picture has been reproduced by another celebrated artist and this helps one to interpret the original and to appreciate its greatness. In the background are windows through which the Juden hills appear and every detail of the "upper room" is worked out in a most wonderful way. The Master has just spoken the dreadful words "One of you shall betray me." The artist displays his genius by choosing to represent in the picture the moment just following this announcement when each of the twelve is saying either by words or gestures "Lord, is it I!" While a look of either grief or surprise or inquiry is on the face of each of the twelve, there are no two faces alike, which is also a mark of genius. The hands of at least six of the apostles are making gestures which are very expressive and more or less violent, showing how effective even the hands may be in expressing thought or feeling.

A careful study shows that there are four groups, two on either side of Christ with three apostles in a group. To the right of Christ and next to Him the group is composed of Peter and John, with Judas in front of them holding the bag. Judas has been so startled by the Master's announcement that he has tipped over the salt—an accident which when it happens is to this day thought by some to be symbolic of a quarrel or some other evil thing. John is clasping his hands in grief and Peter is impetuously leaning forward and asking John of whom the Master has spoken. On the other side of Christ is the keen face of the doubting Thomas, leaning forward between two other apostles and pointing his fingers toward himself as he exclaims "Is it I!" The other two groups are also in very expressive attitudes, and every figure in the picture is in itself a triumph of art.

Obituary

ARVILLA W. CLARK

After a lingering illness, at the ripe age of eighty-three years, Mrs. Arvilla W. Clark of South West Harbor, Me. passed, on Friday afternoon, Aug. 12, into the higher life. Mrs. Clark was a staunch member of the Manset Baptist Church. She contributed liberally towards church expense and benevolence. She is much missed by friends and neighbors. The funeral service was conducted at her late home, on Sunday afternoon, Aug. 14, by Pastor C. D. McKenzie.

MRS. G. C. CRIPPEN

Wife of Rev. G. C. Crippen, died in Denver, Col., Aug. 13, 1921. She had not been well for more than three years. At the time of her death she was visiting her mother. She had been with her mother about a month and seemed to be improving in health, when complications arising suddenly brought her life to an end.

Rev. Mr. Schoemaker, a friend of the family, conducted the funeral, and her body was interred in Denver.

After her marriage she and her husband lived at Wausau, Wis., Washington Park, Chicago, and Flint, Mich., where he served as pastor, and later in Chicago, where he holds the position of manager of the University of Chicago Press.

She was in bed only two days, and her end came peacefully.

CONDUCTED BY

WILLIAM LESTER

A SUCCESSFUL SUNDAY-SCHOOL ORCHESTRA

We are in receipt of a most interesting letter from Mr. T. Otto Mc Pherson, of the First Baptist church of Mt. Vernon, in which he reports of the splendid success achieved by the Sunday school orchestra of that thriving church. And some of the points brought out in the letter seem to possess sufficient importance to warrant the reprinting of the letter on this page.

Editor "THE BAPTIST"

Dear Sir and Bro.:—I am much interested in the growth and development of "Our Paper." The newly added "music corner" is going to be a splendid and needed addition.

May I submit the following:

Some ten years ago, the writer suggested to Mr. C. W. Harriss, superintendent of the First Baptist Sunday school, that we start a S. S. orchestra. We did. Altho a small beginning the orchestra has served its purpose splendidly and for years, in fact almost ever since the orchestra was started, we have held front rank among our city Sunday schools.

Recently, when Dr. Agar visited us he seemed much surprised at our supporting a ten piece Men's orchestra—second to none—as was expressed. Often we have twelve or more, but numbers is not what we are after.

Since the inception of the orchestra we have stood for nothing but "standard" music. We play a special number or two before opening of the Sunday school at 9:30. We also play occasionally a "fitting" number during the "opening exercises" and the "March" to the classes.

Among recent overtures played are "Zampa," "Poet and Peasant," "La Dame Blanche," "Light Cavalry," selections from the operas, and oratorios and lighter semi-classic pieces of the religious bearing also.

During these ten years several of the members of the orchestra at different times have joined Baptist churches here and elsewhere.

At present six are members of our church, none of whom were when the orchestra was started. I want to personally appeal to all churches not to overlook orchestra talent among its membership and not to hesitate to seek outside help if necessary. A letter to Mr. C. W. Harriss, superintendent, H. J. Howard, assistant superintendent, or Dr. H. E. Truex pastor, will get all the information you want as to what the church and school think of an orchestra Sunday school.

FROM THE SCRAP BOX

Few people properly estimate the effect public school music has on the home life of the country. A general but erroneous impression is that the children accept music study along with the other branches, and just as readily forget or neglect it as they reach the playground or have their thoughts detracted by the other matters which so fill the modern youngster's life. As a matter of fact, the school songs are retained and sung at every opportunity in the home. An observer would find a great number of American homes resounding with the lusty tones of school children singing their songs aided by their parents to whom the songs had become familiar by frequent repetition. In truth, to the casually interested person this is the most noteworthy phase of school music. It is practical results. It is the introduction of good music into the almost sacred precincts of the home under the most favorable circumstances; and it can not fail of doing good, and of causing doubters to admit that there is a lot in school music after all.

* * *

The "Music Student" of London makes announcement of a venture which might perhaps be of interest to American composers. Briefly, the plan is that composers shall deposit their manuscripts with the firm of Goodwin and Tabb, who will undertake the whole of the business entailed in drawing the attention of conductors and others to this new library of scores, in having the parts copied in cases where this is necessary, and in handling the works and attending to the composers' interests in every way.

MUSIC REVIEW

"Se-A-Wan-A (The Cherry Maid)"

From the Oliver Ditson Co., Boston, Mass.

Operetta for women's voices by WILLIAM LESTER, $1.25.

This offering will be of interest to the Sunday school or young people's society desiring to put on an entertainment a little out of the ordinary. Since the work is the product of the editor of this column he will refrain from the opportunity of self-praise, and will instead reproduce the published comments of two eminent authorities—from the review columns of "Musical America" and from "The American Organist":—

"With music by William Lester to a libretto by Frederick H. Martens, a delightful little Indian operetta makes its bow. It is scored for women's voices, with piano accompaniment. Mr. Lester has written very attractive music to Mr. Marten's story, and from the overture, which contains parts of the work to the final chorus the work holds interest. Among the best solo numbers are "Se-A-Wan-A's Legend," her narrative, both sung with the chorus, and "O Woman of the Rose." Mr. Lester is never at a loss for a melody, and, likewise, his skill in writing for his medium does not fail him. The work is one that ought to find many admirers, from Maine to California."—Musical America.

"An operetta for women's voices requiring three soprano soloists and one contralto, training about fifty minutes for performance. The music is exceptionally good and interesting throughout both for the singers and for the audience; and the fact that the text deals with Indians and Indian customs makes it all the more valuable for a concert program. Orchestral parts are to be rented from the publishers. The combination of Frederick H. Martens, author, and William Lester, composer, makes one not to be frowned at, and any conductor preparing programs for the coming season will be safe in ordering this operetta as one of the main numbers for the season's presentations."—American Organist.

BAPTIST SUNDAY SCHOOL PUBLICATIONS

We are pouring into the Baptist Sunday Schools of this continent millions of pages of literature, and on every page a message. This ministry of the printed page is a potent factor in creating and maintaining vital denominational conscience and loyalty. Our great leaders were "brought up" on Baptist Sunday School literature. Non-Baptist literature does not put Baptist blood into growing boys and girls. It makes denominational weaklings, backboneless and vacillating, who "give not a fig" to forward the big enterprises of the Northern Baptist Convention. Baptist literature in Baptist Sunday Schools is an absolute necessity if we expect to grow a generation of Christ-visioned, missionary-minded Baptist men and women who will live righteously and give liberally.

BLIND beggars are familiar objects in the streets of Jerusalem and other Oriental cities, where the call for Christian charity and human brotherhood is never silent. At the present time, owing to the ruin of war, it is multiplied a thousand-fold.

Fresh from the Field

Dr. Judson Swift, general secretary emeritus of the American Tract Society, died at his home in New York city Aug. 19, after a long illness. Dr. Swift was known throughout the United States the past twenty-seven years as an officer in the tract society, first as field secretary and then as general secretary. In June of this year severe illness and advancing age compelled him to resign from active work, and he was made secretary emeritus. Before becoming associated with the tract society, Dr. Swift served a quarter of a century as a pastor.

In some sections of the country Indians who have become Christians are troubled over the subject of dancing. A recent convocation of Sioux Indians, held in South Dakota under the auspices of the Episcopal Church, debated this matter. War dances, ghost dances, and the like have been practically given up and the more conservative men are inclined to prohibit dancing altogether, although naturally asking whether the white people should not take similar action.

Mrs. C. A. Gallup, one of the superintendents of the Sunday school of the First Church, Cuba, N. Y. speaks enthusiastically of the growing appreciation in their school of the graded lessons furnished by our Publication Society. The school numbers 225. Rev. Thos. W. Carter is the pastor.

According to a report just received from Rev. K. W. Strzelec who is supervising the relief program of the American Baptists Foreign Mission Society in Poland, there are over 200 places in a small strip of territory in eastern Galicia where the gospel is being preached in private houses by about fifty lay preachers. Mr. Strzelec visited this section recently and was appalled by the destitute condition of the people. The preachers are barefoot, one of them is totally blind, the people are nearly naked or at best clothed in rags, and hundreds of them are living in caves. The condition of the children, under these circumstances, is most pitiable. Here are consecrated groups of Baptists who appeal to their denominational kinsmen in America for help. What a joy it will be for them when they learn of the plan of the two foreign mission societies for relief this fall and that American Baptists are going to "Fill a Ship in Fellowship."

Dr. B. M. Tipple, Methodist leader in leaning of the government to the clerical group, which was strengthened in its position in the May elections by the losses Rome, writes that the present opposition to the Monte Mario school is due to the of the Socialists. In order to maintain a majority, the cabinet must give attention to the priestly party for the time being. As a part of the price of supporting the government, they are asking recognition of the pope's temporal claims, assignment of land, and freedom for Catholics to rule the schools.

An uncommon feature of Smith College commencement this year was the awarding of the degrees of bachelor and master of arts to a young negro girl graduate, Eunice Hunton, of Brooklyn, N. Y. She was the only one in the class of 500 to receive the two degrees and is reported to be the only one in the history of the college to have made the two in a four years' course. This girl won extra honors as well and has been during the year one of the directors of the intercollegiate debates.

Out at Red Springs, a few miles west of Seymour, in West, Texas, there lives a man whose grandfather and Daniel Boone built the first Baptist church building ever erected in Kentucky. His name is E. E. Haggard, and he is one of the pillars of the little church. He is now in his eighty-fourth year but his interest in his church work has not abated and he will be found at every service. He has been a member of a Baptist church for sixty-six years, and of the Red Springs church for thirty-seven years. Practically all of the Haggard family, during a history of 468 years have been Baptists. Brother Haggard's grandfather was one of the pioneers of Kentucky and was associated with Daniel Boone. These two men built the first building of Old Providence Church in Clark County, Ky., eight miles from Winchester.

Dr. J. H. Rushbrooke, European Baptist Commissioner, has cabled the Foreign Mission Society that Rev. J. A. Frey, one of the fraternal delegates to the Northern Baptist Convention, should return to Latvia as soon as possible, where he is required in the preparation of plans for the development of the Baptist work. The Foreign Mission Society is arranging for Mr. and Mrs. Frey to sail soon after Sept. 15. They should arrive in good season to render assistance in the general oversight of the distribution of such supplies as will be sent by Northern Baptists in their campaign to "Fill a Ship in Fellowship." At the Baptist Conference in London in July, 1920, Commissioners Brooks and Rushbrooke, who had just returned from their continental tour, declared that, in their judgment, Latvia would be one of the most strategic gateways to Russia whenever communication with that country could be re-established. The newspaper reports indicate that these two Commissioners made an accurate forecast. Already the Baptists of England, Scotland, Canada and of the northern states in America have united in a co-operative effort to lend assistance to their brethren in Latvia.

The "class that did the largest amount of training work last year of any in the Northern Baptist Convention," and which was pictured on page 1018 of the last issue of THE BAPTIST, was the class connected with the First Church, Johnson City, N. Y. We regret that it was not so named under the picture.

Already parcels of clothing are arriving in New York for shipment to Europe in response to the appeal "Fill a Ship in Fellowship," and at the headquarters of the Foreign Mission Societies it is feared that some embarrassment will arise in handling the supplies unless churches and individuals refrain from forwarding their contributions before Oct. 1. It is anticipated that full shipping instructions can be published in next week's denominational papers. Meanwhile, it is urged that nothing be shipped to New York before Oct. 1, and then only in accordance with instructions which are to be given out in a few days. The volume of supplies anticipated cannot be handled at the headquarters of the Foreign Mission Societies. Storage space is now being secured.

The International Association of Women Preachers has been meeting in the Jackson Boulevard Christian Church, Chicago, Sept. 13-16. The organization is evangelical and interdenominational. The president is Miss Madeline Southard of Winfield, Kans., and the general secretary is Mrs. Sarah K. Meredith of Canton, Ohio.

Corwin J. McKee, prominent young banker, church soloist, and well known public worker, died very suddenly at Boise, Idaho, on Aug. 19, at the age of thirty-five years. Corwin was the son of Rev. C. H. McKee, so well known during his later ministry as one of the most efficient general workers of the Publication Society in the North-west. Ralph, another son, is private secretary to John R. Mott.

Dr. Austin K. de Blois, says the Baptist Times and Freeman of Aug. 26, the pastor of the First Church in Boston, U. S. A., has paid one of his too rare visits to England this summer. On three Sundays he occupied the pulpit at the Hampstead Garden Suburb Free Church. Last week he had a novel and delightful experience. He flew over to Paris from Croydon, the journey taking just over two hours. Appropriately enough, his text on the morning before his flight was, "They shall mount up with wings as eagles."

It is reported that during a visit to the United States Mr. A. B. Cooke, American Consul, Swansea, had a conversation with President Harding, who alluding to the principality, remarked, "I did pretty well by Wales in forming my cabinet, did not I?" This complimentary remark referred to the fact that Mr. Hughes, his foreign secretary, is a Welshman, the son of a Baptist minister, who emigrated to the United States from Tredegar many years ago; while Mr. James Davies, his secretary of labour, was born and bred at Tredegar. It is quite a unique coincidence that two of the leading members of the U. S. government should not only have hailed from Wales but from the same town in Wales, and that not one of the largest. Should Mr. Lloyd George be able to attend the Washington Conference to deal with disarmament and other kindred questions of world-wide importance, Wales will have reason to be proud of her representation at that great and long-desired gathering, and so will Welch Baptist also!—Baptist Times and Freeman, London.

Sir William Ramsay, the world's foremost authority upon the life and labors of Paul, is soon to visit the United States and will lecture in many colleges and universities. Many who have read with delight his books will have the opportunity of looking into his face and listening to his voice.

Rev. William W. West, pastor of the Sheraden Church, Pittsburgh, Pa., for the last ten months, died at his home on Sept. 5, at the age of sixty-two. Mr. West was born in Hartford, Conn., and was graduated from Rochester College and Seminary. Previous pastorates have been at the Oakmont Church, and at Williamsburg, Greensburg, and Swissvale. He leaves a widow and daughter.

Rev. Hal E. Norton, pastor of the Federated Church at Sandwich, Ill., for six years, has resigned there in order to accept the superintendency of Baptist mission work for the city of Des Moines, Iowa, where he will begin work about the middle of October. Mr. Norton has

Nebraska To The Front

One of the plans for advanced work adopted by the Grand Island Association at its recent meeting is to secure the placing of a subscription for THE BAPTIST for every family in every church within the bounds of the association. Nebraska is not asleep. In the association named there are churches which have tested the value of the budget plan for the past two years. It is believed that the investment pays in dollars and cents to say nothing of the increased interest and efficiency of the individual members.

Killam's Kollum

Yes, a Duty and a Privilege

"I feel it my duty as well as privilege to read THE BAPTIST that I may be informed and also have proper interest in the work of our great denomination." C. H. Easley, Golden, Col.

"Not Killam's Kollum, but Currem's Colyum."

"Pearl of the Orient," published at Iloilo, P. I., has opened a "Capiz Hospital Colyum." As a subtitle it has "Not Killam's Kollum but Currem's Colyum." We are gratified to find that THE BAPTIST has thus been privileged to make its contribution to the Orient. We quote from the first paragraph. "The Pearl has secured the services of medico Meyer for this Colyum. The less said the better. Do you expect an article of literary value, a Demosthenic Philippine philippic on existing conditions, or an exaltant evocation of poetical pulchritude? "What is literature?" Nurse's answer, "Something to tie around arteries." "Rice planting season causes a decrease in the number of inpatients. Be natives slightly or deadly ill now, they do not take time to get well." The new comer is running true to form.

Silence Brother, Silence!

When ye editor communes with his own soul he usually gets into trouble when he records his musings. Some weeks ago he did his last musing. THE BAPTIST could have barely reached the two coasts when a letter was received which ran as follows: "You certainly characterized me in your last number. How do you know so much about my business? If I should say what I think about you I would never go to heaven." Silence, brother, it is the time to speak not. We solemnly promise to forego further meditation. We hope to have the pleasure of meeting you and at that time we will produce a flawless alibi.

Unprecedented Activity.

Editors seldom brag, the editors of THE BAPTIST never. We are under the necessity of saying, however, in order to be truthful that the activity in behalf of THE BAPTIST and Missions has never been as great as at the present time. Scores of churches have written asking for the subscription lists telling us that they proposed to place these periodicals in their church budgets, or that they would have an every family canvass to start off the fall's work; or that a live committee had been appointed and would carry on a continuous campaign reaching each new member as he is received into the membership of the church. Our pastors generally know that ignorance of our denominational work is not a virtue. It is not enough for the pastor to be informed. He wants to minister to a responsive congregation.

done exceptionally good work in Sandwich.

A regularly convened council met with the Edgerton Place Church, Kansas City, Kans., on August 23 to consider the advisability of the ordination of Mr. Charley D. McClellan. Upon its unanimous recommendation, the church held ordination services on the same evening. Mr. McClellan is at present a student in the Kansas City Theological Seminary and pastor of the Santa Rosa, Mo., Church.

Miss Eva Maude Earle, daughter of Rev. and Mrs. J. H. Earle, whose home is with her brother-in-law, Rev. Milton Fish, sails for Matsuyama, Japan, Oct. 1. Although a Baptist, she goes out under the Congregational Board to become assistant principal of one of their girls' schools. Miss Earle has been teaching English and music in the Junior High at San Bernardino and will teach the same branches in Matsuyama.

Rev. Davis Norris, who has been pastor of the Geneva, Ohio, Church for the past eighteen months, has resigned and closed his work there on August 31, going at once to the pastorate of the Immanuel Church, Erie, Pa. The Geneva Church is united and in good condition and desires to secure another pastor at once. Mr. Chas. I. Chamberlin, Geneva, is chairman of the pulpit committee.

Dr. Hastings Rashdahl, the Dean of Carlisle, indulged in some very plain speaking on the question of apostolic succession at the summer school at Oxford a few weeks ago. This doctrine, which is a bar to Christian reunion, has, he declared, no historical basis, and any reunion or federation founded upon it would be of very little value. He admitted that it is a lawful method of church government. Naturally, also, he holds that it is expedient as well as lawful. But he refuses utterly to go as far as the High Churchman and declare that it is essential. On the contrary, he maintains that the supposition that the episcopacy or any other form of church government was instituted by Christ or by the Apostles is not a historical fact, and no good can come of such ideas as that churches which have bishops are therefore properly constituted Christian communities, while those which have not bishops are outside the church.

The American Medical Association, at its recent meeting in Boston, passed the following significant resolution: "Whereas, reproach has been brought on the medical profession by some members who have misused the law which permits the prescribing of alcohol; therefore, be it resolved, that the American Medical Association announces its disapproval of a small minority of the profession being purveyors of alcoholic beverages."

A million more horses on the farms of the United States in 1920 than in 1910! This is the report of the American Horse Association, gathered from the census.

The population of England, Wales and Scotland, according to the new census, is 42,767,530, as against 40,831,396 in 1911, representing an increase of 1,936,134 or 4.7 per cent. Greater London's population is 7,476,168, an increase of 3.1 per cent. By counties, the population is: England, 35,678,530; Wales 2,206,712;

Scotland, 4,882,288. The population of the Indian Empire is 319,075,132, an increase of 1.2 per cent; of the Union of South Africa Europeans only 1,521,635, an increase of 19.2 per cent.; of Australia, excluding full-blooded aborigines, 5,426,008, an increase of 21.8 per cent, and of New Zealand excluding the Maoris 1,218,270, an increase of 20.8 per cent.

Rev. H. M. Lawson, pastor of the Maryland Avenue Church, Washington, D. C., stopped in the office for a few minutes recently on his way back to Washington after a long and interesting trip on the Pacific Coast.

We notice in an exchange a story to the effect that a New York real estate operator named Simon recently proposed to the Board of Estimate that all churches on Fifth Ave., with the possible exception of St. Patrick's Cathedral, should be relegated to side streets on less valuable property. "This may seem to be a revolutionary doctrine," said Mr. Simon in addressing the Board, "but I am free to say it. Houses of worship like the Calvary Baptist Church and others from which the city gets no taxes should not be allowed to occupy prominent thoroughfares." Mr. Simon suggested that the Calvary Baptist Church property, on West Fifty-seventh Street, could be sold for $1,000,000 and an edifice of equal beauty, where communicants could do their worshipping, be erected on a less valuable site. The city, he said, would thus have the benefit in taxes of the sold property. Here Mayor Hylan abruptly interrupted. "I want you to understand that the dollar is not everything in this city," said the mayor. "There are beautiful things, sacred things, that mean more to the hearts of the people than mere money-making." We do not say that Mr. Simon thought that such a move would silence the commanding voice of Dr. Straton, but if such a thought did enter his head, he has another thought coming.

Dr. F. B. Meyer is now in America and has been making the rounds of some of the larger summer gatherings, where he is always a welcome visitor and speaker.

Speaking of the presence in England of Dr. Henry Atkinson, secretary of the Church Peace mission, the Christian World, of London, says: "Dr. Atkinson has just visited the Scandinavian countries. He met Archbishop Söderblom and Professor Westmann in Sweden, the Bishop of Trondheim in Norway, and in Denmark the Bishop of Copenhagen. He discussed with them the proposed Conference on Life and Work, to be held in 1923 or 1924, with the Archbishop of Sweden as president, when industrial problems, the new social problems and international relationships, and the church's relation to them, will be exhaustively reviewed."

J. Earle Edwards, Supt. of promotion for the New Jersey Convention, writes as follows: "New Jersey, N. W. M. receipts for four months—May to August—larger than for same period last year. The same four months, 1920, totalled $98,000; in 1921, $101,000. We account for the increase under circumstances now prevailing by the fact that missionary treasurers were never so sympathetic, never so actively co-operating, never so interested in doing all in their power to make New Jersey the first state of the Northern Baptist Convention. One treasurer wrote last month, 'Anything you want me to do in this New World Movement that I am not doing, tell me, for I believe in this fund.' We realize that our pastors have their hands full and have therefore laid it upon the treasurers' hearts to be the Very Responsible Man in the local church for the N. W. M., in co-operation with the pastor. We have scarcely had to communicate with the pastors on the subject of the collections since the first of the last fiscal year."

Rev. J. B. Gleason, Baptist student pastor at the University of Wisconsin, desires the co-operation of other pastors in reaching Baptist students who are to attend the University. Please send him the names and addresses of all prospective students that he may get acquainted with them immediately upon arrival. Address him at 405 N. Henry St., Madison, Wis. With the coming of J. Sherman Wallace to the First Church of Madison, a larger work than ever with the students is expected.

Rev. W. H. Cox, who ably filled the pulpit at Pendleton, is now on his new field at Newberg, Oregon, and was recently formally welcomed by the church in a public reception. A large ingathering is expected this winter.

Victor Hugo Sword, supervisor of buildings and industrial work and buildings at Gauhati, Assam, together with Mrs. Sword and their son, Jacob, whom his father describes as a "humdinger," have just left for their field. We shall certainly expect things to move in Gauhati.

The drink bill of Britain, which in 1914 was about $82,500,000, has risen in 1920 to $2,348,500,000 or nearly three times as much—approximately $50 a head for every man, woman and child in the country. This means that the average household paid nearly $5 a week for drink, which is more than the total average wage of the agricultural labor in many English counties before the war. This huge drink bill is paid mainly by the poor.

We have come, it seems, to a new kind of Mariolatry. On the one-hundredth anniversary of the birth of Mary Baker Eddy, Mrs. Augusta E. Stetson, a prominent New York Christian Scientist, in a public advertisement said: "Again I affirm, what was possible for Jesus Christ, the masculine representative of the Fatherhood of God, is possible for Mary Baker Eddy, the feminine representative of the motherhood of God; and for anyone to deny her the ability to demonstrate Christ's teaching . . . is evidence of the so-called carnal mind." Blasphemy could go little farther. The Trinity is to be made a quartette. And as usual, those who protest will be told either that they do not understand or are under the influence of carnal mind, that curious imaginary creation of the Christian Scientist to explain everything he does not like.

Referring to the early experience of Dr. John Clifford, free churchman of England, who relates that the people were shocked because of his manner, The Christian Century believes that kid-gloved preaching is out of date. Dr. Clifford says, "The style of the pulpit of that period may be judged by the fact that many ministers, acknowledged to be great preachers, wore kid gloves as they preached." "Kid gloved preaching," The Christian Century goes on to say, "which touches lightly and deals gently with

Let's Go!

JOHNSTON MYERS, pastor of Immanuel Church, Chicago, has this to say in the last number of his church paper:

"Strange as it may seem, Jesus was among the first to use this popular expression, 'Let us go.' It was not long before his crucifixion. He was talking with his disciples. When the discussion was finished and the parting words were spoken, he said, 'Arise, let us go hence.' He faced the garden experience and the crucifixion and he moved right forward to meet it. People wait to be useful. They plan and intend but never achieve. Nothing but action is very valuable when it comes to helping others and making the world better. As the autumn begins, make it a time for distinct action. We know we ought to engage in some useful service. Let's go! We know we ought to be living Christian lives. Let's go! Before us is the open door of opportunity. Let's go!"

The sentiment is splendid, and any of us may easily add to the list of things to which it is applied.

Vacation time is over. Pastors have returned from their outings. The schools have opened, and so with the exception of a few of the ultra-rich, the people are at home again. All things are set in the church for an advance movement. Let's go! What is the use of waiting longer? Let's go now!

Baptisms last year in the Northern Baptist Convention were the largest for years. A gracious spirit was manifested in pastors and people. The call for evangelism is again sounded. The goal should not be less than 200,000 baptisms. Each church can easily figure out its share. This should be a mighty winter for evangelism.

The challenging program of the New World Movement is still before us, a program which involves the intensification and enlargement of all our missionary work, home and foreign. Many churches have made a splendid beginning: now is the time for the second wind. Some churches have yet to make the start: they should now be off. Our energy and the resources of the kingdom of God can easily be dissipated if we allow sober discussion of differences to degenerate into bickering. There are better times than when Rome is burning for all except the most necessary debate. Suspicion and denunciation do not advance the kingdom. The greatest task of our history is before us. Some day we shall be judged by what we have done with it. Let's go!

Sound Leadership

DAILY papers and weekly magazines are constantly telling us that the great need of the hour is sound leadership.

Organized labor has been exhorted in this fashion world without end. A few radical leaders can undo the practical gains of years. And unions are beginning to see this. Confidence is necessary for the success of any large movement, and confidence is not given just now to radicals.

Capital is fast learning the same lesson. Some of its exponents have hurt just causes. Let a man become extreme, make statements which are not justified by the facts, misrepresent the men opposed to him, and the reputation of all business suffers.

The case is not otherwise with education. Utterances of loose thinkers are heralded far and wide. Who of us cannot remember some extreme statement by a college professor which has been used the country over to discredit the schools? The press plays up such an utterance, public speakers spread it abroad, and the sound, constructive work of the great majority of educators is overlooked.

We may safely infer that the same rule holds in religious matters. Conservatives do not wish to be identified with extremists who may come to the front as leaders. And yet they always are, unless they exercise extreme caution. "Forward-looking men," as they call themselves, do not want themselves or their cause to be judged by the utterances of a few radicals. And yet their opponents often try to bring about just this situation. Clever leadership by extremists may always becloud issues. The worst of all demagogues is the religious demagogue. We Baptists may well pray in these days that the grace of God may rest upon our chosen leaders, may also demand in all things leadership that is sound and sane and may refuse to follow any other. Not every one who says, "Lord, Lord," in a pious tone is to be followed. Any one who fails to show the spirit of Christ is to be abjured. Leaders, like all other men, are to be judged by their fruits.

The Greatest Problem of Baptists

MORE than once recently we have expressed approval of editorial utterances of the Alabama Baptist. In its issue for Sept. 1, there is another word which deserves careful consideration. We quote the editorial in part:

"The various Baptist bodies of the world greatly need to be co-ordinated and unified. There are some of them in almost every country under heaven. In many countries they are a multitude.

"Before the world can be brought to feel the moral and religious impact of the whole, the whole must become one in aim and effort.

"It is a commendable and necessary, but difficult problem. Necessary because of the rapid growth of Baptists and difficult because of the same growth. Great bodies move slowly, especially when there is no one to speak ex-cathedra.

"If one ever does speak with authority to Baptists we shall at that moment be getting on the ground of our greatest danger. It is a danger constantly to be guarded against simultaneously as our people grow in numbers and in power.

"The greatest problem that will face the Baptists of the next, and following generations, will not be rationalism, or what is now called the 'new paganism.' New Testament religion will be virile enough to offset this. The greatest temptations come to both men and nations and denominations with increase in their powers.

"Our people in the future, we fear, will be confronted by the problem of having the denomination to function efficiently in the Kingdom of God apart from a deadening 'churchianity' and ecclesiasticism. Our problem is one of unification apart from centralization. If we can succeed at the one and wholly avoid the other, the denomination will, under God, become spiritually invincible after a while."

Thus far we have avoided the danger pointed out. And we believe that we shall continue to do so. Some kind of co-ordination is inevitable. Baptists will not be frightened away from it by the men who always see difficulties in the way of advance steps. The spirit of the pioneer is today in our blood as it has always been. We shall not stand still because we fear to move. Yet we shall need constantly to scrutinize with care all new projects in order that we may avoid the evils so ably pointed out in the editorial quoted. And we shall need to scrutinize with equal care the man who urges that, because of some possible danger, we shall merely rest upon our oars.

The Message of Christ

IN response to a request from a careful reader of THE BAPTIST who is himself a loyal Baptist and a faithful supporter of the organized work of the denomination, a series of short and simple sketches of evangelical and Baptist doctrine is appearing in these columns. The aim of these sketches is to show not only what are the common essentials of Christian faith, but how, if men are so disposed, those Baptists who are called "conservative" and those who are called "liberal" can find in those essentials a common ground of faith and fellowship, and also how intelligent traditionalism and intelligent modernism may find a coherent unity in the same denomination and indeed, in the same mind.

Previous sketches have presented the personality of God, the deity of Christ, the law of God and the nature of sin. This one deals with the Bible.

God reveals himself in many ways: in the material world, in individual and social human experience, in the course of history, and from one person to another in terms of human language. All revelations of him are equally true, and the authority of all of them alike lies in their truth. One of his revelations is that exhibited in the Bible.

The value of the Bible as a revelation from God lies in its clear and whole meaning, and the value of its several parts lies in the help they give to the expression of that meaning. That meaning is Christ; and the Bible might be fitly, and perhaps better, called The Message of Christ. It is the unique source-book of information concerning him.

Is it inspired? It is, rather, a literature produced by persons who were inspired; that is, by persons whom the Spirit of God impelled to make known to others what they knew of God.

Is it true? Considered in its proper character as the message of Christ, it is demonstrably true. Anybody who will may test it in his own experience. Questions of its accuracy in detail in matters of science, history and other auxiliary subjects, do not affect the heart of the Bible. They may be investigated by those who have the time and means to do so. The more critically the Bible material is studied, the clearer the message of Christ in it becomes.

Is it authoritative? It's Christ message, which is in fact the real Bible, carries the authority of truth. It needs no other and could have no greater. Its authority goes far deeper than any law of external commandments, even to "the law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus." It has the authority of the law of nature, because it interprets the law of nature and it is the law of nature.

The form of words and the literary composition of the Bible are incidental. Any form of words which conveys its message is equally valid and authoritative with any other. When Christ is fully known, no matter by what agencies or methods, the purpose for which the Bible exists is achieved. Insistence on the very words in particular sentences and paragraphs may be carried to extremes and become misleading. One may so emphasize the letter of the Bible part by part as to miss the meaning of the whole.

The Bible never calls itself the word of God. From the point of view that the heart of the Bible is the message of Christ and that many of its parts hold a merely auxiliary or incidental relation to that message, it "contains" the word of God. From the point of view that all of its parts do in fact help in various ways to make the message clear and full, in a large and general sense it "is" the word of God.

Wake Up at the Switch!

AN OCCASIONAL revaluation of the constitution of the United States from a religious point of view may be useful; for a good many groups of people tend to lose sight of the sacredness of this national compact and to disregard it whenever it conflicts with their immediate interest.

The moral validity of any social compact depends on the degree in which it tends to promote the best life for all. By this test Christianity insists on judging all social institutions, proposals and practices.

By this test the Constitution of the United States, in its theory of government, in the machinery of government provided by it and in the provision it makes for its own improvement as need shall appear it possesses a high degree of moral validity.

Definitely fundamental in the constitution is the Christian theory of government, in both branches of that theory, namely: the source of all legitimate political power resides in the people collectively; and the legitimate purpose of civil government is the promotion of the highest good of all of the people. The first item of this theory is set forth in the enacting clause of the document: "We, the people, . . . ordain." The second item is exhibited in the five specific objects to be accomplished by the constitution, namely: to establish justice, to provide for the common defense, to insure domestic tranquillity, to promote the general welfare and to secure the blessings of liberty.

The machinery of government set up by the constitution is well adapted to accomplish those objects, provided it operates according to the constitution in spirit and form. A great deal of the trouble which has arisen among the American people has been due to official faithlessness; to usurpations by officers chosen under the constitution, of power not granted them by the constitution; and to official suspensions of the constitution by such officials to serve their convenience, interest or prejudice. The nation is suffering greatly from such abuses, and if they are permitted to continue and grow, the constitution as a charter of democracy will become worthless.

The constitution leaves in the hands of the people the power to amend their national compact and provides a regular and practical method for doing so. Not only so, but the course of its amendment throughout the nation's history has been directed largely to expanding the liberty and promoting the welfare of the people, in keeping with the original theory of its creation.

No national compact makes a higher moral appeal to the conscience, nor a more imperative moral demand on the loyalty, of Christian citizenship, than does the constitution of the United States. The churches ought, with intelligent insight, to urge its loyal support, and in the language of the World War Veterans, to "stand for the enforcement of the constitution as it is written."

The gravest menace to this nation at present is not Japan, foreign trade nor foreign relations. It is rather a growing tendency to nullify the constitution, either by governing agencies and business organizations, on the plea of "public necessity"; or by mobs, the Ku Klux Klan, the American Legion and certain radical groups, on the plea of "a higher law." If this tendency is not stopped, if the constitution is not made impartially operative, ruin is ahead.

Have the people, churches and all, gone to sleep at the switch?

Take the Fire-Escape

A CERTAIN church, let us say in Yap or Patagonia, has a pastor who is working for a better understanding between whites and Negroes. The women of his church, studying "Work Among the Negroes" as a missionary topic, invited a Negro woman engaged in Christian work to "make a talk in behalf of her particular work." Two other Negro women, servants of ladies present, accompanied her. They met at the home of the pastor.

At once a hue and cry went out that the pastor was "practicing social equality." His church at length felt it necessary to take the matter up. The deacons gave to the public a full statement of the affair showing that the pastor was not present, that there was no social significance in the meeting, that he is opposed to "social equality"; and as a conclusive circumstances, that "When these Negro women were through they quietly left the residence by the side door."

By the side door! Just think of the possible consequences had they, through some oversight, left by the front door!

It behooves all servants of the Lord to observe carefully the utmost finesse of social inequality; and attention is called to the proprieties of egress for Negroes, lest some reader should err therein and commit a horrifying faux pas.

The office of THE BAPTIST is somewhat inconveniently located for the observance of this requirement. It is on the fifth floor, with only one entrance. But we cannot be balked by this trifling circumstance from complying with the very letter of convention. Suppose that we give notice to any and all Negroes having occasion to leave this office, that they are expected to leave by the fire-escape!

We Admire but do not Obtrude

ADMIRATION is our tribute to the man who thinks definitely and says what he thinks. Such a one is Rev. G. M. Savage, who in one of the Southern Baptist papers speaks his mind about the Creative Week.

He denounces nobody, threatens nobody; does not call himself "fundamentalist," "modernist," "conservative," "liberal"; does not demand that anybody agree with him; but carefully states his own opinion and his reasons therefor.

His opinion is that the world was made in six ordinary days of twenty-four hours each. If somebody thinks otherwise, bring on the argument.

Now that is what we call undisguised clearness of theological statement. It makes us love Mr. Savage.

Bonds of Light and Fire

A SERIES of happy illustrations of authority in the field of religion appears in the address of Rev. B. M. Fellman delivered before the Oregon Baptist Convention and printed in this issue of THE BAPTIST.

Architecture and migration, as he truly says, are governed by fixed cosmic laws whose authority is absolute. The builder or the traveler who seeks his own way without regard to those laws invites failure and disaster.

The cases are presented for the light they throw on the subject of authority in religion, which has to do with duty and destiny. It also is governed by fixed cosmic laws whose authority is absolute. The human who in matters of duty and destiny seeks his own preference without regard to those laws invites perdition. Fancies, whims, superstitions, traditions, human prescriptions, are worth what they are worth, but they have no final authority.

God's facts are his revelation. The Bible, personal experience, race experience, Christian consciousness, the formulas and canons of the church and all the discoveries of science are facts; and so far as they present ascertained truth concerning duty and destiny, are as authoritative as the rules of architecture. In this field the Bible stands first, of course.

Thus science and religion fit each other. Indeed religion is the scientific spirit permeated with the light of God and fired with a passion of goodwill.

The Holy Scriptures as Authority

*An address delivered at the Oregon Baptist Convention at Columbia City, August 3, 1921.
The convention by unanimous vote requested its publication by the denominational press.*

By B. F. FELLMAN

IT is interesting to observe the large place which man concedes to authority in the world of human endeavor. This becomes apparent from the study of man as a builder and man as a traveler. His activity in architecture and in migration reveals a very large and constant deference to the element of authority. The need of authority in the world of destiny and the soul is likewise apparent, and I believe that God has fully provided this needed element.

Architecture is defined as the art or science of building; especially the art of building houses, churches and other structures for the purposes of civil life.

Built to Stand the Storms

The skyscrapers of the American metropolis rear their forms straight up into space from ten to forty stories, story upon story in perpendicular perfectness and precision, challenge the wild winds and the severities of the seasons and outlive the man who conceived and erected them.

The Washington Monument stretches its graceful column more than five hundred feet toward the sun, commemorating the life and exploits of that sun-crowned American, George Washington. What mind conceived its graceful lines I do not know; but it stands symmetrical and straight and strong, a stately sentinel among the centuries, let us hope, as a tribute to the Father of his country.

As I have surveyed the Iowa capitol from within and from without, and remembered that for seven years the builders mixed faithfulness with the mortar which holds its stones in graceful symmetry, I have said, "That building ought to stand a thousand years."

The underlying secret of man's accuracy in domicile and temple and capitol and monument is his discovery and recognition of the element of authority in Architecture. The square, the compass, the circle, the plumb-line attest their own absolute authority over architect and builder and laborer. These are the oracles of architecture, and the workman attests his faith in their absolute authority by bringing every brick and stone and timber into subjection to the authority of the square and compass and plumb-line and foot rule. Man's labors outlast his life because he has laid brick and stone and timber in accordance with authority.

It was an amusing reverie, the other day, to imagine some ingenious pleader for builder's liberty insist that every workman had within himself a divine mechanical consciousness; that the square, the compass the foot rule and the plumb-line were the rule of the dead past. He would square the stones henceforth by his human consciousness. His human consciousness would be quite sufficient to establish levels and rectitude and form and shape and outline. The only trouble with such a plea would be that no one would be willing to occupy his building, if by some good fortune it did not fall upon his own head long before the last stone was laid.

Next to man's acceptance of authority in the realm of architecture look into his tendency toward migration. He moves about on sea and land, in the air and under the water. He penetrates forests, spans rivers, tunnels the mountains and guides the prow of his ship unerringly toward its destination over the trackless sea. He has discovered the element of authority in the world of migration. Somewhere in the far north is the magnetic pole; and the compass guides the mariner and explorer and engineer and aviator with absolute authority of direction. And all workers in the realm of migration bow to the authority of the compass.

Would "Flock off by Himself"

I pause long enough to hear a reverie here also against the principle of authority in this field of human activity. Our objector insists that every man has a migratory consciousness; that the compass, like the square and plumb-line, are but the rule of past centuries over a wonderful and progressive present age. But about the time he has succeeded in tearing the compass from our vessel the passengers may be pardoned for jumping into the sea rather than continue the voyage. And when he has had his way, we will cease to navigate the air and to sail the sea, and the explorer and pioneer will go forth no more. Authority in migration is the "Shibboleth" of safety.

We come now to that great word, destiny; relating it to the present life and the life to come, to questions of conduct and creed, to relations human and divine. We have seen that in the great realms of architecture and migration God has given distinct voices of authority, so that we may build safely and move about on the earth without losing our way. Is it thinkable that in the great realm of destiny and morals God has left us without square and compass and plumb-line, that we may accurately know and trustfully believe? Is it possible that in the great realm of human destiny we must subscribe to that word of despair, "Every man for himself?" Only the consciousness of youth can be flattered by the claim that his human consciousness is the plumb-line and compass in the highest realm, though manifestly untrustworthy in every material realm.

It is Easier to Believe

For myself, I find it much easier to believe that God has given us in the Holy Scriptures the infallible guide in matters of destiny and the soul. I prefer the authority of the inspired word to the discordant voices of men. The word of God claims to be the critic of the thoughts and intents of the heart. When man reverses the order and makes himself the critic of the inspired word, he soon loses himself in the mazes of his own speculation. It is not to be wondered that the reversal of the divine order and the rejection of God's trustworthy standard in the realm of morals and destiny has involved to many the loss of the supernatural and miraculous element from the Scripture. The virgin birth, the vicarious atonement, the deity of our Lord, his bodily resurrection, his ascension and return often are eliminated, if man's human consciousness be the arbiter. The Jesus who remains after such emasculation is not the Lord Jesus Christ of old testament prophecy and of new testament manifestation. Again the cry will be raised in the earth, "They have taken away my Lord and I know not where they have laid him."

That we may trustfully resort to the Scriptures as absolute authority in matters of destiny and the soul, is apparent to me for three reasons. First the claim of the Holy Scriptures themselves. Everywhere in both old and new testament is exemplified the precept, "Wherewithal may a young man cleanse his way? By taking heed thereto according to Thy word." "Forever, O Lord, Thy word is settled in heaven." The Scriptures bear their own witness. To disregard the internal evidence of the inspiration of the Bible is like refusing a hearing to the accused in his own defence. Several years ago I listened to a paper by a prominent Omaha minister in our union meeting. It consisted largely of his accusations against the Holy Scriptures. I protested that the paper was not judicial in tone because while accusing the Bible in many ways, the writer did not permit the accused a single verse in favor of its authenticity. He ignored altogether the abundant internal evidence of inspiration. To such men the Master said, "Ye do err, not knowing the Scriptures."

Man's first difficulty is not with the understanding but with the will. His outstanding difficulty is not mental but moral. "Ye will not come unto me that ye might have life," was the accusation of our Lord. The difficulty of difficulties with the Scribes and Pharisees was moral. Had they approached him who spoke from heaven in the spirit of humble faith as did the youthful Samuel when he prayed, "Speak, Lord, for Thy servant heareth," they would not have remained strangers. It seems to me, therefore, that a man must first humble himself to the spoken word and to the written word if he would hear the voice of God. We must approach the written word in the spirit of faith, believing that God has spoken even as he declares, and that holy men spake as they were moved by the Holy Spirit. Any other attitude than this will leave its mysteries unrevealed.

The Holy Spirit has anticipated the modern objections to inspiration. The Lord Jesus Christ declared, "Moses wrote of me." In the temptation he quoted from the book of Deuteronomy, thus giving his approval to this Scripture. Christ himself speaks of the flood and of Sodom and Gomorrah. He declared that the sign of Jonah was the type of his own entombment in the earth. He accepted the book of Isaiah. Isaiah saw his glory and spoke of Christ.

Our Infallible Guide

That the Bible may be safely trusted as the infallible guide in matters of destiny and the soul may be proved further by the testimony of human experience. For more than eighteen hundred years believing men have so regarded the word. They have sought to regulate their lives by its precepts. They have adored its Christ as very God. They have believed its miracles, and have discovered the greatest miracle in their own transformation from sin and death to life and holiness by the regenerating work of the Holy Spirit. In the faith of its promises they have faced temptation; in the belief of its precepts they have relinquished present good for eternal profit. Quoting its sacred sentences, they have walked into the flames of martyrdom. Without waiting till they had more fully learned the language of a heathen people, they have, with burning zeal, stammered out John 3:16 in vernacular of a strange people. Every home mission church established from the Atlantic to the Pacific in the last eighty years was the fruitage of faithful men who entered these new communities with the open Bible in their hand upon their lips the constant appeal, "Thus saith the Lord."

I, for one, am not afraid of any confession of faith that proceeds upon the basis of integrity of scripture. The latter is the real storm center. It is a question of authority or no authority, as it seems to me. It is either the supernatural or no supernatural. It is either an exclusive inspiration or a continuous inspiration of other writings. It is either a divine intervention in the affairs of men or the inexorable reign of law in the world. It is either man a special creation of God or a monkey ancestry. It is either the evangelization of the world, or the reconstruction of the world order. All of these alternatives turn upon the question of the authority of the Scriptures.

For myself I covet, first, a larger place in my own life and thought and expression for the holy, inerrant word of God. Second, a more constant and trustful proclamation of the same in the power of the Holy Spirit, assured that the word concerning the Lord Jesus Christ is the only gospel, and that it centers about his atoning and vicarious death and bodily resurrection, ascension and return. Third, the support of such men, agencies and institutions as stand clearly and unequivocally for the authority of the inerrant Scriptures.

From the hungry moths protected,
Have you put away a coat or a shawl?
Because of style,—rejected?*

*Are there any caps or woollen scarfs,
Any gloves or any shoes,
Any handkerchiefs or mittens warm,
You do not care to use?*

*Have you an over-coat or suit
You don't need any more?
Have you saved Father's cast-off shirts,
And the woollen socks he wore?*

*Sister's petticoat of wool, some towels,
Lots of wash cloths, and some soap,
Dozens of safety pins, some thread,
You have them all I hope!*

*Send baby clothes for orphan child,
And coats for little boys,
Comforts and quilts and blankets and sheets,
And useful durable toys.*

*We're to fill a ship in fellowship,
And send it across the sea.
To European sufferers,
Who need things more than we.*

A FREQUENT SIGHT ON THE ROADS IN POLAND, WHEN PEASANT REFUGEES TRY TO REACH THEIR FORMER HOMES

A GROUP OF POLISH CHILDREN GRATEFUL TO AMERICA FOR THEIR DAILY BOWL OF SOUP

The Travail of Poland

By K. W. STRZELEC

Director of the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society's Relief Work in Poland.

IF you have a map of Poland accessible, you will be able to note the various places which I have recently visited. For more than three weeks I have been traveling in the region around Rowno, Dubin and Ostrog. There are a great many unorganized Baptists in this part of Poland, and when they have been organized into churches we shall have some strong Baptist churches, all the members of which will be of the Slavic race, Poles, Russians, Bohemians and Ukrainians. On a recent Sunday I was in Rowno, where I addressed a congregation of more than 1,200, who had met in a rented hall. On this journey I had witnessed the baptism of 113 converts. Traveling is pleasant, because of the beautiful weather, but uncomfortable because of the means of transportation. Nine days have I spent in a heavy farm wagon, and in the evenings have been given to preaching.

The brethren who are preaching the gospel here are in dire need, and yet I never saw happier persons than these who are poor in earthly goods. Their country has suffered grievously because of the war. First the Germans have passed through the land, then the Bolsheviks have come, and more recently the Polish army has crossed the line, driving back the Bolsheviks. The poor farmers are not sure what may happen from day to day, and many of them keep their clothes and articles of value hidden in the ground. Only recently some peasants who were driven from their homes in 1915, more than six years ago, returned to their farms and found them in the possession of others. In many cases fields today are nothing more than vast districts covered with weeds and dense bushes. The crops this year are fairly good, but in eastern Galicia, hail and flood have destroyed nearly everything.

The situation is all the more acute because of the depreciation in money and the rapidly mounting prices. How prices are going up may be easily seen from a comparison with prices a year ago. In May 1920 the street car fare was three marks, whereas today it is twenty marks. A year ago a good pair of shoes could be purchased for 1,500 marks, while at the present time a pair of shoes costs 6,000 marks. Last year a suit of clothes of only average quality cost 4,000 marks, and this year 40,000 marks have to be paid for such a suit. A year ago the American dollar could be exchanged for 200 Polish marks, while in July 1921 the exchange varied from 1,800 to 2,000 marks. It is no exaggeration to say that the people are simply overwhelmed when they try to think about the future. Nevertheless, there is a great opportunity for evangelistic work in addition to our relief activities. During the last few months, I have visited fifty-nine different towns and villages, and have seen the baptism of 195 Russian and Polish converts. Seven of these baptisms took place in the open air. I have been assured by our Polish brethren that there are more than 200 places where gospel meetings are held, although in most cases they are in private houses. The same brethren have also reported that approximately 1,000 persons have been baptized since the beginning of the year.

In our relief work I think that the assistance we provide to the university students is the most promising for the country and for the spiritual life of the nation. During the months of March, April and May, ninety-two students received aid. We have on file more than 200 applications which we are unable to consider because we have not the means for helping more. We have therefore made a very careful selection after investigating the needs of every applicant. Many of these young men have mothers, who, because of the death of the fathers, are in such conditions of poverty that we have been obliged to help them also.

The condition of the children here is most pitiable. With the relief money sent from American Baptists during the year we were able to buy 250 cases of condensed milk. We found that when distributing relief money among poor parents, the little children usually do not receive milk, because the money is generally spent for black bread and potatoes. We have therefore distributed tickets, with the date on each ticket, and on the date indicated the children came and each received a can of milk. This has proved to be a very satisfactory method and has given these little ones the proper nourishment.

During the second quarter I was able to distribute for relief purposes a total of nearly 6,000,000 Polish marks. This sounds like a large amount, but the lower rate of exchange should be taken into consideration. This was distributed as follows:

Among 2,059 persons, including Poles, Russians and Bohemians, 1,930,026 marks; among 986 members of Baptist churches, 1,326,600 marks; among twenty-eight churches and missions, 1,400,000 marks; purchase of condensed milk for children, 1,025,500 marks; grants to ninety-two university students 418,760 marks; distributed among 102 Russian and Ukrainian war prisoners, 119,300 marks; total 6,220,186 marks.

Of the needy persons to whom this relief was distributed, 422 are widows and 519 are orphans. In both cases about half of them came from Baptist churches. Last year we had 400 unemployed families on our list and for the coming year we have already compiled a list of 2,499 who will need our assistance. We already know of 608 widows and 742 orphans who will be dependent upon us for help. Throughout Poland there are also a great many Russians living in barracks, all of whom have left their country because of its terrible distress. They are all dependent on charity. In Kaliz alone there are more than 8,000 of such sufferers, among whom are about two hundred children. We must remember them with our gifts for in all probability they will not be able to return to their homes next year and our help will be needed.

I am coming to think that our relief work in the future should be directed more to places where there is promise of religious revivals and where the people may gather around simple yet consecrated gospel preachers. Of course the securing of meeting places will be the chief problem. Our denomination is the only one able to represent the life of our Master among these people. It seems to me that the world war has by Mr. Strzelec serves to emphasize again the importance of the great relief program which the two foreign mission societies have adopted for the coming fall. A huge ship is to be filled with clothing, shoes, soap and other supplies and sent to Europe in November for distribution among the suffering people in Czechoslovakia, Poland and Latvia. "Fill a Ship in Fellowship" is the slogan, and Baptist churches in all made some of the more civilized nations question the value of religion, but the people of Eastern Europe, especially the Slavic race, have come to the point where, if we take advantage of the opportunity, they will make a greater movement toward Christianity than was done during the Reformation.

(Editorial Note:—The above report parts of the country are pledging their enthusiastic co-operation. It will doubtless be one of the most constructive and practical measures of relief ever undertaken by Northern Baptists. Announcement will appear in an early issue of "THE BAPTIST" concerning definite instructions as to where and when to make shipments.)

Vacation School in Porto Rico

From far Porto Rico comes an interesting account of the reaction between church and vacation school. For a number of years the San Juan church has had weekly classes doing a little of the same work that is done in the summer schools. When the announcement was made that there would be a vacation school, the parents were much interested and agreed to co-operate. The church, although poor and raising funds for the equipment of a new building, gladly assumed 25 per cent of the expenses of the school, while the Woman's American Baptist Home Mission Society assumed 25 per cent and the Publication Society 50 per cent. The fine group of teachers were all consecrated Christians and anxious that the children hear about the Lord Jesus as well as the handwork. All the available space was filled and those who applied later, almost daily, were obliged to go on a waiting list. One result was that the children attending behaved well, knowing that their places would quickly be filled from the waiting list if they were found troublesome. Another result was that for the first time the Sunday-school attendance did not drop 50 per cent in the summer but on the contrary increased. A number of new families also were brought in touch with the church, and weekly meetings for the children were continued during the year with encouraging results.

Changing Conditions Among the Women in Japan

In Japan, 2,500,000 girls have suddenly entered business and industrial life. No school gives them a Christian training. Our Baptist mission is the first to make the attempt.

By NELLIE G. PRESCOTT

IN Tokyo alone there are 5,000 young women employed in the Department of Commerce as clerks and book-keepers. New girls are being engaged at the rate of 2,000 a year. Young women are being substituted for men in the Telephone Exchange and Post Office Department. In almost every commercial institution in Tokyo young women are seeking positions.

Well, you say, what is surprising in these facts? It is the same in America and no one becomes disturbed over the situation.

In Japan the situation is different. The nation is in the midst of a social revolution in which the girls are taking a large share. From time immemorial, girls have been sheltered in their homes—as children, married early and completely under the control of their husbands as wives and mothers. They have been secluded, dependent, unfitted to earn their own living and have entered not at all into the life of the commercial, industrial, civic and social world. Nor have they sought or desired this larger life.

Now, under the present social conditions, there is a mad rush of Japan's young womanhood into the commercial and industrial world.

Quoting from a recent article by Dr. William Axling of Tokyo: "Of the almost numberless factories in the suburb of Oji I had investigations carried out in twelve different factories, I found that in these twelve industrial plants there is a total of 5,672 workers. Of these 3,185 are young women.

"In addition I found that in the government arsenal at Oji there are 5,000 women employed. In the government printing establishment there are 2,000 women. The Toyo Spring Factory at Oji is employing 2,600 women, most of whom are merely girls. This one company has taken over 1,000 new girls in the last six months. Throughout Japan there are 1,250,000 female factory workers; of this host 300,000 are under twenty years of age.

"The alarming increase of female operatives in the factories is only one phase of this question. The tremendous increase of young women who are being forced out of the sheltered life of the home and thrust into the soulless competitive life of modern commercialism demands our careful consideration. In Tokyo alone there are 5,000 young women employed in the Department of Commerce as clerks and book-keepers. Moreover they are taking in new girls at the rate of 2,000 a year. The Telephone Exchange and Post Office department are gradually substituting women for men on their forces. In addition thousands of girls are taking positions in commercial institutions. We cannot stem this stream. What we must do is to cleanse it and direct it along right channels. On every hand the home is being bled. In Tokyo there are 3,000 Red Cross nurses. Last year there were 2,000 applicants in Tokyo to be accepted as nurses. Thirteen only were entered. The majority of the rest went into commercial positions. In the whole nation there are 18,754 nurses. To each graduate nurse there is an average of five "minarai" (nurses in training). Thus in the nursing profession there are 112,524 enrolled." In 1915 Dr. Axling finds that there were 500,000 girls in business and commercial positions in Japan; in 1917, the number had increased to 800,000 and in 1920, there were 1,200,000 young women thus occupied.

These girls who are pushing their way unto the business world are poorly prepared in every respect to meet the conditions they find. Those who choose the work of stenographers and secretaries find in Tokyo four schools that offer training in commercial subjects. Two of these give only a six-months course in typewriting and a third, a two-year course. These three schools accept girls of little education and are not recognized by the government. The fourth school has a Japanese woman of education for its principal and government recognition. To girls who are graduates of lower primary schools, a four year course is offered. There is also a graduate course of two years, a special course of one year to graduates of higher primary and an evening school. Before the war, the students numbered 250. In 1920, the enrollment had increased to 730. So crowded was this school and so many were being turned away that the principal, looking for an opportunity to expand, inquired of the president of the Baptist Theological Seminary across the street, if the girls might not use some of the empty classrooms there!

This is a non-Christian school—the only one which in any degree offers adequate preparation or attempts to safe guard the young girls in this large city, who by the thousands are seeking training. No Christian body in Japan has undertaken to do anything for this great army of girls until the Baptist Mission began to see the possibilities for a far-reaching service in giving a Christian training and home to these girls and through them raising the standards that surround them in the business offices of Tokyo. For several years, the students in our mission of Japan's changing social order, have been thoughtfully studying the question and looking forward to a time when the Women's Society might undertake to blaze the trail of the pioneer in this line of modern Christian service.

Plans are now maturing and it is expected that the school will be opened in April, 1922, at 10 Fukuro Machi, Suruga Dai, where for forty-six years the Sarah Curtis Girls' school has been maintained. The present buildings are now old and out of repair and the site, while very valuable and advantageously located is too small to permit of the growth of a school on the regular academic lines. It is possible, however, on this same site to open a commercial school for girls which shall maintain the same high Christian ideals and standards as have always characterized the present school and offer to Japanese girls a home life and an influence that shall be permanently built into their character. Suruga Dai, a hill in the centre of Tokyo, in the district where there is a larger number of students than in any other part of the city, has given its name to our school. All of the dormitories and other buildings are to be taken down with the exception of the residence, which is to be moved to another part of the compound and completely remodelled and repaired. With the lumber of the old buildings, new dormitories are to be erected. These are to be three stories in height, of a semi-Japanese style and include the dining hall. Covering the former site of the residence and extending beyond it toward the front is to be the new school building. There are plans also for a building to serve as a gymnasium and chapel but these must probably wait until the school is established. To make the changes indicated and to erect and equip enough of the buildings so the school can be opened will mean at least $25,000 this year and a similar amount next year. This would make possible the moving and repair of the residence, the erection of a portion of the dormitory and one wing of the main school building. $50,000 in two years is not a large sum to invest in an attempt to bring Jesus Christ and his purifying principles into the life of the every-day girls of Japan. Just at this time when there is so much newspaper discussion to the effect that the relations between Japan and America may become strained, the opening of this school affords an opportunity to every business man and woman in our Baptist constituency to show to a nation which does not yet take Him as the guild of daily life, what the principles of Jesus Christ can accomplish in right living and conduct.

Already the plans for the school have met with the cordial approval of the educational department of the Japanese government, which has expressed itself as not only sympathetic but also as gravely concerned over this situation which has developed among the young women of the nation. The mission has been very fortunate in securing as the first principal of the school, a former teacher in the Commercial School of Yokohama, a business man of high character and a sincere Christian gentleman. The connection of this well-known Japanese educator with the school will from the very beginning give it standing and attract the favorable interest of Japanese men and women. It is hoped that when the school is once started, some of its support will be provided locally by public-spirited and Christian Japanese who realize its worth, not simply in supplying well trained, efficient stenographers and book-keepers but also in its high Christian standard firmly implanted in the hearts of its graduates.

William K. Vories in a recent number of the Japan Evangelist writes: "At the close of a survey of the history of Christianity a recent lecturer remarked that Christianity must solve the present social problems or go down. At the close of the late world war and at the dawn of a new era mankind in general is taking the same view. We in Japan face this practical and fundamental question which dates from before the war but cries out with renewed insistence now—this question of uplifting womanhood to the same standards of intellect and responsibility as men, and the twin problems of uplifting men to the same moral standard as women. The two stand or fall together."

Impressions of a New Missionary

THE clear-cut impressions upon a young and sensitive mind made by the first contact with a strange country are always interesting. The following extracts are from the letters of Miss Ruth Ward, newly appointed to Sendai, Japan.

A Baptism

"One perfect autumn day we all went down to the shore of the river—girls, teachers, Mr. and Mrs. Ross, and our family of four. Seven girls were to be baptised. As the sun was just going down, Mr. Ross, robed in black, and each girl in dark kimono, stepped out into the water. I could think of nothing but the Jordan River, and tears blinded my eyes. As the first girl said "I do," the sun threw bright rays on the little scene and the singing of 'Just as I Am' seemed like angels' rejoicing. I wanted to get a picture, but could not, but it is fast in my memory. That was the first baptism I had seen in Japan."

Washington's Birthday

"Mr. and Mrs. Ross invited us to their house for supper, but we forgot the date until after arriving. Then we found the table all decorated appropriately. A tiny plum tree took the place of the cherry tree, which might have graced the table a little later in the season. Uncle Sam place cards and George Washington with his hatchet standing near the center piece recalled to us the day. And what do you think we were served? Delicious baked beans and a Waldorf salad, with ice cream and wafers to top it off! It is difficult, in Japan, to have baked beans that taste like home, so they were a treat."

"After their early supper the girls have a few minutes of Scripture-reading, singing and prayer. Then Sunday evening a longer service is held. Will you go with me? We go down the hall of the foreign house and through a long corridor in the dormitory. The sound of the girls' voices reaches us, as they sing the opening hymn. It is very soft and pretty. We open a sliding door made of paper, kneel down on the tatami (heavy matting padded beneath), and lay our hymn books and Bible on the table (a foot high) in front of us. Finding the place, we sing with them (if we can read Japanese).

A Dormitory Prayer Meeting

Opposite us, at the other side of the room, kneel, or sit the girls in rows, and one row at our left. On our right is the organ, and the leader sits near there, at a table. She is one of the sweetest girls in the fourth year class; her smile is just like sunshine, as you would think, I know, if you could see her. She is reading the Scripture now, and I can find the place for you. It is in Matthew. Now we sing another hymn and after that Nakanome San asks for short prayers; there is another hymn and a few more prayers—following Nakanome San's little talk. We all bow and rise to leave the room. This dear old lady on our right is the matron. She was the first Christian baptised in Sendai, and we call her Uchida Sensei. On our left are two of the young women teachers who live in the dormitory, and fine Christian characters they are."

MY PRAYER

*Not in the silence only,
Nor in the solitude,
Let my thoughts rise to Thee in praise,
My God, so great, so good.*

*But mid the din and noise
Of city conflict rude;
In crowded street where daily pours
The hurrying multitude.*

*Not on the Sabbath only,
In the dear house of prayer,
Where earthly din cannot intrude,
And only God is there.*

*But all week long, in spite
Of care and vanity;
That thus, even in the crowd, I may Be still alone with Thee.*

—HORATIUS BONAR.

Gains and Goals in All the States

What the Sunday School and Young People's Organizations have done are doing and are going to do. Each state tells its own story—look up yours.

NORTH CALIFORNIA WILL WORK ASSOCIATIONS

According to last reports, there are 15,290 pupils enrolled in Sunday schools in Northern California, and 5,169 in young people's societies. Plans are to get the fall work started in the Sunday schools on Rally Day. The associations begin to meet in September, and working through these gatherings it is hoped to organize teacher training classes in every Sunday school, with the attainment of the standard as the objective for next spring. It is also hoped that institutes may be held wherever local conditions permit.

An account of the summer assembly held at Asilomar August 15 to 25 will be sent to the Baptist in the near future. This will contain the objectives of the young people.

EAST WASHINGTON AND NORTHERN IDAHO

Sunday schools enrolled 6407 pupils and the program for 1921-22 calls for 7500. The number of schools is 73. Our B. Y. P. U. organization includes 62 societies, with 1399 members and a goal for 1922 of 2000. We have four church vacation schools and expect to have eight next year. T. H. HAGEN, Director.

WESTERN WASHINGTON

Had 109 schools with an enrollment of 12,111, and has set its goal at 14,000. B. Y. P. U. societies to the number of eighty-eight enrolled 3295, and the goal for 1922 is 4000. Church vacation schools eight this year; sixteen next year.

The program for 1921 includes an increased enrollment and twenty-five standard Sunday schools; also twenty-five standard B. Y. P. U. and the carrying out of the Bible class campaign October to December. T. H. HAGEN, Director.

NEW HAMPSHIRE UNITED CONVENTION

For the United Baptist Convention of New Hampshire: scholars in Sunday school, 10,000; members in young people's societies, 1,550

The goal for our Sunday schools is a 10 per cent increase by Jan. 1, 1922.—D. S. JENKS.

NEW YORK HAS BIG FIGURES

New York State with its 944 Baptist churches reports 803 Baptist Sunday schools, with 125,089 enrolled scholars. There are 480 young people's societies, with a membership of 16,944 reported. These figures do not include W. W. G. and other groups equally important. Our goals are in the educational field for the coming year. At the summer assembly, with 250 delegates, 111 assembly certificates were won for educational work done. Leadership training will receive our maximum emphasis, with minor emphasis on the promotion of wholesome recreation to off-set the draw of unwholesome amusements.—CHAS. W. BRIGGS, Director.

IOWA PROMISES MORE GOAL

Iowa has twenty-five junior unions, 450 members; five intermediates, 100 members; 175 senior unions, 3,000 members; total membership, 3,550.

Our Baptist Life Service League now has 150 members, twenty-six of whom responded for the first time at our Iowa Baptist assembly, July 31, 1921.

Goals: 1,000 new members of the Tither's League; 1,000 for the quiet time for the Bible and prayer daily. A great rally at the assembly in 1922. Other goals to be added.

IDAHO SUNDAY SCHOOLS AND B. Y. P. U.'s

Latest reports from Idaho Baptist churches show an enrollment of 5,656 in Sunday schools and 1,893 in B. Y. P. U.'s.

Goals set for our Sunday schools for the coming year include: An increase of at least 50 percent in enrollment; systematic study of missions; organization of teacher training classes in all Sunday schools.

Our B. Y. P. U. goals include: A 50 per cent increase in membership; organization of a Tithers' League, a Life Service League and a Quiet Half Hour League in all societies.

All Sunday schools and B. Y. P. U.'s will be urged to adopt the regulation standard of excellence as a goal of endeavor.

The outlook for the coming year is most encouraging and we believe that a great company of the young people of our constituency will be won to Christ through the activities of our Sunday schools and B. Y. P. U.'s.—W. A. SHANKS, Director.

MONTANA WILL TRY GOSPEL TEAMS

We have forty-nine Sunday schools in Montana with a total membership of 4,469. We had 257 baptisms from the Sunday schools last year and hope to have at least 500 this year. New schools are to be established in neglected communities. Truly the field is white unto the harvest but the laborers are few.

Our young people's societies have grown this last year; we now have twenty-five societies with 656 members. The young people are entering heartily into the plans for our first Montana Baptist summer assembly to be held July 6-16, 1922 at "The Tent City," Helena, Mont.

In co-operation with our department of evangelism we hope to organize gospel teams to go out into neglected fields to conduct Sunday schools and hold gospel meetings.—CHAS. H. BURRELL, Director.

SOUTH DAKOTA HAS NEW DIRECTOR

The number of pupils in the Sunday schools of our denomination in this state is 7,554; with officers and teachers numbering 857; making the total membership in our schools 8,401.

We have quite a large number of B. Y. P. U. organizations doing splendid work in the state.

Our newly-elected director of religious education, Rev. W. H. Bayles, will be on the field soon. We are anticipating rapid development in these particular lines of our work.—S. B. SHAW, Director of Promotion.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA HAS AMBITIONS

Sunday school enrollment for year, ending April 30, 1921, 26,749; average attendance, 15,467; number of baptisms from schools, 1,343. Young people's societies, enrolled: senior, 2,996; intermediate, 710; juniors, 927. World Wide Guild Members, 930; Crusaders, 860; Heralds, 617; Jewels, 521. Volunteers for The Ministry, 27; for Missionary Work, 134.

Numbers of college students in our constituency, 512.

We are starting out with goals as follows: double adult class membership, double the number of students for ministry, and volunteers, double the number of teacher training classes and pupils, and treble the number of "Schools of Mission," and the enrollment.—J. D. SPRINGSTON, Director.

NEBRASKA EXPECTS GREAT GAINS.

Since the latest figures from the churches will not be in before the last of September it is impossible to give Sunday school and young people's statistics for this year in Nebraska. The figures given are for last year. There is every indication that there will be a marked increase in every department when the figures are all in. Last year 145 Sunday schools reported 13,439 pupils. We have set for ourselves the task of fifty new schools, 2000 new pupils, fifty standard schools and teacher training class with its workers' library in every school. Last year there 3,401 young people in the various organizations of the state. We have set for ourselves the task of a young people's society in every Baptist church, a 25 per cent increase in membership, 1,500 members of the Quiet Half-hour League, 1,000 members taking the B. T. L. course and 1,000 members of the Life Service League. This year the young people's societies have taken on new life in every association. The outlook for 1921-1922 is most hopeful.—J. D. COLLINS, Director.

MASSACHUSETTS OUT FOR 5000

As far as I can determine the number of pupils in our Baptist Sunday schools in Massachusetts, including the teachers, 9000; young people in the young people's societies 12,000. Our goals for the state work will include fifty daily vacation Bible schools; three hundred in the assembly next year; the development of a thorough-going program of missionary education in each church; the holding of at least a dozen community institutes; and fifteen individual church institutes; the development of the Boston Baptist Workers Union, from sixty-five churches with an enrollment of 200 to 100 churches with an enrollment of 500. We shall hope also to create a new enthusiasm which will bring in hundreds of new members to our Sunday-schools, concentrating upon the young peoples' section and the adult section. Our goal will be 5000 new members this year.

F. F. PETERSON, Director.

KANSAS NOTES REASONABLE ADVANCE

Enrolled in white American Baptist churches 38,590; average attendance, 22,259; home departments in seventy-seven schools, with a membership of 1654; cradle rolls in 102 schools, with a membership of 4382; organized classes in eighty-six schools with 594 classes. Forty-seven standard schools, 29 star and 21 striving in a total of 192, 1460 baptisms in 1920-1921, with eight-seven schools reporting 1197; eighty-one schools using Keystone Graded Lessons. Fifty-six schools doing teacher training work.

Senior B. Y. P. U.: 6010 members in 1921; seventeen standard societies, sixteen star and nineteen striving. Intermediates: 593 members; four standard with one striving. Junior: 1666 members; 4 standard, 2 star and 4 striving.

The goal for the coming year is a reasonable advance along all lines.

J. M. GURLEY, Director.

CONNECTICUT GIVES LAST YEAR'S FIGURES IN PART

Number of scholars in Sunday schools, 12,773—in 109 schools reporting. (There are about 125 or 130 active schools in Connecticut.)

Young people, 1928, in fifty-two churches reporting. (This is last year's report. No report of young people's societies has come to the office for this year.)—By Margaret E. Graves.

GOALS FOR WEST VIRGINIA

1921-22

SUNDAY SCHOOLS

Following are the goals suggested for our West Virginia Baptist Sunday schools for the year ending May 1st, 1922. Shall we realize them? Will your school co-operate to this end?

I.

Every church in the state with at least one school.

II.

One hundred churches, with one or more mission schools.

III.

Twenty-five churches, with daily vacation schools at least four weeks during the summer. (To be realized by Sept. 1st, 1921.)

IV.

Every church school evergreen.

V.

Every church school properly related to its church.

VI.

Every Sunday-school represented in the associational Sunday-school convention, by delegate, report and offering. (Five cents per member requested.)

VII.

A 25 per cent increase in schools using graded lessons in one or more departments.

VIII.

Evangelism stressed in every school, and evidenced by an increased number of conversions reported.

IX.

At least 100 training classes enrolled in the Baptist state office by May 1. These to continue at least ten weeks, and take an examination.

X.

At least fifty standard schools to be reported by May 1. Last year we reported thirty-six.

XI.

A 25 per cent increase in Sunday-school attendance for the state, over that of the preceding year.

XII.

Twenty-five per cent of our schools represented in assembly and encampment, and working for the certificate offered.

S. S. Enrollment (reporting schools) 36,378.

B. Y. P. U.

We suggest the following goals to be striven for by our churches on behalf of our Baptist Young People of West Virginia. To be checked up and reported by the time of our next assembly session.

I.

An effort to secure the organization of a young people's union in every Baptist church in West Virginia, not already so organized, for purposes of instruction, training and service.

II.

Each union to be urged to provide adequate courses of instruction in Baptist doctrines, history, and denominational undertakings; also in stewardship and church efficiency.

III.

Every young people's organization to be properly related to its church, and loyal to all its activities.

IV.

An associational Baptist young people's union in every associational district, and meeting with the Sunday-school convention annually.

V.

Two thousand daily Bible readers, and one thousand titheers pledged by May 1, (over 1000 Bible Readers and over 600 Titheers already pledged.) These enrolled in the director's office.

VI.

Loyalty to assembly and encampment ideals, expressed by those enrolled, in faithful attendance upon lectures, note taking, and certificates received; and in a sympathetic co-operation with the management in the social, devotional and recreational activities.

We do not know the enrollment in B. Y. P. U.'s. Probably 3000.

A. B. WITHERS, Director.

NORTH DAKOTA

We have 6,202 pupils in 96 Sunday schools. 3,942 are members of the 62 German Baptist schools. The five Norwegian schools have an enrollment of 486. The eight Swedish schools report an enrollment of 323. Our two Russian Sunday schools have a membership of 95. One Colored school reports 60 scholars. Six Home Departments report 104 members. Eight Cradle Rolls have a membership of 107.

The following goals were unanimously adopted by a recent State Convention: 25 per cent increase in membership; 300 baptisms; 50 dedications for life service; 20 teacher training classes; 75 correspondence students in teacher training; 50 organized adult classes; 20 Cradle Rolls; 50 Home Departments; two standard schools; ten Star schools; 25 striving schools; ten workers' libraries.

Eighteen of the 39 young people's societies report an increase of 103 members. One new society was organized. Three societies were reorganized. There are four Junior and one Intermediate Societies.

At their recent State Meeting, the young people enthusiastically adopted the following goals: 25 per cent increase in membership; 25 special study classes; 200 decisions for Christ; 50 life service volunteers; 200 signatures to the titheing pledges; 200 signatures to the Quiet Half Hour pledges; 25 enrolled in the Baptist Trained Leaders' Course; ten workers' libraries; one rally in each district; 20 delegates to the next B. Y. P. U. of A. Convention.

Forty seven young people dedicated their lives for special service last year.

ILLINOIS STANDS UP TO BE COUNTED

Our work is to give vision and training to the leaders in religious education in 375 churches. Besides the 350 school superintendents and the 160 society presidents listed on our files, we are in direct touch with hundreds of other leaders. We reach them directly through the personal visit, local church institute, associational institutes, C. V. schools, intensive training schools and the summer assembly. Leaving largely to the pastor the work of inspiring to service, we are prepared to help them to secure that training that makes for effective work and to assist in directing willing workers to needy tasks. We are as ready to assist a young disciple to train for the secretaryship of a society as to direct high school students to volunteer their entire life to specific Christian service. We are more interested in giving the training than in promoting certain church organizations. We will do laboratorial work along any line or religious education, and will give personal attention to local church leaders who show marked ability along specific lines of Christian endeavor. Our aim is the salvation of the individual, as early in life as possible, followed by the fullest and completest training in religious education that is possible.

WM. T. THAYER, Director.

COLORADO SURPASSES HER OWN EXPECTATIONS

Colorado had ten church vacation schools this summer, which is two and a half times as many as last year. Every school was successful beyond expectation. They were located as follows: Ault (a village of 500), Greeley (Seat of Normal College), Longmont, Denver—Beth Eden, Denver—Mexican Mission, Lafayette (small mining town), Sterling, Golden, Englewood (Suburb of Denver), Grand Junction (the largest school with more than 300 enrolled).

Young People's societies reported: Junior, thirty-four, with 755 members; intermediate, twelve, with 242 members; senior, fifty-four, with 1926 members; total membership, 2923. Sunday schools reported, 102; 12,828 pupils; 1439 teachers.

Goals included an adult Bible class campaign, the development of young people's work with young people's enthusiasm; Sunday school slogans: Fall, "Every member of church an attender of Sunday school;" Winter, "Every member of Sunday school bring one;" Spring, "Every member of Sunday school over 12 years a member of church."

L. I. HANSEN, Director.

OHIO HAS SIXTEEN MAIN GOALS.

Ohio has 64,679 enrolled in white Baptist Sunday schools. Baptism of pupils reported last, 1,269. Missionary instruction has a prominent place in our schools, and the mission contributions reported by schools was a little over $22,000.00.

A number of very successful church vacation schools have been held. Our assembly was a great success. Our Committee on religious and missionary education, Rev. C. W. Atwater, chairman, has set a high standard with definite goals for each division of the church school. Our Ohio B. Y. P. U. is doing fine work and heartily co-operates with our committee. Some of our main goals are as follows:

1. A committee on religious and missionary education in every association.
2. A religious and missionary education institute in every association.
3. Two or more large city or district institutes.
4. Twenty church schools of missions.
5. The correlated program of missionary education used in 200 churches.
6. Men's, women's and young people's mission study classes promoted.

7. One hundred standard schools.
8. Two hundred schools with standard children's, young people's and adult divisions.
9. Teacher-training classes in one hundred schools.
10. Adult organized Bible class campaign to be promoted.
11. Promotion of brotherhood and women's mission circle work.
12. Fifty standard young people's societies.
13. World-wide Guild chapters and membership increased.
14. Junior society and division work promoted.
15. Intermediate division work fostered.
16. Soul-winning campaigns in schools and societies.—W. A. HOLMES, Director.

NEW JERSEY FACTS AND OBJECTIVES

New Jersey has 267 Sunday schools, with 41,407 pupils, 5,058 teachers and officers and a total enrollment of 46,465; 169 senior young people's societies, with 5,930 members, and 31 junior societies, with 932 members.

Objectives for the present year include a 10 per cent increase Sunday-school attendance; graded missionary studies in every Sunday school; a 25 per cent increase in the enrollment of teacher training classes; fifty church schools of missions; fifty vacation Bible schools; correlation and co-ordination of young people's activities in the local churches; seventy-five young people's societies or periods of week-day religious instruction for pupils of Junior age; enlistment of 25 per cent of our churches not yet represented at our summer assembly.—OTTO F. LAEGELE, Supt. S. S. and Y. P. Work.

IOWA HAS 2000 NEW BABIES

Iowa has 322 Baptist Sunday schools in the churches and missions in the state. In the majority of these schools the Keystone Graded Lessons are used, especially in the elementary department. These lessons grow in favor with all of our teachers who are willing to prepare to teach. The national standard for our Baptist Sunday schools has been much in favor in Iowa. The cradle roll campaign for three years past has added about 2,000 new babies yearly to the roll. A large number of organized classes have sent for the certificate of recognition the past year. A special campaign to deepen the number and the interest in the adult classes will be put on this coming fall. The baptisms from the Sunday schools reported at the associations will be encouraging. The vacation Bible school and the church school are commanding appreciative and successful attention.—JAY A. LAPHAM, Director.

MINNESOTA WILL

Enroll 25,000 in our Sunday schools by Christmas—this is our immediate goal which will mean an increase of fifteen per cent over our present enrollment. Week-day sessions are rapidly growing in favor and we will strive to have thirty church vacation schools next summer as well as several added this winter to the list of churches that provide for week-day religious instruction. Other goals include: 500 enrolled in teacher training and trained leaders' courses; 100 new dedications for life service; and 2,000 baptisms from our Sunday school and young people's societies. Stewardship and missionary education will be emphasized, and we will make an honest effort to strengthen weak points and attain to a high standard of excellence in both Sunday school and young people's society.—ARTHUR J. HANSEN, Director.

A TELEGRAM FROM CONNECTICUT

One hundred thirty active schools; twelve thousand seven hundred seventy three, in one hundred nine reporting, nineteen hundred twenty eight young people from fifty two groups reporting. Goals include religious education, worthily recognized; home extension in unchurched communities; leadership training, vacation schools, evangelism; kingdom citizenship institute within reach of every community; young people's department appropriate instruction.

WM. T. THAYER, Director.

FLOOD TIDE IN INDIANA.

The tide of Sunday school attendance in Indiana is at flood. Beginning the first of the year there has been an increasing attendance which has given great satisfaction. The hot weather slump seems lighter than usual.

Indiana stands well to the front in the number of teacher training classes and the number of certificates granted. We have twenty standard schools and thirty-two star schools. A new feature is a state meeting of Sunday school superintendents which we plan for our next state convention in October at Peru. It will give them an opportunity to talk over their own problems.

For 1920 we reported 419 schools with an enrollment of 49,723. We shall report more for 1921.—O. R. MCKAY, State Director.

Shall We Stand by the Convention?

Well-known Conservative, in loyalty to Baptist principles and missions, protests against divisive movements which lead Baptist churches to neglect their own and to support independent missions.

By J. W. WEDDELL

OUR district associations are just adjourning. They have had lively sessions this year, following the wide-awake meetings of the Northern Baptist Convention. I have had the privilege of attending three of these associational gatherings in the Middle West, brotherly meetings all of them. Certain questions have naturally come up, growing out of the convention proceedings. The local responsibility for our schools, the espousal of an approved doctrinal basis for our procedure—these have had to be prayerfully considered. But the great question, the burning question, has been this: What about our denominational missions at home and abroad? What is our attitude toward them?

I am a Baptist. I believe the Baptists are the most evangelical people on the face of the earth and at the same time they are the freest, broadest people of all that call themselves Christian. In other words they are Biblically orthodox, or I would not be a Baptist; and they are generously and fraternally liberal, or I couldn't be a Baptist. In fact, the name covers the largest latitude of evangelical belief to be found anywhere in all the world. Each man following Christ and his Word, thinks for himself, speaks for himself, but always holding the truth in love. Under God we are free men, and we belong to free churches and free associations.

But this does not mean that we are free to smash all denominational precedents, break all conventional bonds and cavort recklessly and ruinously over all creation, regardless of consequences. Historically and fraternally we are a great Baptist denomination, and as churches and associations we are members of the Northern Convention and to break loose in matters that can be mended and for slight cause to sever relationship which involve financial and moral obligations is little short of unfaithfulness to trust—for me it would be treason to the cause I have espoused.

The difficulty is a serious one and of wide reach. What are we going to do about it? It must be met. The independent mission movement has assumed organized form of late, and in some localities is cutting the contributions of our people to our regular mission causes in half, if not wholly monopolizing the field of effort. The objects presented, like all appeals for new extension work, are for the most part worthy, but this no reason why, because of certain sporadic evils that need correction, and, I believe, will be corrected, we should wholly retire from the support of a half-thousand of our own missionaries and missions assumed as charges by us and wholly dependent upon us.

This came to an issue at the last meeting of the Lorain Baptist Association at Medina, Ohio, where presentments were passed by a large and overwhelming majority favoring independent mission enterprises and the following plain and simple resolution of loyalty to our generally accepted Baptist missionary and benevolent causes was laid summarily on the table though some strenuously objected: "Resolved, That we declare our co-operation with the Promotion Board of the Northern Baptist Convention and that we will continue to contribute to its funds in order to as soon as possible bring the $100,000,000 campaign to a successful conclusion." Has it come to this?

I lift a protest against these divisive movements, and I do so with deference but earnestly, in the interest of true fundamentalism, which is but our declared adherence to the faith of the fathers, and in loyalty to the denomination to which we belong and for the cordial and bounden support of the faithful brethren whom we have sent to mission fields at home and abroad to represent us on the fighting line for Christ and his gospel. Give to every good cause. We all do. But for love's sake and the Master's, how can we forget our own and his own, who in simple trust rely upon our prayer and bounty? I stand with the Northern Baptist Convention!

Achievements of Disciples Convention

Threat of division has passed away. Chinese mission insists upon freedom for the churches. Organization and achievements of the year.

By ORVIS F. JORDAN

LEFT, right and center tendencies met in the debates and discussions of the international convention of the Disciples of Christ at Winona Lake, Ind., Aug. 28-Sept. 4. The Disciples have organized their convention largely upon Baptist models, their convention officials having often conferred with Dr. Bitting on convention practice. This year the various missionary, benevolent and educational boards reported to the convention, and received the recommendations of the convention.

The convention is not upon a delegate basis, however. Anyone attends who wishes to, the attendance this year reaching close to 5,000. Anyone may introduce a motion in the convention, but all motions are referred without debate to the Recommendations Committee. This is a large committee of over 100 men and women elected by the state conventions. This committee cannot originate new business, but passes upon all convention resolutions by recommending their passage, rejection or amendment. In only one case was the Recommendations Committee overruled by the convention this year.

Two years ago the various Disciples foreign, home, church erection, benevolent and ministerial relief boards were merged to form the United Christian Missionary Society. This organization, in its report, at Winona Lake, showed receipts for the past nine months of about $2,000,000, and presented a budget for next year of $3,000,000. From the foreign field came the report that 266 missionaries had received 3,200 new members. This average is very much in excess of the work of the pastors in home churches.

Talk of Division Was a Joke

The discussion of mission policy was of keenest interest in the convention. Rev. Frank Garrett, president of the China mission, had been sent home by the mission to answer charges brought against the mission at the convention in St. Louis last year. The issue was over the receiving of unimmersed Christians from pedo-Baptist missions. Mr. Garrett asserted that these were used as teachers and preachers and church workers, but had not been induced formally into church organizations since few of the congregations in China are formally organized. He refused, however, to pledge that the unimmersed would not in the future be formally received. He rejected flatly the demand of last year that the missionaries pledge their loyalty to the teaching and practice of American Disciples churches, insisting that their loyalty was to the New Testament only. The missionary was grilled before committees and twice before the convention itself, but he spoke with ever-increasing effectiveness and stood consistently for cordial co-operation with the American brethren, but against a limitation of the freedom of the Chinese church.

The removal of the College of Missions from Indianapolis was also an issue that resulted in keen debate. This college is a graduate institution which feels it might well take advantage of the opportunities of a great university. The convention voted to favor removal, but insisted that the definite plan should be submitted before action was taken. The places under consideration are Yale, Chicago, Columbia Hartford, Conn.

The complete reorganization of the Board of Education was accomplished this year. Henceforth this board will not be made up of the college presidents, but will be elected by the convention itself. Twenty-seven institutions co-operate with the Board of Education and these had 9,561 students last year, an increase of 362. The students for the ministry in this group, most of them undergraduate, were 933, a loss of thirty-eight.

Rev. George Miller of Washington, D. C., was convention president. In his address he argued that the Disciples are a people of the Middle West where faith is still alive. He asserted that the East had lost its faith, and religious leadership would depart from that section of the country. The convention has had for secretary throughout its history Rev. Graham Frank, of Dallas, Tex. The newly-elected president is Rev. Stephen E. Fisher, of Champaign, Ill.

The United Christian Missionary Society elected its former officers for the most part. Rev. F. W. Burnham is president; Rev. Stephen J. Corey and Mrs. Anna R. Atwater are vice-presidents.

The Name "Baptist" a Badge of Honor

THE name "Christian" was first applied in derision to the followers of Christ by enemies at Antioch. The name "Baptist" was first given, in ridicule, by pedo-baptist opponents of the people who rejected the baptism of babes. Both names, like the cross, have been changed from marks of shame to badges of honor.

The distinguishing principles of the people first called "Christian" and now called "Baptists" are:

1. The Scriptures, the only all-sufficient guide-book for our religious life. There may be no appeal from, or addition to, their precepts and principles.
2. The individual and direct relation of every soul to God—none between man and God, save only the God-man.
3. The complete separation of church and state in their respective fields. The church dealing with religious, the state with civil affairs.
4. The simple polity of the churches' government—each church a unit and a democracy in itself.
5. The baptism of believers only, or a regenerate church membership. — GEORGE W. McDANIEL, D. D., in Word and Way.

Among the secretaries are Rev. Grant K. Lewis, of the home missions department, Rev. G. W. Muckley of church erection department, Rev. J. H. Mohrte, of the department of benevolence, and Rev. F. E. Smith of the department of ministerial relief.

Eminent visitors were present at the convention. Dr. F. B. Myer of London delivered the sermon at one session. Dean Charles R. Brown of Yale delivered the convention sermon on Friday, and gave an educational address in the evening of that day. Dean Brown preached on "Keeping the Faith."

The issues of the hour were considered by speakers and various committees. Dr. Charles Clayton Morrison, editor of the Christian Century, insisted that world peace waited upon the accomplishment of Christian union. A telegram was sent to President Harding congratulating him on the calling of the Disarmament Congress and pledging to him Disciples' support in the seeking of world peace. The Volstead Act will be supported strongly by the Board of Temperance and Social Welfare. The warring employers and employees of West Virginia were urged to apply the Golden Rule to their industrial disputes. The Lord's Day Alliance did not get through the resolution it wanted but a modified one which is friendly and co-operative. The American Bible Society will secure the support of the Disciples henceforth.

One of the most interesting moments in the convention was the unveiling of a bust of Rev. A. McLean, the great missionary leader who died the past year. Mr. McLean became secretary when the income of the society was a few thousands a year, and lived to see the income mount to millions. At the unveiling of the bust, Rev. O. J. Grainger, of India, and Rev. W. F. Richardson, of Kansas City, made addresses.

China Demands Freedom

A missionary drama set forth the labors of Dr. A. L. Shelton of Tibet. Dr. Shelton was in the hands of bandits last winter and in this way became the center of interest of the entire world for a time. He is returning to Tibet this fall, and proposes to go forward to Lhasa, the forbidden city.

Progressive Disciples note that this year's convention was conducted with better parliamentary practice and with an absence of the offensive personalities which have marred the meetings of recent years. This is partly due to the excellent presiding officer. More stress was laid upon spiritual exercises, with a morning prayermeeting, a midday sermon, an evening out-door vesper service in the hill and the great communion service on Sunday afternoon. No religious body in America has wider reaches of theological differences, but the threat of division that was in the air at Cincinnati and at St. Louis has passed away. Only one man mentioned such a possibility this year, and he was laughed at. The Disciples number 1,250,000 Christians, and they are determined to play a worthy part in the activities of American Christianity.

Present-Day Germany as Seen by a Traveler

With a perfect military imperative, they told him to sit "here" or to stand "there," and he sat and stood accordingly. Germany now nurses a "revanche."

By WALTER CALLEY

THE various attitudes assumed toward Germany by those recently at war with her are not only interesting but also a commentary on our imperfect human nature. We decided while in Switzerland to make a little excursion into Germany in order to gain some first-hand impressions of conditions there and to take the trip down the Rhine. At Berne we visited the German embassy to have our passports vised and found ourselves in an atmosphere of militaristic authority. We were treated with perfect courtesy, but were told to sit "here" and wait "there" in such tones as to lead us to do as we were told and remove all temptation to undue familiarity.

On our way from Berne to Basle we met an Englishman who was returning from his holiday among the Alps. In the course of conversation we remarked that we were on our way to Germany. He was disgusted with us for visiting a country which every self-respecting, liberty-loving man and woman ought to ostracize. He would not put foot upon the accursed soil under any condition. There are many who sympathize with this position, but the next day we traveled with another Englishman who was in Germany on business and told him of the estimate in which his compatriot held all those who for any purpose visited Germany. He promptly called all such embittered visionaries lacking in mental balance. As we journeyed and listened we discovered that the man who had no commercial interests at stake was much more likely to advocate blotting Germany off the map than the business man who had something to sell or wanted something that he could best get in Germany. There were people in the United States who at the close of the war declared that they would never buy or use anything of German manufacture who have not been able to withstand the lure of cheaper or better-made goods. Many Americans visited Germany this summer, some on business, some for pleasure, some out of curiosity. In another year the tide of travel will be as great as of yore.

Stars and Stripes at Coblenz

To the American the door is open very wide. Whether it is to our credit or not may be an open question, but it is true that the German people are more friendly to us than to the European nations with whom they were at war. They seem to feel that although we joined with others in making their defeat sure, we have saved them from a worse fate than is now theirs. On the Rhine three foreign flags are flying—the French at Mayence, the British at Cologne, and over the great fortress at Coblenz floats the Stars and Stripes. The relations of our troops with the people at Coblenz are friendly. The Germans have accepted the situation with good grace, and business and social life move on as usual. We met some of our men stationed there and while no doubt many would like to be home once more, as a whole they were contented and happy.

On account of the depreciation of the mark the man who had dollars in his pocket found things cheap. You could buy seventy-five marks, nominally worth eighteen dollars, for one dollar. Our boys told us they were buying marks for one cent each. We did not see much poverty. The Rhine steamers were crowded with German excursionists who ate and drank all day long. At the hotels there was not as great a variety of food as in other countries, but sufficient. The napkins and table cloths were of paper and there were other evidences of attempts to economize. There was much business activity. The train service was good and many people were traveling. The greater number rode third class. Shops were provided with every line of merchandise and were largely patronized. The Rhine was crowded with barges carrying coal and other commodities. The vineyards were well-kept and gave promise of an abundant harvest. There was an air of prosperity in that portion of Germany visited by us.

We met an American who had been in Germany some months on important official business connected with the United States government, who gave it as his belief that Germany would "come back" rapidly. He said there was no sense of real defeat and no thought that the kaiser or his advisers had ever been in the wrong. Among the leaders and even the common people there was a deep-seated determination to even up things with her enemies, the supreme objective being the humiliation and crushing defeat of France. Some may feel that it is not wise to make public such impressions—that their publicity will but increase suspicion and awaken animosity which is slumbering, if not dead. If, however, our informant is correct, the more widely known are the facts the better prepared will the world be to meet the issue.

The nations must learn somehow that their only hope of security is in honorable intent and action and unselfish friendliness toward other nations. One feels the necessity for some new order when in Europe as he does not while at home, far removed from the actual scene of national and racial antagonisms. Unless the hearts of men are changed one bloody conflict will but lead to another. There is a kind of internationalism which is a mask for hatred for the government to which the internationalist should hold loyal allegiance. It is inimical to all government and subversive of real patriotism. There is an internationalism which is born of the Spirit of Christ. It is spiritual and not formal. Its manifestation must be found in the church of Christ—the brotherhood of those whose unity is of a living experience of the love of the Father as revealed in his Son Jesus Christ. In these days of propaganda there is but one all-inclusive, worth-while message. The day of great opportunity and pressing need is here.

Sunday School Periodicals

It is cause for pride and gratitude to Baptists that they own, as a part of the equipment of the American Baptist Publication Society, one of the two largest and best denominational plants in the world for the printing of Sunday school literature.

Every year, many millions of pages of printed heralds of gospel truth are sent flying from the Society's presses to every section of this country and to the corners of the earth.

Some of these publications, such as "Young People," "Girl's World," and "Youth's World," have a weekly circulation running into the hundreds of thousands and only eternity can reveal their value in the creation of a taste for good reading, in the development of high ideals, and in the promotion of Christian life and service.

The Society's Keystone Lessons have been recognized from the beginning as among the best of the graded lessons series, and the new Keystone Lessons are unequalled in their clarity, their vital interpretation of Scripture and their practical helpfulness to both teachers and pupils. These new lessons now are complete from the Beginners through the Senior Department, with elective courses for adults and young people.

There is still demand also for the ungraded Uniform lessons, and the Society's "Improved Uniform Series" seek to meet this demand with the best available provision in an interesting, vital handling of the materials for teachers and pupils.

In addition to the lesson helps for pupils and teachers and the various story papers and other publications for the pupils, the Society provides special help for teachers, superintendents, pastors, and adults in "Adult Class," "Men's Class," "Home Department," "Babyhood," and the "Sunday School Worker."

The "Sunday School Worker" is an illustrated magazine of principles and methods, with both general and departmentalized articles for every worker in the Sunday school and the young people's society, and also for pastors and parents. Many Sunday schools are putting this monthly magazine into the hands of all their workers, just as they provide quarterlies and papers for the pupils.

Another important phase of the work of the department of Sunday school periodicals is the publication of the series of books known as the "Judson Training Manuals," for teachers and superintendents and pastors and parents. These manuals cover every phase of religious education in the home and in the school of the church. Those already published are "Story-Telling Lessons," "Our B. Y. P. U.," "Planning Church Buildings," and "The Use of Projects in Religious Education."

The society has never yielded to the clamor for "cheapness." It has consistently kept its publications up to the highest standard in both content and form, and its periodicals are sold at the lowest price consistent with economical cost of manufacture, with profits only an incidental consideration, and always with the aim of giving the best service to all the churches of all parts of the denomination.

How State Universities Grow

Perhaps the most phenomenal development of all time in the educational world is the American state university. During the last half century there have sprung up almost a hundred of these institutions whose students in all courses, during the year, are now approaching a quarter of a million in number, and whose investments approximate a half billion dollars. According to the last government report:

"From 1890 to 1918 the increase in student attendance was 309 per cent at public and 113 per cent at privately supported institutions. In the three years from 1917 to 1920, the increase in attendance was 30 per cent at public supported institutions and 20 per cent at privately supported institutions." The lowering of the rate of gain of the state school over the private schools was due to the extra heavy drain of the war on the public institutions. Consequently, after conditions have become normal, the percentages of gains will return to the pre-war status, which means the rate of increase in the public institutions is three times as great as that of the private institutions.

Southern Baptist Schools

Southern Baptists have under direct control or ownership the following number and classes of institutions: Senior Colleges, 35; Junior Colleges, 23; Academies, including high schools, 56; Bible and Theological schools, 5; total 119.

The enrollment for the session of 1919-20 amounted to 31,464. We have not yet secured the figures for the session just closed but indications point to an approximate of 40,000. It is interesting to note the relative number of boys and girls—girls 188,289, boys 13,175.

The material equipment for these schools for the report of 1919-20 may thus be stated: buildings and grounds, $21,230,647.00; endowment $13,160,662.00; total valuation, $34,394,309.00.

Get Ready to Help

The American Relief Administration has several million dollars in hand, given for children, which would make possible not only immediate response but also as full response as the conditions of transport will probably permit for the next few weeks. There is, therefore, no need for a general appeal at the moment. If and when the time comes for another general appeal, based upon a knowledge of the real need, all the agencies should unite in the appeal.

The Administration gives assurance, through Mr. Hoover, that the distribution of relief will be kept absolutely free from political, racial or sectarian discrimination. All sufferers, whatever may be their race or religion—or lack of religion—will be given absolutely the same care and the same treatment.

The people of the churches should hold themselves in readiness to give when the general appeal comes,—and so dire and widespread will be the need for the next winter that seemingly it must inevitably come.

Co-operation in Santo Domingo

In the Dominican Republic five boards have formed a Joint Committee and have pooled the sum of eighty thousand dollars as a beginning in the name of their common evangelical Christianity. They have purchased a commanding piece of property for fifty thousand in the capital city. Missionaries will be commissioned jointly and their work administered jointly. The five boards are the two Home Mission Boards (Men's and Women's) of the Presbyterian Church in the U. S. A., the two Home Missions Boards (Men's and Women's) of the Methodist Episcopal Church and the Foreign Mission Board of the United Brethren. The free Methodists have a work in the northern part of the republic, which is not yet in affiliation.

Scheme to Re-establish Russia

A gigantic project to rehabilitate Russia and to re-establish industries there through the instrumentality of a technical consortium on which would be represented the leading industrial and engineering minds, has been evolved by a group of Americans and Russians, who have sought a solution of the Russian problem. Endorsed as entirely feasible by such men as General George W. Goethals, builder of the Panama Canal, Walter Rautenstrauch, vice-president of the J. G. White Management Corporation, and Reginald H. Ward, a leading Wall Street banker, the project is to be laid before Secretary of State Hughes and Secretary of Commerce Hoover as well as the Russian people.

The plan which views political conditions as secondary, contemplates sending a small army of technical experts to administer the economic resources of Russia on a huge scale.

Dig Up, Fellow Citizens!

For the last week of the last preceding fiscal year just ended the expenses of conducting the Federal Government averaged about $40,000,000 a day!

"For the year ended June 30, 1920, the Government's income was $6,694,565,388 and its expenditures $6,403,343,841. All types of taxes collected during the 1921 year showed losses compared with 1920 returns, but the big decrease was in the income and profits levy, which produced $3,206,046,157 in 1921 and $5,944,949,287 the previous year.

During the 1921 year the Government obtained $8,864,998,322 from sales of its securities and retired $9,182,027,170 worth of securities. Listed in the ordinary disbursements was $999,144,731 paid during the year as interest on all classes of debts.

"The gross national debt at the end of the year was $23,977,450,552, while at the end of the 1920 fiscal year it was $24,299,321,467. The high points in the debt of the United States for all time came August 31, 1919, when it was $26,596,701,648.

Some of Them Are Pale Red

The recent United States census gives the Indian population of this country as 242,959. Ten years ago it was 285,683. This would indicate a decrease in a decade of 22,724. On the other hand, the Indian Bureau of the Department of the Interior places the Indian population of 1920 at 336,337. According to the enumerations of the Indian Bureau, the Indian population for the last thirty years has been slowly but steadily increasing. The discrepancy between the figures of the Census Bureau and those of the regular Indian Bureau is to be accounted for largely by the fact that Indians in the enumeration of 1910 were counted as whites in the census of 1920. This applies particularly where only slight traces of Indian blood are in evidence. In Oklahoma alone 18,876 are counted as white this year who were rated as Indians ten years ago. It is to be remembered that the larger figures of the Indian Bureau are obtained by considering as Indians all those who have even the slightest trace of Indian blood.

Indian "Sweepers" Ban Liquors

The agitation against the drink is spreading all over India, and is taking many curious forms. Some of these native activities are taking the form of the boycott, picketing of drink shops, pressure of the castes, and many phenomena that seem strange to Americans or Europeans. On April 8, a meeting of the "sweepers" was held at Delhi at which it was unanimously decided that no "sweeper" should use liquor even on religious occasions. The edict was promulgated that "Any man found drinking will be beaten with shoes, one side of his moustache will be shaved off and he will be given five cowries. Any sweeper giving information against another caught drinking liquor will be rewarded with Rs. 1.4." Similar movements have spread to many sections. In Ludhiana, the people are much stirred up. In that section, the following castes have taken action similar to the sweepers of Delhi:

Hindu potters, Hindu washermen, Hindu bootmakers, Hindu carpenters and iron-smiths, Hindu goldsmiths and Sraffs, Vaish Aggarwalas, Suds, Bhatras, Hindu barbers.

THY WILL BE DONE WITH MY TIME
Matt. 6:7-15 (Consecration Meeting)

There are a lot of people in the world who would not waste one cent of money, if they could help it, but they have no conscience as to the value of their time. It may be that there is a cart load of folks whose time isn't worth very much. But, it is God-given and must be used to good advantage. Life's activities are varied and time must be given to them. We cannot afford to be lop-sided because we have not regulated the use of our time.

1. Our time at school. Don't throw it away. To do your work and live the days in order to just graduate is unworthy of young people. School days are a means of culture which involves a great deal of discipline. Graduate, of course! Don't short-cut. Some time you may want to give yourself to Christian service. It might be too late then to lay your foundation. Further, if you are going to serve your beloved denomination in the ministry or any other form of service, stay away from these short-cut Bible Training schools. Not long ago I visited a good church. Through the influence of the pastor fourteen of the young people had gone to such a school. Some of them talked to me. One boy in particular was not even a grade graduate—yet, he held a diploma. He wanted me to help him get into a Baptist college and thus he would attempt to remedy his almost fatal mistake. A standard Baptist college, training school or seminary is the best place in the world for Baptist young people.

2. Our time at play. The most dangerous time of our lives is when we are on dress parade. Where shall we go, what shall we do next? These are the questions which give us trouble. The way we answer them gives possibly the largest key or index to our lives. Tell me how the young woman answers these questions and I can tell you just about how she can be relied upon in business affairs, at home, at school, at church. Let's spend our time at play as if we belonged to the Lord and not as pagans. In a big city far away, the young folks played long and fast. The teen-agers would come home at four and five in the morning. The Sunday papers carried pictures of the fanciest dancers. The young men added to the occasion by taking whisky to the parties. A few Sundays ago, instead of the pictures of the fancy dancers with their abbreviated costumes, there was a call for a mothers' meeting to answer the question: "What shall we do to save our boys and girls?"

3. Our time at home. Very little of it you say. Yes, altogether too many things to draw us away. There are folks who have to live with us, and we owe them something. Let's make life worth while for them. We should spend more evenings with the kings and queens of literature. Culture of the finer sort is rapidly disappearing. We must have something more exciting than books and good magazines. Thus we resort to the playhouse. Night after night we leave the old folks at home in our bent for excitement. If we expect to be more worth while in life, we must spend more time at worth while things in the home.

4. Our time at church. The young person who habitually misses the worship services and other activities of the church should be called to account. That young person is in danger. We must find our places in the great life of the church. To be sure we should not try to do everything, but we should do something, and do that something well. The interests of the young Christian should center around Christ and things of concern to his kingdom. Let's quit being criminals in the use of our time. When we pray "Thy will be done" make the application to the problem of the wisest possible way to invest these precious hours, days, weeks and years, for God.

On August 27, under the auspices of the Ft. Wayne young people, the Ft. Wayne association held a picnic and conference. There were about 200 representatives from the various churches in the northeastern part of the state. They have now organized for pushing their work. Nineteen churches in the association have only ten B. Y. P. U. S. They expect to see a live B. Y. P. U. in every church in the association before the St. Paul convention. This new Hoosier organization is a result of the Cincinnati convention. One young man caught the vision of work to be done.

Dr. Young writes they have bought new land for $10,000. When completed and beautified, it will cost more. He wants to know if the B. Y. P. U. of America would not be willing to put up a bungalow for use of speakers at the assembly. They are thinking it over. The Oregon summer assembly now bids fair to be one of the great assemblies of the country. He asks the editor of this page to visit the young people at an early date. We have voted aye.

Sierra-Nevada Mountains no Longer a Barrier Between California and Nevada Young People.

Miss Brainard, office secretary for B. Y. P. U. of America on the Pacific Coast writes: "Our assembly was one of the best yet held. The registration was 190. There was deep interest in class work. Twenty young people responded to the life-work appeal on Sunday morning. These, with as many more who made the decision either before the assembly or after the services on Sunday, formed an organization to be known as the California-Nevada Volunteers. The purpose of the organization is mutual helpfulness in carrying out the preparation for the life work they have chosen." All these young people are members of the Life Service League of the B. Y. P. U. of America.

Moonlit Nights in the West Virginian Hills. The Clans Gather for Fun, Rest, Study on Broadus Campus, Philippi.

The big chief for the state is Rev. A. B. Withers, director of religious education. He made it known in advance that "loafers" were not wanted this year. But, the enthusiastic, whole-hearted young folk came. They played and worked together on the hills around Broadus. The faculty was fine. The work done was of very high order. Mr. Withers sent us this week a list of sixty-nine young people who are members of West Virginia Life Service League. When people howl about young people not being interested, they should be asked the direct question, "Have you ever given them a chance?" Young people will not respond to old platitudes and worn out phrases, theolog-

International Uniform Lesson for October 2

PAUL IN CORINTH

Acts 18:1-23; Golden Text 1 Cor. 2:2

By JOHN A. EARL

The Lesson Text

The twenty-three verses which constitute the lesson text are among the most important portions of the New Testament. Corinth marks the beginning of the New Testament, for it was here that Paul wrote to the Thessalonians his first letter which is the earliest portion of the New Testament Scriptures. Corinth also registers the most signal triumph of the gospel in Europe. It was in Corinth that Paul reached a crisis in his own life which he describes in his first letter to the Corinthians (see 1 Cor. 2:1-5). The lesson text is a graphic account of a great commercial center with its Jews both liberal and orthodox, and with its Gentiles like Titus Justus hungry for a religion of real worth and like Gallio who cared for none of these things.

The Lesson Taught

As we are following the progress of Paul we may consider him passing from soft-pedal to diapason, from synagogue to ghetto, and from culture to Christ.

Soft Pedal to Diapason

When Paul left Athens he was disgusted and somewhat disheartened. On reaching Corinth he decided to be less aggressive and more politic. What had his direct offensive against heathen practices brought him but persecution in Philippi, and what had he received but scorn and threats from his Jewish brethren when he preached Jesus as the Christ? He had tried the soft-pedal at Athens and it stirred up no strife. Why not continue the practice at Corinth? So "he found a certain Jew named Aquila" who with his wife, Priscilla, had come from Rome to Corinth on account of the order of Claudius Caesar that no Jew could remain in Rome. With this couple Paul boarded, working with them at tent-making, and going regularly to the synagogue every Sabbath like any loyal Jew. It is true, Paul reasoned in the synagogue every Sabbath and tried to persuade the Jews and proselyte Greeks to be more spiritual and less legal; but his reasoning was mild and inoffensive, and Jesus as the Christ was kept in the background. He was trying to soft-pedal his way into the confidence of the Jews of Corinth hoping to bring them by an easy approach to hear the truth concerning Jesus of Nazareth and accept him as their Messiah.

This soft-peddling was so unlike Paul that it must be explained. Probably his physical condition had something to do with it. Worn out by his strenuous labors and sufferings his spirit was affected by his bodily weariness. Then too trouble had been his unbroken portion since he landed in Europe. His anxiety about his converts in Macedonia preyed upon his vitality, and he missed the sympathy and fellowship of his companions, Silas and Timothy. At Athens his mission was practically a failure, and now he was in Corinth, a corrupt city, and he was alone. It is small wonder that he "lay low" and practiced the art of silence. Working at his trade in Corinth was pure camouflage. There was no more necessity for his tent-making in Corinth than for a similar practice in other cities in which he preached. His tent-making in Corinth was simply a part of his soft-peddling.

But when Silas and Timothy came to Corinth from Macedonia Paul switched from soft-pedal to diapason, and for a time was his old self again. The good news that his companions brought from Macedonia inspired him and he was constrained to come out boldly and testify to the Jews that Jesus was the Christ. They had listened to his reasoning; but they blasphemed at his preaching because he had the disloyalty to forsake Moses for Jesus of Nazareth who was crucified as a common malefactor with malefactors. But Paul was undismayed at the opposition of the Jews. With characteristic gesture he shook out his raiment and said unto them, "Your blood be upon your own heads; I am clean." When he kept back Jesus as the Christ in order to reason with them, he was not clean; but now that he had declared the real gospel of Jesus the Christ he was clean, and he was greatly relieved to be able to say so.

Synagogue to Ghetto

Titus Justus was probably a Jew with a Roman name. He was liberal enough to invite Paul to preach in his house since he could not have the use of the synagogue. The house being near the synagogue gave Paul his opportunity to reach the same congregation in freedom. The results soon justified the change because the ruler of the synagogue and his family were converted and many others. But the type of converts who were accepting the Christ did not inspire Paul because they came from the outcasts, the slaves, the nobodies; and he had a relapse into his former state of weariness and discouragement. In this condition he fell asleep one night, and in a vision he heard the Lord saying unto him, "Be not afraid, but speak and hold not thy peace; for I am with thee, and no man shall set on thee to harm thee; for I have much people in this city." The vision was sufficient to inspire Paul, and he settled down in Corinth for a long stay.

The Corinthian Ghetto taught Paul that not many wise after the flesh, not many mighty, not many noble are called; but God chose the foolish things of the world, that he might put to shame them that are wise; and God chose the weak things of the world, that he might put to shame the things that are strong; and the base things of the world, and the things that are despised did God choose, yea and the things that are not, that he might bring to naught the things that are; that no flesh should glory before God (1 Cor. 1:26-29).

Culture to Christ

In the land of culture with its Athens and Corinth, Paul's conviction with regard to the sufficiency of Christ and him crucified deepened, and several years after his eighteen months' stay in Corinth he wrote to the church there and reminded the Christians that to know Christ and him crucified was the one vital and fundamental thing he had acquired in Corinth. It was worth all it had cost Paul in suffering and discouragement to learn once for all that Christ and his cross are the quintessence of all wisdom and power. All the vital questions about God's love, righteousness and wisdom are answered by the cross of Christ; all the problems about man's sin, salvation and social relations are solved by the cross of Christ; all the darkness that envelops suffering and death is dispelled by the cross and the resurrection of Christ. It is by the way of the cross that power comes to conquer evil and evil-doers, to overcome selfishness, to follow sweetly the path of sacrificial service, to enjoy suffering for his sake, and to win men to Christ. But it was no academic knowledge of Christ and him crucified Paul sought, but experimental knowledge.

ical or otherwise, but they will respond to a big task for their Lord and Master, and they will do it with just as much efficiency as many of the older members of the church.

Mission Study Program for Young People Begins With Enthusiasm.

During the week of Oct. 2-9 Baptist young people of the N. B. C. will interest themselves in spreading the gospel of mission study. Locals will take up the study of "World Friendships" by Murray, and "Playing Square with Tomorrow," by Eastman. Teams will be organized and will carry the message to outlying churches. Thousands of study classes should be organized. Such activity is in line with the program of education as fostered by the General Board of Promotion.

Garments In The Way

MIDNIGHT! A strange commotion in the garret! Grandma's Attic Treasures stretched their folded arms and yawned with Rip-van-Winklian relief. The Cedar Chest lifted his heavy lid and complained to the Night Air that just at this time in September he was so "fed up" on moth-balls that he was fairly gasping for breath. The Winter Furs wriggled off their secure tissue paper wrappings, and wagged their tails joyfully at the chilliness in the air.

"We shall soon be leading a gay life now," they chuckled, and the Muff puffed up with pride, while the Choker winked its four glass eyes—two front, two back.

But Grandma's Attic Treasures sniffed with envy and despair: "Silly young things that you are! Mere fads of the moment! There'll come a day when She will lay you gently away beside us, and you'll never do another bit of good as long as you live, except to flop on the clothesline one day every year at house-cleaning time. Ah me, what a life! Squashed down continually, growing flatter and flatter with the pressing weight of things on top of you!"

"Yes, picture it!" sighed the Abandoned Shawls, "to be crocheted and knitted for the purpose of hugging ladies' dear chilly shoulders, and then for no fault of your own to be laid away, all your warming powers thwarted. Ah me, what a life! No wonder we develop wrinkles. Wait till those Sweaters get sent up here to join us, wont we go for them, though? They're to blame for our unpopularity. Yet there's better wool in us than in their flimsy shapes . . ."

The Flannelette Nightgowns inflated their yokes with a sleepy sob: "Then pity us! For we haven't been to bed for four long years. Talk about insomnia? We're hollow-eyed for lack of sleep, and all due to a fluffy down quilt which She bought the year She abandoned us. She's forever thinking maybe She'll need us again, though; so we spend the winter on tenter-hooks."

A rustling titter came from the pile of Daily Newspapers: "Listen to the old-timers! You poor dears, hasn't it dawned on you that the only people in America who wear you now are the ones who have no furnaces in their homes? A glance at our latest advertisements would convince you that the modern robe-de-nuit is chiefly—"

"Tut! Tut!" interrupted the Long-Sleeved Woolen Underwear, modestly, "it's hardly delicate or necessary to discuss what is and what isn't being worn today—just look at us! We haven't been able to gesticulate our arms for going on seven years now. We can't think how we keep in such fine condition, but oh, how we do crave exercise: to walk around, to work, to perform our high calling in life of warming the frozen."

There was an ominous sound from the small steamer trunk, and every eye turned in instant sympathy toward the complete masculine wardrobe lying there in silent pathos.

"His clothes!" they whispered in hushed voices.

"She couldn't bring herself to give them away—"

"All wrong," sighed the Boots, their listless tongues and heavy soles down-cast at the long inaction.

Grandma's Attic Treasures sighed reminiscently: "Time was when he wore that

Citizens of the World

By JOYCE KILMER

No longer of Him be it said,
"He hath no place to lay his head."
In every land a constant lamp
Flames by his small and mighty camp.
There is no strange and distant place
That is not gladdened by his face.
And every nation kneels to hail
The splendor shining through its veil.
Cloistered beside the shouting street,
Silent, he calls me to his feet.
Imprisoned for his love of me,
He makes my spirit greatly free.
And through my lips that uttered sin
The King of glory enters in.

pepper-and-salt suit to the office, rain or shine; remember how he whistled going down the walk? And on Sundays how he wore that—"

"Oh don't! don't!" the others begged gently, "we know there's more sentiment attached to that dear trunkful of vests and coats and trousers than to all the rest of us put together, poor Idle Clothes that we are! But it's a tragedy to think of His hands forever quiet now—He was so good to those in trouble—it seems wrong that His clothes should be so purposeless."

It was at this point that a copy of THE BAPTIST for August twenty-seventh slipped out of its pile of back numbers, and opening at page 938 said cheerfully: "You poor forlorn friends, this has positively been one of my most stimulating evenings; for as I've looked you over I realize you are in such condition that a trip for each of you seems imminent. At least, if your mistress is any sort of a good Baptist—"

"Oh, she is!"

"Very!"

"Extraordinarily so, as we very well know," sighed certain woolen garments in a chorus; "many's the time we've gone with her to church and prayer meetings and so on, until—ahem—until—"

"Exactly!" interrupted the Flannelette Nightgowns, "we all understand your unfortunate abandonment. As for us, it's needless for us to say we never went to church with her, but friends, this we do know—that's she's a sincere believer in devotional prayer."

"Then," said the August Number of THE BAPTIST, "your forthcoming trip is assured, my friends; for during September 1921 every Baptist housekeeper of good and regular standing is collecting just such Idle Clothes as you to send to Europe—"

"To Europe?" they questioned in fascinated gasps.

"Why yes, haven't you heard you're most urgently needed to relieve the tragic lack of warm garments in such suffering countries as Poland, Czecho-Slovakia and Latvia? Baptists have adopted the slogan, 'FILL A SHIP IN FELLOWSHIP.'"

"My! that sounds exactly like Helen Barrett Montgomery!" sighed the back numbers of the Helping Hand, reminiscently.

THE BAPTIST grinned approvingly: "My dears, you've hit the nail on the head, for it was she who suggested the slogan! And of course, if three million Methodists could fill two ships last year, I think a million and a quarter Baptists could fill one ship, don't you?"

Pandemonium reigned for the space of half an hour in the garret. Garments that had been lying idle began swishing their skirts, and shaking their arms, and massaging their wrinkles: "Oh, won't it be right to be worn again?" they shouted to their friends; and straightway began mapping out their probable itineraries, for some of them had been to Europe before. Meanwhile the stack of dry-goods boxes in the corner became agitated: "This means a trip to New York in October for the strongest of us," they agreed—and began appointing delegates.

But when the Babel subsided, a still small voice said wistfully: "But maybe She won't let us go! Maybe She doesn't see the crime of Idle Clothes. Maybe She has no imagination to paint graphic pictures of chilliness warmed, of dear souls who haven't had new clothes for years and years, of little children with blue fingertips, of grannies shivering. . . . How do we know that maybe She won't just keep on saving us for future use in this thrifty selfish way?"

"That would be awful!" "Impossible!" groaned the others in shocked consternation.

Then they one and all turned to THE BAPTIST: "You're the live-est thing that ever reaches this attic because you get a new lease on life every week. Now isn't there something you can print to make sure we get sent over there to warm those poor cold peoples?"

Before THE BAPTIST could reply, The Old Family Bible looked down from its dusty shelf and said softly: "Why, my friends, if She's half the whole-souled Christian that you agree she is, then She's bound to respond enthusiastically to this call. It's so scriptural, for one thing—there's that 'Inasmuch' passage, for instance: 'When saw we thee naked and cold, or sick and in prison?' She can't get away from that! And I think in her heart of hearts she will remember that although once the Lord Jesus Himself had no place to lay his head, now he is welcome in ten thousand humble homes across the sea. And in order that he may have a triumphal entry in other homes at this most strategic moment in the world, I think every Baptist woman, like those women of old, will gladly lay her garments in the way, singing 'Hosanna! Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord.'"

"Of course!" said the Things in the Cedar Chest.

"Of course!" repeated those quiet masculine garments in the closed steamer trunk.

And the attic passed the night in hushed expectancy.

The Young Reserves

Those Astonishing Hidden Treasures

DEAR Young Reserves, You should have seen my postman from the middle of August to the first of September! Poor man, he began thinking things about who was the most popular lady in town—judging by the fatness of the letters pouring in from all four corners of America!

But I assure you the "lady" herself smiled up her sleeve delightedly, for she was painting little pictures of you in your Corner, hunting hidden treasures pell-mell; and she loved every one of those letters. Only, ah me! what a state of mind she did get into when each new batch of mail brought absolutely correct lists from more and more of you! And only three prizes planned, you know! What, ever, was to be done? Well, what could one do but lay in more prizes, since the lists were so very good? So a few more prizes rubbed elbows with the three original ones. BUT—that list crept up from 8 correct papers to 11 correct papers, then up to 13, then 16, then 20, then 25 and up. Do you wonder some startled, perplexed thoughts began buzzing around in the brain of your Chimney Corner Editor? Especially as your lists showed such beautiful care, and meant so many searchings, and such patient wonderings whether this Bible verse was the best one to put down or not!

Fortunately there was a fine opportunity open to procure some unusual gifts from the Orient, as well as some equally interesting gifts from America to supplement the book rewards and there were stories for each gift; so by the time you read this letter all the Young Reserves named below will have received packages in the mail. (Oh, how the postman stared the day they left—for if the letters from you had seemed fat and impressive, consider how Christmassy all those packages looked on September first!) The order of names is no indication of merit, it really would be impossible to say that any one list of Treasures was "best"; the names are listed in the order in which the letters arrived at the Chimney Corner, approximately:

Margaret Sturgeon, Ashton, W. Va.; Marie Sturgeon, Ashton, W. Va.; Muriel Parker, Oak Park, Ill.; Florence Stackhouse, Utica, N. Y.; Alice Southworth, Salem, Ore.; Edward Tedford, Newburyport, Mass.; Harry E. Rice, Naperville, Ill.; James E. Silliman, Green River, Utah; Margaret E. Fowle, Grand Rapids, Neb.; George Crane, Boston, Mass.; John J. Haining, Motley, Minn.; Virginia Wise, Rockford, Ill.; Pauline Wells, Florence, Kan.; Eleanor English, Freehold, N. J.; Thomas T. Paine, Philadelphia, Pa.; Charlotte Tegarden, Golden, Colo.; Lucile Jackson, Gibbon, Neb.; Constance Burrows, Porterville, Cal.; Evelyn Ventres, Agawam, Mass.; Florence Ventres, Agawam, Mass.; Philip Straight, Detroit, Mich.; Mildred Goers, Chicago, Ill.; Winston Wreggit, Highland Park, Mich.; Lucy J. Lee, Cle Elum, Wash.; Adelaide Noble, Buffalo, N. Y.; Harry Snyder, Columbus, Ohio; Helen Irwin, Pasadena, Cal.; Edith A. Abbott, Salinas, Cal.; William S. Bur-

It must also be added that a number sent lists which were incorrect: where two or more titles were wrong no prize could be sent as you will readily see, when such an astonishing number were correct. One of the nicest parts about it was the letters—you will be interested to share some of them, I think: "Dear Miss Applegate,

This list isn't very good, for I am only a seven year old girl, but I thought if I tried I would learn something and maybe some day when I get bigger I will know enough to win things. I liked looking up the verses. There is a thing in the back of mother's Bible where I could look first. Like looking in the telephone book to call some one up! I know I have nine wrong, but I wanted to do it all alone. Maybe there will be others with nine wrong. I'm the first to read THE BAPTIST in our house. I just love Peggy and Bill and little Timothy. I wish we lived in the same town. I would like to play with Peggy, and I love you too. This is too long now so goodbye.

(Phoebe Phillips, Chicago.)

This is what Edward Tedford (of Newburyport, Mass.) wrote about the contest: "It has been great fun looking up the verses, and although it has taken a great deal of time, I do not begrudge it."

Margaret Fowle (of Grand Island, Neb.) writes: "The last Hidden Treasure is found and I am sending my completed list. It has certainly proved to be a most interesting summer contest. I hadn't realized that so many authors chose titles from the Bible. However, since the contest started, I have noticed several books with Bible titles which weren't even on the list. I hope all the other Young Reserves have enjoyed the hunt as much as I have."

Pauline Wells (Florence, Kan.) writes that she has "been digging ever since I first read of the contest. I found over three-fourths of the titles without any trouble, but some of the others troubled me, especially 'The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse.' I finally looked up the word in the dictionary and found it meant Revelation, which I began to read through, finding what I was wanting in chapter 6. I did not wish to send my list in unless I found every title. I cannot tell you how much I have enjoyed this 'mining' and I hope my list will be worthy of one of your prizes. I am making a list of my own of other titles I think were taken from the Bible."

George Crane (Boston, Mass.) says: "It was a jolly thing to have us do this summer. I never knew things were all catalogued in the back of the Bible before in a concordance. It makes the Bible mean more to be able to find anything in it. You will be glad to know I did what Peggy suggested in June and started a garden for missions, like the 'Bean for Africa' story. I have three dollars so far, but some more is owing me. My let-

German-American Baptists Central Conference Report

By ARTHUR A. SHADE

The German-American Baptists of the Central Conference comprising the territory of the states of Illinois, Indiana, Michigan and Ohio, and numbering 5623 members in thirty-five churches held their forty-first session with the Fourth Street Church, Dayton, Ohio. It was a splendid gathering of ministers, missionaries, professors, business men and notable women not a few. Nearly every church was represented, while from cities like Detroit, Chicago, Cleveland and Cincinnati large delegations poured in which taxed the entertaining capacity of the hostess church of which Rev. A. Schlesinger is the successful pastor.

It will no doubt gladden the hearts of our brethren of the Northern Baptist Convention to learn of the progress their daughter denomination is making in her evangelistic and missionary enterprise. This progress is reflected by a few figures:

Beginning the year with 5,500 members 230 were added by baptism, an average of one to every twenty-four members. The net gain in membership was 123. There were paid out for local expenses by the churches $113,529.44, an average of $20.64 per member, and $83,938.02 for benevolence, an average of $13.44 per member, and a total for local and benevolent purposes of $34.08 per member.

At the General Conference held in the Moody Tabernacle, Chicago, Aug. 1919, our denomination, numbering about 31,000 members, set for itself the goal of raising missions. This goal represented an additional $1,000,000 during the next three years for vance of three to one over the giving of the past three years which had been the highest in the history of the denomination. It represented a call for $10.75 per year for three successive years from every member of the denomination. Since that notable meeting twenty-three months have past, and there have been paid over $700,000, leaving a balance to be raised during the final thirteen months of about $300,000. There is a strong determination evident everywhere to succeed.

During the three years of 1917-19 our Central Conference paid for missions the handsome sum of $68,088.46. But during the year following the announcement of the Million-Dollar goal the Central Conference paid $91,120.03 for missions, an advance of 50 percent in one year over the total for the preceding three years combined. During the year which has just closed, $83,938.02 were raised for $175,058.05, against $68,088.46 for the missions, a total for the two years of previous three year period; which represents an advance of nearly 400 per cent. The individual average increased from $3.28 to $16.29 for 1919-20 and $13.99 for 1920-21.

The language problem in our work is being mastered along a liberal policy line. The German language is readily yielding to the English wherever conditions make it profitable to do so.

Mrs. Jacob Speicher of the China Publication Society ably represented the cause of foreign missions in an inspiring address given under the auspices of the woman's conference. Prof. L. Kaiser, D.D., of Rochester, N. Y., represented the cause of ministerial education. Rev. G. Fetzner, editor of "Der Sendbote," brought the encouraging message of the growth of our press work. Rev. Wm. Kuhn, General Missionary Secretary from Chicago, told of the great expansion our foreign work is enjoying in Central Europe, Russia, Siberia, the Balkans and South America which is made possible through the success of the Million-Dollar offering. Rev. A. P. Mihm, the newly elected Secretary of Religious Education and Young People's Work, made his maiden speech on "Real Joys of Young Christians."

Throughout the conference the spirit of sweetest harmony prevailed. All questions of liberalism and conservatism were forgotten in the general enthusiasm for the work which Christ our Lord entrusted unto us. God willing the next conference will convene with the Oak Park Church, Rev. H. Kaaz, pastor next August.

Muskogee-Wichita-Seminole Indian Association

By MRS. ELLA K. WHITMORE

After attending with real enjoyment our Northern Baptist convention in Des Moines, and visiting friends and relatives in Iowa, Chicago, and Omaha, I am now spending some very pleasant weeks with my niece, Mrs. Weeks, at Bacone, Oklahoma, before returning to my California home.

Mr. Weeks is the president of Bacone College, our school for Indians. The school is on a farm of 160 acres, three miles north of Muskogee. The poor and insufficient buildings are now being supplemented by a beautiful new brick administration building, the funds for which are provided by gift of an Indian friend, with the help of our Home Mission Society and the General Education Board. When this new building, now being rapidly pushed, is completed, the present recitation rooms can be used for the students now unable to enter for lack of room. It is now vacation time, but the place is a busy one, some fifteen or twenty of the children of the Home or orphanage remaining during the summer, and a number of the older students also as helpers.

Instead of attending our Iowa assembly, I came down here and enjoyed a few days at the Muskogee-Wichita-Seminole association, which met with the Montezuma Baptist church, August 18th to 21st. Mr. Weeks went a day earlier than two of the workers here and myself, and had a tent and cots for us on our arrival, he sleeping on a cot by his car under a fly. We went by train to Okemah, where an Indian boy met us with an auto and took us over as rough roads as I ever saw, fourteen miles to the pleasant grove where some five hundred Indians were encamped for the meeting. The little church was filled with beds, the meetings being held in arbors, one on each side of the church.

One was for the women's meetings, the other for the general meetings which commenced early in the morning and continuing, except for meals, till near midnight. I was awakened each morning by the waves of plaintive music floating out from the arbor. One man would begin a hymn, eyes closed, not a word that could be understood by a white, but soon all were joining in the unison singing. No books, no instrument, but impressive beyond description, to the stranger. The men were seated on one side of the rude pulpit, the women on the other. Song followed song until the minister, a serious red man, arose in his place, when the song died away, and his gentle, deep voice was heard with a scripture reading, followed by another hymn, long and earnest. During the singing the minister turned, and every man in the arbor at once turned toward his bench or chair, still singing. As the verse died away every one fell on his or her knees, on the dust floor, for the fervent prayer.

One period each day was given to the young people for a song service, at which an organ and English hymnals were used, and the young people had the opportunity of showing whether their educational advantages had been well improved.

At one service Mr. Weeks preached, an interpreter explaining after each sentence its meaning, in the Creek language. The impressive manner and gestures of the interpreter proved his own appreciation of the words he was uttering. One other address was in English, and the others were given by the Indians themselves in their own tongue. The moderator and the clerk of the association, and at least five of the leading ministers, were former Bacone students.

The women's meetings were conducted in a most dignified and orderly manner. Several of those most active had been Bacone students but they used the Creek tongue, so that one must watch very carefully to understand what was being done. A lady near me kindly explained to me sometimes. At one time a Wichita woman with long braids of hair and wearing a blanket, arose and began remarks in her language, which the others did not understand. Beside her stood a younger woman, evidently of the same tribe, who with down cast eyes, and almost inaudible voice, repeated the remarks in English, and a young Creek woman immediately interpreted in the Creek language. The three serious figures made a most picturesque sight, and when they fell on their knees for prayer, we could all follow their example with full hearts, knowing "He hath made of one blood all people to dwell on the face of the whole earth." The earnestness of these women to send messengers to the neglected tribes of Indians in Florida and elsewhere was to me most touching. They later all came to the table, to lay an offering upon it, to help the Wichita people and the Florida Seminoles. In fact they had several such offerings, one being for the education of a girl at Bacone. In a general meeting a table offering for the orphanage here at Bacone was made.

The preparations for meals were of interest. Six arbors, or booths, were arranged and bountiful meals provided at long tables. The expense is shared by all, but the entertaining church does the work. It was a proof of the ability of the Indians to plan and arrange, when they have a chance for training, that this meeting of several days was all under their own supervision and direction. It all compared very favorably, to my mind, with any similar gathering among our own people.

It is in my heart to commend the work being done here at Bacone for these people and for their children. When we work for the $100,000,000 our societies wish and need, we are doing something for these whom we have supplanted in this America. Let us prove to them that it is "the land of the free and the home of the brave." Let us show them that we are children of God, and lovers of the Jesus who gave himself for all, for "all ye are brethren."

Wisconsin News and Notes

BY ROBERT W. SHAW

Milwaukee

At the First Church, Dr. A. A. Hobson, is getting hold of things, and is optimistic about the future. He spent the summer in the city and has planned an intensive program.

Rev. Floyd T. Holland, of the Bay View Church surprised everybody by resigning the first Sunday in September. He has recently taken unto himself a wife. This church has a unique field and under an aggressive leader is bound to prosper.

The Immanuel Church, Rev. O. R. Hauser, pastor, has been busy entertaining guests during the summer. Many meetings of a denominational nature have been held in this newest and most commodious of our Baptist buildings.

Miss Maimie Passolt, a graduate of the Chicago Training School, class of 1921, has begun her work as missionary with the South Church. She has a large field in which to work, and to plan for these days of transition requires vision and heroic faith.

Daniel Shelpuk, for the past year in charge of the Russian work in this city has returned to Russia-Poland to engage in work there under Pastor Fetter's direction. He says the fields are white unto the harvest in that land, and he feels that he would be a traitor to Jesus Christ did he not heed this call.

Pastor W. T. Dorward, of the Tabernacle Church, has been appointed chaplain of the 120th field artillery, of the Wisconsin National Guard, pending Federal recognition. This appointment came as a surprise to Dr. Dorward. He has spent the last four summers in the camps with the boys of Wisconsin.

At Wauwatosa the brethren are busily engaged in trying to spend $10,000 in renovating and redecorating the main auditorium, and in transforming the annex of their building into a fine Sunday-school equipment. They will have one of the most workable plants in the city when they have finished. Pastor Alborn is greatly encouraged in his work.

Out in the State

A. B. Colvin has resigned at Rhineland after a brief pastorate. What his plans for the future are we do not know.

I. Fredmund, pastor of the Temple Church, of Racine, has resigned to accept the call to the work at Bijford, S. D. He has done a splendid work at Racine and will be missed in the larger work among the Norwegians.

J. Sherman Wallace, of Utah, has accepted the pastorate of the First Baptist Church of Madison, made vacant by the resignation of Dr. D. D. MacLauren. He is now on the field, and together with Student Pastor J. B. Gleason is ready to welcome all Baptist students going to the university.

J. B. McKendry has resigned his work at Waukesha, after a three-years' ministry to engage in educational work. He has accepted the call to Oak Park, Chicago, to have charge of the educational program being projected by the churches of that place. He has done an aggressive work in Waukesha, and has been busy with the larger denominational interests throughout the state.

The brethren of the Eau Claire Association recently held an eight-day Bible conference at Eau Claire. Dr. J. J. Ross of Chicago was the principal speaker.

In the Editor's Chair

During one week of July, Pastor Henry Clarke, of Racine, held down the editorship of one of the local papers. The editor wanted a vacation, and so while he was gone he turned the editorial department over to the Methodist and Baptist pastors. This was no light task, but Dr. Clarke spoke out his usual virile and helpful messages to the whole city for one week. Dr. Clarke put the religious and moral note into his editorials, something which is lacking in so many editorials these days. In fact, one was led to believe that it would be a great thing if many of our leading ministers could have the editorial page of a daily as his pulpit at least one day in the week.

The State Convention

The State Convention will have its meeting this year at Beloit. I. E. Bill, who is pastor there, is making plans to entertain a record attendance. Dr. L. C. Barnes, and Dr. J. J. Ross of Chicago are to be the chief speakers. Dr. Barnes is to give five addresses, and Dr. Ross will give two or three. Besides these addresses there will be helpful conferences and several other speakers.

Boston Letter

BY CHARLES H. WATSON

The September Quickening

It only begins in September. The rest of it keeps coming in October. It is a curious season for a sort of spring resurrection. Yet that is what we expect and what we begin to get, after all the flowers are gone, the fruits harvested, shriveled yellow leaves flutter around us and frosts commence to nip what life is left. It almost looks as if we were reversing the natural order as when we turn night into day. But so we go, in business, in education, in religion, in almost everything but sport. Sport is always with us, only changing its coat with the changing seasons, and getting more intense as business, education and religion relax their grip on us.

A Spring in the Fall

That is what we have. Not only a spring and a fall; but a "Spring Revival" just as nature is falling asleep. Homes are opening up that were empty and dull. Tanned and re-invigorated children fill the streets and schools, and teachers covered with the summer rust, are being brightened up again by the indefatigable young Americans. Churches and Sunday schools open with almost a feeling of strangeness after the long summer respite; and ministers come back to the harness and the pulling with surprising resiliency. Soon it will be in business, education and religion as "Spring" begins its reversal of the actual seasons—"first the blade," as the autumn harvest is in full yield, "then the ear," as the winter freezes everything up, "and afterwards the full corn in the ear," just when spring seeds and buds are swelling. But—a being who is out of normal order himself, naturally would get things twisted.

An Inspiring Unitarian Leader

Now and then the Baptists furnish our Unitarian brethren with a strong, well-seasoned leader, who sends a thrill through that rather exemplary body of excellent people. Dr. J. H. Barrows and

STUDENT VOLUNTEERS, WITH DR. AND MRS. TOPPING OF JAPAN, AT WEST WASHINGTON SUMMER ASSEMBLY

Dr. Charles G. Ames were specimens. Dr. Charles H. Strong, the older son of Dr. Augustus H. Strong, our great Baptist theologian, is another, and his position as president of the Unitarian Laymen's League gives him opportunity to show what a clear head and an energetic purpose can do to fire the men to a new and worth-while program. At a recent dinner of the League in the Unity Home in Boston, he gave the impression that he was bound to be a leader with a following. No standing pat on the status quo for him; but a social vision, a sound social program, an increased church attendance, and a strong departure in the direction of religious education. That is a stiff schedule for those orderly and prosperous brethren. We shall see how it comes out. Dr. Charles H. Strong stands high among the philosophers. Professor William James regarded him as one of the clearest intellects in the land. And when Strong feared that James was becoming too hospitable to a consciousness of the superhuman, even James took the fear seriously.

Mrs. Montgomery's Appeal

Under the circumstances, her appeal was a very natural one, and she had a perfect right to make it. She had seen two Northern Baptist Conventions almost thwarted and spoiled in mind and spirit by a wholly unnecessary issue; and she knew that arrangements had been made to continue the disturbance during her presidency. She did not ask the Fundamentalists to disperse, or to sacrifice their issue. She merely sought to raise the greater issue of the kingdom and its work, and suggests that if the Fundamentalists must "fundamental" they do it at some other time and place. The convention itself takes as many strenuous days and duties, as ordinary Baptists ought to endure even when joy and peace reign; but when a conference is prefixed to it that simply destroys harmony and unity, and diverts from its serious work, the presiding officers must shoulder the most of the unnecessary burden. Any one would be justified in refusing the presidency when certain that the Christian atmosphere would be poisoned beforehand.

Sons of Baptist Ministers at Brown

A recent visit to Brown University brought to mind the indebtedness of that old institution to Baptist ministers. You go back into the past only to increase the debt, but the present makes it imposingly large. If you begin at the top with President Faunce, Dr. D. W. Faunce comes to mind, the strong pastor in some of our best churches, a fine type of the old-time minister of vigor and cultivation. Then in the corporation of the university ministers' sons are outstanding figures. Dr. Thomas Davis Anderson, namesake of his courtly father who years ago adorned the pulpit of the First Church, New York. There is President George Edwin Horr, also namesake of a scholarly minister well known on the Atlantic coast. Charles Evans Hughes also is among the Fellows and now perhaps is the most illustrious of Brown graduates, and he the only son of a most devoted and revered minister. Albert Lyon Scott the Trustee, the graduate and princely layman in Newton Center, is worthy son of a consecrated minister in lower New York in the long ago.

Coming into the faculty, Dr. Lida Shaw King is prominent as Dean of the Woman's College and Professor of Classical Literature and Archeology. She is the daughter of that ripe scholar and noble preacher Dr. Henry M. King, beloved in Boston, Albany, and Providence. Professor Albert Knight Potter, head of the department of English, namesake of one of the noblest men who ever stood in a pulpit, Dr. A. K. Potter of Springfield and Roxbury. How many of us remember his charming comradeship and brilliant English style! Then there is Dr. Alfred Harrison Jones, Associate Professor of Logic and Psychology, gifted son of Dr. Robert Taylor Jones who for thirty-five years was the leader and almost creator of the strong First Church there, in whose fellowship were President Schurman, E. Benjamin Andrews, Charles Evans Hughes, Benjamin Ida Wheeler, Dr. Law the great veterinarian, and other prominent teachers, when they served Cornell University.

Surely this is a high fellowship, taking as it does into cabinet, commerce and school, the precious life and tradition of the parsonage, where he who prayed and toiled there, sought the greatness of goodness, and the goodness only of service.

Large Gifts by Chinese in Support of Christian Schools

By JAMES H. FRANKLIN.

WHEN Rev. L. C. Hylbert, missionary at Ningpo, China, was at home on furlough three years ago, he secured subscriptions from Baptists in West Virginia to the amount of $23,000 to use in the development of schools at Ding Hae, one of the cities on his field. When he returned to China and told of the generosity of the West Virginia Baptists, there was such rejoicing among the Chinese that they undertook to add a considerable sum to the amount subscribed in America. The Foreign Mission Society has recently been advised by Mr. Hylbert that the Chinese citizens themselves have subscribed $42,000 Mexican, which makes a total of $65,000 Mexican for the school at Ding Hae. The work has developed beyond all expectations, and after subscribing for the erection of the buildings, some of the Chinese approached Mr. Hylbert with a proposal to turn over property, the income from which is about $15,000 Mexican per year, for use in support of the school work. All this means that a much stronger school than was ever possible before in that district is being established, and it will be conducted under Christian auspices. Ding Hae is a city of 40,000 people, and is only one of the twenty-eight different stations in Mr. Hylbert's field.

The Chinese gentry in the large city of Ningpo, about four hours travel from Ding Hae, were deeply impressed by what had been accomplished in the smaller city, and now they are discussing the wisdom of proposing to contribute as much as $250,000 Mexican for the development of the hospital work and boys' academy and a girls' school at Ningpo, provided the missionary agencies in America will contribute a like amount.

Soon after the news of these developments reached New York, the Foreign Mission Society received a cablegram from South China announcing that the students and Chinese friends of Swatow Academy had subscribed $24,000 Mexican, on condition that the Foreign Mission Society would contribute a like amount for the erection of an Administration Building at the Academy. Fortunately, the Foreign Mission Society was able to take immediate action, and a total of $48,000 Mexican is now available for the erection of the Administration Building at Swatow where the work has been so greatly blessed in recent years.

It is a matter of great pleasure to the Foreign Mission Society to be able to announce such extraordinary interest on the part of Chinese citizens at Ding Hae, Swatow and Ningpo.

The Maritime Provinces

By A. C. CHUTE

Our denominational paper, The Maritime Baptist, has recently come under the editorial guidance of a new hand, Rev. R. Osgood Morse. The editor preceding him, Rev. R. J. Colpitts, was suddenly cut off by death. Mr. Morse, who has for many years held pastorates among us, is a graduate of Acadia College and of Rochester Theological Seminary. And he takes this editorial responsibility after much writing, not only for religious periodicals, but also for the secular press. He has had his eyes open to see what is going on in the world, and has written with discrimination, and with interest to his readers, concerning what he has seen. For long he has been identified with our denominational activities, so that he has arrived to his present position well equipped for what is immediately before him. And he is giving us an excellent paper.

At present there is running through its columns an interesting series of articles on "The Religious Life of Acadia," from the pen of the late Rev. W. B. Boggs, D.D. Dr. Austen K. DeBlois, of the First Baptist Church, of Boston, has written the introduction. Dr. Boggs was a missionary of Maritime Baptists to the Telugus, but was obliged to return home on account of impaired health. A little later he felt that he was sufficiently restored to enable him to go back to India. But the board did not agree with him in this, so that he applied to the Missionary Union, at Boston, with the result that he was sent abroad by that society and rendered fine service for many years. He was associated with the famous Dr. John E. Clough in that unmatched ingathering of souls on the Telugu field. When Dr. Boggs was last at home, and for a while had no expectation of getting again to India, because of physical disability, he devoted himself to the writing of the religious history of his alma mater. Money was not forthcoming for its immediate publication in book form, as the author intended, so that now it is appearing as a serial of about twenty numbers, with thought that a little later the funds may be provided for the more permanent form which the writer had in mind. These articles deal with Acadia's origin, with her founders and early supporters, and with times of spiritual refreshing in the history of the schools. They give character sketches of men who nobly wrought among Baptists in this part of the world for the cause of education and of missions. The whole alluring story is briefly and attractively told by a man who has been spoken of as "one of Acadia's finest products." Many a one will thank God that the good Dr. Boggs was impelled to take up this labor of love, and to bring it to a conclusion, just prior to his last return to the foreign land of his adoption where, very soon, his earthly course was ended.

There has just died in Wolfville, Nova Scotia, the seat of our university, a greatly beloved minister of Christ, Rev. Maquard P. Freeman, in his eighty-ninth year. Twenty years have elapsed since he renounced the active work of the ministry, and removed to Wolfville to spend the evening of a quiet and very useful life. He was not noted for learning nor for eloquence; but he was noted for the excellence of his Christian spirit and for the marked conformity of his life to the requirements of his Lord. During these two decades of retirement he has been identified, as far as his strength would allow, with a mission in the east end of the town. There he went in and out, year after year, without worldly emoluments, well satisfied with the approving eye of God upon him. He needed nothing beside to keep him faithful.

Those acquainted with Father Freeman's life-story have associated with his name the name of a man well known in the United States, Jacob Gould Schurman, ex-President of Cornell University. Dr. Schurman was led to Christ and baptized by Mr. Freeman when the latter was pastor at Summerside, Prince Edward Island. Later on when young Schurman had completed his junior year at Acadia, and when his former pastor had a church in Nova Scotia, the young man preached in the pulpit of him who had baptized him, for his expectation then Maquard P. Freeman, in his eighty-ninth year. Twenty years have elapsed since he renounced the active work of the ministry, and removed to Wolfville to spend the evening of a quiet and very useful life. He was not noted for learning nor for eloquence; but he was noted for the excellence of his Christian spirit and for the marked conformity of his life to the was to devote himself to the work of the Christian ministry. Winning the Gilchrist Scholarship, this promising youth went abroad for study, returned and became professor, first at Acadia, and then at Dalhousie, in Halifax, after which he went to Cornell University where, not long since, he closed a protracted and distinguished Presidency. All honor, then, to the pastors who, in comparatively obscure places, faithfully discharge their obligations, and turn youthful feet into the paths of obedience to the divine will.

Acadia has not yet begun to rear a building in the place of the one destroyed by fire in December last. The time has not seemed opportune for the pushing of the proposed million-dollar campaign among us. We must therefore be a little patient, enduring the inconveniences of a wilderness while on the way to Canaan. In due season the goal of our endeavor will surely be reached. At the time of our writing, girls and boys are assembling on The Hill for the opening of the year of study in seminary and academy. In the first week of October the college will again be in session. Seven or eight years more and we shall round out a century of our educational history.

Rev. O. F. Felth closed his pastorate with the Swedish Baptist Church in Bellingham, July 1.

Rev. L. L. Cloyd has resigned as pastor of the Immanuel Church, Bellingham.

Rev. A. Tangen resigned as pastor of the Norwegian-Danish Church, Seattle, to take effect October 1.

Rev. L. L. Simmons, of Valley Ford, Wash., has recently located as pastor at La Conner.

Rev. Dan W. Thurston, who has been District Missionary in the Cowlitz Association for several years, has become pastor of the South Tacoma Church.

Rev. C. A. Nethery, formerly of Ferndale, has settled as pastor of the church at Kent.

Rev. J. O. Bovee has been appointed as Pastor at Large in Western Washington and with Mrs. Bovee began his work at Burlington Sept. 1.

Rev. J. E. Wetterhahn, of Missouri, is supplying the church at Vancouver.

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

DAILY VACATION BIBLE SCHOOLS were conducted in seventeen churches in Northern California, with an enrolment of more than 1700 boys and girls. In Twenty-Third Avenue Baptist Church, Oakland, the enrolment numbered 256, representing twenty different races and eleven religious denominations. Nearly two-fifths of the number did not attend any Sunday school. As a result of D. V. B. S. one-half the total enrolment are now attending the Sunday school of that church.

THE ANNUAL SESSION of the Federate School of Missions was held at Mount Hermon July 9-16. Registered delegates numbered 128. Denominational Registration was as follows: Presbyterians, fifty-five; Baptists, twenty-three; Methodists, nineteen; Congregationalists, eleven; Lutherans, six; United Presbyterians, five; Friends, two; Methodist S., one; Methodist Free, one; Swedish Mission, two.

WESTERN WASHINGTON

ON AUGUST 20, Mrs. I. H. Wood, wife of Rev. I. H. Wood, pastor of the Manette Church, after a lingering illness of several months, died at her home in Manette. She leaves a husband and five children. The funeral was held in the Bremerton Baptist Church, where her husband was pastor for three years and where she was greatly beloved. She had just passed her forty-fifth birthday and the twenty-fifth anniversary of her marriage. A woman of strong faith and sterling character, she will be greatly missed in the home and community.

THE FIRST BAPTIST CHURCH OF TAKOMA, Dr. C. O. Johnson, pastor, having found its building too small for the growing congregations and Sunday school, has leased the Tacoma Theatre for a year in which to hold Sunday services. Services began there Sept. 4. The church is already considering plans for a new building.

SAUK PRAIRIE: After some preliminary work by Rev. J. E. Kanarr, District Missionary, and conference with Dr. J. F. Watson, a Baptist church was organized at Sauk Prairie, in Skagit County. Property has been purchased and a building will be erected at an early date.

MISS ALICE FRANKLIN, a member of the University Baptist Church, Seattle, and a student volunteer, sailed August 26 for China to spend one year as teacher in Canton Christian College.

Pastoral Changes

During the summer there have been a number of changes, several men leaving and others coming into the field.

Rev. C. F. Wallraff closed his work with the church at Hoquiam August 1 and is located with the church at San Luis Obispo, Cal.

Rev. S. L. Brown has resigned as pastor at Dryad.

ON JULY 10, at the Mexican Mission in Fresno six were received for baptism, one, an old lady in her eighty-fifth year. Mr. Martinez, Mexican missionary has organized Sunday schools at Dinuba and Malaga, two growing towns near Fresno. He has also been asked by the Mexican people to hold services in the towns of Fowler, Malaga, Kerman, Del Ray and Calaw.

REV. HENRY W. DAVIS has been appointed Baptist University Pastor at the University of California, Berkeley. Baptist churches having numbers attending this university are asked to send the names and addresses to Mrs. M. B. Clark 2433 Le Conte Street, Berkeley, also the information as to the special activity in which they have been engaged in the home church. This information will be of great service in enabling Dr. Davis to get into immediate touch with Baptist students.

REV. AND MRS. DRYDEN L. PHELPS, members of First Baptist Church, San Francisco, sailed on S. S. "Golden State" August 31 for China. A very beautiful commission service was held by the church on Sunday, August 21. Mr. and Mrs. Phelps go as the special representatives of this church to Chengtu, China.

DR. WILLIAM A. WALDO, pastor of the First Baptist Church of Corvallis, with his church, is putting on a very important program for the benefit of the Oregon Agricultural College students for the coming year and desires to be of the very greatest benefit to all students who come here, particularly the Baptist students. It is earnestly requested that the students or friends of the students will communicate with the pastor at the earliest possible moment so that he may get acquainted with the students from the outset. Address him First Baptist Church, Corvallis, Oregon.

REV. R. O. THOMSON, who has held several pastorates in the Alpena Association, and Miss Jennie B. Craig of Millersburg, were married August 24, at the home of the bride. Rev. C. S. Burns of Ypsilanti—spending his vacation in the "Baptist Birches" of the Alpena Church—motored over to perform the ceremony; and, after the sumptuous wedding breakfast, also had the pleasure of taking the happy couple back to Alpena, from whence they went to Mr. Thomson's home for a visit. Mr. Thomson is pastor at Cheboygan.

A VERY SUCCESSFUL EVANGELISTIC CAMPAIGN closed at Wixom August 21, with Rev. J. J. Pease speaker and Richard Nyberg singer. Both these men are of the best—preaching and singing—the old gospel with power. The meetings were held in a large tent with an average attendance of 100 each night. Fifteen were baptized on the last day of the campaign, and several others later. Mr. Nyberg directed a chorus choir of about fifty.

BETHANY CHURCH, PONTIAC, is holding Home Coming week, September 11 to 18. Pastor Thomas B. Marsh on Sunday morning the 11th spoke on the topic the Church's Task and in the evening was "The Church's Resources." On Monday night, the pageant, "From Darkness to Light" was given and the following evenings of the week were devoted to rallies of the Brotherhood, the young people, the women and the Sunday school. A Community Survey is in the plan for the fall work of advancement. Bethany Church will also co-operate in the evangelistic campaign which is planned for southern Michigan early in November.

PASTOR AND MRS. C. S. BURNS with their son Walter spent their vacation—the first, by the way, in six years—in the "Baptist Birches" near Alpena. Fishing and fellowship were the objectives. Of the former twenty-one worth while were landed, and as to the fellowship, Mr. Burns preached one sermon in his former pulpit, and he and Mrs. Burns had the pleasure of entertaining twenty-six Alpena friends for dinner on one occasion. They have returned to their work at Ypsilanti fine and fit for a big program this fall. Burns is certainly one big hustler and the Baptist church is a real factor in the college and normal life of the city.

REV. F. L. CURREY, State Director of Evangelism, is planning for six simultaneous associational campaigns during the coming year—four to be held before the holidays and four between the holidays and the Easter season. Mr. Currey is to hold special services at Dewitt, beginning Sept. 11, and will be assisted by Prof. A. E. Greenlaw, the famous Negro soloist of Detroit.

DAVENPORT, A. F. Houser pastor, Calvary Church, has been busy this entire summer, with five weeks daily vacation Bible school, average attendance, 90; one week our Pastor's Aid at the great Mississippi Valley Fair; five weeks special revival meetings in a big tent, led by Evangelist T. T. Martin, superintendent of the Blue Mountain Evangelistic Association (Miss.), assisted by E. A. Petroff. Many have been converted and will unite with the church as soon as we go back into the church for regular services. The pastor has not taken a vacation this summer nor will he but is open to an invitation to help some fellow pastor in a series of meetings during November. Having been an evangelist fourteen years, he will take this method of resting.

EVANGELIST L. C. BAUER, of Whitehall, has just closed his summer campaign in the South. A two-weeks' meeting with the first Baptist Church of Tuckerman, Ark., was his sixth meeting. There were sixty-one professions, mostly men. Over sixty united with the church. He has an open date after Nov. 20. From October 31 to Nov. 20 he will be with the First Baptist Church of Trenton, Mo.

A Campaign of Evangelism

IN HARMONY WITH THE PLANS of the department of evangelism of the Home Mission Society, the committee on evangelism of the Ohio Baptist Convention has undertaken to organize a series of simultaneous evangelistic campaigns this fall and winter in Ohio. At a meeting in Columbus called by Dr. Millard Brelsford of Cleveland, chairman of the committee, the plans and methods of the movement were outlined in consultation with Dr. Stilwell, superintendent of the department, and Dr. Chambers, secretary of the Ohio Convention. The four district representatives, Hughes of Bucyrus, Enteline of Youngstown, Long of Dayton, and Bowen of Granville were present and rendered helpful assistance. The details and arrangements covering the work to be done were turned over to Rev. C. H. Stull of Marietta, who is now pushing the movement with energy and efficiency.

The plan is one of general exchange of pastors and churches in revival campaigns covering the months of November, January, February and March. The November campaigns will begin November 1 and continue to Thanksgiving Day. Each special local series of meetings would continue not less than two weeks or over two Sundays. Pastors with evangelistic gifts, would come into the Southeast District, to assist the local forces. In their absence, their pulpits would be supplied without cost to them, by the committee on evangelism. The pastors assisted in November by these helpers from various parts of Ohio, would perform a like service in the other districts in January, February or March. All campaigns would be brought to an end by Easter.

The reports coming in are most gratifying, indicating in almost all cases that the movement is a welcome one among the pastors and churches of Ohio. Associations and churches are approving the plan; and pastors and pulpit-supply men are being enlisted for these united efforts in soul winning and kingdom building. Conferences on evangelism, conducted by Dr. Stilwell, will be held preparatory to the district campaigns. The first of these will be held at Zanesville, Oct. 4 and 5. Every pastor and special worker of the Southeast District attending this conference, will enter upon the campaigns of November, strengthened in faith by personal fellowship, filled with inspiration and joy; for he will feel that he has the enlightened sympathies and the united prayers of a host behind him in his efforts to turn many unto righteousness.

PROVIDENCE CHURCH at Hagedorn's Mills: Since last December eleven young people have been received by baptism and in August, three were baptized at East Galway, where the pastor holds an afternoon service. In April a C. E. society of over forty members was organized at the Hagedorn's Mills Church and its work has been maintained with much interest on the part of the young people. E. D. Wooddell, who has been acting as pastor for over a year left the field the first week in September in order to take up work at Newton Theological Seminary.

A MOST REMARKABLE REPORT comes from Riverview, Rev. G. W. Scarberry, pastor. On July 31 the Sunday school attendance was 100 per cent—176 on the roll and 176 present. All the other services, morning and evening, well sustained in spite of hot weather.

REV. W. G. CARL, Braddock, wrote: "We are planning to open aggressive work early this fall. September promises to be a busy month. First week, a reception to young people who are going away to school, arrangements in hands of class of young ladies, Miss Morgan, teacher; September 6, monthly meeting of men's class at home of teacher, W. G. Carl; Sunday, Sept. 11, Grand Fall Rally all day; Sept. 25 to Oct. 9, evangelistic meetings by Shade and McCleery."

REV. A. B. BOWSER, Ford City, reports two new members received during July. Union services were held in the park Sunday evening. The weather was favorable and the audiences were large, a conspicuous proportion Baptists.

REV. A. J. MEEK, New Kensington, recently gave the hand of fellowship to four new members.

REV. A. MEEREIS continues to supply the Slavonian Church at Monaca. A recent service was attended by forty persons. Fifteen dollars has been forwarded to a church in Czecho-Slovakia which lost its building in a fire which practically wiped out the village.

REV. EUGENE NEUBAUER, Elizabeth, had an enjoyable vacation in Iowa, Missouri and Illinois. During his absence the church was renovated, painted and decorated, and presents a most handsome appearance.

JOHNSTON AVENUE CHURCH, Rev. W. Spencer Skinner, pastor, reopened on Sunday, July 31, after having been closed for eight weeks for remodeling. It now has all the appearance of a new building. Both rooms have been enlarged, and the whole church has been made beautiful and attractive. The cost was only $4,500.

SINCE THE MIDDLE OF JULY, fifteen have been baptized by Rev. Stewart M. Smith, pastor of the Donora Church, six of them were young men and seven were young women of the congregation, the remaining two being a father and young daughter. Seven have been received recently by letter.

THE FAREWELL RECEPTION given Rev. A. P. Mihm, Thursday evening, Aug. 25, by Temple Church in the church parlors, was a fitting recognition of the work accomplished during his pastorate and the high esteem in which he is held by the church and the Baptists of Pittsburgh.

REV. J. S. BRAKER spent part of his vacation in Mass., preaching one Sunday. He then joined his family on Long Island where they passed the month of August. Among the supplies of the First Church, McKeesport, were Dr. A. A. DeLarme of Omaha, Nebr., and Dr. J. A. Maxwell of Chester, Pa., both former pastors of the church.

REV. J. A. T. MARSTELLER, Emmanuel, N. S., reports the recent baptism of two Catholics, one Presbyterian and an Episcopalian. During vacation he supplied three Sundays in Washington, D. C.

REV. F. W. STANTON, Knoxville, spent his vacation at Cayuga Lake, Buffalo, Utica, Sidney Center and Smyrna, N. Y. He supplied the Conklin Avenue Church, Binghamton, and the Immanuel Church, Syracuse, having served the latter as pastor for eight years. The church will hold evangelistic meetings in the fall under the leadership of Rev. H. E. Shade.

Collegeville Assembly

The Collegeville Assembly, which met at Ursinus College Aug. 22 to 29, was successful in every way. 175 registered students were in attendance, with many visitors. The courses of instruction had been carefully planned by the assembly's committee of the Education Board, and a faculty of high grade secured. Our educational institutions were well represented by President Evans and Professor Matthews of Crozer Seminary, and Principal Coe of Keystone Academy. From our Publication Society Dr. Tralle, Mr. McGorrell and Mrs. Finn were secured; from other missionary organizations Rev. Will C. Chappell and Miss Helen Crissman; from among our pastors Dr. H. J. Whalen, Rev. J. W. Elliott and Rev. J. Hubbard Morton. The music was under the able leadership of Mr. Norman Hill. Mr. Morton directed the athletic activities, which were thoroughly enjoyed as was a class in hand-work taught by Mrs. McGorrell during the recreation period. The daily vesper services, conducted by Mr. McGorrell with the aid of young people selected by him, added greatly to the spiritual value of the assembly. The Sunday services made a deep impression upon all. Dr. I. G. Matthews preached in the morning. Rev. Lester H. Cleve addressed the afternoon life work meeting and preached the sermon in the evening. There were three decisions for special life service.

lege, in Oklahoma; and instead of having the dedication prayer offered by a single good man of God, a half-circle of six other young people all from the same church, and every one of them dedicated to Christian service, gathered around her and each in turn offered a sincere prayer that God would keep her and use her, and also keep each one in this group and use them in the largest way possible and make them a rich blessing.

The girl to be dedicated was Miss Mary Cook, a graduate of Thiel College, Greenville, Pa.; and she was under appointment to Bacone, our own Indian College of which we are so proud.

After a brief and simple opening service the congregation all stood and sang "From Greenland's Icy Mountains." While the last verse was sung Miss Cook's mother came forward with her to the platform, where the other young people sat with the pastor, and when the hymn was finished she said through her tears: "It is not exactly easy for me to do this, this morning, because I know that it means that my daughter may from now on be far away from us much of the time. But because there is a need, we are glad to present Mary prepared and dedicated to Christian service. May God truly bless and use her is our prayer!"

After the singing of two verses of "The Morning Light is Breaking," Mrs. S. T. Dean, Miss Cook's teacher when she was in the primary department of the church school. She expressed the joy the church feels in sending her into the New World Movement work, and gave an intelligent and sympathetic appeal to Miss Cook simply to follow on after those ambitions she has cherished even since she was seven years old—the ambitions her mother had always been glad to encourage in her.

Miss Cook made a brief response by way of accepting the responsibility laid upon her, and then, the entire group of young people stood together and six sincere and beautiful prayers were offered one after another.

Harry Thomas, who is in Johns Hopkins preparing for medical missionary work, probably in China; Mary Hildebrand, who is in religious educational work, county general secretary of sabbath school work; Elizabeth Obenchain, who is in Chicago Missionary Training School and taking specialized work in kindergarten at the Chicago Kindergarten College, and who is preparing for work in Mexico or Central America; Thomas Cook (brother of Mary Cook), who is in Keystone Academy preparing for the ministry in whatever form seems best, at home or abroad; Gladys May Wineow, who is in Y. W. C. A. work in Minneapolis and who was unable to be present (Miss Helen Lackey offered a prayer in her stead); and Hayden Straight, a graduate of Thiel College in the classical course, now taking his second year of graduate work in the School of Religious Education of Boston University—he will go into the kingdom work as a director of religious education, after taking his "Master" degree this June at Boston.

After these six prayers had been offered the pastor gave invitation for others to consecrate themselves to a life of specialized Christian service at this time if they had really thought and prayed about the matter and were sure that they wished to give themselves to the full leading of the Spirit. The method of consecration was to be for them to add their prayers to those that had been offered. Two prayers were offered: the first by the sister of Miss Mary Cook, a fine consecrated girl who gives good promise of following in her sister's steps; and Leona Bortz, who comes from a sister church, and who is praying that the way may open for her to go into foreign missionary work. At the close of the service and before the service three others declared that they wanted to enter some form of definite Christian service if they could find what it should be.

The pastor preached a brief sermon, and the service closed with that great hymn of Washington Gladden's: "Oh Master, Let Me Walk With Thee."

social evils is still very popular. It does not shock; it soothes. Its eloquence is a kind of celestial chloroform." For example we need go no further back than the anti-slavery agitation, when the kid-glove preacher did not once disturb the peaceful somnambulism which saw no conflict between the religion of Jesus and the owning of human beings as chattels. It is so today, in all the pleas for the church to be prudent, rather than prophetic, and vaguely platitudinous rather than definitely specific in respect to industrial conditions. The kid glove is a symbol of the moral neutrality of the church, which makes the Sunday morning service a symphony concert, and the sermon a dose of opium. Imagine Amos preaching in kid gloves! Imagine John Clifford—the great soldier in the wars of God—failing, or refusing, to handle moral realities with naked hands."

In order to preserve the evangelistic spirit among the members of its faculty the Board of Trustees of the Southwestern Baptist Theological Seminary at Seminary Hill, Texas, has ordered that each instructor must conduct at least two evangelistic meetings each year.

Mr. Karl E. Ansell was ordained on Aug. 29 at the First Church, McPherson, Kans. Rev. Ralph Ingle of Newton was moderator and Rev. W. A. Halladay of Peabody, clerk. Bro. Ansell has had thirty years' experience in Christian work most of the time in Japan, and is connected with the American Bible Society. He will return to Japan. He has two sons in business in Japan and two children in college in this country.

The President of the United States has designated Sunday, November 13, as "Red Cross Sunday," that being the beginning of the week in which the annual solicitation to the American people to renew their membership in the Red Cross organization is due. The request is made that "ministers and priests throughout the land will make some mention to their congregations of the work of the American Red Cross, and will make an appeal to them that they enroll themselves in its membership."

WHAT ONE LIVE CHURCH IS ACCOMPLISHING

A church which is one of the leading forces and influences in the life of a large city certainly stands as a notable exception to the statement that churches are not fulfilling their mission these days. Such a church is the First Baptist of Syracuse, N. Y. Here it was my rare privilege some time ago to spend a Sunday as the guest of Charles M. Courboin, the church's organist.

The service in the morning was in the nature of a memorial, with the unveiling of a tablet in memory of those members of the congregation who gave their lives in the great war. Mr. Courboin insisted on the writer's playing the prelude and postlude—an honor, indeed, in the circumstances. After the prelude Mr. Courboin took his place and "America" was sung, after which the ceremony of unveiling the tablet took place. This concluded with the sounding of "Taps," the bugler being stationed in the echo organ. As he was finishing Mr. Courboin, who always manages to do something unique, gradually closed the echo swell shades, giving an impressive effect of the sound receding in the distance.

We all know Mr. Courboin as a concert organist of the first order, but many of us have not had the privilege of hearing him play a church service. His service playing, as the writer heard it on this Sunday, proved to be on the same high plane of excellence as his concert playing. The service itself was of the average non-liturgical order, but by little touches here and there Courboin made it a thing of beauty and real artistic worth, infusing into it that dramatic element which is so essential to the modern church service, yet never failing to keep the spirit of worship and devotion to the fore.

One instance of this occurred during the prayer. After the pastor had been praying for some moments I was surprised to hear the organ come stealing in, pianissimo, and reflecting, very softly, the various moods of the pastor's utterances, until the Amen. Then, being in the key of the choir response, they came into the situation at once. The effect was one long to be remembered.

The hymns were played with vigor and splendid support was given to the large congregation that sang as I have seldom heard congregations sing. In his choir accompaniments Mr. Courboin gave the singers ample support, but at no time did the organ dominate the anthem.

The choir, consisting of a splendid solo quartet and mixed chorus, rendered Noble's "Souls of the Righteous" in an artistic manner and the quartet sang "Into the Silent Land," by Harvey Gaul, in excellent style. Mr. Courboin does not train the choir. It is under the able direction of Professor Howard Lyman of Syracuse University, and Mr. Courboin is paid a salary the annual amount of which runs into four figures—and the left-hand figures is not a 1—just for playing the service and a recital in the evening. They do things right in this organization.

A live congregation such as this would not be complete without a live pastor to lead it, and the Rev. Bernard C. Clausen fully meets the requirements. Although still a young man, he is a forceful speaker and has a magnetic personality. At the morning service he appeared in the uniform of an officer of the United States Marines, having served his country in that capacity during the war. In the evening he preached to the freshmen of the university. The church was filled, as it was in the morning.

An organ recital was announced for 7:30. But, if you please, this was not one of your ordinary "pre-service" recitals, when the music is supposed to cover up the sound of footsteps and rustling silks as the members of the congregation take their place. Instead, at 7:30 most of the congregation were in their places. The doors were closed and the service began with a short improvisation by Mr. Courboin, starting fortissimo, but gradually diminishing in quantity of tone and leading into the "call to worship," sung by the choir.

After a short invocation by the pastor, Mr. Courboin played his organ recital. The doors were kept closed and no one was allowed to enter except between numbers—another instance of doing things right. His program consisted of the Finale in B flat by Cesar Franck, the Gavotte from "Mignon" by Thomas and the Largo from Dvorak's "New World" Symphony, all played in Mr. Courboin's masterly manner. This plan is followed at every evening service. After the recital a hymn was sung and the service followed the regular order, again with the artistic touches.

Perhaps the most impressive moment of the whole day occurred just before the close of the evening service. There was no hymn after the sermon, but the prayer and benediction followed immediately. During the prayer the lights were gradually extinguished until at the close of the benediction the only light in the church shone through a magnificent stained glass window above and behind the pulpit and choir, the window showing Christ and the evangelists. During the prayer Mr. Courboin improvised in the manner mentioned above, continuing to express in tones the mood of the benediction. During the silent prayer which followed, with no light in the church save that which shone through the window, Mr. Courboin played "Abide With Me" on the chimes, carrying out the thought of the sermon. After the hymn was finished the lights were turned on gradually and Mr. Courboin improvised a few quiet bars of postlude. Theatrical, you say? Decidedly no. But a dramatic and impressive close to a dignified and devotional service, one of the most inspiring and uplifting the writer has ever attended.

One thing that is noteworthy in this organization is the spirit of democracy and good cheer with which the very atmosphere seems charged. Everybody is most cordial to everyone else. The church maintains, among many other activities, a recital commission under whose auspices many of the greatest vocal and instrumental artists have been brought to Syracuse. They recently took in $6,500 from a recital by Galli-Curci. An unusual thing for a church to do, but another proof that there is a place in the scheme of life for the right kind of a church.—ROLLO F. MAITLAND.

The Progress of Work With Children

MEME BROCKWAY

"Come and see our beginners' department." We were in a New Hampshire church, nearly one hundred years old, and I shuddered as they led me toward a basement stairway. "It is impossible to make a modern Sunday school plant out of this ancient structure," my guide said. "But we have done what we could."

We stood in a glorified basement room—bright electric lights, woodwork a soft flesh pink, chairs and tables white, wallpaper designed for children, with birds, squirrels, and flowers appearing here and there.

This church had caught the dominant note of our day—the child must have a place in the church's thought. "Slow of heart" indeed have we been as Christ said, for he put the child in the midst more than nineteen centuries ago.

Christ's words were "Feed my lambs" not "Feed my sheep and let the lambs find a morsel here and there." We are discovering that to obey him we must give the children of different

A certain Western school seemed to be born again when on the same Sunday morning three new departments, Beginners, Primary, and Junior came into existence, where before, a so-called "Main School" and Primary Department had gone on in a monotonous and dwindling way.

Worship must be intelligent. Many elders think that because a song refers to little children it is therefore adapted to their use. Study one favorite, "Hark, tis the shepherd's voice I hear, out in the desert dark and drear, Calling the Lambs that have gone astray, Far from the Shepherd's fold away." Because the refrain urges "Bring the little ones to Jesus" it is used in children's worship, but investigation shows that the underlined words are not understood by children of six. A little lad in West Virginia recently said to his mother "We have an automobile song in our (Baptist) school. We sing 'Oh Mr. Shepherd, throw it on high gear.' I can vouch for this story. Yet some superintendents oppose separate departments, giving as a reason: 'The children sing heartily and evidently enjoy our songs.' But is it worship?"

Our teachers begin to recognize that the Bible contains the most thrilling and dramatic stories in the world if we know how to adapt them to the varying ages and interests of children. Bible storytelling is therefore an art to be acquired, yet one which is in the capacity of the average earnest teacher. Our Publication Society through its periodical and publishing departments and its general and state field workers in the department of religious education offers help in mastering this absolutely essential art.

A little girl in a Western Sunday school once plaintively said to me, "We don't have Bible stories in our class, we just have Bible lessons." Comment is unnecessary.

Another child came to me in a southern church saying eagerly, "I'm going to bring my teacher to this institute so she can learn to draw on the blackboard 'cause she isn't very interesting." Modern methods are coming. The children themselves begin to demand trained teachers. Our brains as well as our hearts must be given to the Master's service.

We frequently hear this statement, "We learned more Scripture in former days." Yet when a pastor in the average church which is made up of people trained in the good old days before graded lessons, says to his congregation, "We will now repeat from memory." You know that he will ask for the Twenty-Third Psalm or the Lord's Prayer! A small residuum surely as proof of better work of bygone years!

Today wherever graded lessons and separate departments have gone, the annual promotion day proves that our boys and girls can say with the psalmist "Thy Word have I hid in my heart."

We are learning to use the God-given instincts of play, imitation, and constructiveness in dramatizing Bible and missionary stories and in making Oriental objects, utensils, and costumes. Thus the life of Bible times becomes very real and its heroes and heroines familiar companions in the thoughts of our children. One wee lad after fashioning a sling and "playing" the story, awoke his mother in the night—"Mother, do you 'spose when I get to heaven David will let me hold his sling a little while?" Materialistic? Yes, it is a child's hero worship.

Our juniors are learning that to devote one week each month to the Crusaders' work enriches their programs. Our churches are beginning to provide unified programs covering the instruction, worship, and expressional activities for each department or period of life.

We are all seeking to lead our pupils to express in deeds the truths taught, and to find their own relationship to kingdom service. A youngster in Maine, sent out by his teacher to live the story, came to her home. "You know how hard it rained. Well, I held my umbrella over a little Italian boy going home. Would that count as a Good Samaritan?"

Perhaps our denomination's greatest progress has been in the discovery that the years before the 'teens offer our choicest opportunity to secure the enlistment of lives for Christ. Recent investigations prove that the majority of those in the Christian service today as ministers and the missionaries received the first impulse to give their lives to their Saviour before they were thirteen. In view of this fact most state conventions and many associations are giving a large place in their program to the presentation of better methods of work with children. Here our pastors and church leaders receive both the vision and the plan. For if we fail to hold, save, and train the childhood of our churches today we shall have few missionaries, few ministers, few leaders, few givers, tomorrow. Our denomination will be doomed and our share in kingdom work unfinished.

As we survey the field, the Sunday school directors of children's work employed in many of our state conventions, and the larger emphasis placed upon this work in institutes and assemblies, we take courage and pray that some day the church of Christ may be able to look up into his face and say, "Here am I and the children thou hast given me."

PASTORS WANTED

WANTED: A young pastor for an attractive country church, near Rochester, N. Y., offering an opportunity to develop a genuine community church program. He should be educated and possessed of a passion to minister to the needs of rural people. With such correspondence is solicited by Rev. Alfred E. Isaac, Executive Secretary of the Baptist Union of Rochester and Monroe County, 300 Alexander street, Rochester, N. Y.

THE CHURCH AT GALWAY, N. Y., is looking for a pastor. The salary has not been definitely fixed, but will probably be $1,000 and parsonage. The church clerk is Mrs. Clayton Chase, Galway, N. Y.

THE CHURCH AT WAMEGO, KANS., wants a pastor. One of the members writes: "We have a nice town and church building, good schools and a good surrounding country." Miss Louise Childers is church clerk.

EVANGELISTIC SINGER

Mrs. CLARA CRESSEY MINGUS, of Sioux Falls, S. D., has made arrangements whereby she is available for musical work in connection with evangelistic services. Rev. Walter Ingram, of Mitchell, writes that Mrs. Mingus has assisted him in a number of meetings as chorus leader, soloist and personal worker, and always with abundant success. He most heartily recommends her to churches desirous of such help and pastors and evangelists will make no mistake in securing her services.

PASTORAL SUPPLY

REV. GEO. B. HOPKINS, OF FREEPORT, ILL., will supply pulpits, either for one or two Sundays or regularly, provided the churches can be reached from Freeport without more expense than can be well paid. Very little remuneration is expected. Bro. Hopkins supplied for the Rockford and Freeport churches during the summer.

MISCELLANEOUS

THE CITY OF BELLEVUE, OHIO, 6000 inhabitants, is in need of a good Baptist physician. Anybody interested may write for particulars to Rev. A. G. Adrians, pastor of the First Baptist Church, Adrians.

THE BAPTIST has several requests for copies of the report of the special committee on the schools which was given at Des Moines. James L. Gilmour, McMaster University, Toronto, Can., is very anxious to secure a copy. Who will send him one?

THE RUTH SCHOOL FOR GIRLS, 3034 East 68th St., Seattle, Wash., is in immediate need of a superintendent. The school is supported mainly by the evangelical churches of Seattle. Its aim is to provide a Christian home with careful training rather than making it an institution for correction. An active Christian, under forty years of age, is desired. The school is small but has a complete plant with a capacity for thirty-five girls. All applications should be addressed to Mrs. E. M. Lang, Secretary, and should state fully the applicant's experience, training, references and salary desired.

HOUSE OF SIMON THE TANNER

TRADITION locates with confidence many of the sacred places of the Bible and may be right sometimes. This is reported to be the house on whose top Peter saw the vision of the great sheet let down from heaven. How many feet have trod those stones!

Fresh from the Field

About 120 Chinese students arrived in Chicago, September 8, by special train direct from San Francisco. Approximately one-half of this group are recipients of the Boxer Indemnity Fund, the remainder being supported by provincial or private funds. The Student Department of the Young Men's Christian Association of Chicago in co-operation with the Chinese Students' Club, Chinese Y. M. C. A. and other organizations gave a reception to these students at the Y. M. C. A. Hotel.

Rothway Church, Montana, was small and almost dead. But a loyal member reports: "This spring, thank God! we have won a great victory over the devil. We had seven conversions; four were baptized and joined the church, two by letter and seven backsliders. Although we are unable to support a pastor, we now have a Sunday school, a sermon reading on Sunday morning, B. Y. P. U. in the evening, prayer meeting on Thursday." And she adds that it is getting too dark to see or she would tell more about it. She lives thirty miles from a railroad and THE BAPTIST is her only reading. Such a report adds value to an editor's life.

Singing Evangelist Wm. S. Dixon, Wheaton, Ill., assisted in a union tent campaign during August, in Payson, Ill. Two large choirs featured in the campaign. The booster choir of boys and girls on each Saturday night drew crowds for many miles around. Pastors desiring Mr. Dixon's assistance in campaigns may reach him at Wheaton.

The Norwegian Baptist Divinity House which for many years has been affiliated with the Divinity School of the University of Chicago has terminated that relation and has become affiliated with The Northern Baptist Theological Seminary of Chicago. Prof. Henrik Gundersen will remain as the dean of the department and will also become a professor of Greek New Testament in the Northern Seminary, when the fall term opens, Sept. 14.

The enrollment of theological students in the seminaries of many communities located in and near Boston will show a decided increase this fall. Officers of Boston University School of Theology report that the largest entering class, 115, ever enrolled has already signed for admission, and accommodations at the school are so crowded that the authorities closed registration four weeks ago. The School of Religious Education, which offers undergraduate as well as graduate work, also reports increasing enrollment. A large number of students enrolled for foreign missions work, and this influx is significant in view of the fact that the board of foreign missions of the Methodist Episcopal Church and the Women's Foreign Missionary Society are asking for 600 new missionaries each year for the next five years, and foreign boards of other religious bodies are making similar requests.

When a Times reporter asked Admiral Sims if it was true that he was a supporter of America's dry policy, says the International Record, of Birmingham, England, he replied: "In favor of the dry policy, you ask? Oh, absolutely and wholeheartedly." "And what is your opinion as to how it is working?" the reporter asked. "It is working all right. Of course, there is a good deal of smuggling, but I don't suppose there is one-half of one per cent of the alcohol consumed now that was consumed before the dry law came into force. But our great claim as Prohibitionists is that it has shut up the schools of future drunkards, the saloons and clubs. We have saved the rising generation from the drink."

Lapland has had a heat wave, says a Spitzbergen dispatch. The thermometer is at 86 degrees at times and the Eskimos have laid away their fur garments and are bathing. Reindeer and wild game are suffering from the excessive heat.

Senator France of Maryland, who recently returned from a visit to Russia, strongly urges the resumption of trade relations with the Soviet government. The senator insists that the government of Lenine is no longer "red"; that it is ready and anxious to welcome foreign capital.

As an offset to the terrible "Plantation Pictures" recently published in the Atlantic Monthly, the Congregationalist tells of a secretary of the American Missionary Association who attended a conference of about 500 negro farmers in North Carolina, 85 per cent. of whom own their own land. The secretary also addressed about 4,000 pupils in Congregational schools, and found them "as finely dressed, as well behaved, as vivacious," as any white school. He says the difference between the desperate condition of the negroes described in the Atlantic and that of those he describes is contained in the one word, "education."

On his way to his office the other day, according to a story in an exchange, the President stopped to watch the painters engaged in making the White House white. "Let me show you how to do that," he said, jokingly taking a brush from the hands of one of the workmen. After watching the President lay on a few strokes the painter complimented him by asking where he learned the trade. "On the day President Garfield was shot, I got my first contract," said the President. It was for painting a Baptist church near Marion, and I did it too," said the President.

The report of the Council of Church Boards of Education is generally taken as indicating the degree of interest taken by the various denominations in the education of their young people. The last report is not very encouraging to Baptists. The number of college students per 100,000 of membership, indicates that Congregationalists have in the tax-supported institutions of the country 1200 students for each 100,000; Presbyterians, 1030; Unitarians, 1,000; Episcopalians, 900; Disciples, 600; Methodists, 500; Lutherans, 300; Baptists, 200. And even at that, the Baptist showing is better than it was. It should be remembered also that we have an increasing number of young people from Baptist homes in our denominational colleges.

Prof. Wm. M. Ramsey, authority on the life and travels of Paul, whose coming to this country was recently announced, is scheduled to lecture at the Newton Theological Institution in October.

In Illinois, as in many other states, there has been since the war a determined effort to revive prize-fighting. Largely through the efforts of the Chicago Church Federation a prize-fight bill was defeated this last winter. And Baptists may take pride in the fact that no small amount of the work against this bill was done by Dr. Melbourne P. Boynton, pastor of the Wodlawn Church, Chicago.

The opening chapel address at the Northern Baptist Theological Seminary, Chicago, was given on Friday, Oct. 16, by Rev. Albert G. Johnson, of the class of 1918, on the subject, "The Minister and His Method," and was an exceedingly helpful and practical deliverance. There are seventy students now enrolled at the seminary and the indications are that by the end of the first month this will be increased to seventy-five.

Mr. and Mrs. Edwin W. Stephens of Columbia, Mo., will on Sept. 26 observe the fiftieth anniversary of their marriage. Rich in years, Mr. and Mrs. Stephens are even richer in the esteem and affectionate regard of the Baptist hosts. THE BAPTIST is glad to add its felicitations to the many others which will be received on this occasion.

After a pastorate of ten years, Rev. B. D. Stelle, pastor of the First Church, Upland, Pa., recently resigned to accept the call of the First Church, Kennett Square, where he begins work on Oct. 2. The Upland Church is attended by many Crozer students to whom he has been a most acceptable preacher. His activities have reached in the community far beyond his church.

In accordance with the findings of a regularly-called council, Paul E. Alden was on Sept. 2 ordained by the Pleasant Street Church, Concord, N. H. The sermon was preached by Rev. Geo. E. Whitehouse, of Williamstown, Mass., an uncle of the candidate. Other parts were taken by Prof. Woodman Bradbury, Rev. Walter C. Myers, Rev. D. S. Jenks, Rev. J. H. Robbins and Rev. P. A. Kilmister. Mr. Alden is a graduate of Newton in the last class and recently became pastor of the Pleasant Street Church.

Rev. A. A. Forshee, from 1902-7 and from 1908-11 a missionary in the Philippines, later a pastor in Boston and New York, and for the last year field representative and exhibit secretary of conventions and conferences of the General Board of Promotion, became on Sept. 15 minister in charge of the Second Avenue Church, New York City. This church is a center of the New York City Baptist Mission Society ministering to Americans, Poles, Italians, Estonians, Russians and Chinese, and presents a great field for real mission work. However difficult the situation may be his hosts of friends are certain that "Archie" will make good in it.

Rev. R. T. Craig, after five years successful service at the Winthrop Street Church, Taunton, Mass., accepts the call of the First Church, Des Moines, Iowa. Pastor Craig leaves a strong church and takes another strong church; and he has proved his ability both in pulpit and parish, to fill the pulpit and to bring things to pass.

In 1914 some 7,000,000 people in the United States were out of employment, while today, according to Secretary of Labor Davis, the number of such is 5,735,000. Moreover, of this present number not more than one-third are the principal breadwinners of families. Such statistics are encouraging comparatively, but they also indicate that there is need of the utmost effort if the winter is to be

The Need Supplied

How gladly men and women respond to the calls to service when those calls reach them in definite form! A few weeks ago we told, in this Kollum, of a worthy pastor and former superintendent of state missions who felt compelled by straightened circumstances due to infirmity to forego the weekly visits of THE BAPTIST. Ipswich, S. D., has the honor of responding first and our good friend will not be deprived of his paper. Our new service department will furnish an opportunity for a much more extended service to our church folks.

Killam's Kollum

They All Say So.

"We are more and more favorably impressed with THE BAPTIST throughout the state and feel that the future for it is very promising."—Dr. Walter I. Fowle, Secretary of the Nebraska Baptist Convention. If all the states had made the strides that Nebraska has made in subscription getting we would be well over the half-way mark of the 100,000 circulation.

A Wiser and Poorer Editor.

Do the children read THE BAPTIST? Miss Apple-garth says so. Here is a letter from the editor of the Children's Corner under date of Sept. 4. "I hope that you have been observing my mail lately. I've been deluged with absolutely correct answers to a Young Reserve contest that has been going on the last six weeks. I sent twenty-eight names to you in the material mailed this morning, and now I have six names which I must add to that list. It is the most amusing thing that ever happened to me, as I originally provided three prizes for the three best lists; but with everybody sending in "best lists" I have had to widen and widen until I have gotten thirty-four prizes! A wiser and poorer editor you now have for your Chimney Corner. But I liked the response."

Which is Which?

A subscriber, who is apparently summering in Estes Park, writes us out of the meditations of this mountain fastness. He says: "You are engaged in an impossible task of trying to reconcile the two factions in the Baptist denomination. 'Thou shalt not plow with an ox and an ass together.' Quit it." The writer is probably much better versed in the scriptures than the editor of this Kollum. We confess that we need an interpreter. Which is which? We have had some experience with the brutes named. Is there anything in the world more bull-headed than the former? You may "Haw" and "Gee" until you are hoarse but he stolidly follows his own sweet will. The long eared team-mate has some good qualities as doth the ox. He will swallow almost anything. To our disgust we have seen him turn from the manger to eat refuse with all the marks of keen enjoyment. If THE BAPTIST believed that the denomination it represents had the characteristic of either or both it would despair of moving the load. Thank God, there are a million pairs of human hands energized by a million hearts which would reverence God, obey Christ and serve humanity in his name. This is the team that will bring us at last to our objectives. There may be differences among us but our denomination cannot be divided into two camps—saints and sinners or oxen and mules.

passed without serious discomfort and even suffering on the part of many.

Rev. R. D. Licklider, formerly of Hammond, Ind., has begun his pastorate with the Memorial Church, Fresno, Cal., and finds the services largely attended. Recently Dr. Ray Palmer conducted a three-weeks' revival campaign with his church and then remained during the summer, making four months' service in all, during which time he baptized twenty-seven converts and received nineteen others. The church has the sincerest appreciation of the service he rendered.

A conference to consider the enforcement of the prohibition laws, will be held at the Great Northern Hotel, Chicago, Nov. 29-30. The evening meeting of the first day will be under the auspices of the Prohibition Foundation and delegates from the World Anti-Alcoholic Congress recently held in Switzerland will speak. Attendance of all who believe in enforcement is urged.

Rev. Drew T. Wyman, long time pastor in Massachusetts, has been called to the church at Westminster. He will bring to the field rich experience and an efficient leadership.

Rev. C. A. McAlpine of New York City, director of the advertising work of the N. B. C., addressed the Bloomington, Ill., Association on Sept. 8 on the subject, "Religious Publicity." The speaker asked three questions. First, has the church something to advertise? He answered this by saying that religion is the greatest thing in the world. Second, is religion susceptible to advertising? Here he stressed the point that advertising has demonstrated that selling ideas can be done as effectively as the selling of things that are secondary to service. Third, how can the church advertise? By the use of the press, by booklets, wayside pulpits and circular letters. He said that "a million dollars spent in conveying the positive message by the Baptist churches to the world would yield immeasurable returns."

The First Church, Parker's Prairie, Minn., will on Oct. 31, lose the services of its pastor, Rev. T. P. John, after four years of fruitful work. When Mr. John began work with this church there were many unpaid bills and aid was being received from the state convention. Today all bills are paid and the church is self-supporting. A new parsonage has been erected at a cost of $5500; the church building has been renovated, stained glass windows installed and other improvements made. The New World Movement received hearty support. Mr. and Mrs. John will spend a few months with their daughter in Rochester, Minn., before undertaking another pastorate. The Parker's Prairie Church will be pleased to hear from brethren seeking a field where good work can be done. The chairman of the pulpit committee is Mr. A. J. Campbell, First National Bank, Parker's Prairie.

Resolutions adopted by the St. Louis Baptist Pastor's Conference state that, owing to ill health, Rev. E. A. Main has resigned as pastor of the Watch Tower Church, after six years' work. During this time the membership has grown from 100 to 500; the Sunday school from an enrollment of ninety to one of 500, and the prayer meetings from eighty to one

Why Not Have Some Fun?

LET'S have some fun! The appeal is universal and the response is equally general.

People seek their fun in different ways. To some the word suggests nothing but sporting and gambling. To others it means the joy of the woods or the mountains or the sea. Some find there is fun in making and hoarding money and others in spending money. Some find it in reading or in writing or in painting. Others discover it in service.

In the story of Russell H. Conwell, told in a recent number of the American Magazine, he opens his heart to public view in order that he may help others find one of the finest sources of lasting joy. At Christmas, John D. Rockefeller sent him a check for $1000. He thus tells what he did with it.

"When I opened the envelope and found it, I said to myself: 'Here's a thousand dollars that I hadn't expected at all. How can I have the most fun with it?' Well, I went over to the dean of Temple University and asked him for the names of six boys who had been forced to drop out for lack of money; I gave a hundred to each, and they were able to finish the year. Then I thought of a poor, old widow out on the edge of the city, who had been sick, and was not able to pay even the pitiful little rent for her tiny cottage. So I rode out there and paid her rent for two years in advance—$200 a year—and took the receipt and gave it to her as a Christmas gift. Talk about satisfaction! Why, I sang all the way back to my home. You asked me whether money can help to make old age happy, and I tell you with all my heart that it can—provided you don't keep it, provided you don't hold on to it for your children to quarrel about after you are dead, or covet and scheme for even before you are dead! What a fool a man is to leave a great fortune to his children! Of the 4,043 millionaires whose lives I have studied, 3,708 began life without a dollar. Some statistics compiled years ago in Massachusetts show that not one rich man's son out of 117 ever dies rich. The money you hoard impoverishes you, but the money you give away—it blesses old age like the cool shade of a tree."

Years ago, in the writer's college days, Dr. George Dana Boardman Pepper stopped him one day on the campus and after inquiring about the state of his pocket-book asked him to come to his house that afternoon. At that time he told the student that a nameless layman had put into his hands a small sum of money to distribute among needy and deserving students. The amount given at this time was only fifteen dollars, but it represented to the student all the difference between relative comfort in which to do his work and acute hardship. The giver, as was learned years later, was Chester W. Kingsley, of Cambridge, Mass., who found a lot of fun in anonymous giving to students.

Dr. Conwell has discovered the same joy. His salary and lectures yield him a large income each year. But he gives every cent of it, above his actual expenses, to poor boys who are trying to work their way through college. He has thus helped more than 3000 young men.

The secret these men have learned is worthy of imitation. Many men and women would find a new joy in life if they did something definite to help poor, worthy boys and girls to a college education. If one does not know such people directly, the president of any of our institutions can point them out. The time to begin is now in these days of the opening of schools and colleges. There may even be discoverable boys and girls who are looking with vast sorrow at college gates closed to them because of lack of funds. Why not have some fun in helping them?

Points in the President's Message

NATURALLY and properly, THE BAPTIST is disposed to give respectful attention and sympathetic interest to any communication which the President of the Northern Baptist Convention may present to the denomination, and to assure her of the utmost measure of co-operation and support that may be practicable.

In this issue of THE BAPTIST will be found a message from her to the constituency of the convention containing three recommendations that seem to her to be vital to the work of the denomination.

The first is a call to prayer. In no spirit of mere pietism and with no lazy thought of throwing back upon God responsibilities which he has laid upon us, but considering only the deep sources and large factors of power which the denomination must utilize if it is ever to meet successfully the call of God and humanity in these days, the Baptists of the North ought to respond to her request on this point. A resort together to God is the source of our strength, the way to unity and the hope of victory.

Her second recommendation for a renewed rally of all of our people to carry to completion the program of the New World Movement, is so obvious that it may be accepted as a prophecy of what the denomination is going to do. Whatever difference in the angle of view may exist among the several Baptist papers published in the North, whether general papers, state papers or bulletins, on this point they speak with united voice; and "Forward!" is their united word.

Her third suggestion that pre-convention meetings of all kinds be omitted and that all interests of the denomination be provided for in the regular program of the convention must be referred to the brethren who arrange such conferences and to the program committee of the convention. These conferences have served valuable ends. Whether those ends could have been served better in other ways will never be known, because we know only the way we have actually tried. But the drawbacks to such conferences are also obvious. They exhaust both energy and interest that are needed in the convention. And if they happen to be controversial, they leave their participants in a state of mind hardly fit to enter with goodwill into the convention's work.

It will be remembered that the West Washington Board of Promotion, within whose territory the next meeting of the convention is to be held has issued an earnest appeal to all who have anything to do with making the program for that meeting to omit pre-convention conferences of every sort.

Mrs. Montgomery's suggestion that every important section of our denominational life as regards both doctrine and policy be given fair representation on the program of the convention is so clearly right that nobody will dissent from it. One ought to be able to presume that no program makers for the convention either past or future would disregard it.

If any question needs investigation, the convention itself possesses the requisite machinery for making legitimate inquiries and reaching settled conclusions. So the school question was settled. So the question of creedal gifts is in process of settlement.

Stingless Discussion

DISCUSSION need not prove divisive provided it is carried on in the right way. The recent convention of the Disciples at Winona Lake, of which THE BAPTIST published an account recently, is a case in point. At this meeting some most delicate questions were brought before the assembly, and the Christian Century says, "there is nothing to regret." It continues in this strain:

"Whether the multitude arrived at right or wrong decisions is beside the point. In the long run they will arrive at right decisions. The success of the discussions this year arose from some very simple considerations. The business was carried on according to Rules of Order. The chairman had the courage to gavel down personalities, no matter how soundly conservative the speaker might be, and to uphold the right of any speaker to express his opinion no matter how heretical he might be. When democracy functions through proper machinery and is held to proper rules, it may discuss anything under the sun and gain only good from it. A convention forum is a far better thing than a partisan "congress" where only one side has the right of speech. Under a policy of free speech and no favors, the Disciples may hope to resolve their inner differences, so long acute, in a few years. They will never all think alike, but discussion will help them to understand each other. Without this understanding Christian brotherhood is quite impossible."

THE BAPTIST believes that what is here said of the Disciples is equally true of Baptists and of every other body which is democratically organized. Open disputed questions to debate, let all sides have courteous and generous hearing, let the talk go on until there is a real understanding of the issues and until each side gets the viewpoint and attitude of the other, and the way is open to Christian brotherhood and co-operation.

Our present danger is that we shall do our talking in groups, and that the different elements in the denomination will not get together face to face to discuss questions in which all have the most intense interest. In some way this should be avoided in the future. Big questions, whether of doctrine or policy, should come before gatherings which are representative of the entire denomination and there be considered in all their bearings. No true Baptist will have any fear of the result when this is done.

Are You Helping to Fill the Ship?

THE filling of the ship which this winter will carry clothing to the needy people of Poland, Czechoslovakia and Latvia is getting under way in earnest. That is to say, people and churches everywhere are getting together the goods and putting them into such condition that they can be shipped the moment directions are given. We expect to see a steady stream of boxes and bundles flowing into New York when the word is spoken.

The needs are not exaggerated. Every additional first-hand report confirms and even exceeds what has been said. There is certain to be much suffering in Europe during the coming winter. But the volume of needless suffering can be greatly reduced if Northern Baptists share their abundance with those who lack almost everything. To keep what we do not need while others suffer is not Christian.

Certainly there is no need of urging our churches and women's circles to participate in this gift. Those who do not will feel very lonely. Read again the statement of needs as published in this issue, and then hasten to do your generous part to "fill a ship in fellowship."

Is the Church Killing the Prophets?

SOMETIME the world will know how much it is indebted in these hard and reactionary days to the Church League for Industrial Democracy, for the courageous advocacy by that body of the social ideals and principles of Christianity. In one of the League's recent pieces of advertising William Spofford tells "why young men are leaving the regular ministry." His account of the matter runs in the following strain:

"There is always a minority of men in every (graduating) class who feel that their education has made them debtors to society. Their one desire is to repay, and they measure their success by what they can give to society rather than what they can get from it. Now these men are not going through college these days without being made to realize that the big problems are economic and industrial, no matter how much their professors may pussyfoot on the subject."

They come to consider their life work with a clear perception that a fundamental social change is necessary, as Mr. Spofford thinks, but when they attempt to carry their ideals into the ministry, they find themselves "either tolerated as dreamers or kicked out as trouble makers by selfish men who crush idealism wherever they see it, and prevent clergymen from working for that better society" which is portrayed in the Lambeth manifesto of the Episcopal Bishops. Consequently they recoil from the ministry and seek other opportunities for Christian service.

It will be remembered that the great address of Dr. John M. Moore, in the Northern Baptist Convention at Des Moines, presented a similar reason for the scarcity of candidates for the ministry; and we are called therefore to reflect upon the conclusions of sober, thoughtful and widely observant men in their most earnest moods.

Is it true that a young minister who, in the spirit of Christ, intelligently applies the teaching of the gospel to the economic and industrial problems of the times is antagonized by selfish men in the churches so as to discourage his ideals and render his efforts futile? If so, the apostasy of the times is far more general and fundamental than most people realize. And careful observation in actual experimental contact with men will reveal some measure at least of truth in the complaint.

The case is easily tested. Civilization stands at the crossroads where a choice must be made between plutocracy and democracy. The church has a vital interest in the choice and a plain duty to perform in preparing the minds of the people to choose rightly. But will the church permit its pastor to show fully and frankly what the issue is, why this choice must be made, how much depends upon it and what the Christian ought to do? Not always. Many an influential church member will resent even the simple and obvious statement of facts presented in this paragraph, and will wish to be rid of the editor who has written it.

The minister who is content to be merely a clergyman may find little difficulty in following the path of ecclesiastical routine. But we are considering here the case of the prophetic ministry, the task of the seer, the interpreter, the pioneer, the guide; and the prophet of God meets today the same stupidity, selfishness, narrowness, bigotry, prejudice and antagonism that have always been his portion on earth. The Roman Catholic Church reports that it has no lack of candidates for the ministry. Of course it does not; it is calling for clergymen. Certain groups of Protestants that confine their ministry to the well-known and beaten road of individualism and ignore the great problems of social ethics, say that they find plenty of volunteers for their type of work. Why should they not? The world calls, applauds and cheerfully pays for a ministry that knows how to save souls without disturbing "interests." But between prophets and profiteers there is everlasting war; and a society that can get along admirably with clergymen may find it necessary to kill off its prophets.

The true prophet does not require an ecclesiastical office nor a salary in order to perform his ministry. No sympathy need be wasted upon young men who are driven out of church pulpits by antagonism to their message on the part of church leaders; for they are still, if they ever were, seers and spokesmen of God; and such men are needed in business, in the professions and in the ranks of labor.

Whatever clerical dearth may appear, there were never more of God's messengers in secular occupations than now; and the call to serve God and humanity there is as sacred as any pulpit or altar. Moreover a change is going on in the churches, and there is likely to be in the near future a strong demand, a great and divine call voiced by the churches themselves, for ministers who can interpret the gospel socially and can lead in the Christianization of all life individual and social, in spirit and order.

Remember that the suppression of the social message of the gospel is not general. Here and there ignorance, inertia, stubbornness and malicious craftiness appear. But such obstacles rouse a brave man to battle. To venture into the pastoral office or the work of an evangelist, missionary or teacher in the face of such difficulties, to be sure of one's message, to form a strong alliance with God, to stick, to find a way to secure a hearing, to overcome prejudice to dispel ignorance, to shock stupidity into interest and action, to win good will, to defeat craft by transparent integrity—all this constitutes a finer adventure than knighthood ever knew. Strong men, trained men, men of the Christly temper, athletes of the soul, be assured that the world offers you no better field in which to spend your lives than the regular ministry of the churches, and no freer forum than the pulpit of a Baptist church.

Let Hand Touch Hand in Baptist Work

ACTION taken by Lorain Association at Medina, Ohio, August 31, withdrawing its support from the Northern Baptist Convention, as reported in the letter of Rev. J. W. Weddell, in THE BAPTIST of September 17, seems not to be so united and conclusive as it might be.

The Women's Department, as reports indicate, refused to follow the lead of the general body, resolved, "That our Women's Missionary Society of the Lorain Baptist Association express its warm sympathy and cordial co-operation with our national Baptist women's work," and also passed a resolution commending the social missionary work of Rev. and Mrs. Samuel Bawden in India.

Reports indicate also that a proposal is under consideration to form a new association of churches desiring to co-operate with the Northern Baptist Convention.

Have the doctrinal differences agitating the association affected their evangelistic efficiency? While the denomination as a whole during the past year showed a large net gain in membership, Lorain Association, as the records show, suffered a net loss of 156 members. The average ratio of baptisms to membership throughout the North was one to twelve; but in Lorain Association it was one to twenty-two. That is, with a membership at the beginning of the year of 1951, the number of baptisms was eighty-nine.

According to the local papers, the First Church of Elyria, the strongest in the association, gave $12,000 to missions and benevolences last year, and none of it through the Northern Baptist Convention.

THE BAPTIST has no disposition to dictate a policy for any group of Baptists, but it hopes that the brethren of the Lorain Association may find a way to support the work of their own denomination, as regularly carried on by the co-operating societies of the Northern Baptist Convention.

The Kingship of Christ. III—Christ and Industry

*What does the Lord's Prayer mean? Can Christ conquer industry?
Has God two sets of morals? Can you get a man's best for cash?
Is the Golden Rule Utopian? Must one be a hog to make pig iron?*

By SAMUEL ZANE BATTEN

MAN AS we know him has certain constant and imperious needs. He needs food, shelter and clothing. Civilized man in modern society has in addition, other needs no less urgent, as a home, tools and money. These needs must be met if man is to live in this world. The only people we know as members of the kingdom of God, are real people who eat food, wear clothes, cultivate the ground, build houses and co-operate in various ways.

In the Lord's Prayer, men are taught to pray that God's name may be hallowed, his kingdom may come, and his will be done,—on earth as in heaven. Then implied and involved in this are certain requests that have reference to man and society. The first of these deals with the primary need of man; "Give us day by day our daily bread." It is therefore God's will that his children have sufficient bread for their lives.

But God follows a law and method in this work of feeding his children. Nothing is given to man ready made and nothing comes to him without labor. As society progresses there must be a division of labor, and some men will till the ground, others will mine the coal, still others will transport commodities or distribute these to the people. Thus God gives men bread by furnishing the soil and seed, the rain and sunshine, and sending men to cultivate the ground and make the bread. He ordains the end—daily bread for all—and he ordains the means—labor and trade.

What the Industrial Order Is

The industrial order includes all of the factors that enter into the production and manufacture, the sale and distribution of commodities. It includes the services of the farmer and miller, of the miner and trader; but quite as truly it includes the services of the merchant and storekeeper, the errand boy and the banker; in fine, all the arrangements and processes by which men are fed and clothed.

The Christ has come to save the world (John 12:47); the world can be saved as it accepts Christ as Saviour and King. The person is saved as he accepts Christ as Saviour and possesses his spirit. The social order, that is men in their associated life, can be saved as it comes under the dominion of Christ's law and realizes his purpose. It is here, in the social order, that the spirit of selfishness is most manifest and the gospel of Christ meets its severest opposition. Men are willing to have their souls saved by Christ's Cross; but they are not willing to organize their industrial life by his law. If the Spirit of Christ can conquer at this point of industry it can conquer all along the line. If it fails here it has not succeeded anywhere. Men are trying to live a divided life; they are trying to save their personal life for the kingdom and are allowing the industrial order to remain unredeemed. If we can bring industry under the dominion of Christ's cross, we can solve all other questions as they arise. If industry must remain unredeemed as now, our efforts in behalf of the kingdom will be forever thwarted. The redemption of all life is implicated in the redemption of the industrial order.

Accepting Christ's Spirit as the Law of Industry

The law of the spirit of life in Jesus Christ is the law for all relations and institutions of man's life. There is one God who is over all; the universe is one; there is one King and so one law for the kingdom. The King's writ runneth everywhere. There can be no exemption for anything above the sky or under the earth. The law of God, because it is a divine law, is universal in its sweep and absolute in its requirements. It is the law for angels, for men, for railroads and halls of legislation, for governmental cabinets and international treaties. There are not two kinds of law, the moral law of God that is binding upon the prayer meeting, and another kind of law that applies to factories and governments. Neither are there two kinds of righteousness, one for the holy church and the missionary society, and a different kind of righteousness for the political state and the industrial corporation. The law of the Cross is not some esoteric word of religion, some special legislation that applies to some special realms of life. By the nature of the case, being a divine law, it must be the law of all life, in heaven or earth, in the church, in the state. To attempt to rule Christ out of any realm of life is treason against the kingdom of God; to accept any other law than Christ's for any interest of society is the denial of all real faith in God.

The law of Christ requires the same kind of conduct in all realms and relations of life. This law asks men to be brothers. This law asks men to be brotherly and unselfish in the church service and in the commercial corporation. The railroad is no more free to plan for dividends alone than the missionary society. The political party is no more free to forget the Golden Rule than the prayer meeting. It is as bad to be mercenary in the store as in the family circle. One is no more free to be selfish in bargains and sales than in missionary contributions. The mind of Christ which imposes the obligation to bear one another's burdens, applies to the mill equally with the church. The strong are to bear the infirmities of the weak and not to please themselves, not only in the prayer room, but in the industrial system. The Eternal God whose is the Kingdom and the power and the glory, cannot have one kind of law for the house of prayer and a different kind of law for the place of trade. The mind of Christ is to be possessed by all classes and conditions of men, by merchants and customers, by traders and farmers, by employers and employees, by voters and legislators.

Bringing Industry Under the Sway of Christ's Motive

The supreme thing in Christianity is the spirit and motive. The industrial order approximates the kingdom of God as the Christian ideal finds expression in it and through it, as it is ruled by the Christian spirit and motive and attains Christian relations and results.

Industry is an institution through which men co-operate in serving one another. It does not exist for self-interest; its function is that of social service. Men are under precisely the same obligation to serve one another and seek one another's good in industry as in the missionary society; they are no more free to work for personal gain and personal enrichment in industry than in the church. This is Christ's standard for all life, and there is no other.

In some relations and spheres of life we recognize the principle of service and test conduct by its standards. In the family each lives for the common good, and power is held not for self or gain, but to give joy and strength to all. The mother serves out of love and not by compulsion; to introduce the money standard is to dishonor everything. The family is a field of service and all expect to serve in it. The same is true of the church. In this fellowship men learn to take thought for the common good and in honor prefer one another. Whatever gifts and talents one may have are consecrated to the church and its work. It is the glory of the medical profession also that it refuses to capitalize a beneficent remedy, but makes the formula public. It is the glory of scholarship that it refuses to coin its gains into gold but holds them in trust for mankind.

The motive of service is the one motive that can bring the largest results in industry. It has been assumed that men must have some financial incentives to do their best; that to destroy the hope of large rewards to the individual is to cut the nerve of effort. But this is a slander upon human nature and is unworthy of any Christian man. It assumes that men in one realm of life, whatever they may be in other realms, are supremely selfish and will not work hard except for personal advantage. Business is a social interest and must serve society.

Best Motives Serve Best Work

To regard industry as a means of personal advantage is to miss its whole meaning and function; to use it for making gain for oneself is to lay profane hands upon this sacred institution. We all admit that the profit motive degrades the work of the artist, the physician, the minister, the missionary. We must now say that the profit motive degrades no less the making of pig iron, the running of a railroad, the baking of bread, the plans of a corporation; and make industry a true fellowship of service in which men will vie with one another in doing their best and making the largest contribution to social well being.

We must expect men to serve in business and industry for the welfare of all as they serve in family and church. We must socialize the whole industrial order in its processes, methods and results, and make it serve and seek the whole welfare of society. This is no more Utopian than the Golden Rule and the Cross of Calvary. It is just as certain and inevitable as Jesus Christ and the kingdom of God.

Industry is a means through which men are to seek the kingdom of God. There are certain kingdom ends that men are to seek through the church and the family; there are other kingdom ends, no less essential, that they are to seek through the state and through industry. But men are under precisely the same obligation to seek kingdom ends through industry as through the church. The special ends that they are to seek in industry are of course different from those they seek through the church; for each represents special needs of man and different aspects of the kingdom. But the ends they seek are to be kingdom ends; and they all are included in the will of God.

Seeking Christ's Ends in Industry

It is the Father's will that his children shall have daily bread. In seeking this kingdom end,—daily bread, we are pledged to seek an industrial order wherein every person can earn and eat his daily bread without scantiness and without anxiety.

This commits us to a very definite task. We must see that every man has fair opportunity to work and that he receives the equivalent of his toil. We must see that every person has a living income. The churches have affirmed as a part of their social faith: "A living wage as the minimum in every industry, and the highest wage that each industry can afford."

We must therefore seek such an industrial system as shall give men fair access to the earth and to insure every person full economic opportunity. Society must guarantee fair, free action between man and man. More than that, society must so supervise the whole process of industry as to prevent the exploitation of the life and labor of any.

Another essential kingdom end is security of life. Man is here in an unfinished world and is therefore subject to hazard and danger. Modern industry with its use of cosmic forces entails risk of injury to the workers. In this world of storm and drought some of man's plans will miscarry and his crops will fail. But it is necessary for society to reduce the hazard to the lowest possible minimum.

Another essential end is freedom from anxiety. In the present industrial order with its uncertain employment and its changing process, it is impossible for men not to be anxious about to-morrow. They who are seeking Christ's ends in industry are called to build such an industrial system as shall lift the burden of anxiety from men and add to life the things that are necessary. They are to seek such a social and industrial order as shall make it possible for men to live without needless toil and distressing anxiety. This end is easily within our reach. For it has been estimated that with the machinery at his disposal the whole work of the world could be done and every one have sufficient for life, yet with no one working above four hours a day. The disciples of Christ are therefore to unite their intelligence and faith in creating such an industrial order as will give every life its daily bread and lift the burden of anxiety from every shoulder. Bread, security, freedom from anxiety, these are all marks of the kingdom; and these are ends which may be sought in and through industry. We are squarely committed to the task of creating an industrial order in which every person can earn daily bread, in which every person shall have an opportunity to work and shall receive the full equivalent of his work. We are committed to the task of creating an economic system in which men can labor in security and face to-morrow without anxiety; a system in which no one need toil beyond endurance; a system that shall promote and not hinder the spiritual development of man.

Organizing Industry in Accordance with Christ's Spirit

What are the principles that are fundamental in Christ's life and teaching? May we not say that they are justice and love, brotherhood and fellowship? These are universal principles and are the foundation of all life and the basis of all institutions. Our call therefore is for the organization of industry out of the very mind of Christ and to promote his purpose in the world.

An industry should be held to consist of stockholders, directors, managers and workers. It is evident that the successful working of the enterprise depends upon the labor and co-operation of every participant in it. Hands without head are no more helpless than head without hands. Thus far men have been largely unconscious of this fact of partnership and have given it little recognition. Now it must be brought out into the open that it may become a conscious and voluntary principle in life.

The partners in the enterprise being men, should come into personal relations. This will do much to remove friction and solve the industrial problem. During the investigation of the labor troubles in the Colorado coal fields in 1914, I heard leaders of the striking miners say: "If we could only meet the owners face to face and discuss the questions at issue, we are certain that everything could be settled."

The parties in the enterprise being partners, should have knowledge of its affairs. There can be no partnership and no justice where one set of partners deny to other partners information which affects the interests of all. Brotherhood and democracy are not afraid of the light. The workers should have some means of knowing either directly or through a committee, all the essential facts; and representatives of the workers should sit as equals in the meeting of managers.

Whose Business Is It

The workers being partners should have a partner's voice in determining all questions that affect the enterprise. This may be done by a council representing all parties. The management of the enterprise should represent the wisdom and experience of all. The wages paid, the dividends made and profits found, should be divided according to some agreed basis. The hours and conditions of labor should be determined by the voice of all parties. The whole conduct of the enterprise should represent the judgment, the co-operation, the will of all. The stockholders would have reason to object if they were deprived of their holdings and equities. The workers have reason to object when their wages are cut or they are deprived of a job. The worker has some equity in the industry. He has some rights in his job. The manager who organizes and directs men and makes their work more effective, is entitled to a fair reward. But the share he takes should be based not upon his power to take, but upon the co-operation of all the partners. The entire product of the industry should be apportioned according to some agreed principles of equity.

No one group should bear a disproportionate share of the human costs, the wear and tear, the wastage of life and deprivation of its comforts—certainly not that group which is least able to bear this cost. Weak women and half-grown children should never be set to do heavy and monotonous work; and no workers should be driven to the point of fatigue. He who does nothing in any way to serve society, to train men for service or to promote the processes of industry, can offer no equitable claim for any share in the product.

Realizing Christ's Ideal in Industry

In view of the power of the economic factor in life it is necessary that the industrial order be humanized, moralized, spiritualized, Christianized. In view of the fact also that life is a unity and to save man at any point we must save him at all points, it is necessary that the industrial order be Christianized and brought into harmony with the Christian ideal. By all means let Christian men seek to develop man's moral nature and meet his spiritual needs; with all the urgency possible let them seek to make the church efficient and solve the problems of the family. But let them know that there can be no real deliverance for man and no solution of the social problem unless we can provide a better industrial system than the present world has yet realized. It may be said that what the world needs most of all is a new soul, a new system of values; but it cannot get this new soul in any adequate or complete way until it has a new industrial system. Our present system of industry, in other words, is such that it hampers and restrains the social and spiritual development of mankind. (Ellwood, "The Social Problem"; p. 153.) The standards of the economic world are frankly pagan. As long as this is the case, as long as we live in a society that is content with pagan standards of conduct in this or that department, that long there will be a pagan pressure against our lives and a lowering of our ideals.

This sets before the disciples of Christ a definite task. They must bring the motives and methods of industry to the test of his standards. It may be necessary for them from time to time to pass the whole industrial system through the fires of judgment that they may burn away the wood and stubble and may purify the whole process.

Change Rules, Change the Game

They must go farther and must set about the work of making the industrial order positively and fully Christian. Men will play according to the rules of the game; if we are to expect a more Christian conduct of industry we must change the ideals and motives of the industrial order. That the industrial order can be changed we confidently believe, because we believe in love and brotherhood. We must not give up the industrial world as a doomed and hopeless world; for that is a denial of Jesus Christ. We cannot allow it to remain as it is, unmoralized and unredeemed, for that is a betrayal of the kingdom of God. We must carry the Christian spirit into it; we must change its motive of industry for profits, to industry for life; we must use it, conquer it, conquer it for Christ and make it serve the uses of the kingdom.

The task that lies before the Christian discipleship is very clear. It is nothing less and nothing other than that of accepting Christ's law as the rule of all life and of bringing every method and process of industry into harmony with his purpose. In a real sense this is the hardest task that Christianity has ever had to face; and in a real sense this is the final test of the Christian spirit. This suggests the outstanding challenge of our time to the reigning Christ and his Christian disciples. It is nothing less than the redemption of the industrial order from selfishness and materialism and its devotion to the kingdom of God and its uses. It is the Socialization of Industry, bringing its purposes and processes under the control of society and making industry serve the highest welfare of all mankind. It is the conscious direction of industry by society and for social ends. The Gospel has proved itself to be the power of God unto salvation of the individual. Today it is called to prove that it is the power of God unto the salvation of society.

Touch Lightly Here, Sir!

Is it right or is it wrong for a religious superintendent to receive remuneration in figures of thousands while under his care are men who must meet the same demands of life by the same figures in hundreds? Is it right or is it wrong for a missionary secretary to have enough and to spare while the minister and his family on the pioneer field are enduring all manner of hardships and privations? Is it not time the church faced some of these questions before she undertakes to eliminate the evils in the industrial world? For the church and the Christian ministry of today are suffering as much as any institution or class of people from the evils of the competitive system.—WM. E. HAMMOND in the Journal of Religion.

THE FIELD AND TWO WORKERS

JACINTA'S FENCED GARDEN

Learn to Do by Doing in Spanish Mission Work

It is easy to make friends of the Mexican immigrants if you can make a friend of yourself.—Look at that little garden of hope among the cinders.

By ALICE TAYLOR HILL

THE four graduates of the Baptist Missionary Training School who were commissioned last June under the Woman's Home Mission Society to work among Spanish-speaking people, go out this month to their respective fields, but not ignorant of the language which will be the medium of their message, nor unfamiliar with the characteristics, customs and religion of the people among whom they are to work. They will not find themselves among utter strangers in Porto Rico, in Santa Barbara and Arizona. It will not take them long to find themselves and get down to real work, for it will not be very new to them. The climate and the strange surroundings will be the only aspects of their work which will be novel to them. And why? They have taken the Spanish course at Baptist Missionary Training School, and practically all they need now to make them thoroughly efficient in their work, is the fluency and freedom which will come to them through practice.

Students Expect to Use Spanish

The Spanish course at the Training School is quite different from that offered in preparatory schools and colleges because its aim is different from theirs. The girls who elect Spanish in our school after the one year of Spanish or Italian language requirement has been fulfilled, have a definite reason for so doing. It is not that they may be able to read Don Quixote or Blasco Ibanez's latest novel in the original; nor is it to enrich their culture; it is to so learn the living language, history, customs and characteristics of the various groups of Spanish-speaking people, that they may be able to go to Mexico, Central America and the islands of Cuba and Porto Rico and fulfill their mission with efficiency and sympathetic understanding.

Preparation in the Classroom and Field

Their preparation covers a wide field, both within and outside of the classroom. The first year's work is practical and thorough, the direct method being used as far as practicable. There is careful drill on the phonetics of the new language, the forms and usages of words, the structure of the sentence, and emphasis is laid upon the differences between the thinking processes of the Latin and Anglo-Saxon mind. Attention is given to memory work, singing of hymns, reading of Bible passages, learning of children's games, the telling of stories, etc.

In the second and third year, lectures are given on the history, geography and people of Spain and the Spanish-American countries. The students give oral reports on readings from periodicals both religious and secular, and there are numerous other ways in which they gain fluency in the use of the spoken language. The textbooks are typically Spanish in their setting, plot and character delineation.

The advanced students sit at the Spanish table in the dining-room where self-consciousness and fear are overcome and wits keenly sharpened by easy conversation full of anecdote and Spanish atmosphere, and where of course the food and table furniture are called by far different names than those by which they are known at the other tables!

The field work is of two kinds: the Sunday-school work at the Spanish Mission, where services are held in the Jefferson Park Presbyterian Church, and the industrial work at Eighty-Second Street and Vincennes.

In the denominational assignment of evangelical work among the foreign-speaking communities of Chicago, the Spanish-speaking people were allotted to the Presbyterians, who have most kindly co-operated with us, giving over to our students the primary department of the Sunday school. Here the girls teach the Bible stories, the children's hymns and appropriate handwork under friendly supervision, and it may be stated that so interesting is the program to the little ones that it often requires our combined efforts to induce them to go home long after the hour is over.

Visit Family Living in Box-Cars

Visiting in the homes of the Sunday-school children brings students into touch with the parents and home conditions and affords them an enforced opportunity to converse in Castilian!

On Monday afternoons our little class of box-car children meets in an empty car for an hour and a half miniature vacation Bible school. These children live in the Chicago and Western Indiana Railroad yards. Here amid the smoke and dirt, in over-crowded box-cars, live about a dozen families, most of them made refugees by the revolution in Chihuahua, who were picked up about two years ago by the railroad concerns and brought into the States to work on the roads.

We made a survey of this yard, (there being several within the limits of the city) visiting car after car, to be greeted by smiling faces and ready replies when we addressed them in their own tongue. These people have more Aztec than Spanish blood, yet the natural courtesy of the Castilian is unmistakable. The dark-skinned fathers and older brothers returning from work, looking quite like the movie bandit, touch their sombreros with a musical "buenas tardes" in answer to our salutation.

Nominally Roman Catholics. Practically Fatalist.

Although many of the women do not even know their Spanish letters, here and there a fortunate mother whose little ones go to school, will proudly read to us out of the primer to show her knowledge of English, but we must follow the brown finger from word to word in order to recognize the sounds, for the señora gives the vowels their staccato Latin value and softly slurs the consonants according to Spanish usage.

Nominally these people are Romanists and in most cars there will be in the corner a rude attempt at an altar, with a bizarre image of the Virgin, her of Guadalupe, (in whose honor four of our group are named, called Lupe for short) and some spangled tissue paper flowers and a candle or two.

Practically, the people are fatalists, resigned to their lot, never complaining, answering every query which baffles their limited intelligence with a shrug of the shoulders and "Who knows?" in a tone of grim finality. The priest either does not know of their whereabouts or realizes that the little fear-money he might wrest from them would not warrant a parochial call. Superstition holds them enthralled. When it started to sprinkle the day of the picnic, Jose Diaz uprooted a young sapling, bent it into the shape of a cross and stuck it into the ground. "I plant a cross to keep the rain away," he explained to me.

In answer to our friendly question: "Would you let Jacinta and Nicolasa come to our car to our little school?" the invariable query was: "How much do you collect?" and the polite incredulity on their faces showed that past experiences had rendered them incapable of comprehending that a kind offer may not have a mercenary motive behind it!

We had seventeen children in our class this year, ranging from Leonor Manriquez, fifteen years old, to baby Lupe of barely a year, and in between were José, Juan and Manuel, Maria, Susita and Elisa, Juanita, Jesusa and Antonia, little Benito Juarez and all the rest.

Love Beauty More than Food

What nimble little brown fingers they have! You should see the little baskets and picture-frames they made from "Panama" as they call raffia. You should have seen the rapt delight on their faces the day one of the students played on her violin and the others sang! You would be surprised to enter a car nearly destitute of furniture and the necessities of life, to find a victrola in a prominent place and hear red seal records running, and to see the señor (who, his companion explains, "has work sometimes yes, sometimes no!") looking at the instrument with shining eyes while the demands of hunger become more and more insistent!

The day we bought two dozen marigolds at the florist's and gave each child one to carry home, they trotted out of the box-car holding the golden blossoms aloft as solemnly as if they were lighted candles in a rogation day procession, and little Juanito announced regretfully the following Monday: "My flower lived five days!"

The day Jacinta Velez showed us the fenced-in vegetable garden she and Dionision had planted close to their track and informed me with shining eyes what the harvest would be, I wondered if any green shoots could pierce the coal dust and gravel in that sunbaked spot!

The last Monday our class met, José Diaz did not come into the car, but hung around outside walking the ties, climbing on and off cars and trying to attract our attention by throwing stones at the telegraph poles, till we questioned Juanita and found out that because of an unprecedented wave of hilarity and talkativeness which had come over the ordinarily solemn lad, the previous Monday, she had in big-sisterly fashion told her father, who had administered a "licking" and forbidden José to enter the American señora's car ever again! And José's raffia basket was all but completed!

We would not persuade José into disobeying the paternal mandate, but we gave him his material through the window and the only sign we had of the lad's presence outside on the sunny steps was his weird whistle at intervals and a grimy fist thrust through the window for more "Panama."

Then there was the picnic when little stomachs were for once gratefully filled with all sorts of good things concocted by the students in the Training School kitchen, and then came the parting day which was met by nearly all with characteristic uncomplaining sadness. It was Leonor, the nearly grown-up child, who shyly put her arm around the American señora and said, almost inaudibly: "It is a great pity, señora." "What is a great pity, Leonor?" I asked. "That you leave us," was the reply.

Transformation

*I buried a bulb in a garden bed,
And covered it o'er with fertile loam;
It seemed lying there in the earth, as dead
With a spray of cypress to mark its home.*

*That day I planted a hyacinth there,
A double one, white, though the bulb was brown;
'Tis strange" said I, that a blossom so fair,
That little low grave with glory will crown.*

*The Autumn had passed, and Winter did bring,
The snow flakes to cover the new-made mound;
Emblems of petals to come in the Spring
From the little brown bulb under the ground.*

*When the springtime came, and the soft winds blew,
Then the sharp death frost from the earth did creep;
And the sunbeams warm, pierced the cold earth through,
And awakened to life the bulb asleep.*

*From the bulb so brown, came a stalk so green,
From the stalk so green came a bloom so white;
I marveled and said, "To me it doth seem
The work of a God, the God of the light."*

*So man shall be raised, though he may die,
Changed by the power of infinite love;
The bulb of the body in earth may lie,
The soul shall awake in glory above.*

Mr. Bawden's Work Among Criminal Tribes in India

If any people in the world are below the line of the salvageable here they are; but read what a Baptist missionary has done.

By GEORGE CROSS

INDIA is a country beset with problems of appalling magnitude. The map shows it to be geographical unit but it has been hitherto a unit in no other sense. A single governmental control is doubtless introducing gradually a kind of political unity but its pathway is hazardous, for the life of India has been for centuries a story of racial and civil division and strife. The traveler who visits it for the first time is surprised even today to hear the names of tribes numbering from five millions down to a few hundreds of whose existence he had previously known nothing. At any time they are likely to prove a tantalizing "thorn in the flesh" to any government that seeks to establish order and security throughout the whole land. Among these are some tribes that have made their living mainly by predatory methods for centuries. The open and unprotected character of the huts and jungle villages in many parts and the primitive ways of living make it easy to rob and loot without much risk of capture.

Camping Near Baptist Mission Cures Criminality

The government of India has tried to put a stop to this tribal criminality by taking a whole tribe in hand at a time, placing it in isolation or under constraint and compelling its members to work. Very little success came of this until the success of missionaries in developing a finer type of community life than was formerly enjoyed by their converts led the civil government to apply to Christian missionaries for help in the hope that the motives of the gospel might effect the desired change where police methods unaided by the higher forces had failed.

In the autumn of the year 1912 a small criminal tribe of about twenty-five families, in charge of the police, while on its way to a place of restraint camped over night in the fields opposite the American Baptist Mission at Kavli (Madras Presidency) at that time in charge of Mr. Bullard. His daughter, Miss Grace Bullard, seeing them there, went over to the camp to tell the people the story of Jesus. They listened, were attracted to the kind stranger and, having already heard about missionaries, began to beg of the authorities to be allowed to stay there. The request was granted, satisfactory arrangements were made with the Mission, and so the present work began. When Mr. Bullard went to America on a furlough in 1914 Mr. Bawden was put in charge of the criminal settlement and has been there ever since.

Criminals Employed in Useful Occupations

When on my recent visit to India I was a guest in the home of Dr. and Mrs. W. L. Ferguson for a few days. On asking his help in planning my itinerary I was told, "You must surely see the work of Kavali." And so it was arranged, coming up on the train from Nellore I was met at Kavali station by a tall, broad-shouldered man whose massive frame, kindly face, warm, vigorous hand-clasp and determined manner suggested just such a combination of qualities as is required for a task that demands sternness as well as gentleness, strength of body as well as graciousness of spirit. He had soon whisked me away in his Ford to the bungalow half-a-mile off, introduced me to his wife and Miss Bullard and set my wondering attention at work.

Under Mr. Bawden's care there are three criminal tribes aggregating a little less than two thousand souls in all—men, women, and children. They are placed in three settlements: Kavali, the receiving settlement and much the largest in population, Bitragunta and Allur, the two latter most agricultural and made up of those families that by reason of trustworthiness have gained the right to a large measure of freedom.

The Kavali settlement comprises a square block of about ninety acres of land left unfenced and unvalled, though under the watchful eye of a regular or domestic police control. The aim is to reduce the feeling of being held by force to the lowest degree consistent with safety to the work. Some do abscond from time to time but they are generally caught again, though occasionally one escapes for good and is lost in India's countless millions. Within this area are the manager's (missionary) bungalow, a church, a school, offices, a store and a village of about two hundred huts. These are neatly built, with stone or mud walls, thatched with palm leaves and are arranged in regular rows with plenty of space about each hut. Their order and tidiness stand in marked contrast to the disorderly appearance of the average native village. The manager has the power to fine and imprison delinquents. He has an assistant manager, two or three members of the regular police and, perhaps, a dozen police recruited from the most worthy of the settlers to assist him. Things mostly go very smoothly.

The purpose in view is to create in these people the ideas and habits of Christian civilization. They are all—excepting, of course, children, the sick and those exempted for special reasons—employed at some kind of regular work. I saw them at agriculture, carpentry, blacksmithing, housebuilding, weaving and chores of many sorts. The work is made as far as possible economically profitable and all the workers are paid wages in kind according to a regular schedule. The aim is to cultivate in them habits of industry, thrift and self-reliance. As they grow in steadiness and trustworthiness they may be sent out in gangs under the direction of Christian ministries (foremen) at road-making, house-building or working in the timber woods. I traveled with Mr. Bawden over considerable stretches of stone road which they had made by quarrying, breaking and spreading the stone on the highways and I can say that their roads were fully up to the average in India. And India has pretty good roads.

Most Criminals Saved to Decent Life

These settlements are never quite self-supporting for the simple reason that when the people become trustworthy as citizens they are allowed their full freedom and others come in to take their places. Thus they constitute a sort of slow procession. Government grants supplement the internal revenue so as to keep everything going steadily. Some of these people, as one might expect, are too dull or too confirmed in their bad traditions to learn much or anything, some are intractable, some run away and some have to be kept for a longer or shorter time in confinement to avoid mischief. But there is no mistaking the great advance in general toward a better life. Mr. Bawden informed me that about 30 per cent of the adults that are brought in are being saved to a life of decency and self-respect and practically all the children are rescued from the idle, thieving, disorderly life that would otherwise await them.

The great secret of this achievement lies in the quiet, steady inculcation of the message of the Christian gospel and the patient devotion and heroic faith of our missionaries and the converts. Native evangelists and teachers are at work among the people all the time. These, of course, are supported entirely by private funds, not by the government. Sunday is the day of rest from toil, but it is filled with religious services, including a Sunday school with a free average attendance of about eight hundred. Goodly numbers of the people are being steadily received into the Baptist church there entirely of their own choice. Last, but certainly not least, there is the day school under the skillful direction of Miss Bullard. Attendance is required of all children between the ages of six and twelve. Here they learn that Christianity is life and get their equipment for the worthy career that, let us believe, lies before them.

This letter will conclude with a reference to three scenes I witnessed while on this visit. When we were about to retire to rest at the end of the first day Mr. Bawden informed me that there would be a roll call the next morning. The first bugle would sound at twenty minutes before seven and the second at seven. Would I be there? "Sure." At the second bugle call next morning Mr. Bawden, the assistant manager, and the maistries were standing under the roof of a hall with open sides looking at the people who were seated in regular groups of fifty on the ground, in oriental fashion, in front. Each sat on a sunken brick bearing his number. The maistries, passing down the aisles, swiftly made a record of the absentees. These began to come but were required to stand outside the assembly until their numbers were called, when they walked forward before the eyes of all. Then a portion of Scripture was read, a brief exposition given by a native teacher, a hymn sung and a prayer offered closing with the Lord's Prayer repeated in unison. Then fines were imposed on the latecomers and the people dispersed to their daily tasks.

The next scene I wish to recall is very simple. We were visiting one of the agricultural settlements some miles away from Kavali. We were conducted about the paddy fields by a maistry and noted the way in which these people were taking to farming. Presently I noticed smoke coming out from the side of one of the huts and asked what it meant. "Oh, it's a settler's wife cooking supper." "May I go in and see?" The settler told Mr. Bawden I might. Stepping inside I saw the woman sitting on the ground, a small fire and some simple cooking utensils and the materials of the evening meal laying over them on the fire. She seemed very pleased to have a white stranger come to see their home. Then came in the man himself leading Mr. Bawden (who was able to get through the doorway) to a big basket in the middle of the hut. Scooping up in the palm of his hand a sample of the paddy (undressed rice) that filled the basket the man showed it to the missionary with a look of pride and satisfaction. That look was significant. The man had gained a new view of life. From a thief he had become a producer and benefactor.

The third scene is from the last evening of my visit. It was a little meeting in the church. The native pastor and other members of the membership committee were there to hear the story of some applicants for baptism. There were six of them. I knew not the language that was on their lips but I thought that I could interpret the language of their faces. Some of the questions and answers were translated for me. The candidates were members of the criminal tribe telling the story of their soul's inner life. It was evidently no matter of mere routine but a communion of heart with heart. The gospel is still the power of God unto salvation to every one that believes.

Very late at night I bade good-bye to my hosts and new-found friends and went through the dense darkness to the station under the care of a few of these rescued criminals and I felt as secure as if they were my own brothers and to be trusted in all that concerned my welfare. ## Converted Through a Crochet Hook

THE first person to greet Dr. and Mrs. Ola Hanson on their arrival in Burma was a well set up young man who afterward became Dr. Hanson's assistant. His wife, Ma Lu, worked with Mrs. Hanson in the home, learning the rudiments of right house-keeping but obstinately refusing to listen to a word about Christ or His teachings. "I will not listen! I will not become a Christian! You cannot make of me a Christian!" she would cry almost hysterically, even when the subject was in no way being discussed. Mrs. Hanson always answered these outbursts with a quiet "Very well," and talked of something else.

One day Ma Lu saw some crocheting on the bungalow table and with much eagerness asked to be taught the intricacies of the lace making. She worked diligently at it, and in her lessons came more and more closely in touch with the missionaries. Their attitude puzzled her. She could not understand why they should be so kind to her and not ask something in return, and while her fingers were busy with the crochet-hook her mind was busy pondering these things. Gradually and almost without realizing it, she came to accept the Christian belief, and finally the day came when she wanted to publicly confess her faith and be baptized.

All this happened twenty years ago. After Ma Lu's baptism she went with her husband to a village four days' journey into the Jungle from Bhamo—a place where there was not a Christian, not a civilized person, nothing but a group of squalid huts, the homes of wild, unkempt natives. There the young people labored, spreading the Jesus story, Ma Lu reaching the women through the little homely tasks of house-keeping—and crocheting! Today that village stands as a model outstation with its school, its chapel and its group of interested, earnest Christians. A miracle you say? So it seems—and all brought about through a young Burmese girl's interest in a crochet hook!

General Smuts was right when he said "Humanity has struck its tents and is again on the march." We are not fatalists, but we say that we cannot help ourselves. We must "move on."—Christian Evangelist.

Quality Churches

Put real workmanship into buildings. Employ architects with taste. Use the best materials. Spiritual level of a city often indicated by quality of churches.

By JOSEPH HUDNUT

Consulting Architect Department of Architecture, The American Baptist Home Mission Society

WHENEVER a building committee undertakes to build a new church one of the first things it ought to decide—and one of the last things it does decide—is the quality of the new building. Shall it, for example, be a large building, cheaply built, with ordinary materials and ordinary labor, or shall it be a smaller building, but built of the best materials and the best labor?

We are apt to think first of the size of our new building—of the number and capacity and variety of its rooms. We want it to have every facility for worship, for religious instruction, for social service, that a modern active church ought to have: a spacious well lighted auditorium perfectly adapted for speaking and for music; class-rooms and assembly rooms rightly proportioned and arranged in accordance with the latest and best ideas of the experts; parlors, club-rooms, a recreation hall, rooms for our boys and girls. It is only after all these are provided for in the plans that we begin to think about the materials and workmanship, organization and beauty; and by that time committees are usually unwilling to sacrifice any part of the facilities they have planned provided they can get these in a building that is even fairly well constructed and designed. The result is that most of our new churches are just that: fairly well constructed and designed—and nothing more. They are large, imposing, complex, modern and, in quality, mediocre.

Why Cheap Churches and Elegant Theatres?

Now I am not one of those who think that a church ought never to be built of cheap materials. Indeed I think there are times when it ought to be built of cheap materials. A church is, first of all, a useful building; and money which might be used for increasing its usefulness is wrongly spent in adding to its monumental importance. For instance: I would not deny the little children, the Beginners, their sunny cheerful kindergarten in order that the exterior walls of the church might be limestone instead of brick; nor would I omit a spacious room for the Young Peoples Club in order to add a wilderness of carved ornament to the walnut pews. There are times when plain red brick is to be preferred to the costliest granite, and rough painted pine to the most exquisite alabaster.

Yet, oftentimes when I go into a community and see how mean and cheap the large new church building appears beside the new hotel, the new court house, the new palaces of the aristocracy (for every community has its aristocracy of money, if not of blood) I cannot help but think that the building committee of the Church has in some way failed to meet fully and wisely its serious responsibilities. I see theatres resplendent in costly marbles and painted frescoes, bank buildings wearing their dignified permanent fronts of finely-wrought bronze and chiseled granite, hotels made magnificent with veined porphyry and polished mahogany—and churches in common brick and yellow stucco. The people who built the hotels and the theatres built the churches—indirectly, if not actually; why then have they dealt so much more generously with one enterprise than with the worthier one? Is there not something wrong—some essential lack in right seeing and clear thinking—in a community which will lavish a million dollars on its motion picture theatre, a tenth of a million on its church?

The materials and labor which we expend on our buildings are often a just measure of the esteem in which we hold them; and I sometimes think that the meager and impermanent House of God, standing in the shadow of some gorgeous solidly-built Temple of Finance, cries out, with the eloquence of a prophet, the spiritual temper of the city that built and paid for both.

Necessity of Brains in Planning Churches

There is a power and a nobility in fine materials and skilled construction which commands the hearts and wins the minds of men. They matter but little, no doubt, in the sight of God; but the human mind with difficulty reverences cheap and flimsy plaster, the human heart learns slowly to love an ignoble and decaying building. The outward appearance of the church, if it be strong and fine, interprets to the multitude the glowing spirit that dwells within, it is a symbol of our faith, a witness to the sincerity and depth of our religious sentiment. It adds its eloquence, subtly and unconsciously, to the winged words of the minister; gives a deeper significance to the truths recited by the teacher; ennobles, with a touch of pride, the social life to which it is at once background and inspiration.

But quality means something more than merely sound construction and the choice of good materials. Quality means BRAIN. A building has quality only when an architect who knows his business has been at work upon it; and by an architect I mean not merely a good builder; I mean a man who has brains enough to plan a building—who has been trained, by experience and study, to do that particular kind of work.

Anyone can cut up a given number of cubic feet of enclosed space into any number of rooms; but to organize these rooms; to give coherence, articulation, proportion, so that all the parts of a building may function together with some degree of efficiency and economy—that calls for something more than good intentions.

Few people understand the immense amount of hard work and specialized skill that go into the working out of a good building plan. I have known members of building committees, good honest insurance agents; or hardware dealers, who would plan your church for you in five minutes, on the back of a used envelope, and wonder why an architect should ask a fee for so simple a service. I have known ministers who, because they can preach, believe that they can as easily plan a cathedral; they will dash one off for you at dinner between salad and desert, leaving to the architect "merely the mechanical details." Almost anyone can work out mechanical details, so why pay for training and talent?

The architectural education of such people begins as their building progresses and is paid for by the community; the value of training and talent appear plainly enough when the church is completed. But then it is too late. You cannot mix brains with your mortar after the cement has set.

It is a fact that ecclesiastical architecture in America is far inferior to commercial or domestic or public architecture; and why? Simply because the men who build churches value less highly the skilled service of truly competent architects.

Training and talent cannot always be bought at the lowest price, but the best part of your investment is the money that goes into them. Without brains, you cannot possibly build a quality building.

Quality also means TASTE. There are many churches in America which are well constructed; there are some which are well planned; but few indeed are there which can lay an incontestable claim to taste. Our cities are peopled with unlovely tasteless churches—unlovely and tasteless, I mean, in their outward physical aspects: ill-proportioned, ungainly, loaded with sanctimonious ornament, and always with that absurd superfluity of tower pinnacle which passes for Gothic.

It is easy to blame the architects, and indeed the architects (or people calling themselves by that honorable title) have been woefully lacking in any adequate training for the serious part they have had to play in our religious life; yet there have always been men who could design beautiful churches. The trouble is that they haven't had the chance. Our building committees have too consistently ignored them. We seldom think it worth while to ask if our architect is truly a designer as well as a skillful planner and competent builder. We simply take it for granted that good taste goes with a knowledge of buildings.

Beauty Costs Little and Means Much

It is truly hard to appraise the value of beauty in a church or to measure the delight which good design may give to the thousands who are sensitive to its appeals; but surely the cost of beauty must be insignificant indeed compared to its enormous worth. In dollars and cents it costs oftentimes nothing at all—you have merely to select the right architect.

I like to think of the little church of Saint Pauls, in Vesey Street, New York, as an example of the supreme value of beauty in church buildings: that precious and lovely bit of the Eighteenth Century, which preserves for us, in the very heart of our financial world something of the grace, the clarity, the distinction of a page from Addison. There are hundreds of more magnificent churches in New York, hundreds that are better built, better planned, better adapted to the needs of our present-day Christianity; but there are none that are more valuable than this, whose only value, today, is its beauty.

Negro Baptists Throng Chicago

the United States to their white brothers.

Of the 14,000,000 Negroes in this country, more than 3,000,000 are members of Baptist churches, and about 10,000,000 are included in the Baptist population group. And they are Baptists for you. They love orthodoxy better than water-melons; and they love liberty, Baptist liberty, as they love Lincoln the Emancipator. They believe in God, in the constitution of the United States and in their race. They tell with pride how their mighty ancestors founded the Hittite Empire, built the Pyramids and otherwise disported themselves in grandiose and imperial fashion before Abraham was born. Their orators are as spicy as Whitecomb Brounger, as witty as Clinton N. Howard, as virile as Clarence A. Barbour, as warmly evangelistic as F. E. Taylor, as—but you should hear them.

And this is no trifling end to a sentence that was about to expire of fatigue. It is a climax. It expresses a conviction that one of the best things that could be done to improve race relations in this country would be to make systematic arrangements for some of the best representatives of these Negro Baptists to tour the country, speaking in white churches and presenting from the Negro point of view some of the perplexing problems that trouble both races in common.

Negro Baptists have built up a national organization considerably resembling those of white Baptists, with auxiliaries for Sunday schools, young people, missions, education, women's work, and various other wheels within wheels and on the periphery. Their organization went along with boisterous Baptist love-liness till six years ago when their national convention was held in Chicago. At that time, for causes whose ramifications would puzzle a Philadelphia lawyer, but mainly because of differences about denominational control of schools and their properties, they split; and now they have two conventions: the National Baptist Convention Incorporated and the National Baptist Convention Unincorporated. Each body talks as if it were the original simon-pure and only National Baptist Convention, and acts part of the time as if it believed the talk. The "Inc." body met in Chicago during the week of September 3-10, and the "Uninc." body met at the same time in New Orleans. This story concerns itself with the meeting of the former. A report of the New Orleans meeting is promised later.

One of the greatest churches, of any denomination or race in the world is Olivet (colored) Baptist Church in Chicago. It has more than 10,000 members, a thoroughly modern organization for community service and exceptional efficiency. Its pastor, Rev. L. K. Williams, whose picture heads this story, is a recognized statesman in religious matters, taking rank with the best without regard to race or color. This church took the lead in the entertainment of the Convention, which reported an attendance of 8000, coming from every state in the union and from foreign lands.

The foreign outlook, rather the world outlook, of the convention combined the highest ideals of the missionary enterprise with intense racial aspirations and hopes. The conviction was clear that the evangelization and enlightenment of Africa is the special burden that God is laying upon the American Negro; and the manner in which the spirit of these people is rising to that call is highly inspiring. All eyes are upon Africa. A great race conference to be held in Liberia soon, where representatives from all lands in which the Negro dwells, together with a thousand African chiefs, are expected to assemble, evoked enthusiasm at every reference. Mrs. Casely Hayford and Miss Kathleen Easmon, natives of Africa, who are trying to establish a girls' industrial school in Sierra Leone (and whose African costume, by the way, was more attractive than those usually worn in America), were most cordially welcomed and heard.

No doubt existed on the subject of race relations. Kindness, courtesy, uprightness and justice were the keynotes. All thought of social promiscuity was earnestly disavowed; but the deep conviction was expressed that harmonious race relations can never be attained except on the basis of equal political and economic rights without regard to color or class. There was no lack of either frankness or courage in the discussion of this subject. Deportation and segregation were shown to be impossible, and one speaker said, "We can no longer be frightened by men dressed in white sheets."

All of the organized work of the denomination as represented here seems to be in a flourishing condition. The several auxiliary boards for Foreign Missions, Home Missions, Publishing, Education, Ministers' and Missionaries' Benefit, Young People's, Church Extension and Woman's Auxiliary, presented encouraging reports. The statistical tables by states contain great gaps of associations not reporting, which may mean that they are co-operating with the other convention and reporting to it.

Groups of missionaries are at work in Liberia, British Central Africa, South Africa, Transvaal, Orange River, Natal, Barbadoes, Haiti, Jamaica, British Guinea and Costa Rica.

The latest available reports give the total membership of Negro Baptist churches in the United States as 3,077,000. It is probably larger now by some thousands. Sunday school reports of the same date give 20,333 schools, 125,474 teachers and 1,204,328 scholars. Church properties are valued at $24,369,300. The most notable educational enterprise at present, is the founding of a theological seminary to cost $700,000, to which the Southern Baptist Convention has pledged $200,000.

Officers for the coming year are E. C. Morris, D. D., of Helena, Ark., elected for his twenty-eighth consecutive term; W. G. Parks, D. D., Philadelphia; R. B. Hudson, A. M., Selma, Ala.; A. J. Stokes, D. D., Montgomery, Ala.; C. H. Parish, D. D., Louisville, Ky.

The convention goes next year to San Francisco.

Fresh from the Field

hundred. The resolutions urge the return of Bro. Main to St. Louis after the restoration of his health.

Rev. Paul Rader, well-known evangelist and pastor of the Moody Church, Chicago, has resigned after a service of six years, in order that he may devote his entire time to missionary work. At the time of writing, it was expected that his resignation would be accepted.

The Grand Rapids (Mich.) Alumni of Colgate University recently announced that at the last commencement exercises of the University, Mr. Wishart received the honorary degree of doctor of divinity. The degree was conferred in the following language: Alfred Wesley Wishart is a graduate of Colgate University in the class of 1889, with the degree of Bachelor of Arts. After his graduation, he was pastor at Greene, N. Y., from 1889 to 1890, and at Troy, N. Y., from 1890 to 1893. He was then a student in the University of Chicago Divinity School from 1893 to 1895, and during 1894 and 1895, was fellow in church history. From 1895 to 1906, he was pastor at Trenton, N. J., and since 1906, he has been pastor at Grand Rapids, Mich. He has been prominent in many civic activities, and is a member of the Social Service Commission of the Northern Baptist Convention and a trustee of Kalamazoo College. He was engaged in Y. M. C. A. work in France in 1917. He is the author of "A Short History of Monks and Monasteries" and of "Primary Facts in Religious Thought." His ministry has been marked by inspiring leadership, by effective work as a pastor, and by unusual power as a preacher. His energy and his eloquence have gained additional power from the fact that he has been able to maintain the intellectual interests of the scholar and the thinker.

Dr. and Mrs. Grenfell have returned to Labrador after a four months' tour in Canada and America. Contributions to the proposed Labrador Endowment Fund have been steadily coming in, but the goal of $1,500,000 has not nearly been reached. Boston gave Dr. Grenfell $100,000. Students from Yale, Harvard, Princeton, and Williams Universities have gone with Dr. Grenfell to Labrador this summer, while nurses from Johns Hopkins, New York, and Boston Hospitals have volunteered for his hospital staffs.

Presbyterians are finding an approach to men in the lumber camps, in spite of the irreligion that is characteristic of such places. Twenty-seven missionaries visited over four hundred camps last year, and spoke to more than 30,000 men in public addresses and personal conversation. Religious literature was welcomed by many. Not a few genuine conversions were reported, and an addition to church membership of 160.

Our President's Message

To the members of our Baptist churches, Greeting:

I want to thank the very large number who wrote me, in response to my letter of greeting, such kind and helpful and encouraging letters. I certainly felt my strength renewed as I realized the number of people who are definitely praying for me personally and for the work of the Convention.

I want to reiterate with all the power I have what I wrote before about prayer. Our help is from God. He alone can educate, harmonize, energize us. The great world task that we have before us can not be completed if we rely only on human resources and organizations. We must pray mightily to him for help and guidance. God has all the resources of the world at his command. When we pray, we open channels for the grace and power of God to run sweetly along. By prayer we cooperate with him to build the kingdom of God. Prayer is a force as real as steam, electricity, water power, the X-Ray; as mysterious as light, heat, radium. Because we do not in obedient faith use it, the kingdom halts. Let us all, in small gatherings and large; in private or in public make our prayers and intercessions to God. Let us bring the perplexities and burdens of the New World Movement before him and ask for help and guidance. Let us pray for the winning of new disciples and the building up of old ones. Let us pray for our pastors, faithfully.

There was an article on the devotional page of THE BAPTIST that stirred me very deeply. It was in regard to praying great prayers whose answers were humanly impossible; prayers that demanded the supernatural power of God; prayers that ran out and took hold of the biggest things that could be asked. Are we praying that kind of prayers?

We Want Disarmament

I want to call your attention to the Conference on the Limitation of Armaments that the President has called for Nov. 11. The Federal Council of Churches is asking that every church be opened on Nov. 6, for prayer. Let us all heed this request. No greater challenge was ever put up to those who are followers of Christ, than this. We ought to make known where we stand, in an unmistakable way. Letters to the papers, interviews with congressmen, letters and telegrams to the President, the Senate and the House—more than all, letters to Secretary Hughes—ought to be written by the thousand. Let him feel that the great heart of the country is back of him. Let him know that what we want is not merely limitation of the size of navies—We want DISARMAMENT.

I would suggest that every woman's missionary circle meet and pass resolutions and send a copy to Secretary Hughes, the President, and to all other members of the committee; that organized Bible classes of men and women do the same; that churches take action in addition to what is done by these smaller bodies. Let every association and state convention pass suitable resolutions and forward them to these officers, and then let individuals write and telegraph—and pray, pray, pray! We have all the world's pride and pomp and materialism against us. We have human conservatism against us. We have false national pride against us. With us we have Jesus and Man's undefeatable hopes. If we believe and work, we can strengthen all the good in the world; we can help to remove intolerable burdens; we can hasten the day when nations as well as individuals shall bow to the Lordship of Jesus; we can hasten the day of his coming!

Is This Sinful Pride?

Is it a sinful pride that I have, that Baptists should lead in this good fight? I do not believe so. All the splendid past of our fighting ancestors summons us; all the great principles on which our denomination was founded, inspire us. The Christ whom we follow, calls us.

Now I have not taken up the answers to the many questions that you have asked. My letter is so long that that must wait until another time. I just want to call the attention of all of you to the report of our committee appointed to investigate our educational institutions. That report will quiet many of your fears. The committee was influential and impartial; it gave a year to investigation, and its report found little to criticize and very much to commend in all our schools. Read the report!

I want to say, too, that our Foreign and our Home Mission Societies examine candidates very carefully as to their beliefs regarding Christ and the Bible. Every pains is taken to send out only those who are sound. I believe that the overwhelming majority of those we send out are doing good, thorough and devoted work. I am going to write about that, next time. You can have confidence in our missionaries.

As to what I wrote about pre-convention meetings; I rejoice to find that the great majority of those who have written agree with me. I have had only three letters questioning that part of my letter. I still wish that we could do as does the Southern Baptist Convention, have no pre-convention meetings of any kind. I think we ought to give the fundamentalists an opportunity to give their message before the convention, and that Dr. Stillwell's Conference on Evangelism ought to come before the convention. Is it not possible to get together on this? Can we not come to the convention after a quiet, retreat day of prayer and communion, where we all renew our allegiance to Christ and sit down at his table together? And then, with fresh, unclouded thoughts, begin our great convention task?

A 100 Per Cent Pastor Speaks

I want to publish one letter which I received from a pastor, because it has in it so much of good sense:

"The little church of which I am pastor pledged, according to present membership, an average of $100 per member, and has paid fully 90/100 of its pledges so far due; so that it is not a kicking church. Yet it would be far happier, and its zeal would be quickened, if doubts were removed as to what use will be made of the money entrusted to our societies. If they were sure that the money will be used to proclaim the Christ of the New Testament, it would quicken the zeal. If not, I doubt whether they can be made to feel under obligation to continue to pay. Neither are they extremists, any more than I am. Doubts come from all kinds of sources. They watch the straws fly and they wonder from where the wind comes and where it goes. Moreover, the Holy Spirit can not testify for and sustain things which do not give glory to the Christ of the New Testament.

It is not that I believe that we should not have the utmost freedom of expression, but we need frankness. I believe in the middle-of-the-way Baptists. Our executive must be such, and it is needful that the mass be such—we need them for stability. But there would be no middle-way Baptists if there were no extremists, and the extremists are needed for a most important work. We are in a thought-transition period. There need to be extremists, or we will go nowhere. It is the frank discussion of questions at issue that will open the way for better things.

By discussion of ideas—not of motives, but of ideas—the things which can not stand the test will, chaff like, be winnowed and the good wheat will remain. It will enable us to give clear and strong expression to the truth in a modern way. We need this, and it is the conflict between extremists that will bring it out. It has always been so. It is not a waste of time; it does not hinder the work. It is a mighty important part of our work as Baptists. Indeed the rest of the work depends for its vitality on a clear expression of truth in modern terms. The trumpet must give a clear call if the battle is to be won.

Free Discussion Will Help

But how can we come to clear ideas and statements concerning the truth if there is a fear of free discussion of ideas—not motives and men, but of ideas? 'You must believe this. You must not believe that'. This leads nowhere. But if we hear WHY we ought to believe this and not believe that, then out of such discussion light would spring. But we seem to be strangely afraid of such discussions, and no medium can be found for them. I have been in France and England, and I must say that one of the things which struck me in our country here is the fear of frank discussion of ideas. Perhaps we are too practical. We want so much to see results that we think discussion of ideas to be a waste of time. That is perhaps the reason we swallow so easily, imported ideas. A frank discussion of ideas will not spoil the organized work; it will vitalize it. So the middle-of-the-way Baptists ought not to seek to shut off discussion, but only to request of the extremists that they discuss ideas, and not persons, and still less, motives.

So here is another question—Would it not be good for the work if extremists understood better what each other believes, and why they believe as they do? —C. R. Delepine, Pastor First Church, Palouse, Wash."

Isn't that splendid? What a fine record for that little church. Hang on, brothers. Have faith in the denomination. You have a right to know and you have the duty to investigate. Why not an exchange of views? Perhaps we are not so far apart as we think.

Yours in the service of the Kingdom,
HELEN B. MONTGOMERY.

NEW CANDIDATE SECRETARY FOR W. A. B. F. M. S.

The Woman's American Baptist Foreign Mission Society is to be congratulated upon the appointment of its new candidate secretary, Miss Mabelle Rae McVeigh, formerly of Denver, Colo.

Miss McVeigh comes to the Society when it has approximately 1200 applications for service on foreign fields at hand, more than ever before in its history at any one time, and comes with a breadth of experience among young women that will make her invaluable in her important work. Following some years as a teacher in high school and normal school work in Pennsylvania and in Nebraska, she was Supervisor of Languages in the Education Department of the State University of Wyoming at Laramie, and later Dean of the Colorado Woman's College, in Denver, Colo. She has also had wide experience in religious work. During the past summer she taught in the Colorado and the Kansas Baptist Assemblies. Previously, she spent several months in Religious Education work in Eureka, Mont., and afterwards did special work in the Religious Education Department of the Publication Society of Colorado, under Dr. Chalmers.

Miss McVeigh is a graduate of the State University of Nebraska, where she won the coveted Phi Beta Kappa key. She is a member of the Broadway Baptist Church in Denver, Colo. Her mother, Mrs. Mary McVeigh, is with her in New York, to which city the office of the candidate secretary has recently been moved from the Ford Building in Boston.

Miss Grace Coburn of Newton Centre, Mass., who has been Acting Candidate Secretary for the past year and a half, on turning the office over to Miss McVeigh, reports 1200 applications, as against only 350 a year ago, signifying a remarkably increased interest among women in foreign mission work.

NEWS OF THE GENERAL BOARD OF PROMOTION

Vermont Pastors Enthusiastic

Dr. Hugh A. Heath, Executive Secretary of Conferences and Conventions, who on September 7 and 8 attended the conference of Vermont pastors at Saxton's River, brings back glowing accounts of the vigor and enthusiasm of the ministers of the Green Mountain state. Approximately four-fifths of all Vermont pastors attended this conference, which was presided over by Dr. W. A. Davison, state promotion director. Among the speakers were Dr. Heath, who spoke on "Programs and Objectives" in the morning, and on "Remember Jesus Christ," at the evening service; Dr. John M. English, of Newton Theological Seminary; Miss Carrie B. Masteller, missionary to the Syrians, in Boston; Mrs. J. D. Rough, of Connecticut; and Dr. Frederick A. Agar of New York.

Among the causes for enthusiasm was the opening of the Vermont Baptist Academy, which has been closed for five years, and will be re-opened next week, with an enrollment of over 130 students.

Thirteen Unlucky? Think Again!

On the contrary, it may be a supremely fortunate number; according to Dr. Robert E. Farrier, Director of the New York State Board of Promotion, and Miss Lucinda M. Johnson, secretary-field-worker, who last week visited the Rensselaerville, N. Y., Association, in which there are thirteen churches, not one of them on the railroad. In spite of the fact that those who attended had to employ such varying vehicles as street cars, ferries, flivvers, buckboards and Adam's mare, and to ride all night, or most of it, imitating Paul Revere, the association meetings were more than worth any slight effort involved, the two visitors testify.

Orient Greets Board Prayer Meetings

The first regular Friday noon prayer meeting of the year at the General Board of Promotion headquarters, inspirationally led by Dr. John Y. Aitchison, on the general theme of "Giving God a Chance," had the pleasure of greetings straight from the Orient, conveyed by Mr. Kwen Tai, of Swatow, China, present at the meeting as Dr. Franklin's guest. Mr. Tai, a graduate of Shanghai University, now on his way to attend Newton Theological Seminary, offered the Orient's thanks to Northern Baptists of the United States for what they are doing to build up a group of native leaders there.

Mr. and Mrs. Mornay Williams Entertain

Mr. and Mrs. Mornay Williams, so well known throughout the denomination for their activities in connection with the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society, and with Baptist work in general delighted the members and office force of the General Board of Promotion on Saturday afternoon, September 10, by entertaining them in their beautiful home in Englewood, N. J. A program that brought out latent and unsuspected talents on the part of members of the Board, songs and readings, followed by a delightful lawn supper, sped the afternoon. The following were present: Mr. and Mrs. Mornay Williams, Dr. and Mrs. John Y. Aitchison and Master John Aitchison, Dr. and Mrs. Hugh A. Heath and Miss Louise Heath, Dr. and Mrs. Harry S. Myers, Dr. H. R. Greaves, Mrs. L. Jessie P. Bishop, Mr. and Mrs. B. F. Judson, Miss Mary R. Cobb, Miss Nancy Hollis, Miss Aileen Murray, Mr. Sumner R. Vinton, Mrs. Helen E. Sprague, Miss Marion Gelston, Miss Lucinda M. Johnson, Miss M. B. Wells, Mrs. J. H. Jewett, Miss M. Kohler, Miss W. B. Wackford, Miss Helen Hodges, Miss Alida Stevenson, Miss Dorothy Hicks, Miss E. Fensom, Miss E. McCartney, Miss Aneesie Audi, Miss Helen Clarke, Miss Carrie Legges; Miss Lytell, Miss Patten, Miss F. Pedersen, Miss May Fersch, Miss J. Zavesski, Miss Blanche Brace.

MISSIONARY ITEMS HERE AND THERE

"Hugely happy to be at work again," writes Dr. Marian Farber of Seattle and New England from Mabubnagur, where she is overseeing the work on the hospital which the women of the New England District are erecting as their jubilee gift. Dr. Farber reports that the work of the contractors is well under way.

"Our brethren and our sisters in the church have very much joy," says Mrs. Frances Kolator of Prague, one of the Jubilee visitors to the United States this spring, who is to oversee the distribution of gifts from the Fellowship Ship in Czecho-Slovakia. What gives them joy is their knowledge that the Baptists of the United States will not fail them now in their time of need. Mrs. Kolator writes that her brother will visit the United States this fall.

THE HOUSE THAT JACK BUILT

Meet a brand new Baptist missionary architect, Master Jacques Walter Sword, 18 months old, better known as Jack to such of the denomination as have the honor of his acquaintance, who departed for Gauhati, Assam, this week, where he will engage in denominational service as a builder. At present he will confine himself to the medium of blocks, but there is no telling how soon he will begin to demand concrete and brick and stone. The picture shows him bestowing serious attention upon a blue print.

Jack's father and mother will go with him. His father, the Rev. Victor H. Sword, formerly a Baptist pastor at

JACQUES WALTER SWORD

Reedsburg, Wis., will enter upon work as the supervisor of Baptist buildings at Assam, under the auspices of the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society. In this capacity he will direct the erection of a number of missionary bungalows, a girls' hospital, and other important buildings. He was prepared for his task by manual training courses at Des Moines University, a special course in manual training at Sweden, and a course in architecture at Scranton, Pa.

But Jack could tell you who the really important architect of the family is.

A Comparison of Poverty

With reference to a recent letter of the president of the Northern Baptist Convention the Word and Way remarks:

"Mrs. Montgomery makes a comparison between the per capita contributions of Northern and Southern Baptists. We presume her figures are correct. But a conclusion unfair to Southern Baptists is likely to be reached unless another matter entering into the question is considered. While Southern Baptists number nearly twice as many as Northern Baptists, Southern Baptists have a great many more poor people, people of very limited means. It is likely that if a comparison were made of the resources of Northern and Southern Baptists, it would be found that Southern Baptists, their ability taken into consideration, have contributed as much as Northern Baptists, per capita."

The point of comparative ability—so raised—is just and is to be taken into consideration. The comparison on a per capita basis originally appeared in the editorial columns of THE BAPTIST. It was evoked by a taunt thrown at Northern Baptists to the effect that their drive for $100,000,000 had failed discreditably. If brethren will quit pointing to us Northern Baptists, as a horrible example, we shall be glad to quit making comparisons.

British Churches in the Social Movement

A demonstration of the churches in the interest of social reconstruction was held recently in Hyde Park, London. Only a few thousands of people attended. Arthur Dakin in the Baptist-Times and Freeman apologizes for the small attendance! He goes on to indicate nevertheless the character and significance of the meeting.

"Whatever else was lacking none could complain of a lack of spiritual passion. Here was the campaign spirit in full energy. The speakers gave the impression of having a message to deliver.

"Our own denomination was ably represented by the Rev. F. C. Spurr, who found an illustration of his point in the shocking housing conditions of certain parts of London, and who drew the right conclusion—namely, that the system is wrong and therefore must go. That is the second factor which those who are anxious to understand the current movements in the Churches will note. All the speakers apparently agreed on the point, for it was explicitly stated in the resolution, which declared 'the conviction that the present system being based largely on unrestricted competition for private and sectional advantage, must be brought to an end, since it fosters the sins of avarice and injustice, lays a yoke of thralldom upon masses of men and women, and leads almost inevitably to war.' It has been quite common to admit the faults of the present industrial organizations, though while admitting them many people have assumed that a little amelioration here and there was all that is required. Now thought in the Churches would seem to be moving to the stronger position, that the competitive system itself is fundamentally alien to the mind of Christ, and nothing short of a radical change can do justice to those principles for which as Christians we are bound to stand."

"The Rising Tide of Color"

New York City, according to the latest available figures, has a colored population of 97,721, making it the largest Negro city in the Western world. It is said that the only cities ranking with it for Negro population are Cairo and Alexandria in Egypt and Johannesburg in South Africa. Dayton, O., has gained eighty-six per cent; St. Louis, fifty-eight per cent., and Cincinnati, fifty-one per cent. in colored population in the last ten years. The Southern States have lost a half-million colored people to the Northern States in the last four years.

"Disarmament—the Voice of the Japanese People"

A brief treatise bearing this caption by Isamu Kawakami has made its appearance under date of July 1. The author is secretary of the Correspondence and Publicity Bureau maintained by the Japan Peace Society and the American Peace Society in Japan. Mr. Kawakami bears important testimony to the growing sentiment against war in Japan. "War and economics," he says, "will always have conflicting interests." The economic necessity is clear, in the mind of Japanese leaders, and the government will, he believes, be "forced to yield to public opinion."

Catholics Favor Authorized Version

At a recent Catholic Bible congress in England a proposal arose to adopt the Authorized (or King James) Version of the Bible. Reasons offered were:

"The Roman church had sanctioned a number of eastern liturgies for the sake of Catholic unity; was it not conceivable she would allow a corrected edition of the authorized version to be used with a view to winning over the paramount race in the modern world, neither sacrificing truth nor denying the piety of many earnest religious English people? The question, he submitted, was not one of literary excellence or of sentimental associations, but of helping forward that religious peace so ardently prayed for in every church. Christian union was worth any sacrifice compatible with faith and charity. A universally accepted Bible would hasten its coming.

"Canon Barry wished to say to English people: Bring your Bible, bring yourselves. He desired to soften what seemed unconditional surrender. Catholics were not wedded to any edition. No translation ever rendered the humor of the Bible."

Pointing out some oddities of translation, Dr. Pope quoted from the book of Revelation, "He that sat on the throne was in the face like to the sardine."

"The Church and the Neutral Zone"

Under this heading the Christian Century observes with considerable vigor:

"One thing of which we may be sure is that the new times into which we have come are demanding and will demand increasingly that religion find its chief apologetic in what it is able to effect in the world that now is. As a thing apart from life, as a function restricted to one compartment of life only, as a mere umpire in the blood and iron struggle between justice and injustice as a stretcher bearer at Armageddon—the thoughtful and earnest portion of mankind have become so impatient with a religion of that sort that it is not too much to say they are quite done with it. The moment the church or any other Christian agency undertakes to deal in real earnest with human life in human terms it finds itself drawn inevitably beyond the peaceful area of neutrality into the complex scene of conflict.

"That is the church's business—her direct and immediate function—to put Christ in the midst of all our human life. He is no prince of a petty province, but the king and ruler of all reality. All authority is given to him. His church is his body, to bring to realization in industry, in family life, in commerce, in education, in public opinion, in international relations, in all human dealings and intercourse the spirit and character that was in him.

This is the Time for Women to Strike

Organized working women in the United States are planning a demonstration for disarmament to be held on Armistice Day when the International Disarmament Conference meets. Invitations have been sent to women's labor organizations in forty-eight nations to participate in the demonstration. The initiative in this project is being taken by the National Women's Trade Union League acting through its president, Mrs. Raymond Robins, who is also president of the International Congress of Working Women. The message sent out by the League declares that since the signing of the Armistice "the aftermath of the war with its hunger, suffering and misery has appalled the conscience and paralyzed the spirit of mankind. This is the great hour for women of the world to help lead humanity out of the darkness that overwhelmed it. The hour to liberate humanity from the crushing burden of armaments is at hand. The governments will be strengthened in their desire to disarm if the women of the nations will give unequivocal expression to their will." The demonstration in Washington is to be "followed by constructive action."

Increased Giving Has Done This

The increased contributions of the churches in the New World Movement have made it possible for the Home Mission Society to meet the conditions of the General Education Board, and so secure from them $87,000 to increase the teachers' salaries of our Negro and Indian schools. This made it possible to retain many good teachers and to secure others and in that way to pass the financial crisis in the schools which would have left them seriously crippled without the increase of salaries given to teachers.

Special gifts coming to the Society within these two years have also made it possible to pay a pledge made to Bacon College which was the inspiration and the beginning of large gifts from the General Education Board and from the Indians toward new buildings, both for the college and for Murrow Indian Orphans Home.

The enlarged gifts from the denomination have made it possible for the Society to meet conditions made by the General Education Board for their gifts amounting to about $30,000 for repairs and improvements at Morehouse College, Shaw University, and other colored schools.

Two Cuban Churches Step Out

That two churches in Cuba stepped out this year and assumed full support of their pastors indicates what is the most encouraging feature of the Latin American work, namely, the advance of the churches toward self-support. In addition to these two churches the Baptists of Eastern Cuba have their own Home Mission Society which is undertaking to support the work in the Baracoa district. At the present time they are supporting two pastors there, which makes for all of Cuba a total of four pastors whose support is raised on the field. Last year the budget of the Cuban Home Mission Society was $2,100. For this new year they have adopted a budget of $5,000. The total contributions for all purposes has now passed the $20,000 mark, and this in spite of the financial crisis. Fruitful evangelistic meetings have been held on many of the fields, the revival at Cristo College being significant of the new day upon the Island.

Earn While You Learn

The Textile Industrial Institute of Spartanburg, S. C. is probably the only school of its kind in the world. It has for its purpose the training and education of cotton mill operatives, who otherwise would remain illiterate. The school is owned and controlled by the Methodist Episcopal Church South, and is their only mission school for some three-quarters of a million Anglo-Saxon cotton mill operatives. Although the school is owned by the Methodist Church, the student body is made up from all the denominations, no distinction being made when an application for entrance is received. There are no stockholders, and no person or persons share in any of the profits (should there be any).

Cotton Mill boys and girls are allowed to attend the Textile Industrial Institute and continue to perform the work with which they are familiar. They work a week in the Model Mill, a part of the school plant, and go to school a week. They receive the regular wages for their labors, which is more than sufficient to pay for their schooling and living expenses. The school offers a regular high school course, and its graduates may enter any of the colleges unconditionally. Many of the graduates go on through college.

It is not the purpose of the school to educate the boys and girls away from the cotton mill, but the aim is to send them back to the mill villages better equipped and trained to become leaders, and today many mill villages are blessed with godly men and women who have been educated at the Textile Industrial Institute.

German Workers Will Fight no More

On July 31 workers in all parts of Germany pledged themselves never again to wage war, according to a dispatch in the New York Evening Post of August 1. Assemblages took place in various cities under the combined auspices of the Peace League of Disabled Soldiers, the Socialists, the trade unions, students associations and religious organizations. The "text" of the orations was this:

"Seven years ago this week we were not strong enough to resist, but since then we have grown in numbers and in power, and never again will we take part in war."

Dr. Burton is in the Orient

As chairman of the new China Educational Commission of the Foreign Missions Conference of North America, Professor Ernest DeWitt Burton of the University of Chicago, who is Director of the University Libraries and Head of the Department of New Testament and Early Christian Literature, sailed with seven other members of the Commission on the "Empress of Asia" from Vancouver, August 18. The Commission includes Dean William F. Russell, of the State University of Iowa; Professor Percy M. Roxby, of the University of Liverpool; President Kenyon L. Butterfield, of the Massachusetts Agricultural College; and President Mary E. Woolley, of Mount Holyoke College. Bishop Francis J. McConnell, of Pittsburgh will join the Commission later.

The party from America will spend some time in Japan, visiting Tokyo in particular, and will then travel by way of Seoul, Korea, and Mukden, Manchuria, to Peking, where they will be joined by the Chinese members of the Commission for a general conference. It is likely that the Commission will then be divided into two or more sections for the purpose of visiting the various educational institutions conducted under missionary auspices. Afterward the Commission will reassemble in Shanghai for further conference, and is expected to return to America early in January, 1922.

Another Conference on Disarmament

The National Reform Association has called "a conference of American Christian patriots of every name and organization, to be held in Washington, D. C., October 30-November 2, 1921, to be addressed by representative men and women active in the civil and political life of our beloved land." The officers issuing the call give assurance that "it shall be our endeavor in assuming the responsibility for this Conference to conduct it in a most sane and safe manner and to this end we shall seek the counsel and advice and hearty cooperation of all organizations known to us to be specially interested in the disarmament of the nations."

Will Bring Salvation to Chicago

On Sunday and Monday, October 2nd and 3rd, Dr. Chas. E. Goodell and several of the national denominational secretaries on evangelism will be in Chicago. These men will be in several of the prominent churches on Sunday. Monday morning a union meeting of all the ministers will be held in the Y. M. C. A. auditorium at 10:30 o'clock. Bishop Thomas Nicholson will deliver the address of welcome to the visitors, giving expression to his convictions regarding the need of this movement and how to realize its objectives. This address will be the "call to the colors" to the soldiers of the Cross in the Chicago region, and will be followed by addresses from Dr. Goodell and the visiting brethren, who are recognized as the outstanding specialists in this kind of Christian service.

Immediately following the general meeting, there will be denominational lunch-conferences, which it is hoped will be largely attended by the various members of each denomination, to be addressed by the secretary of the special committee of each communion. At these conferences it is expected that the several evangelical Protestant churches of the Chicago region will plan to enlist the sympathetic co-operation of all their churches in the movement.

It Must Come Sometime, Somehow

A Federal judge in North Carolina has declared the Child Labor Law of 1918 unconstitutional. The Supreme Court is expected to pass upon his decision in the near future. Social workers are concerned lest the present law may go the way of the Owen-Keating Act which was declared void just prior to the enactment of the present law. However there is a fundamental difference between the two measures. The former was based on the power of Congress to regulate inter-state commerce and directed the exclusion from such commerce of the products of child labor. The present law rests upon the taxing power of Congress, levying a prohibitive tax of ten percent on child labor products. In similar fashion Congress taxed phosphorus matches out of existence and put an end to the issue of banknotes by state banks. It has been generally assumed that "the power to tax is the power to destroy." Even the Owen-Keating Act was supported by a minority opinion subscribed to by Justices Holmes, Brandeis, Clarke and McKenna. The decision of the Southern judge is therefore difficult to understand.

International Uniform Lesson for October 9

PAUL AT EPHESUS

Acts 19:1-41. Golden Text: Matt. 4:10

By JOHN A. EARL

The Lesson Text

After leaving Corinth Paul visited Ephesus for a few days and then went to Syria where he remained with the church at Antioch for some time. On leaving Antioch he visited the churches in Galatia and Phrygia and finally arrived at Ephesus. Here he found the way prepared for his great work through the previous ministry of Apollos and the unobtrusive service of Aquilla and Priscilla. The disciples found at Ephesus who knew only the baptism of John were mistaken even in their knowledge of the baptism of John because had they really known the baptism of John they would have known about the Holy Spirit for John preached the baptism of the Holy Spirit. The necessity for their rebaptism lay in the fact that they needed to be instructed more perfectly in the way of the Lord. As Athens was the city of culture and Corinth the city of commerce, Ephesus was the city of the occult. This must be kept in mind as the lesson is studied because the atmosphere of the city had much to do with the particular application of the gospel in that place.

The Lesson Taught

The gospel and clairvoyance, the gospel and cures, the gospel and commerce are illustrated in this lesson.

Clairvoyance

The city of Ephesus seemed to be given over to the practice of the occult. This is indicated in the practice of the Jews as illustrated by the methods of the seven sons of Sceva and by the practice of the Gentiles in buying images of Diana and studying the books on the occult which they burned after their conversion. The future, the unseen, the spirit-world have always had a mighty hold on humanity. Ancient Ephesus in this respect lives again in Paris, London, New York, and Calcutta. Thousands of men and women make a good living working upon the credulity and superstitious fears of the people. Palmistry, phrenology, graphology, astrology still have their multitudes of dupes who gladly pay their money to be gulled, and receive with implicit faith the lies told them as God's truth. Clairvoyance, crystal-gazing, soothsaying, spirit-materialization and all the other things advertized to reveal the future, uncover the unseen and bring the be-reaved into communication with their dead are still doing a big business. What has the gospel to say to all this tomfoolery? Just what it had to say in Ephesus.

It reveals God through Jesus Christ, and all that we need to know of the future, the unseen, the spirit-world is revealed in Christ. The gospel when received brings sanity to all who receive it. The truth as revealed in the Bible with the Holy Spirit as interpreter, with Jesus its standard, and with Christian experience its unfailing test is sufficient to meet and overthrow all the claims of the occult. Devotion to the occult breaks down character, results in mental deterioration, brings about social confusion, and leaves its victims in a land of mirages. Devotion to the simple gospel of Christ builds up character, cultivates a sound mind, leads to social order and decency, and develops real spirituality.

Cures

The healing of the sick is always mixed up with the occult. Sickness and death give the practitioners of the occult their prime opportunity to do business on a large scale. Charms, incantations, holy relics and the claim to the possession of special occult powers have always fooled the people in their desire for health and in their eagerness to communicate with their dead. The seven sons of Sceva evidently did a thriving business in dispossessing devils by their incantations, and so long as they used their own time worn incantations they were safe; but when they attempted to use the name of Jesus in imitation of Paul they met with a sudden and humiliating reverse. The crazy man knew the difference and quickly gave them muscular evidence of his powers of mental discrimination. The devil does not wish his dupes to experiment with the name of Jesus. He is willing they shall use mascots, charms, the psychic and even religion; but the name of Jesus is taboo. Whenever the name of Jesus is suppressed in the attempt at the special healing of the sick, there is something wrong. It was in Ephesus and nowhere else that handkerchiefs were taken from the person of Paul to the sick and they were healed. Was this an accommodation of the grace of God to a superstition-ridden people? The Christian-missionary physician does not antagonize the heathen Chinese in their belief that all sickness comes from demons; but accommodates himself to their superstition and casts out the demons by sanitation, surgery, and the use of scientific means. Of course the missionary-physician knows that the demons are dirt, bad air, congestion of the people in crowded areas, polluted water supply, and sinful practices; and in time he tells them so; but at first he follows the law of accommodation to circumstances. If Paul knew that people were taking handkerchiefs from his body in order to heal the sick he permitted it on the grounds of accommodation to environment; but if he did not know he is not to be blamed. God fights fire with fire, therefore special miracles were wrought by Paul in Ephesus.

Commerce

The occult is always commercialized. This is the real explanation of Demetrius the silversmith. The uproar caused by him and his craftsmen did not arise out of religious zeal for the goddess, Diana, and her temple; but because their craft was in danger. A big business was carried on in Ephesus in the manufacture of silver shrines of Diana. When the gospel's power was demonstrated in the great revival and multitudes of people turned away from their superstitious beliefs and practices, it naturally cut into the sales of the shops that handled shrines, and the eternal economic question was precipitated. The townclerk by his sagacity was able to quell the mob for a time; but he settled no question. His address was only palliative. There have been many palliatives administered to the economic problem since the days of Demetrius; but there is only one solution, and that is to put out of business everything that preys upon the weaknesses of the people or debauches the people or robs the people of a square deal. It is evident that Paul had made no attack upon Diana, the goddess of Ephesus. His ministry was constructive and positive. He preached the gospel of the true God revealed in Jesus Christ. He let in the light and of course it expelled the darkness. He proclaimed the truth and the lies were exposed. He did not visit Demetrius to tell him his business was evil. If the business of Demetrius fell off it was only one of the by-products of Paul's ministry and an indirect result of positive preaching. We need more positive preaching and less of the negative, defensive, belligerent kind. The gospel fully and positively preached and practiced is sufficient to overcome all fake revelations, all spurious miracles and all religiously protected evils in industry.

For Others

*I would be true for there are those who trust me;
I would be pure for there are those who care;
I would be strong for there is much to suffer;
I would be brave for there is much to dare;
I would be friend of all—the foe, the friendless;
I would be giving and forget the gift.
I would be humble for I know my weakness;
I would look up, and laugh, and love, and lift.*

Miss Too-Tall and The Hand-Me-Downs

By PEGGY.

IN OUR house there's one magazine we've always taken ever since any of us can remember, and that's "Missions." We all take turns in reading it, and nothing delights us more than to remember spots in it which the others have slipped over! All of which is merely an introduction to the announcement that I seem to have been growing into a Miss Too-Tall all summer, for I just can't fit into last winter's clothes! They aren't long enough, or wide enough, or anything enough!! So mother had said she would have to find someone my (old) size to give my things to; then I would, alas! alas! have to be decked out from top to toe with new Hand-Me-Downs. And that's a family joke of ours!

For ever since I can remember, mother has sewed my new dresses out of her own old dresses, and when they were finished she generally said: "There isn't a store in town where I can get things to fit you any better than these Hand-Me-Downs." And because I was little then, and couldn't spell, I thought it was the name of a real store, and when Polly's mother asked me where did I get my lovely new dress, I very seriously answered that mother bought it at Handmedowns. (All in one piece I said it!) Everybody laughed, and the joke is still told on me about every new dress I ever have had. But I don't mind, for I just love mother's clothes, and when I outgrow them myself, then I love to help her pick out someone to hand them down to again. But strangely enough, this last August when I outgrew all last winter's things, it was Bill who first discovered the very girls who needed my clothes! Bill! Imagine!

At supper one night in August, he said to me in a sepulchral tone: "Fill a ship in fellowship!"

"What?" I gasped, staring at him, "does that mean anything?"

"Ah-ha!" said he, "and you say you always read 'Missions' from cover to cover. I doubt it, Peggy-Weggy!"

"I haven't had a chance at the August copy because you all get it before I do. So if those strange words about 'Philip Ship's a Fellow Ship' are there, then it's no wonder I don't know what in the world you're talking about."

"Listen," said Bill, and repeated it slowly: "Fill a Ship in Fellowship with your Hand-Me-Downs! Now do you get it?"

Mother looked at Bill with her dear eyes all soft and glowing: "Billy," she said, "sometimes I'm sure you're good enough to eat, you're such a proper sort of boy for me to have!"

This department is conducted by Miss Margaret T. Applegarth. Communications to her may be addressed in care of THE BAPTIST.

Bill grinned: "Look here, Mumsy, maybe if you hadn't marked that article with your blue pencil I would never have seen it. Anyhow, its just the place for Peggy's things to go, isn't it?"

"It is!" cried Mother. But not another word would either of them tell me, so I simply bolted the rest of my supper (as no child ever should!) and dashed for "Missions" to read that article for myself about how we Baptists are going to collect lots and lots of warm clothes and underwear and shoes to send over to Europe in ships. For it seems there are Baptists there and neighbors of those Baptists, who will surely freeze this winter unless they have something from you and me. You see, the War, did perfectly hateful things to their countries—hundreds of families lost their soldier fathers; hundreds of soldier fathers lost their arms or legs so that they can't work now; hundreds of factories and mills and stores were destroyed so that there's no place for well fathers to work; hundreds of homes were wiped completely off the map, hundreds of little farms ruins—why, its awful! Just awful. So it seems the least we Baptists can do, is hunt up our clothes in September and send them to New York in October where they can be shipped straight to the very towns where the need is biggest. Dr. Franklin said the clothes needn't be brand new, but they should be clean and warm and in good repair! It was just as if he'd known all about ME; for he described my outgrown dresses perfectly.

I simply flew upstairs and laid them out on the bed: there was my nice little green and blue plaid dress combined with serge—Hand-Me-Downs made from two old dresses of Mother's. There was my outgrown Peter Thompson suit, and my heavy coat with the dear fur collar. But alas, I simply can't squeeze into any of it now. Then there were woolen stockings, and underwear and shoes all too small for Miss Too-Tall Peggy. I was never more excited in my life!

"Motherest," I cried, "won't 'she' just love them? And do you suppose she'll be just my age? And what will her name be?"

Our Mother is such fun! For of course she knew that I knew that nobody in all America could possibly tell the name of that little unseen girl; but she put her head on one side very thoughtfully, then she said: "Let me see! Um'm! The green-and-blue plaid is probably going to Poland. Can't anybody here locate Poland on the map?"

But Bill is terribly geographical, and he looked Poland up the next day. So did I. As for Timothy, maps are way beyond him, but not people. He loves people

Nobody could, at least, not just then. Harder than any of us. So he said: "Hasn't that little girl in Poland got any name to her?"

"Indeed she has!" said Mother, "and it's Jakoba."

"Oh," said Timothy solemnly, "it's queer, a little. But I like her. And she'll like Peggy's gween and blue plaid dweess, won't she, Muvver?"

"Oh, very much!" said Mother, "I'm afraid maybe she hasn't had a new dress for—let me see: one, two, three, four years."

"Dear me!" we exclaimed.

"And I felt crushed, for really, we're poor, but I do have a new dress every so often, don't you?"

"What about Peg's Peter Thompson suit?" Bill said, handling it thoughtfully, rather as if he expected a little European girl might drop out of it any minute!

"Oh, the sailor suit," cried Mother, "that's going to sail to Latvia!"

We groaned. Was there such a place? "There was," she said, "moreover there still is such a place. Look it up!" (And later on, Bill did!)

"They've suffered terribly there, and Thekla is going to feel too happy for words when she pokes her arms into this little dress, bless her dear heart! Oh Peggy, she's going to be such a thin little girl!"

Bill sighed. "Finish Peggy up quick, Mother, maybe I've got some clothes to go, too, you know."

So we decided my dear coat was probably going to Czecho-Slovakia,—not that it really mattered, but we liked to pretend the Little-Girl-In-My-Coat. Sophie we named her. Somehow her name just naturally had to be Sophie. Then we separated the underneath things into three equal piles, and I had the warmest kind of feeling round my heart to think that Peggy-in-America was doing something so useful to the unknown Jakoba, Thekla, Sophie girls.

Just then Bill came flying in. "Look, Mother, here are two sweaters. Now I don't need two sweaters, honest injun! Couldn't I give one away?"

Mother sighed: "Bill dearest, suppose you had only one, and tore it on a nail or a back fence in that queer forgetful way you have of ruining half your clothes, then what would you do? I couldn't spare any money to go down and buy a new sweater, you know. Not possibly!"

Bill stood up very straight and tall, like some Knight in the dear old pictures in the history books. I loved him for it.

"Mother," he said, "I think when some other boy is freezing for a sweater, it's time I learned to be awfully careful of what I've got, don't you?"

"I do," she answered softly. And that was all she said. But she gave Bill a dear quiet smile, and laid the smaller of his sweaters with my things.

And of course Timothy caught the Give-Away Disease hard. Even father did. And old Agony! Agony's daughters knit her more shawls than any one person could possibly wear. So Agony chose the two warmest ones. She washed them in Lux until they looked fluffy and clean, a big ornament to our box.

The only disgruntled person was poor Bill, and you really couldn't blame him. For aside from his sweater nothing else of his could be sent, owing to the fact that we're rather a poor family ourselves and mother always has to make Bill's left-over clothes do for Timothy! Bill didn't like it very well, but of course he saw the sense in it, and nobly said if he couldn't give more to the box at least he could pack it. So he did. We tucked in the most loving wishes with each new thing, and I'm wondering if lots of you Young Reserves wouldn't just love to help "fill a ship in fellowship?" Surely you've outgrown something!! Miss Apple-garth says to tell you to read on page 938 of "THE BAPTIST" for August 27th, and then keep your eyes open for an announcement this week, or next, telling you where to send your box.

And if you haven't one single thing to send in the way of clothes to some little Jakoba or Tekla or Sophie, then do send soap, just as many bars of Ivory soap—for instance—as you can possibly send; for they need barrels and barrels of it "over there," where it's too dreadfully expensive to buy. Any other good laundry soap will do, of course, but they don't want anything fancy or perfumed. Bill and I think that not one Young Reserve will want to be left out of this ship. You don't, we know!

step further and making the bricks too; which is your mistake. The truth of the matter is that in every home and in every society and in every church and in every business there's one over-conscientious person who does more than his share. And the poor burdened soul never realizes that in the goodness of his heart he is having a stifling effect on the growth of others. Most people are lazy enough to enjoy being waited on. Indeed their Guardian Angels are absolutely ashamed of them! You ought to hear us talk it over in our conferences! But you are one of the uncontrollables who dash to the other extreme. That's why I put the motto on the wall where you could digest it daily: 'EVERY OPPORTUNITY IS NOT A DUTY.'"

The Adequate Lady stared at her new motto fixedly: "It's the exact opposite of the way I thought I ought to plan my days."

"That's what I've been telling you. And so, both for your own sake, and for others' sakes, too, perhaps, God thinks it best to keep you bed-ridden and housed for a while. You ought to know he wouldn't want you to be a physical and moral bankrupt."

"How do you know he doesn't expect me to do so much?"

"My dear, it's so very plainly stated in a hundred ways all through the Bible. For instance, 'He knoweth our frame, he remembereth that we are dust!'"

At this, the tears came! "Just dust," sighed the poor A. L. forlornly.

"No, divine dust," amended the Angel, "but it's just as well to remind a mortal of his origin occasionally; for God has made you plenty strong enough to do what he requires of you! The Bible is full of statements to that effect for such as you; 'His strength is made perfect in weakness.' 'Rest in the Lord, wait patiently for him; fret not thyself.' 'The Eternal God is thy refuge, and underneath are the everlasting arms.'"

"All right, I'll accept it, for I'm really awfully tired. But you don't mean that all I've ever done is wasted effort, do you?"

"Ah! no," replied the Angel, "nothing is ever wasted in the economy of God. I think there will come the aftermath of influence: missing your all-inclusive help, your dependents will have to learn to do things for themselves. In a lesser sense it's like dropping Elijah's mantle, they aren't prepared to wear it, poor things, because you never showed them the art of draping it; but some of them will see the cloth is there, and they'll cut it up to suit their needs; others will lay it away in moth-balls as a memory of the help they used to get!"

Silence fell in the little room. The Angel radiated peace. Guardian Angels always do; perhaps because they know the end from the beginning, which no mortal may. And in the gloaming of a weary day the Adequate Lady whispered several quiet calming things to her own soul: "He knoweth our frame, he remembereth that we are dust! His strength is made perfect in weakness . . . and underneath, the everlasting arms . . ."

Just Dust: And the Adequate Lady

THE Adequate Lady rolled over in bed (with a slight groan!) and glared at her Guardian Angel.

"But you don't seem to realize. I just can't go on being laid aside this way! I've work to do in the world, a little bit of a personal niche to fill. Besides, they're depending on me for all sorts of things; and I adore helping."

"They? They who?"

"W-well," stammered the Adequate Lady limply, "you mustn't blame them because the majority are total strangers to me, but they want help of various sorts to settle individual problems, and they hoped I might know the very thing to do. Built up quite a trade! Yet I actually didn't know—I'd sit down, chew the end of my fountain pen until some sort of an idea would come trickling into the vacuum! Then I'd live with that little idea for several days, patting it into shape here, dabbing it away there until it became an adequate answer. Then off it went in the mail."

"I see!" said the Angel. "And this was only an aside to your regular work?"

"Oh, yes, one of those 'don't-let-your-left-hand-know-what-your-right-hand-does' careers! My regular work is lots harder and it seems to be the kind of thing no one else cares to specialize in. That's why I can't be spared now. I'm needed! Yet you opened your call by saying you were glad—glad—to see me laid low!"

"Of course I was! You scattered a bit too much. You're needed for the thing the Lord specially equipped you for, but what makes you feel you must be the last word in Adequacy? It was this mad career of accepting everything as your special duty which laid you low. And meanwhile, have you pictured the state of the ingenuity of those others? Weren't they being throttled more or less in the original babbings of their own brains? Crippled, maybe, in taking their own first steps? Kept continuously dependent?"

Fires smouldered in the eyes of the Adequate Lady: "If I weren't so helpless I'd get up and turn you out of the room! Even the Bible seems unknown to you—how about forcing people to make bricks without straw? It's cruel; and I've been furnishing the straw!"

"No," laughed the Angel softly, sitting down beside the bed and folding her dear calm hands, "you've been going a

Can You Fill These Ships?

(All the answers end in the word "ship.")

1. In what ship do two owners of one business sail?
2. In what ship should all Young Reserves travel on Sunday?
3. In what ship should Young Reserves send clothes and soap to the boys and girls in Europe?
4. What ship makes you and me feel as if we were really a part of the Baptist denomination?
5. What ship has been the only one these people in Europe have known for years lately?
6. What ship sends a pupil to school free of cost to him?
7. What ship teaches a boy a trade?
8. What ship makes all the things that are made?
9. What ship will fill a Baptist ship in October?

Topic for October 9

HOW TO IMPROVE THE MEETINGS OF OUR SOCIETY

Matt. 18:19-20; John 4:23-24.

1. Introductory. There has not yet been discovered a panacea for all the ills of the young people's society. Some "experts" think that the denomination is suffering from an acute attack of something akin to appendicitis and that the society should be cut out immediately. Of course, some of these experts are just out of school and have not yet cut their eye teeth. Some of them have had no actual pastoral leadership and their knowledge along this line is just about as scarce as hen teeth. Yet, the theory sounds fine. Meantime, the society abides as one of the permanent departments of the church. How can we improve it? That's the question.

2. Have a plan. Artemus Ward used to say that when his mother cut his first pair of trousers she had no pattern. When they were finished and he had them on, it was impossible to tell from the cut of them whether he was going or coming. Many of our societies scarcely know whether they are coming or going, because they have no plan. Yet, the best plan in the world will not succeed. Have a plan, and work the plan. The society that aims at nothing usually hits it.

3. Have definite objectives. The fellow in the swimming match or in the race has a definite goal. He expects to reach the goal line ahead of the other fellows. The big objectives of the Baptist denomination give large place for young people's activities. Write to The General Board of Promotion, 276 Fifth Avenue, New York, N. Y., for the program for 1921-1922.

4. Provide adequate leadership. There's scarcely a church in the land that hasn't some young person with ability to do the job. They need to be found out and put to work. If untrained, order a copy of "Our B. Y. P. U." from the American Baptist Publication Society for 75 cents.

5. Go after young blood. Too many societies are dying off at the top. The B. Y. P. U. is not a B. O. P. U. We will always need some of the older ones to help us out—to put on the brakes occasionally—but we must have the young life. In every church there are the teen-agers. They need training in expressional activities. The young people's society is the place for them. Plan effective socials for interesting them. Give them something to do.

6. Definite responsibility. "Everybody's business is nobody's business." True. Each young person in the society must be given a definite task, and they must be held to account for that task. In this self-reliance is developed as well as dependability.

The Buckeye State

young people gave last year $539.77 for their local state work in addition to large contributions to the New World Movement. Their gospel team visited 25 churches, conducted 139 meetings, held 175 personal interviews, visited 185 homes, secured 75 decisions for Christ, 155 reconsecrations, recruited 45 for life service, enrolled 175 tithers and 250 daily Bible readers. This team was composed of young people from a Baptist university.

In the program of the General Board of Promotion for October, education has a large place. (1) Conferences, both regional, state and associational will be held in which local churches will be urged to participate. In these conferences teams will be trained whose task will be to visit churches and missions for the purposes of giving first-hand information concerning the New World Movement and to make available their own experience in former campaigns.

(2) The missionary education program of the local church should be launched. This missionary education program calls upon the local church to provide missionary instruction for all its groups:

a. Missionary stories for the Sunday school. b. An educational program of mission study and reading for the young people's society. c. An educational program for the World Wide Guild and the Children's World Crusade. d. Mission study class literature and an educational program for adult groups. e. Materials for missionary reading contests. f. Missionary institutes, stereopticon lectures and pamphlet literatures. Such a program furnishes unlimited opportunity for real leadership among the young people's societies.

Follow Them to College

Last week we bade good-bye to thousands of young folks going away to college. Many of them are members of our societies. A special committee should be named to carry on correspondence with these young people. They should be kept in touch with the home church. Let them know that you are interested and that you will look forward to their return when school days are over. Occasionally in the meetings ask the society to remember them in prayer.

Look Beyond College

That look is to the needy mission fields of the earth. Literally hundreds of young folks have gone to college this fall for the specific purpose of giving themselves to missionary service. They should be enrolled in the Life Service League of the Baptist Young People's Union of America. Through this league close contact is kept up and the missionary ideal is held up constantly before them. If there are such young people in your church send names to the Union at 125 No. Wabash Ave., Chicago, Ill.

What Shall We Do With the Older Folks in the Young People's Society?

In answer to this question the Service Legion is being inaugurated. The main idea is service. Instead of meeting together simply to discuss topics, the Legion plans Church activities in co-operation with the pastor. The outline of constitution explains itself. The Editor of this page invites correspondence on it.

SERVICE LEGION

(SUGGESTED CONSTITUTION)

Article I. Name

The name of this organization shall be the B. Y. P. U. Service Legion of ———.

Article II. Object

The object of this Legion is to serve our Lord Jesus Christ through the Young People's Societies and otherwise in the Local Church, through the Baptist Denomination and in General Kingdom Work.

Article III. Membership

The membership of this Legion shall consist of Adult Church Members who have enjoyed the membership and training of B. Y. P. U.

Article IV. Officers

The officers of this Legion shall be President, Vice-President, Secretary, and Treasurer, and their duties shall be such as usually pertain to such officers in other church organizations.

Article V. Executive

The executive of this Legion shall be composed of its Officers, and the Pastor.

Article VI. Program

The program of work in this Legion shall be adopted by vote at a regular meeting upon recommendation by the Executive Committee.

Article VII. Meetings

There shall be regular weekly meetings of this Legion for Prayer and Conference about work to be done.

Article VIII. Relation

This B. Y. P. U. Service Legion is a component part of its Local Church and stands affiliated unequivocally with the work of said Church and with the Baptist Denomination.

Article IX. Amendments

Amendments to this Constitution may be made by a two-thirds vote of the members present at a regular meeting provided due notice shall have been given of the proposed change at least two weeks before the vote is taken.

The Devotional Life

Burke the Burglar and Moody the Evangelist

VALENTINE BURKE was his name. He was an old-time burglar, with kit and gun always ready for use. His picture adorned many a rogue's gallery, for Burke was a real burglar and none of your cheap amateurs. He had a courage born of many desperate "jobs." Twenty years of his life Burke had spent in prison, here and there. He was a big, strong fellow; with a hard face, and a terrible tongue for swearing, especially at sheriffs and jailers, who were his natural born enemies. There must have been a streak of manhood or a tender spot somewhere about him, you will say, or this story could hardly have happened. I for one, have yet to find the man who is wholly gone to the bad, and is beyond the reach of man or God. If you have, skip this story, for it is a true one, just as Mr. Moody told me in October, 1899, up in Brattleboro, Vt. And now that dear Moody is dead, and has spent his first Christmas in heaven, I remember how the big tears fell from his eyes as he told it, and I am thinking how happy he and Burke are, talking it over together up there, where Burke has been waiting for him these long years.

It was twenty-five years or more ago that it happened. Moody was young then, and not long in his ministry. He came down to St. Louis to lead a union revival meeting, and the Globe-Democrat announced that it was going to print every word he said, sermon, prayer and exhortation. Moody said it made him quake inwardly when he read this, but he made up his mind that he "would weave in a lot of Scripture for the Globe-Democrat to print, and that might count, if his own poor words should fail." He did it, and his printed sermons from day to day were sprinkled with Bible texts. The reporters tried their cunning at putting big, blazing headlines at the top of the columns. Everybody was either hearing or reading the sermons. Burke was in the St. Louis jail, waiting trial for some piece of daring. Solitary confinement was wearing on him, and he put in his time railing at the guards or cursing the sheriff on his daily rounds. It was meat and drink to Burke to curse a sheriff. Somebody threw a Globe-Democrat into his cell, and the first thing that caught his eye was a big headline like this: "How the jailer at Phillips got caught." It was just what Burke wanted, and he sat down with a chuckle to read the story of the jailer's discomfiture.

"Phillips," he said; "that's up in Illinois. I've been in that town."

Somewhat the reading had a strange look, out of the usual newspaper way.

It was Moody's sermon of the night before. "What rot is this?" asked Burke. "Paul and Silas—a great earthquake—what must I do to be saved? Has the Globe-Democrat got to printing such stuff?" He looked at the date. Yes, it was Friday morning's paper, fresh from the press. Burke threw it down with an oath, and walked about his cell like a caged lion. By and by he took up the paper, and read the sermon through. The restless fit grew on him. Again and again he picked up the paper and read its strange story. It was then that a something, from whence he did not know, came into the burglar's heart, and cut its way to the quick. "What does it mean?" he began asking. "Twenty years and more I've been a burglar and jail bird, but I never felt like this. What is it to be saved, anyway? I've lived a dog's life, and I'm getting tired of it. If there is such a God as that preacher is telling about, I believe I'll find out, if it kills me to do it."

He found it out. Away toward midnight, after hours of bitter remorse over his wasted life, and lonely and broken prayers the first time since he was a child at his mother's knee, Burke learned that there is a God who is able and willing to blot out the darkest and bloodiest record at a single stroke. Then he waited for day, a new creature, crying and laughing by turns. Next morning when the guard came round Burke had a pleasant word for him, and the guard eyed him in wonder. When the sheriff came, Burke greeted him as a friend, and told him how he had found God, after reading Moody's sermon. "Jim," said the sheriff to the guard, "you had better keep an eye on Burke. He's playing the pious dodge, and first chance he gets he will be out of here." In a few weeks Burke came to trial; but the case, through some legal entanglement, failed, and he was released.

Friendless, an ex-burglar in a big city, known only as a daring criminal, he had a hard time for months of shame and sorrow. Men looked at his face when he asked for work, and upon its evidence turned him away. But poor Burke was as brave as a Christian as he had been as a burglar, and struggled on. Moody told how the poor fellow, seeing that his sin-blurred features were making against him, asked the Lord in prayer, "if he wouldn't make him a better-looking man, so that he could get an honest job." You will smile at this, I know, but something or somebody really answered the prayer, for Moody said that a year from that time when he met Burke in Chicago he was as fine a looking man as he knew. I cannot help thinking it was the Lord who did it for him, in answer to his childlike faith. Shifting to and fro, wanting much to find steady work, Burke went to New York, hoping, far from his old haunts, to find peace and honest labor. He did not succeed, and after six months came back to St. Louis, much discouraged, but still holding fast to the God he had found in his prison cell. One day there came a message from the sheriff that he was wanted at the court house, and Burke obeyed with a heavy heart.

"Some old case they've got against me," he said; "but if I'm guilty I'll tell them so. I've done lying."

The sheriff greeted him kindly. "Where have you been, Burke?"

"In New York."

"What have you been doing there?"

"Trying to find a decent job."

"Have you kept a good grip on the religion you told me about?"

"Yes," answered Burke, looking him steadily in the eye. "I've had a hard time, sheriff, but I haven't lost my religion."

It was then the tide began to turn.

"Burke," said the sheriff, "I have had you shadowed every day you were in New York. I suspected that your religion was a fraud. But I want to say to you that I know you've lived an honest Christian life and I have sent for you to offer you a deputyship under me. You can begin at once."

He began. He set his face like a flint. Steadily and with dogged faithfulness, the old burglar went about his duties until men high in business began to tip their hats to him, and to talk of him at their clubs. Moody was passing through the city and stopped off an hour to meet Burke, who loved nobody as he did the man who converted him. Moody told how he found him in a close room up-stairs in the court house serving as trusted guard over a bag of diamonds. Burke sat with a sack of gems in his lap and a gun on the table. There were $60,000 worth of diamonds in the sack.

"Moody," he said, "see what the grace of God can do for a burglar. Look at this! The sheriff picked me out of his force to guard it."

Then he cried like a child as he held up the stones for Moody to see.

Years afterwards the churches of St. Louis had made ready for the coming of an evangelist who was to lead a meeting, but something happened and he did not come. The pastors were in sore trouble, until one of them suggested that they send for Valentine Burke to lead the meeting for them. Burke led night after night, and many hard men of the city came to hear him, and many hearts were turned, as Burke's had been, from lives of crime and shame to clean, Christian

Colorado Letter

By W. F. RIPLEY

With the coming of September the churches are active in formulating their plans for the fall and winter and increasing activity is the rule.

Denver Doings

The First Church has just closed the greatest year in its history. Although the pastor, Dr. A. H. C. Morse, has been entirely without any paid assistants there have been 385 persons added to the membership during the year of whom one third came by baptism, seventy-five being from the Bible school. As a rule the ordinance of baptism has been administered every Sunday and frequently twice each Sunday. In the matter of current expense and benevolence the church has forged far ahead of the record of any previous year. We are wondering if any other pastor in the territory of the Northern Baptist Convention can equal this record.

The Broadway Church is very happy over the coming of Rev. F. E. Eden to the pastorate. Plans have been completed for the installation of an entirely new heating plant which will be built with a view to heating a modern Sunday school building to be erected in the near future.

Dr. E. L. Krumreig begins the third year of his pastorate with the Bethel church. Over two hundred members have been added during his pastorate. The church is in the best condition in its history. A pipe organ will be installed in the near future.

The Beth Eden church will probably have the successor to Rev. W. A. Daniel located on the field early in October. Here is a most promising field and substantial progress will undoubtedly be made.

The Calvary church is having the services of a stated supply since Dr. L. E. Floyd closed his pastorate. This church has a splendid plant well located and affords an unusual opportunity for the doing of an outstanding work.

Associations Assemble

The Baca County Association met with the church at Springfield. Five new churches were admitted to membership in the Association. The additions to the churches for the year were the largest in the history of that body. Rev. W. A. Pipkin who has served as Associational missionary during the year will continue his services. The name was changed to the Southeastern Colorado Association so as to accommodate a number of churches located in the eastern end of Las Animas county.

The San Luis Valley Association met with the church at Monte Vista. The denominational activity for the year has been somewhat below normal in this association for the year for the reason that a number of the churches were pastorless. The Association, however, took action looking to the appointment of an associational missionary and there is every prospect that the present year will be a prosperous one.

The Gunnison Valley Association met with the church at Olathe. Fine fellowship, a delightful spirit and a determined purpose to do larger things marked the sessions of this body. Among the projects seriously contemplated is the holding of a Baptist assembly for the benefit of the constituency on the western slope during the summer of 1922. The Grand Mesa, a large stretch of land, lying at an altitude of something like 10,000 feet and containing within its borders something like a hundred lakes, all well stocked with trout, affords an ideal place for the holding of such a meeting.

The Eastern Colorado Association met with the Liberty Church some twenty miles north east of Burlington. This is the youngest association in the state. Although few in numbers and not strong in ability the churches have done well. The spirit of the annual meeting indicates that the churches will do a worth while piece of work during the year.

The Rocky Mountain Association meets at Ault Sep. 20-22.

The Southern Association meets with the Canon City church Sep. 27-29. This will be their jubilee meeting. A large attendance and a fine program are assured.

The Southwestern Association meets with the Durango church October 4-6. This is almost at the gateway to the Mesa Verde National park and as far from Denver as Omaha or Kansas City, so far as the time required for travel is concerned.

Church Edifice

Dr. John S. Stump of the Home Mission Society in company with Secretary Palmer recently visited Flagler, Brighton and Fort Lupton where buildings are being erected. At Boulder the site of our State university a building is contemplated. The presence of over 2,300 in the summer school this year and the assured attendance of at least 3,000 in the regular winter term to say nothing of something like 800 in the preparatory department makes it imperative that adequate equipment shall be provided. Pastor Skeen is said to be preaching to more people each Sunday than 80% of the preachers of the Northern Baptist Convention.

The Denver Baptist Union has acquired a good property to house the work among the several thousand Mexican people of the city. There will be living quarters for Pastor Escalante and room for the clinic to be conducted by Dr. W. J. Bingham. The educational work among the Mexicans and Christian Americanization work among foreign speaking peoples will be under the supervision of Miss Clara Flint.

State Convention

The annual meeting of this body will be held at Canon City, Oct. 18-20. This will take on the complexion of a celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of the beginnings of organized Baptist work in Colorado, by reason of the jubilee celebration of the Southern Association being held at the same place and only two weeks from the same time. Dr. Barnes and Dr. Aitchison are expected to be present. Every prospect indicates the best meeting in the history of our convention.

Detroit Baptist Doings

By ALBERT H. FINN

Eighteen miles north of the Detroit City Hall is a suburb known as Council Corners. It is located about two miles from the site of the old Troy Church, the third Baptist Church to be organized in the territory of Michigan nearly 100 years ago. There have been several changes since then and one of the sad things was the demise of the old Troy Church that in its days of prosperity sent out many worthy and valiant sons and daughters who have done great things for the kingdom. The Council Corners Church, which dedicated its new house of worship, Sunday, Sept. 11, promises to carry on the spirit and traditions of the old Troy Church in that same township. Rev. Peter Mackay, of Birmingham, has been the efficient acting pastor and through many discouragements has led the little flock of the faithful to this first splendid victory. The Michigan Convention contributed to the purchase of the building site. Dr. H. C. Gleiss and Rev. A. V. Allen of the Detroit Baptist Union gave inspiring addresses, also W. E. Kirby and others.

Bethel Church, in Royal Oak township, one of the Detroit Baptist Union missions has already shown a splendid missionary spirit and organized a new mission one and one-half miles north and west of its own field and Pastor Slaybough is acting as pastor and preacher for this new child. This is the surest indication of real success.

Baptist Workers in Detroit are parting with Miss Alma Kurtz with sincere regret. She has been with us so long and has labored so willingly, intelligently and successfully that we deeply regret her going. On the other hand her new position at Wierton, W. Va., is a deserved promotion where she becomes the head worker at the Christian Center, and so we congratulate her and the saints in that difficult field, that this larger door of opportunity has been opened to her. We know she will do a great work there. We are to welcome as her successor Miss Alma Bistor, a graduate of the Gordon Training School of Boston, Mass.

The Baptist Negro Christian Center for Detroit is taking shape. The building is on Russell Street near Sherman and workmen are hastening its alterations. Miss Alexander, who has come to take up the work laid down by Miss Reid, is already on the ground and busily engaged in getting acquainted with her big task. The opening is expected to be held in October when Dr. and Mrs. Moore are expected to be here to aid in the initiation of this greatly needed work for our large Negro population.

Vacations are over and aggressive programs are beginning in all our churches. You will hear more from Detroit.

Church News by States

MASSACHUSETTS

REV. J. H. OWEN has resigned after a nearly two years pastorate in the Belmont St. Church in the Mount Auburn district. The church is being very acceptably supplied by Dr. Isaac N. Grimes, sometime pastor at Cambridge, Stoneham and Athol. Dr. Grimes, since his retirement from the active pastorate, has been constantly in demand in many pulpits and is a more than average preacher.

THE BELMONT STREET CHURCH is in a strong Roman Catholic district of the better class, yet contains a nucleus of devoted, intelligent, and generous people. All they need is one strong, building pastorate to establish them. Too many short ones have retarded their advancement.

IN EAST SOMERVILLE, Rev. C. O. Smith is strongly leading that old church. He has fine adaptability to that field, wisely featuring the attractions so as to draw the people, yet holding closely to an evangelistic gospel in his ministrations.

REV. HAROLD B. WHITE of the last graduating class at Newton accepts the call of the First Church, Fenton, Mich. He was recently ordained in the Trenton Street Church, East Boston, and made a good impression upon the examining council.

DR. AUSTIN K. DE BLOIS after a vacation spent in England, returns to his pulpit in the First Church Boston, and the Warren Ave. branch. He has preached in London, and comes back in good strength for his double task in Commonwealth and Warren Avenues.

REV. ASA E. REYNOLDS long time pastor in the state, and one of our grand old men, has done some good supply work this summer.

EVERYBODY SPEAKS ENTHUSIASTICALLY of Dr. F. F. Peterson's summer assembly at Ocean Park. Think of 500 Baptist workers all alive for advanced religious training!

ANOTHER VACANT MASSACHUSETTS pulpit is filled. That of Lexington, where Rev. Geo. L. Thurlow made so good a record before going to Maine about a year ago. The new incumbent is Rev. John H. Jenner, formerly of Halifax, Nova Scotia. Dr. Jenner is a Newton man of Class '95, and has had previous pastoral charge in this state. He comes to an ideal church and town.

WARREN AVE. CHURCH, BROCKTON, is also filled by the acceptance of Mr. Vivian Broderick, a recent Gordon graduate, who takes up the work laid down by the lamented Stetson.

REV. W. P. STANLEY, formerly at Portsmouth, N. H., who has been living recently in Gloucester, is called to the First Church, Manchester.

"Church Day" in the First Church, Worcester

Two years' trial of Church Day puts it upon a permanent basis in the First Baptist Church of Worcester. If the women of that church listened with fear and trembling when Pastor William R. McNutt pleaded for a weekly supper, that all meetings of the church might be held upon one day, they now have courage because of a glorious success.

Instead of monthly church suppers, missionary teas, Christian Endeavor banquets and various other sundry feasts, we now have one supper served weekly during the service months of the year. Instead of a prayer meeting where only "Two or three are gathered together," we have a family hour where 125 or more are gathered. These not only keep in touch with the spiritual life of the church but become conversant with the business entailed in its management.

The personnel of this number varies from week to week so that as the year goes by a very large proportion of its members know about their own church home and receive the inspiration of the "quiet hour." Instead of a membership where old and new are unacquainted with each other, there exists a fraternal spirit between them and a unity in carrying on the work. Instead of a discouraged pastor and people because of the falling off of the church of God, there is a company of earnest Christians looking forward with heads held high and colors flying.

Try our Church Day program. Here it is:

Ladies meetings all planned for afternoon of the same day as supper.

A warm, attractive parlor in which to await the supper hour.

A corps of efficient women in the kitchen.

A supper hour where the different departments of church work are featured during the year so that all know who is who and what is what.

A family hour following the supper hour, at the tables where the hymns of our Lord are sung and prayers are offered in his name; where members are received and working plans discussed. The social hour following the family hour where lectures, plays, entertainments and straight get-togethers are held.

Such is the program which has solved some of our problems; we write of it for our fellow-workers in other churches.

ONE OF THE WORKERS.

Dr. and Mrs. Lawrence's Golden Jubilee

It was celebrated September 5th and 6th at their home in Huntington.

Never could there have been a more perfect setting for a Golden Wedding than the very same house and garden that were the scene of the wedding of Dr. and Mrs. William M. Lawrence so long ago.

Their dear friends, Dr. and Mrs. Wm. T. Henry and daughter, Mrs. Ufford, of Elmira, N. Y., and a few friends from a distance inaugurated the celebration by their presence on the fifth.

The house was lavishly decorated with all the wealth of golden bloom that the garden affords, many beautiful flowers coming from friends here and from a distance. The bride's basket was extraordinarily beautiful and all felt a thrill of pleasure that Dr. and Mrs. Lawrence were the recipients of such tokens of love and affection.

The bride gave especial pleasure by wearing the same dress and hair ornaments, fan, etc., that she wore fifty years ago.

Lyell Avenue Goes in for Athletics

Lyell Avenue Church of Rochester, has been doing much to enlist and hold the interest of its young people. That is no small task in these days. One of the things that has been most popular is the game of basket ball. The basement of our new Bible school building has been equipped for this game and during the fall and winter season the game is on almost every night of the week. It proves to be very attractive to the boys of the neighborhood and they come in great numbers clamoring for a chance to get into the game.

This has the effect of making it easy for them to get the habit of coming about the church and many have been won to membership in the Bible School and some to membership in the church.

We have formed several teams and they have great sport in playing against teams connected with other churches.

The church is very fortunate in having in Mr. Ludwig, such a competent boy's leader. He loves the boys and gives much of his time to them and back of all he does is the fervent desire that he may win and hold them for Christ.

In order to help hold the interest of the young during the summer season the pastor, the Rev. William E. La Rue, persuaded the owner of a vacant lot at the rear of the church to let it be fitted up and used as a tennis court and for other games. This has worked out splendidly and as a result a crowd of children may be found there at most any hour of the day, using the great swing that hangs from a big elm tree or playing various games. All this work has had a wholesome effect on the community. The people see that we are trying to do something practical and helpful for the young folks and there is nothing more worth-while.

WESTERN PENNSYLVANIA

NEWS OF THE SUDDEN PASSING OF Rev. W. W. West on Sept. 5, came with painful shock to his many friends and associates in the ministry. He had just returned from a vacation which had afforded more than ordinary enjoyment and benefit, and had taken up his work with zest, preaching twice on Sunday. He was stricken the following afternoon, and passed away peacefully within a few hours.

THE BAPTIST BROTHERHOOD of the Pittsburgh Baptist Association is doing things, and is preparing to do still bigger things. Eleven rallies are scheduled to be held between September 18 and October 2. The men have been exceedingly fortunate in securing the services of Rev. James E. Norcross who will conclude each Rally with a stirring address entitled, "New Occasions Teach New Duties."

DURING AN ABSENCE of seven weeks upon vacation Rev. C. A. Decker, Bellevue, reports that he preached in Reformed Congregational and Methodist Episcopal churches. During the summer the Bellevue Sunday school maintained its normal average and all services and activities were well sustained.

L. F. TAYLOR, TARENTUM, reports that the fall work has begun with large congregations and marked enthusiasm.

REV. ALEXANDER A. BLAKE, who has been pastor of the Ambridge Church for the past three years, closed his work August 31. On the Sunday following he assumed the pastorate of the Flatwoods Church in an adjoining association.

REV. L. D. DUNNING and family of Oakmont, enjoyed an unusually pleasant vacation in New York state. They covered about 2,000 miles in their car, visiting Mrs. Dunning's relatives and many old friends. July 31 Mr. Dunning supplied the Calvary Church of Albany, of which their oldest son is an active member and whose pastor, Rev. John Landerbaugh, was a former pastor at Oakmont. August 14 he supplied the Calvary Church of Utica of which he was formerly pastor.

FIRST CHURCH OF WASHINGTON, PA., Rev. B. Frank Taber, pastor, has just completed the purchase of a lot on which, in the near future it expects to erect a fine modern church edifice. The newly acquired property is recognized as the finest corner in the city available for church purposes. It is centrally located, opposite the Washington and Jefferson College campus. It has a frontage of 100 feet on Wheeling Street. The purchase price was $18,000. The church proposes to move without any unnecessary delay to the erection of the new building.

CAMBRIDGE SPRINGS CHURCH and the citizens held a farewell reception in honor of Pastor and Mrs. J. Walter Barnes. He becomes Pastor-at-Large for French Creek Association.

CONNECTICUT

REV. L. W. RICHARDSON has been called to the pastorate of the Union Baptist Church, Montville. Mr. Richardson has been in business in Hartford temporarily for the past few months.

REV. J. H. CHASE has settled with the Preston City Church.

NEW HAVEN ASSOCIATION meets in Grand Avenue Church, corner of Poplar Street, New Haven, Wednesday, October 5. Preachers, Rev. D. W. Lovett, and A. Wallingford; alternate, Rev. Wallace C. Sampson of Ansonia.

Dryden W. Phelps, Clerk.

Mississippi Valley

OHIO

After a successful pastorate of seven years with the First Church of Bellefontaine, Rev. Franklin F. Fenner will close his work November 1. He has accepted the call from the First Church of Piqua. During his pastorate the membership of the church has more than doubled and two young men are preparing for the ministry. Last Sunday evening two young ladies came forward in the service dedicating themselves for missionary work. Miss Alma Denny will go to Burma and Miss Reba Pay will work in the Home Mission field. The Bellefontaine church has been remodeled and a new Moller pipe organ was recently installed. The church is entirely out of debt. Rev. W. G. Evans and wife, formerly pastor of this church were given a check for $300 to aid them in their new work in Burma.

ILLINOIS

RAVENSWOOD CHURCH, CHICAGO, passed resolutions commending the action of the Home Mission Society in accepting a gift of $1,750,000 with creedal conditions, and approving the conditions.

WISCONSIN

EVANSVILLE: Sunday evening, Sept. 11, four were baptized—a father and his two young sons, and a lady, already an associate member, who decided to follow her Lord in baptism and to come into regular membership with the church. Our pastor, Rev. A. W. Stephens, did not leave the city for his summer vacation, but took a little rest by omitting the Sunday evening service for a few weeks.

Bible Conference at Eau Claire

The Eau Claire Association of Wisconsin held a Bible and Christian Life Conference Aug. 21-28 in the First Baptist Church of Eau Claire. Whether the first names of the speakers had anything special to do with the excellence of the program the writer knows not, but their names were Abraham, Moses, Samuel, John, Peter and Paul.

This conference was suggested by Pastor E. R. MacKinney, at the association meeting held at Hudson in May, and the outcome was this eight-day gathering under the auspices of the associational board. The program called for four sessions daily. Sixteen Wisconsin churches were represented and people were present from at least six other states.

Every one was delighted with the excellence of the program and the speakers. Two addresses given by Pastor Paul MacKinney revealed wide reading, keen analysis, fine diction, oratorical power and spiritual insight. The one on "High School Studies and the Bible," would be worth while in any church in Wisconsin, where young people gather.

Moses Gitlin, the Christian-Jew is a man of spiritual fervor, apostolic zeal, natural sweetness and humor. He made us all feel that we must dedicate self to God and enter His ripened fields of soul-winning service. Dr. Abraham Le Grand, successor to Dr. Hulburt, came to us out of the hurry and worry of his arduous work of travel, correspondence, speaking and problem-solving. He commended himself as an able, tactful and helpful big brother, whose convictions, purposes and beliefs are God-given. The work of Wisconsin Baptists will be safe and prosperous in his hands.

Mr. Peter MacFarlane, Superintendent of the Union Gospel Mission in St. Paul, Minn., is able, spiritual, humorous and practical. One always wishes to hear him again.

Dr. J. J. Ross made the Bible a new book to many. His addresses on "Our Spiritual Dynamic"—the Holy Spirit—will live in the soul-experiences of his hearers. If Baptists in Wisconsin knew of the rare treat awaiting those who attend the state convention at Beloit where Dr. Ross will give two addresses they would attend if at all possible.

Our Christian lawyer, F. L. Lampson, of Cumberland, gave us a calm, dignified, Christian layman's view of "Conversion From a Lawyer's Standpoint." He was heard with much pleasure.

Mrs. Laura Kendall of Osceola, Wis., came to the conference as conductor of the music. She was present only four days, and then was handicapped by an attack of hay fever. She has spent two seasons at Winona Bible Conference in the music there and shows good ability as leader and soloist.

At the closing meeting over sixty people responded to Mr. MacFarlane's Spiritual invitation to dedicate themselves to God for "full time" service as the Spirit shall open the way. Ministers, missionaries and lay-workers will come from this number of dedicated people.

The finances, often a hard and unsatisfactory feature of such conferences, were provided with very little effort. All bills are paid, a fairly satisfactory free-will offering made to each speaker, and everybody is happy over the results of this first experiment of an associational conference.—E. R. MacKinney.

NEBRASKA

SOUTHERN BAPTIST ASSOCIATION closed a very successful three days session Sept. 10, held at Wymore. There was a very good attendance. Every one spoke in the very highest terms of how they had enjoyed the meetings, sermons and addresses. Rev. A. O. Broyles, pastor at Beatrice, was elected moderator and Rev. F. K. Allen, pastor at Pawnee City, clerk.

There are seventeen churches and more than 2,000 members in this association and nearly every church was represented. All of the pastors were present except one.

The association by unanimous standing vote endorsed the Des Moines Confession of Faith.

Pacific Coast

WESTERN WASHINGTON

THE NORTHWEST COAST BAPTIST ASSOCIATION (Negro), including the churches of Washington and Oregon, held their annual meeting with the Mt. Zion Baptist Church, Seattle, August 10 to 14. All the fourteen churches of the Association were represented by over forty delegates. Dr. W. D. Carter, of Seattle, is moderator and Rev. E. B. Reed, of Spokane, clerk. The reports showed an excellent year's work, with a gratifying number of baptisms and good financial condition. The annual sermon was preached by Rev. A. E. Reynolds, of Yakima. By strong resolution, the Association endorsed the New World Movement and the churches were all urged to co-operate in it. It was voted to raise $600 to aid three of their smaller interests in Ellensburg, Pasco and Sunny-side. The Association will meet next year with the Bethlehem Baptist Church of Tacoma, Dr. A. W. Williams, pastor; the annual sermon to be preached by Rev. J. P. Brown, of Roslyn.

PORT TOWNSEND: At the invitation of this church Rev. Archibald MacIntosh, pastor of the Gatewood Baptist Church of Seattle, held with them a week's series of Bible studies. Great interest was manifested and a real evangelistic spirit awakened. There were a number of conversions and baptisms. L. M. Bain, who has supplied the pulpit for the summer, closed his work Sept. 1 to enter a theological seminary for further training for the gospel ministry. This was Mr. Bain's first experience in ministerial service and proved very acceptable to the church.

Alexander Blackburn

By CHARLES H. WATSON

Dr. Blackburn was suddenly called away from us September 9, in his 77th year. He had been almost to the last so actively vigorous, notwithstanding his advanced age and later physical infirmities, that we were unprepared for his sudden death. As a ministerial career, his was distinguished. He has served strong churches successfully in the East, in the Middle West, and on the Pacific coast. He had the qualities in preaching and leadership that caused him always to be in demand, and that generated interest and enthusiasm. He kindled the fire in others that always blazed in himself.

Dr. Blackburn was a soldier-preacher. His outstanding characteristics were loyalty, courage, energetic industry, fortitude and affection. To the very last, life to him was a good fight, and he was at it as though he loved it. He had a Country, a Flag and a God, and was loyal to all of them. The same fire that glowed in him as a young patriot soldier in battle, made him a radiant Christian minister. His courage was something that came from the depths of him. It seemed not to come by the pressure of circumstances. Nor was it forced out by some fear. It leaped from the bosom of his spiritual affections, and gave him the chivalry and boldness of a man always sure of his cause and unafraid. He did not impress you as merely busy, but as always fully occupied with his calling as a minister of Christ. He had a soldier's disregard of obstacles. On he went, even into old age, undertaking with the meager strength that would have dismayed most men, the full work of a man in his prime, and doing it with sunny heart and brave spirit.

Ever was he a brother, large and sweet in his friendships, and full of Christian tolerance. Never did he fall in tender affection, or thoughtful solicitude and helpfulness. It is not difficult to discover the secret of his acceptable pulpit power to the end. He almost died in the pulpit, full of the good fight in which he gloried. Easily can we imagine his brave ecstasy when at last sweet Christian death permitted him to salute his Captain.

Fresh from the Field

If there are yet persons who are in doubt as to the reason for the recent spontaneous uprising in all parts of the United States against the moving picture as it has been, they would do well to consider first, the revelations being made incident to the Arbuckle case, and second the following from The Billboard, which is a theatrical magazine: "The screen was deliberately smeared and daubed with dirt for the money there was in it. Why contend otherwise? Looking back over the thousands of suggestive, obnoxious and unclean pictures, it is not to be wondered at that the authorities stepped in to purge the film industry of its malodorous products."

Mexico is an excellent place to celebrate a birthday judging by Miss Mabel Young's account of her own "fiesta." The pupils take delight in making much of such an occasion and Miss Young was overwhelmed with flowers, gifts, congratulatory speeches and songs. To top it all she was given an American surprise party at night. The flowers poured in all day and included more varieties than she had English names to designate. Among the rest, however, there were violets, pansies, roses, sweet peas, jasmynes, marguerites and dahlias. Who says a missionary's life is all hard times?

HYMNS FOR TODAY

By J. H. Fillmore, assisted by experts in hymnology.

New. One book for all religious, social and patriotic services. A complete hymnal for Church and Sunday School, graded for all departments, with Orders of Services for all anniversaries and Orders of Worship, with Scripture Readings. The hymns, new and old, are choice, modern and singable. Bound in fine cloth, gold stamp; 350 pages; $75 per 100. Orchestrated. Returnable sample sent for examination.

"Several months ago I purchased two hundred copies of 'Hymns for Today,' with orchestration, for Trinity Reformed Sunday School. We had used some of the best books on the market previous to this, but we must confess that this is the finest book of its kind in existence. 'Hymns for Today' fills every need of the church and Sunday school. Our people are delighted in every way with the books, and it certainly is a pleasure to our orchestra to play such fine orchestration of the old and new hymns. Wishing you much success, I am most sincerely, Clyde W. Oplinger, Wadsworth, O."

An October Special

A special appeal for volunteers in every church enlisted for Christian Americanization is the request which comes from that department.

October is the month par excellence for volunteers. The weather is neither too hot nor too cold; Christians are starting another service year; foreign speaking homes have not closed out the summer air.

Use the October meeting to present the subject of Christian Americanization—and as a climax enlist volunteers.

If this does not seem feasible, give at least fifteen minutes of that meeting to the presentation of an appeal for volunteers.

Make it the kind of an appeal that will stir the hearts of everyone and give an impulse for service.

"FOR A BETTER AMERICA"

Resolutions

Whereas, George K. Crozer, Chairman of the State Mission Board of the Pennsylvania Baptist General Convention, finished very suddenly his earthly labor in the early hours of June 7, 1921; and

Whereas, he has been for a period of years warmly and vitally identified, not only with the interests of our Board, but with the broader work of our denomination in all its varied activities; and

Whereas, his service with our Board covered a period of forty-four years, he having been chosen to its membership in 1877 and for twenty-four years has been the honored and efficient chairman; therefore be it

Resolved, that we note with love and appreciation the sturdy stalwart Christian integrity of Mr. Crozer, his great generosity in financial support of our Baptist work, both in and out of the State, the readiness and joy with which he gave his time and talent to administrative affairs serving for years as President of our State Convention prior to his Chairmanship of our Board, his deep humility shown in all of his service, his childlike spirit in all positions, his unfeigned and unswerving faithfulness to all gospel truths for whose promotion we work; and be it also

Resolved, that we record our most sincere regret at his departure, our human sense of irreparable loss of his going from us, and yet the joy that he was taken to be with his Lord with such a full and rich fruitage of Christian faith and hope, our gratitude for the untold blessings which came to us from his life and our rejoicing in the great and eternal reward to which he has gone; and be it further

Resolved, that we extend our earnest Christian sympathy to the surviving members of his family felicitating them upon having had the association of so lofty a character and have been bequeathed such a religious heritage; and be it

Resolved, that a copy of these Resolutions be sent to the family, to the Watchman-Examiner and the Baptist, and spread upon the Minutes of our Board.

PASTORS WANTED

THE FIRST CHURCH, HILLSBORO, OHIO, is seeking a pastor to begin work as soon after Oct. 1 as possible. The church is free from debt and has a live membership. The Sunday school is progressive and up-to-date. A wide-awake man of experience is desired. The salary will be commensurate with the service rendered. The church owns a parsonage. Mr. R. C. Pearce is church clerk.

AN EXCEPTIONAL opportunity for a qualified assistant pastor in the Middle West is open and may be reached by addressing No. 25, care of THE BAPTIST.

CHURCHES WANTED

A BAPTIST PASTOR AND WIFE, capable speakers and singers, would like to locate with some western town church. Information supplied with best references. THE BAPTIST possesses splendid recommendations of this brother. Address Minister B, care of THE BAPTIST.

PASTOR AFTER SIX YEARS IN CALIFORNIA has now returned to Indiana, where his only child is permanently located, and consequently desires a pastorate in that state, in or near Indianapolis. Would serve as assistant pastor in a large church, caring for the department of religious education for which he is well fitted. Address Minister A, care of THE BAPTIST.

AVAILABLE EVANGELISTS

THE FRIENDS OF REV. EDWARD C. MCCLAIN, who suffered a stroke over a year ago confining him to a hospital has been dismissed from that institution and is convalescing in a home in Philadelphia, will be glad to know that he has so far advanced in his recovery as to entertain the hope of soon being engaged in evangelistic work with the churches. Address all communications to E. M. Stephenson, 1701 Chestnut St., Philadelphia, Pa.

MR. AND MRS. JOHN IMRIE, singing evangelists, are arranging their schedule for the season and will be glad to hear from pastors who are planning special services. This is Mr. Imrie's eighth season. He can be addressed at Topeka, Kansas.

A YOUNG MAN, graduate of the Northern Baptist Theological Seminary, who has worked as an independent evangelist, is looking for a place as a district evangelist for which he thinks himself well-fitted. The problem is to find a place needing what he has. Not ordained. Dr. Taft of the seminary may be consulted as to his ability. Address Herbert M. Richmond, 1208 N. LaSalle St., Chicago.

ORGAN WANTED

MISS ELIZABETH M. ALLPORT, a missionary in Camaguey, Cuba, under the W. A. B. H. M. Society writes: "Our church here is very much in need of a small organ—one of the folding kind that can be carried to the homes where our neighborhood meetings are held. We have an old one which we have used until recently by frequently taking it apart to repair some weak and ailing member, but it is now past all help. So at present the voice of the organ is silent in our primary department, in our young people's services and in our prayer meetings. We will indeed be grateful if this need can be supplied us. I will see what I can do toward raising money for it, if it is too large a request. Our church has taken over its own support this year, however, which means a good bit to these people." Any person who knows of such an organ, in good condition, will render a service by communicating with Miss Ina E. Burton, Organization Secretary, 276 Fifth Avenue, New York City. Miss Allport's address will then be furnished and the organ can be shipped direct.

Obituary

REV. JULIUS C. GRIMMELL

Rev. Julius C. Grimmell, pastor emeritus of the First German Baptist Church of Brooklyn since 1919 and prior to that year pastor of the church for thirty-five years—from 1873 to 1892 and from 1904-1919, died September 1, 1921. He was well known, particularly among the German churches in the West, having served for ten years (1883-1892) as Superintendent of German missions for the American Baptist Home Mission Society, and for two years (1902 and 1903) he engaged in evangelistic work among them. From 1892 to 1901 he was the editor of the "Sendbote" and the Sunday school publications of the German Baptist Publication Society in Cleveland. During this period he was also president of the Cleveland Baptist City Mission Society and he has always been active in association with other work with the English speaking churches.

Mr. Grimmell was born in Marburg, Hesse-Cassel, Germany, May 30, 1847; came to this country with his parents in 1851; was graduated from Rochester Theological Seminary in 1865 and spent a year at Lewisburg, now Bucknell University. He was ordained as pastor of the First German Church, Buffalo, in 1868. His father, a layman was a devoted evangelist and colporteur and the church in Brooklyn was founded by his efforts shortly after his arrival from Germany, where he had suffered persecution as a dissenter from the state church.

Mr. Grimmell was preaching every Sunday as supply in various churches and his death was the result of over-exertion in swimming at the country home of his daughter at Brightwaters, N. Y.

He is survived by his widow, who was Miss Helen Weimar of Buffalo; and seven children: Rowland W. of Cleveland, Walter and Helen of Brooklyn, Mrs. Judd and Mrs. Wm. D. Voorhes of Brooklyn, Mrs. Pfeiffer, wife of Rev. Jacob Pfeiffer, pastor of the German Baptist Church of Lorraine, Kansas, and Mrs. Allen E. Seibert, wife of the chief accountant of the General Board of Promotion.

MRS. CYNTHIA O. RUNDELL

In the death of Mrs. Cynthia O. Rundell, which occurred on Sunday evening, Sept. 4, at the home of her son, Chas. Rundell, in Oak Park, Ill., the Baptist denomination in Chicago has lost a member whose life has been a felt influence for many years. Mrs. Rundell was a member of the old Tabernacle Baptist Church and later a charter member of the Second Baptist Church. She afterward went to the Centennial Church and it was here that she taught for years a large Bible class of young men and women many of whom have gone forth to tell the old story on all parts of the country. She was also a member of the Board of the Women's Baptist Foreign Missionary Society of the West.

At the time of her death she was a member of the First Baptist Church of Oak Park, as she had been for a number of years in the Baptist Church of Austin. The funeral service was held there on Tuesday, Sept. 6. The service was conducted by Dr. Case with Dr. J. B. Thomas and Dr. Ross assisting.

Burke the Burglar

living. There is no more beautiful or pathetic story than that of Burke's gentle and faithful life and service in the city where he had been chief of sinners. How long he lived I do not recall, but Moody told me of his funeral, and how the rich and the poor, the saints and the sinners, came to it; and how the big men of the city could not say enough over the coffin of Valentine Burke, the former outlaw. And now Moody and Burke are met, no more to be separated. When I was a boy, an old black "mammy" that I greatly loved used to sing for me a song with words like these:

"Through all depths of sin and loss Sinks the plummet of thy cross."

OUR MUSIC CORNER

CONDUCTED BY

WILLIAM LESTER

ACCOMPANIED PRAYERS

From Mr. H. R. Clissold, well known in the churches of Chicago and environs, comes the subjoined letter, dealing with a phase of service-music which merits attention. In my opinion the point emphasized is well taken. Mr. Clissold's presentation of the matter is too well-phrased to call for more elaboration. He has the floor:

"Permit the suggestion that you say something in the 'Music Corner' concerning the growing habit in our church services of Organists playing while the minister is praying, speaking or reading the Scriptures.

"This practice is defended by some musicians with the plea that suitable music at such times is helpful to the spirit of worship. One cites the synchronism of music and theatricals—screen plays especially—as being generally approved, and hints that this may justify the synchronism of music and prayer, etc. But the two are very different. The fitness of the former by no means proves the fitness of the latter.

"When two different senses are appealed to—as sight and hearing—interference is slight; in fact, one contact may really aid the other. But when only one sense is appealed to, the case is very different. Music and prayer call on the sense of hearing, and when their appeal is simultaneous, conflict is inevitable. Neither is effective, for the hearer is confused by two different sounds. He is supposed to hear both, and give attention to both, and cannot possibly do it.

"If it be worth while for the minister to pray audibly, his congregation should go with him—his prayer thus being theirs also. It is supposed to be united prayer; but this cannot be if some at the same time are listening to the music. Music is designed to aid the worshiper and his worship; but the purpose of both prayer and music is defeated by the conflict of sounds.

"The screen-men know better than to put two pictures before an audience at the same time. Propose it to one of them, and note his response. Why should churchgoers be tormented by having two needful things, each appealing to the same sense of hearing, going on at the same time—each interfering with the other, neither satisfactory as a help to worship because of their confusion?"

MUSIC REVIEWS

From the Lorenz Publishing Co., Dayton, O.
The Choir-Leader, choir magazine, issue for September.

This "live" visitor is even better than usual, or so it seems to the writer. Five excellent anthems are contained within its pages, by such routine producers as Ira Wilson, E. L. Ashford, Henry Windermere, Edwin Pierce, and an arrangement of Walter's Prize-Song from Wagner's "Mastersingers," by Wilson. Also, in addition to the excellent sensible editorials, there are thought provoking articles by Mansfield, Kitson, Shea and Sir George Smith.

From Chappell & Co., London, England and New York.

Sometimes in My Dreams—D'Hardelot
Little Corner of Your Heart—Lohr
Just a Little House of Love—Wood
Ah! Though the Silver Moon Were Mine—Lohr

When the World was a Garden of Love—Sharpe

My Master Hath a Garden—Guyther

From this sheaf of new "English Ballads" almost any taste might be satisfied, from the lover of the broad, somewhat banal "tune" of the first-named to the finer, more aristocratic genre of the last title. The songs are without exception singable, appealing in melody, and not difficult. Not concert songs per se, but rather home songs. Heaven speed the day when such material will supersede the horribly common, banal, depressing, badly made, cheap and cheapening tin-pan-alley tunes too commonly accepted in this country for home and relaxation use as the only known "light" music. Watch the announcements of the canned music companies—you will undoubtedly see some of the above listing titled soon.

From William D. Smart, Los Angeles, Cal.
Select Hymns for True Worshipers, composed and published by William D. Smart, Box 16, Hollywood Station, Los Angeles Cal.

This booklet of well-written, devotional hymns, settings of some of the grandest religious lyrics in our language, deserves careful consideration. Its motive is set forth eloquently on the first page in a quotation from The Homiletic Review of January, 1921:

"We need a rebirth of hymnology; on the musical side there is already a growing reversion to the old massive hymn tunes. The cheaply pretty and meretriciously sentimental tunes in vogue are being tacitly shelved, which is an excellent sign."

A writer, and even more so, a publisher of new tunes for old hymns must be a good deal of an optimist and philanthropist. Such music must slowly and gradually make its way throughout the churches by almost imperceptible degrees. Your gospel hymn, flung forth at the height of the emotional fervor found in the revival service, heard and many times participated in by the large audiences assembled, such productions have much opportunity for wide dispersion and use. But the quieter, more-dignified product has a more difficult road to tread. It must depend on its own intrinsic merit and the weight of its own appeal to make its way. I would recommend that some of the attention of our fine quartets and choirs be given to this volume. Its contents, done reverently and with finesse, will afford an effective alternation to more elaborate anthem and solo selections. The tunes are well-harmonized, with careful attention to the part-writing, the melodic lines are well conceived, and the music is instinct with sincere devotion. Order from the composer, as listed above.

ITEMS OF INTEREST

In the next number will be a short resume of four appropriate cantatas for Harvest Festival or Thanksgiving use—not new music, but tried and proven material. We are always glad to notice new works, but also hold that the older cantatas, anthems and what-not, tested out by use, merit some share of attention likewise.

Franz C. Bornschein of Baltimore has won a prize of $100 offered by Swift & Company's Male Chorus of Chicago for the best setting of Charles Luder's poem, "The Four Winds." Mr. Bornschein is a teacher of violin and composition, associated with the Peabody Conservatory, Baltimore. Charles H. Bochau of Ocean City, Md., and Dr. Louis Adolphe Coerne of Connecticut College, New London, won "honorable mention." The judges were Leo Sowerby, Allen Spencer and D. A. Clippinger.

New Books Worth Owning and Reading

The Withered Fig Tree

Studies in Stewardship
By EDWIN M. POTEAT

The author's purpose is to make clear the fundamental principles underlying the Stewardship movement and to furnish a basis for the organization of local leagues or groups of Christian stewards. Authentic personal testimonies reinforce the argument. The book is arranged for the use of classes, questions that will stimulate discussion and afford themes for debate being attached to each chapter. $1.00 net.

The Use of Projects in Religious Education

By GERTRUDE HARTLEY

A manual for parents and teachers of children and young people. Shows how to make religious education interesting by utilizing commonplace things in teaching. Tells how to vitalize handwork and memory work. It presents tested methods and illustrations of actual work by boys and girls in the Sunday school. $1.00 net.

Planning Church Buildings

By HENRY EDWARD TRALLE,
M. A., Th. D.
and GEORGE E. MERRILL, A. I. A.

A book that is original and constructive. Shows how to plan for the adequate housing of a modern church program. Shows how to build beautifully and economically. Shows how to build for preaching, for worship, for teaching, for recreation, and for evangelism. Shows how to build for a small church or a large church. Shows how to remodel an old building. Illustrated with architect's plans. $1.25 net.

The Dutch Anabaptists

The Stone Lectures, 1918-1919
By HENRY ELIAS DOSKER

In the preparation of this monograph Professor Dosker has availed himself of the first-hand information concerning the Anabaptists of Holland contained in the scattered fragments of their own writings which survived the fires of the Inquisition, and which have been recently brought together in ten monumental volumes by the Dutch scholars, Cramer and Pypers. The origin of the Anabaptists, the stories of the radical and the conservative wings of their movement, their theology, internal conditions, and views of life among them, and their later history, are all amply set forth in a narrative that teems with elements of thrilling human interest. The book is a mine of information, and a guide to further study, abounding in quotation and in careful reference to originals, and serving the reader's convenience with a Bibliography and an Index. $2.00 net.

Modern Money Methods for the Church

By FREDERICK A. AGAR

The object of the author is to suggest ways whereby the local church may be delivered from unwise financial methods, and to outline a plan adapted to provide adequate financial resources for both the local and the wider Christian enterprise. "Giving is not a matter of legislation but of life;" "Living and giving in a spiritual sense are synonymous." These two quotations show the atmosphere of this eminently practical book. $1.00 net.

By-Paths to Forgotten Folks

By COE HAYNE

Mr. Hayne has not taken cross-sections of fact, he has transplanted it alive. His stories of home mission work bring us into immediate contact with the living factors of human interest. It is as if we visited the homes of Indians, Alaskans, Nicaraguans, ranchmen, and foreign-speaking people, and made personal acquaintance with them and with the men and women who are the hand and the tongue of Christian concern for them. $1.25 net.

Story-Telling Lessons

By HENRY EDWARD TRALLE,
M. A., Th. D.

We have in this volume a scientific approach to a popular subject, couched in simple, vigorous English. Suitable not only for rapid reading, but a real text-book for use in training classes in the local churches and in community schools. The book is a product of twelve years' experience in telling stories and teaching story telling. 75 cents net.

Principles of Christian Service

By HENRY F. COPE

A Text-book in the Standard Course in Teacher-training, outlined and approved by the Sunday School Council of Evangelical Denominations.

A unit in the third-year specialization series issued by the Teacher Training Publishing-Association, intended for use in the Adult Department. It presents in vigorous readable style a program of Christian service by adults together with the reasons for the features of service described. 60 cents net.

GOD may be able to make a more glorious country than the Yellowstone Park region; but it appears that he never did make one in this world. Here is a simple snapshot of one of its numberless landscapes of mountain, forest, ragged rock and roaring torrent.

Fresh from the Field

Dr. John Clifford is almost a lone voice in England in speaking against the proposed union in Scotland of the Established and the United Free churches. He objects on the ground that the new church will, whether called established or not, have all the benefits of state support. Other churches, like the Baptist, will be excluded from such favor. A state church is always unjust and will be so in this case. Dr. Clifford has the feeling that if this project goes through in Scotland, it will greatly affect union projects in England.

From Miss Isabel Waidman, a teacher under the W. A. B. H. M. Society in Cuba, comes stirring news of a profitable and enjoyable bazaar held under the auspices of the Women's Missionary Society at which $175 was cleared for the work. Some of this will go to educate a girl in the college at El Cristo in order that she may some day return to labor for Christ among her own people. Part will go to the $100,000,000 Fund, and some to the local church. Miss Waidman ends generously, "I wish we could manage to forward some of the money to the North to help our Mother Society."

The first conscientious objector has just been elected to the British Parliament. The following facts concerning him have therefore interest: Mr. Morgan Jones, the new Labour M. P. for Caerphilly, is a Baptist and a former lay preacher. He is the first avowed "conscientious objector" to become a Member of Parliament. When conscription was introduced Mr. Morgan Jones protested and went through arrest, court martial, and prison. Later he was released to do "work of national importance" at Chelsea workhouse. He is the son of a miner, has had great experience in local affairs and is one of the Governors of Cardiff University College as well as being on the Council of the University of Wales. Mr. Morgan Jones's Coalition opponent in the Caerphilly by-election, Mr. W. Rees Edmunds, is also a well-known Baptist. He is a solicitor practicing in the Merthyr area, and is the professional adviser to the Welsh Baptist Union.

The Wesleyan Christian Advocate has the following to say about women voters in the South: "Although greater opposition was urged against the privilege of the ballot for woman in Georgia and other Southern States than in any other section, it seems that the women of the South, according to Atlanta woman voters, are accepting the new order of things in a matter-of-fact sort of way, and are not only qualifying to vote in the elections, but are offering their services as officials of the government in one way or another."

The immigration laws as enforced at Ellis Island are being made the subject of special study by Rev. David Nathaniel Boswell, recently appointed assistant to Dr. C. A. Brooks of the Department of City and Foreign-speaking Missions of the Home Mission Society. Mr. Boswell came to this country from England when eleven years of age and at the age of thirteen entered the steel mills of Washington, Pa., and worked up through the various departments until he became an expert roller. He is a graduate of the Bucknell University and Rochester Theological Seminary. Until the commencement of his theological studies he worked in the steel mills during his summer vacations, and thus for twenty years he had been intimately associated with the steel workers. His investigations of the religious and moral conditions among foreign-speaking people of the Pittsburgh that received favorable comment. The steel district formed the basis of a thesis promotion of Baptist community centers will come within the scope of Mr. Boswell's duties. He expects soon to take a course of study under competent instruction to prepare him for the more technical aspects of his work, among which are the making of graphs and surveys.

With "India Needs Doctors," as a text, Dr. Anna Degenring of the Woman's American Baptist Foreign Mission Society, who since 1906 has been on service in the land where a hot iron is an accepted native cure for convulsions, where babies are given an opium pill to make them stop crying, and where sick persons wait for their lucky days before taking any medicine, is preaching the sermon of India's need at several Eastern state Association meetings. In the year preceding Dr. Degenring's return on furlough to the United States, she treated more than 1,200 in patients in the American Baptist Mission Hospital in Nellore, and 33,000 in the out-patient department.

Miss May Covington, the little mule-back missionary of El Salvador, whose field is a republic about as big as New Hampshire, and who penetrates even into the mountain fastnesses with her smile and her songs and her mule, while a visitor in the board-rooms of the Woman's Home Mission Society last week, was asked what she had found to be the greatest trials of a missionary's life. "Trials?" said Miss Covington. "I am sure I don't know. You see when you stop to think it over, the trials turn out to be blessings, really. It's hard to travel—but that's one reason why the people are so glad to see us. Living conditions are sometimes rather hard—but that helps us to sympathize with folks. Trials? I don't know."

Some of our large cities in the United States are having trouble finding room for the surplus children of school age this year—a situation which seems to be duplicated in the Philippines. Our Baptist workers report that the schools have opened with an overflow of classes, and that for the first time the poorer class is awakened, and demanding instruction. This is the psychological moment, then, to offer the people Christianity!

Mr. E. P. Burlingame, eighty-one years of age, was stricken with an attack of heart trouble on Sept. 14 while in charge of the registration at the Washington County Veteran's Association reunion at Marietta, Ohio, and passed away in a few hours. He served four years during the Civil War with Company L, First Ohio Volunteer Cavalry, and took part in the battles of Stone River and Chickamauga. Of his three children, Dr. Geo. E. Burlingame of Chicago, is well known to Baptists throughout the West.

Rev. J. H. Rushbrooke, Baptist Commissioner for Europe, has just returned to London after a visit to northern sections of Europe. He gave special attention to problems that are being faced by Baptists in Poland, but he may also have had opportunity, while near the frontiers of Russia, to secure valuable information regarding conditions in the latter country. He is studying the situation as carefully as possible, and will give to American Baptists any information regarding famine conditions or the progress of Baptists in Russia which is not reaching us through the secular papers.

Rev. Oliva Brouillette, director of the relief work undertaken by Baptists in Northern France and Southern Belgium, reached New York, Sept. 12. After a few weeks in America, chiefly for conference with the board of managers of the Foreign Mission Society, Mr. Brouillette expects to return to France. His work in the devastated regions is highly praised by American visitors who have had opportunity to observe it.

Dr. Rolvix Harlan, of the Home Mission Society accompanied the British delegates to the World Brotherhood Congress at Prague. The party traveled via Harwich, Hook of Holland, Hanover and Berlin with one day in each of the last two cities. After the Prague meeting Dr. Harlan left the party and journeyed "on his own" to Strasburg, Verdun, the Argonne, Rheims, Chateau Thierry and Paris. Rev. J. Foster Wilcox sailed from New York, Saturday, Sept. 10, to attend later Brotherhood meetings in England.

The present Administrative Committee of the Board of Promotion of the Northern Baptist Convention celebrated its final gathering as the Administrative Committee at New York, on Sept. 15, by a meeting that will go down in the history of Northern Baptists as full of significance. To make a brief summary of the biggest issues of the meeting, there were the Aristic Day recommendations, embodying a great denominational vision; there was the expressed approval of the plan of the two foreign mission societies for relief work in Europe, outlined by Dr. Franklin; and there was the gallant offer of the women of the denomination to undertake, through the Woman's American Baptist Foreign Mission Society, and the Woman's American Baptist Home Mission Society, an added, and glorious responsibility, in completing the New World Movement fund.

Rev. R. A. MacMullen, pastor of the Temple Church, Chicago, has resigned to accept the pastorate of the church at Manhattan, Kans. The Temple Church by unanimous vote passed resolutions commending both the pastor and his wife for their broad vision and tolerant, Christlike spirit. Manhattan is a college center and will furnish a splendid field for the service of these good folks.

Cleveland Baptists are making preparations for a great denominational week from October 10 to 16. The churches of the city are uniting in a week's services led by denominational representatives who have been conspicuously successful in various branches of church activity. As a climax to the program the churches will unite in a great evangelistic service in the New Masonic Temple in which thousands of Baptists will worship, forgetting their individual church problems and feeling the inspiration of touching shoulders with the larger fellowship.

A united evangelistic movement sponsored by the Chicago Church Federation through the churches during the fall and winter will be formally launched on Sunday and Monday, Oct. 2 and 3. Dr. Charles L. Goodell, executive secretary of the Commission on Evangelism of the

Fiery Temptation

A firm dealing in material of special interest to speakers wants to have its wares set forth in this Kollum. "We will give you a dollar a line for ten lines if you will rework the material and use it in your Kollum." How inconvenient it is to be always honest! THE BAPTIST cannot accept paid reading notices under the guise of news. It cannot even prostitute this Kollum too for the sake of gain. We confess that such a price for this particular space is a real temptation to the business department. Get thee behind me!

Not Job's Comforter

Mrs. Killam's Kollum has within the past few weeks passed through a most critical operation. The Michigan Baptist gave publicity to the fact and many letters have come from anxious friends in that state. One from Detroit was especially comforting. THE BAPTIST always delights to pass good things down the line and will quote from this personal letter. "Ida May, you could not die if you tried. If you did die it would not kill you and you would be the first one to know it." If a merry heart doeth good like a medicine this letter is full of curative properties. Thank you my friend.

It Might Be Worse

Everybody knows that the summer time is not a good subscription period. It is the publisher's drought. Subscriptions usually shrink to the vanishing point. THE BAPTIST is therefore pleased to give a comparison between last year and this. The subscription receipts for July 1920 were $2252.01; for 1921 $2617.60; August 1920 $1194.61; for August 1921 $1726.74. That is in the two dry months a year ago we had subscription receipts amounting to $3446.62 and this year $4344.34.

Better Come Back West

Dr. E. M. Sephenson of Philadelphia, widely known because of his service in the field of religious education, writes us that for the third time the rumor has been started in Chicago that he is dead. No such rumor was ever heard until he left this section of the country. THE BAPTIST is opposed to all false rumors and registers the hope that the culprit will repent, desist or explain.

Let's All Smile

"Your kindly Kollum kreateth a Kristian smile, such as maketh the contents of THE BAPTIST increasingly palatable. Smile and the denomination will smile with you, squeal and you go hang. I'm for smiling." E. Leroy Dakin, Baptist Temple, Charleston, W. Va.

An Old Head But A Young Heart

Some weeks ago we received a letter from the widow of a former pastor. She expressed regret because of her inability to have THE BAPTIST and Missions any longer. One of our Baptist women in Chicago gladly provided this good woman with both journals. "Words fail to express my appreciation of the welcome visit each week and month of my dearly loved papers. My soul feasts on them and they are among my most treasured possessions. God bless you for your kindness to one whose years have numbered almost eighty but whose heart is as young as ever." Will you not help keep our "fellowship" fund such that we may provide for such worthy veteran workers?

Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America and the following denominational evangelistic secretaries, Dr. H. F. Stilwell, Baptist, Dr. J. H. Bader, Disciples, Dr. J. M. Summerville, Methodist Episcopal, and Bishop S. P. Spreng of the Evangelical Association, will be in Chicago on Oct. 2 and 3 and occupy pulpits morning and evening on Oct. 2 in some of the leading churches of the city.

Recently in Columbus, Ohio, a minister, Rev. J. J. Tisdale, was chosen by the building trades and unions as arbiter in a wage dispute. He decided that a wage reduction was right and fixed the wage for brick-layers at $1.12½ an hour. So far as appears both sides accepted the decision.

The name of Pundita Ramabai is known to Christians all over the United States who have admired the brave struggle she has made for more than a generation in behalf of the widows and deserted wives of India. Her husband at the present time is composed of some 1500 women, who are engaged in weaving, printing and farm work. Pundita has been expecting that her loved daughter, Mano Ramadai, who has been perfectly trained for the work, would in time succeed her mother in the leadership of the enterprise. News has recently been received of Mano's death. The grief-stricken mother will have the sympathy of the many thousands who have followed during the years her remarkable career.

Dr. Theodore M. Hofmeister, pastor at Greenfield, Ohio, was united in marriage on Sept. 7 to Miss Robbie Smith, the ceremony being performed by Pastor A. W. West of Washington C. H., Ohio. Dr. Albert Venting of the Southwestern Seminary, Fort Worth, Texas, preached for Dr. Hofmeister on Sept. 7.

One of the busiest men in the denomination is Dr. Frederick A. Agar who is making a church efficiency tour among the churches of the Northern Baptist Convention. Recently on one day in Chicago he received eleven requests for his services, none of which he could accept owing to the fact that his time is all booked up until June, except, of course, for the possibility of an occasional cancellation.

The Presbyterian Magazine is authority for the following: An Ohio pastor several years ago used his electrically lighted bulletin board to good effect. During the flu epidemic the churches were ordered closed. His bulletin board bore this sign: "This church is closed by order of the city council. Every saloon is open." But the saloons were soon closed, and his fearless board is given credit for the order which closed them.

In nearly half the states of the union reading of the Bible in the public schools is permitted and is the custom. In five states a law requires that it shall be read; these states are, Massachusetts, New Jersey, New York, Tennessee and Pennsylvania. These facts were determined by a survey just concluded by Dr. W. S. Hoyt, associate secretary of the Presbyterian Board of Ministerial Relief and Sustentation. There are a few states in which Bible reading is prohibited, including Arizona, Minnesota and Utah, and the Presbyterian secretary points out that two of these are states where Mormonism is strongly entrenched. The remaining states either have no law on the subject or else make specific mention that no sectarianism may be introduced in the schools. Most of the states that permit Bible reading also make that provision or indicate that the Scriptures shall be read without comment.

For the first time in the history of British journalism, a newspaper—the Daily Express—has begun a campaign to restore religion to its old place in the life of the people. "Back to God" is the slogan of the Daily Express, which daily prints an editorial in sermon form, pleading with men and women to give up their sins and vices and spend more time in church and in prayer at home. The newspaper asks for a revival of family prayer, an institution that was formerly common but is now "out of date."

On Wednesday, September 21, a regularly convened council which met with the Troopville Baptist Church, Troopville, N. Y., recommended that the church ordain its pastor, A. D. Rood. The ordination services were held on the same evening.

Mr. Rood spent several years in the Onondaga Conference of the Methodist Protestant Church, and was with the Canadian forces overseas for two years. He and his church look forward with Christian hope to their continued work together.

LESTER W. BUMPUS,
Clerk of the Council.

Rev. Archibald Alexander Forshee has been elected Minister-in-Charge of the activities of the Second Avenue Baptist Church, New York City, a center of manifold community activities, especially among foreigners.

Dr. Franklin W. Swift of Rochelle, Ill., has just closed a successful tent campaign with the Baptist, Methodist and Evangelical churches of Dunkerton, Iowa. He now opens a similar campaign with the Baptist, Free Baptist, Methodist and Congregational churches of Dexter, Maine.

Rev. C. A. Anderson, who has served the Swedish Church in Arlington, with marked success, for almost ten years has accepted a call from the Swedish Church of Providence, R. I., and will begin his work there about Nov. 15.

The Herald of Hope Church of Urbana, Ill., Rev. J. S. Kirkland, pastor, did the magnificent thing last summer when twenty-seven "fresh-air" children from Chicago were taken care of for a period of time. Under the leadership of the pastor members of the church opened their homes to these boys and girls from the great city. In so doing the members of this church have set an example for other churches within a reasonable distance of Chicago to emulate.

On the last Sunday of a tent campaign, Sept. 18th, at Martinsville, Ind. led by Evangelist John M. Linden, Madison, Wis., a Baptist layman made it possible for the Gypsy Smith choir of a 1,000 voices and the New Boys' band of Indianapolis to come to Martinsville, and in song and testimony bring a rousing climax to the tent meeting. About 10,000 people crowded the court-house square. The chorus and band came in 21 coaches, and a chicken dinner was served them after the service. Mr. Linden opened his next campaign on Sept. 28, at Dunkirk, Ind.

Charles L. Williams, professor and head of the department of English Literature in Denison University, having reached retiring age, has been released from active duties in the classroom. He continues in the employ of the university. Dr. Williams will serve the students by frequently conducting the chapel meetings. He is much in demand as a preacher and lecturer, and will devote some time to writing for publication. Dr. Williams has for a generation served the Baptists in a conspicuously useful way. He is deservedly very popular with his many friends, and all will rejoice that he is to be free to serve now in this more leisurely way. He will continue to reside at Granville, Ohio.

The opening reception of the Kansas City Theological Seminary was held on the evening of Sept. 26. The address of the occasion was by Pres. Crannell on the subject, "Modern Ideals in Christian Training."

A Bible conference is to be held in Memphis, Tenn., Oct. 2 to 16. The meetings are to be held in different churches, with headquarters at the Central Baptist Church, Rev. Benjamin Cox, pastor. The movement started last year and promises to be even better this year. Some of the best-known Bible teachers in this country are to be present.

Writing in the "Pacific Christian Advocate" for August 24, Rev. J. H. Geoghegan reports a new development in the ministry of Dr. John Henry Jowett, lately returned to England. Always a leader among teachers of spiritual truth, Dr. Jowett has heard the call, this writer says, to a social ministry. This is accounted for on the ground of the new and altogether different environment in which he finds himself, surrounded by strong churchmen who are at the same time identified with the labor movement—notably Liggett, Rattenbury, Chadwick and Clifford. On the other hand the labor movement has outstanding leaders who are recognized as churchmen—such men as Henderson, Clynes, Barnes and Snowden. Unfortunately, the condition in America is quite in contrast to this. Few leaders of labor are active in the church, and relatively few ministers have reached a position of influence upon the labor movement.

We are sorry to read that Editor R. R. Sadler of The Baptist Record, the State paper for Iowa has been taken seriously ill, and shall join with the rest of the brethren who have enjoyed his work and been at times the recipients of his hospitality in hoping for an early recovery. The Record for Sept. 17 carries this announcement: "The condition of Editor Sadler while somewhat improved is very serious and even under the most favorable circumstances it will be weeks before he can take up his work again at the office."

Rev. F. B. Johnson of the First Church, Milton, Pa., has recently accepted the call of the Dearborn Street Church, Buffalo, N. Y., and is now on the field.

Rev. J. F. Huckleberry has resigned the pastorate of the First Church, Los Animas, Colo., and has accepted a temporary call to the Grace Church, Portland, Oregon and will be on the field part of October. The past year has been one of progress at Los Animas.

In these days it is interesting, if a little aggravating, to know that a recent letter from Miss Mabel Young, a teacher

Let the Current Through!

ALMOST all of us have noticed at times that some people, working with electricity, wear rubber gloves and use tools which have rubber handles. A recent number of the Youth's Companion tells the story of some children who observed a man who was doing work in connection with some electric wires. The strange thing about him was that he wore heavy rubber boots. The sun was shining, the ground was dry and even dusty and yet this man had on rubber boots. The children laughed and then asked him why he was doing so strange a thing, only to get from him this interesting answer, "Electricity has this peculiar property that it will not enter a body unless it can pass out. Rubber is not a good conductor, electricity does not easily pass through and so does not enter the body protected by it." Put in other words, the current must be continuous and cannot flow where there is some obstacle like rubber.

Many things in life are like that. Knowledge becomes our real possession when we pass it on to others. Stop giving it away and we stop getting a full mastery of it. If you want to remember a good story tell it immediately to the first two or three people you meet. It will die within you if you do not give it away.

Jesus had this interesting thing to say about forgiveness, "If you forgive not men their trespasses neither will your father forgive you yours." Only as you possess the forgiving spirit, only as the current flows on through, can you receive God's forgiveness.

Love is like that. One may always receive the gifts of love but if he is to receive love itself it is because he already possesses love, because he is showing it towards others.

Supremely is this true of God's love. He gives it freely but we shall never know its blessedness unless the way through our lives lies open, unless the love which is his gift for us is finding continual expression in loving service. Because love is going out it can come in. Stop its expression and the reception of it ceases.

Let us learn the lesson of the electricity. If it cannot pass out, it will not enter a body. Where there is an obstacle the current will not flow at all. And then think in connection with it of that verse, taken from another connection, "Give and it shall be given unto you; good measure, pressed down, shaken together and running over, shall men give into your bosom."

Crisis All Along the Line

CAREFUL reading of denominational papers makes it perfectly evident that the stress of the economic situation is being felt to some degree of all bodies of Christians and is yielding results which are distinctly visible in connection with the receipts for the big denominational movements. Congregationalists are concerned over certain deficits; Methodists are glorying in their achievements but urging that unusual efforts must be made if work is to be continued in all its power; President Mullins has sent forth to Southern Baptist churches an appeal which pictures what he calls a crisis. There is no body of people which is not affected, no great group of churches which does not feel the strain.

We must expect therefore that there will be experienced much difficulty in holding up to the full program of giving which is proposed this year in the Northern Baptist Convention. We are not immune to conditions which affect other denominations. Our people are living in the same world and affected by the same business conditions. If wages are shrinking, they are doing so for Baptists as well as for others. If profits are lessening, our people are feeling it as well as others. If a new caution in the spending of money is making itself felt, we also are subject to it. The program calls for increased giving over last year; nobody should be surprised if in the first months of the year the situation showed actually decreased giving. We are not saying that it does; but with conditions as they are, it easily might.

Churches whose members practice tithing or which have been able to organize thoroughly on the principles of stewardship will have little or no trouble in meeting their obligations and even increasing their gifts; others are certain to have before them some real problems. The call for sacrifice will be larger than it has been.

Church treasurers will find that it is necessary to treat with particular care those who are in arrears in their New World offerings, and will do well to study in this connection the words directed to them by Dr. Agar which appear in another part of this paper. Their business is not only to get money immediately but even more to deal with the members of the churches in such a way that men and women will do the best they can now and be prepared, as opportunity offers, to do increasingly large things. Genuine Christian sympathy and understanding must be emphasized. The contributor is more than his money and must be treated as if he were more.

Perhaps it may be well for us to look over once more the pages of the "Survey," to study again with care the projects which are either under way or planned by our great societies, to get the picture of what is possible when a great denomination really stirs itself to play fully its part in making Christ known on the earth. The facts thrilled us in the first place; as we refresh our minds, we shall be led anew to resolve with all our powers to do the very best we can with the material at our disposal for a Lord who never fails to appreciate the large and splendid things which his servants and friends attempt for him. Nothing is impossible except for those who believe it so.

Roses Do Not Grow in Hell

MRS. MONTGOMERY'S earnest appeal, appearing in THE BAPTIST of September 24, calling upon Baptists everywhere to move together in an effort to secure disarmament, receives additional emphasis from the tentative agenda proposed by the government of the United States for the conference on the limitation of armaments, as reported in the daily papers for September 21.

Those agenda include limitation of naval armaments in respect to basis, extent and fulfillment; rules for the control of new agencies of warfare; limitation of land armament; principles and their application in relation to territorial and administrative integrity, equality of commercial and industrial opportunity, concessions, monopolies, and preferential privileges, development of railways, preferential railroad rates, and the status of existing commitments, in China and Siberia; and mandated islands.

Please to scan the list. Every item is a problem of imperialistic rivalry. There is not one word about liberty, justice, self-government, elimination of class and race conflicts, emancipation of the oppressed, the tranquilization of the discontented, the welfare of the people.

Here, clear as day, officially proclaimed by the highest authority are the causes of the great war just past and of that one just ahead. They are rival cupidities quarreling over opportunities for spoils. After this exhibit can anybody plead ignorance of these causes?

What then does the conference propose? It has the option of three courses: to end the predatory system that brought one great war and threatens another, to come to an agreement among the spoilers that they will not interfere with each other's depredations, or to rush into an early conflict of arms. It is trying to avoid war. Very well; success in that effort will be something gained in any case. But if it attempts to settle a general agreement for plunder, to arrange a compounding of felonies on an imperial scale, war among the exploiters will be merely postponed, and a little later a world revolution will come. One may as well look for roses in hell as to look for permanent peace to come from a settlement that ignores liberty, justice and the common welfare of the people.

These remarks are not offered in criticism of the government of the United States, nor of the representatives of any government. The proposed agenda mark merely the stage which civilization has reached in this year 1921. It is well indeed that the world should be made to understand clearly that the provocatives of war which alone this conference is called to consider are those of commercial rapacity and imperial ambition. Much complaint has been made that the restlessness of the people endangers the world's peace; but the government of the United States, in omitting the restlessness of the people from its agenda, declares that complaint groundless. No visible reason for armament lies in that quarter. Stop exploitation and you need not fear the people.

The conference is coming. It is honest. It is the best agency in sight for the promotion of disarmament. It is an effort to explore and remove the actual causes of war. It will listen to the voice of the people if they have anything vital to say and are able to unite in saying it.

Precisely this is the reason why the people ought to move with unexampled mass, earnestness, unity and wisdom, in the interest of a fundamental and permanent settlement of peace. The big business of all who love God and humanity and of every agency of religion, enlightenment and goodwill is to create among the people a rational, united and resistless demand for a settlement that will remove the causes, and will secure them against the ravage, of war.

Our Testing Time Has Come

VALUATORS of the New World Movement offer different appraisements. One pronounces it a failure; another regards it as one of the great successes of modern Christianity. Both are right. We have greatly begun a great thing, but we have not done all that we tried to do nor all that we ought to do. The rest is yet to be done and we dare not stop till it is accomplished. We have merely reached the place where the real work begins. We have done what could be done by a swift preliminary campaign. We have plucked the fruit that was already ripe. We have discovered the actual size of our task.

Now comes our testing time. Shall we go on or shall we stop where we are? If we stop, we shall have failed. Our people will lose heart and passion for the movement. Subscriptions will shrink. Our missionary and educational advance will be paralyzed. But if we go on, we must undertake a broad and intelligent program of education, unification and enlistment amongst our people.

First, we must convert three-fourths of them to an understanding and acceptance of the principles of Christian stewardship. This and this only will solve the financial problem.

Secondly we must convert about the same number to the program of the movement. Most of those who hold a favorable attitude towards it are merely passive. They would not oppose it; they rather wish that it may succeed; but their soul is not in it. Others have misunderstood it from the first, have been therefore opposed to it, and because of such misunderstanding are still opposed to it. Some of them still think that it is in some way connected with the Interchurch movement.

Thirdly, a veritable heresy scare has run through the denomination, creating distrust and suspicion and preventing unity of action on any program. Some of us believed that the denomination was in imminent danger of perversion from the dissemination of false teaching. Some thought that there was no ground for the scare. Some thought that a few extremists were disturbing the peace of the churches for factional ends. Those various views were honestly held, but need not be argued now. The task is to reassure our people's faith that the New World Movement is loyal to Baptist principles.

In a single sentence, our task is to place behind the movement in the minds and hearts of the Baptist people a clear conviction of its worthiness and a passionate devotion to its program. For this purpose a broadly and clearly conceived and carefully organized educational propaganda, having for its object the enlightenment, unification and enlistment of our people in the New World Movement, and their intelligent acceptance of the practice of Christian stewardship, should be opened up at once, and perseveringly carried on until these objects are achieved.

That such a program is contemplated by the leaders of the denomination in official places may be accepted as a matter of course. But every pastor and other local church leader, and every person in whatever position, has responsibility in proportion to the measure of his opportunity. Do not wait for any orders from headquarters. Go to work in your own place and your own way, to promote the stewardship of life and property, to disseminate a knowledge of the New World Movement and to enlist people in its support.

Forget doctrinal controversies. The promulgation of the Des Moines Confession and its reception have shown that in basic doctrinal conceptions Baptists are as nearly one as they have been at any time in the past. We may safely assume that no group is endeavoring to pervert or divide the denomination. If somebody says some freakish thing ignore him. Both he and his freak will pass and will hardly leave a mark. At proper times and places debate any questions that require debate, but let no man slack his hand from the main task.

In relation to this movement there is but one course to pursue: it is forward, each and all.

Those Minute Men

IN the midst of the newspaper furore about the Ku Klux Klan it is encouraging to read in The Religious Herald, a sketch of a very different organization, namely, the American Minute Men.

Its plan of organization is extremely simple, the idea being to have cards, signed by all citizens, male and female, who believe in its principles and who are willing to vote to maintain them. It will be entirely optional with each signer of a card as to how active a part he takes in the movement beyond voting in support of its principles. The present membership as last reported, is between 2,000,000 and 3,000,000.

It is in no sense of the word a proscriptive organization. It antagonizes no religious body as such. It stands for broad American principles in a broad American way. It aims to prohibit sectarian appropriations, that and nothing else.

For this purpose it has introduced in Congress an amendment to this effect:

Article of Amendment

"No law shall be passed respecting an establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof, nor shall the national government or any State, county, city, town, village or other civil division use its property or credit or any money raised by taxation or otherwise, or authorize either to be used for the purpose of founding, maintaining or aiding by appropriation, payment for services, expenses, or in any other manner, any church, religious denomination or religious society, or any institution, school, society or undertaking which is wholly or in part under sectarian or ecclesiastical control."

A Primer of Theology

THE editors of THE BAPTIST take great pleasure in announcing that they will begin the publication, about November 1, of a "Primer of Theology," written by Dr. Augustus H. Strong. There will be eight installments, which will appear weekly until the whole is completed.

No man is more respected among the Baptists of the North than Dr. Strong. No man has rendered during his life time a finer piece of service. All over the world there are men, his former students, who have been quickened by his life and thought. He is stalwart and strong, conservative without being reactionary, zealous for the truth and yet a lover of unity, absolutely loyal to the Bible and at the same time a defender of Baptist liberty. He believes in the veritable atonement and deity of Christ and is thoroughly convinced that he is "our peace," perfectly able to reconcile and unite our Baptist Christians. We are sure that these chapters will have a wide reading and will be thoroughly discussed, both by individuals and in our churches. We recommend them as the basis for a course in doctrinal education in the churches.

The salient ideas of this "Primer" will, of course, already have appeared in Dr. Strong's other writings. But upon all points he will bring new light derived from modern philosophy and literature and will endeavor to simplify them so that he who runs may read. Pastors may well order extra copies of the numbers in which this series will appear for use in their churches. Individual Christians, zealous for the truth, can do a service by seeing that copies are distributed among their friends. Nothing is more to be desired just now than clear thinking upon the great truths for which our Baptist Christians stand. Dr. Strong's purpose is to help us all do just such thinking.

No man, of course, dictates the thinking and the doctrinal opinions of Baptists. But the confusion of opinion among them makes such a statement from such a leader a timely contribution to a good understanding.

Try Thyroid and See What Happens

WHICH of you by taking thought can add one cubit to his stature?" With this question Jesus gave the world a poser for many centuries. Men have tried a little thought and endless worry, but no gain of additional cubits thereby is reported.

Some thinker, however, lighted upon the thyroid glands of cattle and sheep, and it is reported that science is doing wonders in the way of stimulating both physical and mental growth in human beings by giving them tablets of thyroid.

People who aspire to a more expansive stature may now cease to take thought, and take an occasional tablet.

* * *

Romanism, according to the Christian Evangelist, rests on an institution, and Protestantism on a book. Carrying the analysis a little farther, we may observe that Rationalism rests on a speculation, and "Baptisticism" (that is the Baptist movement in its principle and tendency) on an experience.

The Study of Missions in Baptist Educational Institutions: A Survey of Present Conditions

Never since the days of the Apostle have the churches taken so seriously the task of giving the whole gospel to the whole world. Schools are incorporating the subject in the body of a liberal education.

By KENNETH SCOTT LATOURETTE

ONE of the outstanding features of the history of the church in the past generation has been, as we all know, the greatly increased interest in foreign missions. Never since apostolic times has the church as a whole taken so seriously its task of giving the gospel of Christ to the entire world. In the offering of life and of money to our mission boards, in missionary information and education both for the laity and the clergy, the past thirty or forty years have seen great advances.

Mission Study Vital as Latin

Of vital importance to the future of this foreign missionary movement is the question of how far the growth of missions is being reflected by changes in the curriculums of our academies, colleges, universities, and theological schools. If we are to have the intelligent support of our future leaders, both lay and clerical, and if our missionaries are to be properly prepared, the faculties of our educational institutions must make provision for missionary education. Much can be done through missionary addresses, through voluntary study classes, and through the work of students and faculty outside the class room. If, however, missions are to have permanently a prominent part in the life of an institution, if interest in them is to be based on sound information as well as enthusiasm, and if adequate preparation is to be given to missionaries and to leaders in the home church, some provision must be made for them in the curriculum. Certainly in a Christian school the world wide enterprise of the church deserves the formal attention of the faculty as truly, shall we say, as the history and organization of the state, the Latin or German language, or biology or geology.

How widely awake are our Baptist institutions to this need? This question has led to the examination of the latest available issues of the catalogues of the institutions listed in the American Baptist Year Book, and has yielded some interesting, and on the whole, encouraging results. All the theological schools supported by the Northern and the Southern Conventions, with the possible exception of those which devote themselves to the training of ministers for foreign speaking sections of the denomination, and whose catalogues were not available, make provision for the study of missions. In most instances there is a variety of courses, such as the history of missions, the history of Baptist missions, and some of the religions of the mission fields. In at least four of the eleven schools examined some work in missions is required for graduation or a degree, and in at least two schools a member of the faculty is set aside to give his entire time to the department. When one remembers how comparatively recent has been the appearance of missions as a separate study in any of our American institutions this showing is most encouraging, and indicates an eagerness not only to be led but to lead in the awakening of the church to its world wide task. As one examines the catalogues one cannot help wishing, however, that in everyone of our theological schools there should be at least one man who is giving his full time to the study, the teaching, and the stimulation of interest in missions. One wonders, too, whether at least one course in missions should not be required in all seminaries for all candidates for a degree. If the minister who is to remain in this country is to give intelligent backing to the missionary enterprise he should certainly be as informed on the present activities in non-Christian lands as he is on the spread of the church through ancient and medieval times, or as he is on homiletics or pastoral theology. It is not a question of omitting one of these subjects, but of including another one.

Colleges Seem to be Drowsy

Our colleges do not seem to have awakened to the situation as rapidly as have our seminaries, although here as well there is ground for encouragement and commendation. All of our Baptist colleges and universities, both north and south, make provision for the study of the Bible, and this book properly taught must ever be an incentive to missions. Ten of the twenty-nine universities, colleges, and junior colleges listed under the Northern Convention<sup>1</sup> and eleven out of thirty-nine southern schools examined<sup>2</sup> offer at least one course in missions. This is usually either a general survey course, a history of missions, or a history of Baptist missions. In five northern and three southern institutions<sup>3</sup> there are offered courses in the religions of the world, although these are not always the contemporary faiths of non-Christian lands. In only one institution (a northern one) is there a department of missions or a man devoting his entire time to the subject. In this respect we are behind some other denominations.

Do not Find Fault too Soon

So recently have courses in missions been developed that our colleges and universities should not be criticized too quickly for not having introduced them more extensively. They should rather indeed, be commended for introducing them as rapidly as they have. In some of the institutions which list no courses there is undoubtedly a vital missionary interest. Is it too much to ask, however, that in every college supported by the denomination the faculty offer at least one course on the foreign enterprise of the church, and that in our large institutions a separate department of missions be established with at least one full time instructor? Certainly our laity are entitled to the same opportunities that are enjoyed by our clergy in the theological schools. When one remembers, moreover, that our educational and medical missionaries must in most cases have all their formal training in comparative religions and the history of missions before going to the professional school it becomes little short of imperative that as a measure of preparation for our missionaries all of our colleges and universities should offer, in addition to strong courses in the Bible and Christian evidences, courses in missions, either in the form of a history of the enterprise or of a survey of the enterprise as it is today. It is certainly imperative that there be on each faculty one man, no matter what his chair, whose special interest it is to cultivate interest among the undergraduates and the teaching staff.

Few Offer Courses on Missionary Countries

Few of our college and universities, offer courses on the countries which we think of as missionary—Asia, Latin America, and Africa. Both the Far East and Latin America are today of such importance to the United States that every college and university ought as a matter of general interest to offer at least a semester course on these regions, usually in connection with the history department. Certainly as a matter of missionary preparation for those who are to go abroad and for laymen and ministers at home there should be courses offered on these fields. Yet only four of our northern institutions and three of our southern ones catalogue such courses. Poverty may be a sufficient excuse for the apparent neglect of some but it may not be so urged for all.

Academies Have no Bible Course

In the academies controlled by the denomination the missionary interest which is so evident in the courses offered by the seminaries and which is beginning to become apparent in the colleges has scarcely begun to show itself. In none of the eighteen northern academies examined is there a course on missions and in four of them there is no course on the Bible. The curriculum of the academy must of necessity be narrower than that of a college, but many of us know how missions, when rightly represented, appeal to the youth of high school age. There seems to be no logical reason why the Bible should not be required in our church schools throughout the course, and why one of the required courses in it, say in the junior or senior year, should not be based upon the biographies of the great missionary heroes of the church. It is significant that while the decisions of most of our ministers to enter that profession have been made before they came to college, most of our missionaries have heard the call to the foreign field after entering college. Our academies, if they deserve the support of the denomination, ought to become the center of missionary enthusiasm, so that it will be natural for their graduates not only to support missions from the home base but to give their lives on the field. One way of stimulating that interest will be to make some provision for missionary instruction under the tuition of a skillful and enthusiastic instructor.

Be Thankful and Push

The total impression with which one comes away from an examination of the status of missions in the curriculums of our Baptist institutions is a combination of encouragement and incentive, encouragement over the progress that has been made during the past generation or more, and incentive toward seeing that the excellent beginnings are recognized as being only beginnings. On the basis of the work that has been done so far we need to see a very great expansion in the attention which is given to missions by all of our Baptist institutions. The room for improvement is greatest in our academies, it is only somewhat less in our colleges and universities, and it still exists in our theological schools. While thankful for what has been done we need to take courage for large expansion in the immediate future. We owe it to the present generation of Baptist youth.

Mr. Church Treasurer:—A Word With You

A church treasurer told me with a break in his voice that a lot of the members, when they saw him approaching along the street dodged him.

By FREDERICK A. AGAR

THE local church treasurer is primarily a lay minister to the giving life of the church, but many members think of him only as a money collector.

Getting Money the Small Part

The small part of a church treasurer's work is to get in and pay out the dollars and cents which the members provide for the New World Movement or the current expense fund. Prompt and ample payment is very necessary but that part of his task is somewhat mechanical and ordinary. The great and important part of the treasurer's work is to care for and help develop the spiritual lives of all the givers in the church. It is fairly easy to handle dollars and cents in a business like, methodical way, but it is a far more difficult thing to handle people so that they grow in their desire to give to God a first and increasing share of all their prosperity.

In thus addressing the church treasurers, we do not want these remarks confined solely to the one group of officials, for in effect they apply to every church officer who handles the Lord's money for that organization or its enterprises.

In a manufacturing center recently a church treasurer told me with a break in his voice that a lot of the members when they saw him approaching along the street dodged him or turned and went in another direction to avoid meeting him. I knew the reason and told him what to do. Many of the people were out of work and had been idle for four months or so. They had made generous pledges to the New World Movement and the church, which loss of work made impossible for them to pay now. But at the end of each quarter everyone, regardless of their circumstances, had received a statement showing what was due and when two weeks elapsed without a payment they all received "a dun." Today that treasurer is not sending out any more "duns" to idle or sick people, but by means of personal visitation he and his committee are putting brotherly love and help into the lives of some whose prosperity has temporarily departed. By and by when work again becomes plentiful most of those pledges will be paid in full because the people with a spirit of heroism and a love for the cause of Christ will sacrifice before they will allow others to suffer from lack of the gospel.

How to Proceed

Here are a few simple directions which have been of help to church

Ox-Carting to Ahuachapan

Only a little while ago Central America seemed hardly within the field of view of the missionary enterprise. Now the Northern Baptist Convention has accepted the field as its own special charge. This story gives one an idea of conditions and progress.

By CONSTANCE JACKSON

THERE are conventions and conventions—all the way from National Republican to Northern Baptist ones! And there are ways and ways of attending them, from the de luxe elegance of Wolverine or Broadway Limited service to slow ox-carting across long stretches of desert. Since that to which we are least accustomed appeals most, suppose, for a change, that we imagine ourselves one of the pupils in the

SANTA ANA SCHOOL

Baptist school at Santa Ana, El Salvador. Feel with them the joy which came when Miss Martha Howell announced that school would be closed for a whole week in order that young and old might attend the association at Ahuachapan.

Jogging With Mules and Oxen

A rumbling ox-cart is made ready for the trip of thirty miles and the boarding school girls distribute themselves around and on top of the household necessities. Now the missionaries and teachers mount their mules and we are off. What a delightful feeling of truancy with none of the usual pangs of conscience! Who was it that defined contentment as remorseless idleness? We know now exactly how he felt! The missionaries lead the way but ever and anon they turn back on their trusty steeds to see how the big family of happy girls is faring.

The pace of a good little Central American mule and that of an ox do not by any means coincide. Nightfall finds us only at the plain of Dona Maria, a small village much the other side of Ahuachapan. Shall we risk the heavily clouded sky and proceed further or had we best take shelter for the night where we are? While we deliberate a woman going along the road informs us of a service in progress at a house not far above us. Arriving there we find our own native missionaries, Don Angel Garcia of the Publication Society and Don Soliz of the Home Mission Society, preaching to a well filled room. All the help we can give we offer and, entering the house with the little folding organ from the cart, we join in the invitation hymn. Two days later two men confessed their Lord at a session of the association, saying that they had first believed that night at the plain of Dona Maria.

Nature Had Washed her Face

Four o'clock the next morning finds us ready to start on the second day of our journey. The threatening rain of the night before, although it had caused us a little inconvenience when it sprinkled over our swinging hammocks from the eaves of the little overhanging porch, now made the earth a new place. Nature had had her face washed and the deep dust of the day before had given way to the cool, pleasant highway of the rainy season.

At last the buildings of the beautiful little city of Ahuachapan lie before us, shining crystal clear in the blinding sunlight which had followed the storm. We are greeted by Don Galbino Tobar and a group of "creyentes" (believers) who bid us welcome at the entrance to the city.

The "Fiesta de los Protestantes," as the association was called by the citizens, is not one of flags and flowers as are so many fiestas in Central America. Rather it is one of rejoicing over work done and new plans made. From Amaton comes word of a group of believers living under the very shadow of old Chingo, the volcano, on the Guatemalan border. Fine interest is theirs but one important thing remains lacking—so few of their number know how to read. When necessary teacher.

takes steps to provide a school for this place and the Santa Ana Mission enjoys hopes of supplying the the need is reported the association

Beauty, Volcano and Sleep

The long day's journey home from the darkness of early morning to the clear moonlight of late evening is a pleasant bit of holiday for teachers and girls alike. Many things add to the interest of the homecoming. Our path winds through the unfolding glories of beautiful, rich farmland; here the steaming "ausoles," or openings in the side of a volcano, cause exclamations of wonder as streams of condensed water vapor are shot forth from the boiling caldron within; there the meeting of a group of believers as they go on foot to their evening meal adds to the beauty and harmony of the fast darkening landscape.

A weary crowd of sleepy people, we roll out of our cramped positions in cart or on mule. But with a day of rest and relaxation we are ready for work again, and Monday finds teacher and pupil alike back in the schoolroom, almost as though we had never "played hookey" to Ahuachapan!

Again and again we read in our denominational journals that "Baptists stand for" this or that or that Baptists have such or such an attitude towards labor or towards capital, or that Baptists maintain a certain doctrine or stand for a certain interpretation. Such statements need always to be taken with a grain or two and sometimes with a whole sack of salt. It is remarkable indeed how a free people like ours agree in a general way on many questions that are in issue but one hesitates to generalize too freely. Who among us will have the courage to point out some of the grave deficiencies in which, alas, there is too much agreement among our people? What ought our Baptist Israel to do in these testing times. It might not be as pleasing to point out our faults and limitations as to dwell upon our fine qualities, but in the end it might be more wholesome.—Religious Herald.

PREACHING AT A PAGAN SHRINE

WORSHIPERS OF SPACE

Preaching the Gospel from the Throne of the Gods

"We were received cordially and noisily, a long string of firecrackers making the hills to echo. The Gods were leaving their throne to meet us."

By E. S. BURKET

GOD moves in mysterious and unexpected ways his wonders to perform. Did it ever happen before that two of his heralds of the gospel stood before the face of living gods, as they sat upon their lofty thrones, and preached the unsearchable riches of God in Christ? This seeming impossibility happened during Chinese New Year in this tenth year of the Republic of China, the year of our Lord 1921. The gods in question are Lai San Shuh and Lin Ng Shuh, disciples of Liao Sien Pah, leader of a new religious movement who was executed over twenty years ago by the provincial authorities of Kiang Si. The latter, noting the tremendous following of Liao and fearing a political uprising, seized and decapitated the leader. Some years later when things had quieted down, his disciples revived the movement. Liao was deified. Lin and Lai took their place upon the throne with Liao's empty chair between them. Since then the movement has been increasing in momentum, until now they have their beautiful temples as far away as Shanghai and even Siam.

They Worship Space

The original object of worship was space (khung chung, literally "empty space.") This is still the chief doctrine of the sect. It is a much purer form of worship than Buddhism or Taoism as they appear in China today, though it resembles both in some aspects. In the worship of "Space," the idea seems to be similar to the original Buddhistic doctrine of self-culture and self-mastery, or emancipation from all desires of the individual. By constant denial of all thoughts of the individual and concentrated meditation upon the blissful peace and calm of the vast canopy of space spread before them, one will become dead to self and absorbed into the very deep of the universe. Therefore they sit night and day under the heavens, sleeping but a scant two or three hours a night and eating only when nature seems to demand it. The worship of Liao and his disciples was apparently not a part of the original program. The former's martyrdom was the occasion for the development of present idolatrous elements. Today the cult has grown so that worshipers come from nearly all the eighteen provinces and even foreign parts. Upon the writer's first visit to the place, on Liao's birthday, two years ago, he found over five thousand adherents on attendance.

An ex-God Plants the Gospel

The story of how the door was opened to the preaching of the gospel from the throne of the gods as a pulpit, goes back several years ago to the neighboring province of Fukien, where a high-priest of the sect, himself a sort of god who received adulation from a large following, was converted to Christ. He has never ceased to hope that his former fellow-worshipers of Space would also come to a knowledge of the truth as it is in Christ. Therefore when he heard that a number of truthseekers among his old friends were investigating the claims of Christianity, he at once conferred with the missionary. The latter, Rev. F. J. Wiens, of the Mennonite Baptists, located in Shang Hang, Fukien, then communicated with the writer, arranging for a visit to Changning, in Kiang Si, in order to investigate the possibilities for planting the gospel-seed at the very heart of the movement.

With the ex-god Lin accompanying, Mr. Wiens made the three days' journey over mountains to the Changning field just after the beginning of Chinese New Year. The two missionaries and Mr. Lin then set out for the twenty-mile ride across hills to Vong Tshia, the headquarters for the Space-worshipers. On the way we passed two of their temples, large, ornate, brick structures, very Oriental and picturesque. A short stop was made near the second temple at the house of a young teacher, a new convert to Christ who was baptized only this last summer. From here we sent our cards on ahead to give notice of our coming. After a brief visit to the temple, where we were received with fire-works and light refreshments, and where tracts and a copy of the New Testament were given, we hastened to our destination, the seat of the gods, only a mile and a half into the hills.

Welcomed With Firecrackers

At Vong Tshia we were received cordially and noisily, a long string of large firecrackers making the hills to echo loudly. Soon we were seated in the reception room and conversing in friendly fashion over the ubiquitous cup of tea. Then to our surprise, we were told that the gods were leaving their throne on the hillside among the trees, and were coming down to meet us! It was more than we expected and promised well for the success of our visit. We went out and half way up the hill, found Lai and Lin standing awaiting us under a large camphor tree. Both are men of about three score and ten, impressive and dignified of mien. The party, visitors and hosts, then ascended the hill, to the altar under the pines where the two "gods" hold audience. Worshipers come and go in a stream, from near and far, to prostrate themselves in the dust before these two men, who in their younger days, were coolies and who are still illiterate. After a short conversation, during which worship was suspended, the visitors returned to the reception room below and the gods went back to their lofty seats.

Meanwhile a sumptuous feast had been prepared by skilled cooks. The conversation turned almost solely to discussion of Space-worship and the gospel. At this time we renewed the request made some time before, that we be allowed the privilege of holding a meeting for the preaching of the gospel. Upon our assuring them that we intended no destructive remarks, consent was given. Numerous tracts had already been distributed. These were the occasion for several interviews and talks with various monks and leaders among them. One of the latter showed himself so familiar and friendly to the gospel, that we asked him to speak at our meeting.

We had thought that doubtless the service would be held in the open space before the temple. But to our surprise and pleasure, we were taken out upon the hillside before the altar where sat the two gods. Here a table was brought to serve as a pulpit. Leaders, monks, serving people and worshipers, to the number of several hundred, then gathered to hear what the preachers of Christ had to say. It was a scene that brought vividly to mind the seventeenth of Acts, where Paul, in idolatrous Athens, stood upon Mar's Hill and preached Christ to the multitude. This story from Acts was read as the scripture lesson for the occasion. Interest was intense and nothing broke the stillness upon the hillside but the voices of the speakers, as they one after another sought to reveal to their hearers the one, true God and his Son, Jesus Christ. It was the opportunity of a life-time.

Upon our departure cordial and

"Fill a Ship in Fellowship"—Shipping Instructions

ATTENTION has been called in recent issues of THE BAPTIST to the plan of the two Foreign Mission Societies for sending a shipload of supplies to the suffering people in Poland, Czecho-Slovakia and Latvia. Final arrangements have now been completed for the assembling of the supplies at the warehouse, and the loading of the ship for sailing about the middle of November. Baptist churches, women's circles, Sunday school classes and other organizations in the churches, as well as individuals should note carefully the following shipping instructions.

1. Shipping bags have been sent to pastors and women's circles. If you need additional tags, make immediate application to your State Promotion Director.

2. All supplies should be securely packed and sent by parcel post or express, FULLY PREPAID.

3. All packages should be addressed to European Relief Warehouse, 348 E. 23rd St., New York.

4. Every donor is requested to send to the White Cross Department, 276 Fifth Avenue, New York City, a remittance amounting to five cents per pound of his shipment, in order to defray the cost of ocean freight. This request is made because our people will naturally expect to prepay their shipments from their homes to their final destinations in Europe.

5. Be sure to indicate on the shipping tag whether the package is sent by an individual or by a church or organization in the church. This is necessary in order to preserve proper record and send the proper acknowledgment of receipt of package.

6. What to send. To remind our friends again as to what is required, the following list of supplies needed should be noted: Clothing, shoes, stockings, socks, warm underwear, caps, mufflers, blankets and towels for men, women, boys and girls; also supplies for infants and quantities of soap. The articles need not be new, but they should be warm, durable, clean and in good condition.

7. All packages should be forwarded as early as practicable in October and all supplies must reach the warehouse not later than November 10, 1921.

8. For any additional information, write to your State Promotion Director or White Cross Department, 276 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

hearty invitations were given to the visitors to return again. We then set out across the hills with the Doxology ringing from our hearts. Who knows but what this may be the beginning of a harvest for Christ among these misguided people? Many of them are earnest truth-seekers and it was for this reason that we were more careful than usual lest we stir up undue antagonism.

Mr. Church Treasurer

treasurers:

1. See that each member makes a pledge as soon as he joins the church. Help him to make regular payments.

2. Let the rule be to send a quarterly statement to every contributor who is not sick or in trouble.

3. When a contributor fails to put his envelope in for two successive weeks, a brotherly visit should be made by a member of the committee, under the direction of the treasurer, to see if there is a reason for the failure. This can generally be determined without mention of the pledge or money. Sometimes it is wise to adjust the pledge rather than to allow a deficit to accumulate.

4. Help the case as you would like to be helped if you were the person whose pledge was behind.

5. Always aim first to keep the pledger in the life of the church rather than to get some immediate money from him; but—

(a) Do not encourage him to lightly regard a pledge.

(b) Help him to be heroic and sacrificial.

(c) Help to keep him from dishonesty of purpose and action.

(d) Put your prayer life behind him and use your common sense.

(e) Finally help him to see that love and wisdom make it essential—whenever it is possible—for him to give of his first-fruits of money every week when he goes to worship God in His house. He needs, therefore, to cultivate regularity of public worship.

(f) See that stewardship is taught constantly throughout the church. Be a lay Christian minister rather than just a collector and distributor of money.

Why I Am Sending My Boy to a Baptist College

"He is going to a college where the teachers are free and thoughtful... to be at the feet of teachers who practice the presence of God before their students"

By REV. ALLYN K. FOSTER

Secretary of the Department of Student Work

EVER since he was born his mother and I have been thinking about it, and now that day has arrived when my only son starts for college. Every parent in similar case knows what a rearrangement in family affairs such an event means.

Yes, after months of thinking in an atmosphere of prayer, our boy goes to a Baptist University. It has been a struggle. His mother is a graduate of Wellesley and of Yale. His father is a Johns Hopkins and a Yale man. All our drift was toward an eastern prominent university. Why then the choice? I am explaining it in detail because it occurs to me that the explanation might be of help to other parents.

It so happens that this Baptist University, suits my case, and from an intimate knowledge of all our Baptist colleges I believe they too, furnish the element which so decided me. That element can be stated briefly as follows.

In these colleges adequate attention is paid to the distinctively personal forces that play upon the life of young people during their college days. Let me explain.

The first of this set of forces is, of course, intellectual. I was anxious that my boy should have good teaching. There is a mass of difficult matter to be mastered. I should not think of sending him to the most pious college on earth if his intellect had to be warped by half-baked teaching. For these undergraduate years I believe that the teaching at such a college as I have chosen is about as good as it is anywhere. Undergraduates are not specialists and the advanced things can be gotten later.

The second of these forces that play on the young person's life is the physical. Athletics in all their forms are meant to develop the body, and athletics can be had anywhere. A little more publicity, perhaps a keener edge in sport, and some professionalism may be more readily had at a college prominent for its athletics, but a boy can develop a sound body, if he wants it, in such a college as I have named.

I come to the third, and as I think, the most important, in proper relation to the others, of all the forces that play upon a young life. I mean the spiritual forces. Education does not contemplate, primarily, producing a highbrow, nor is a man necessarily educated if he decorates his sweater fore and aft with college letters. And if he does both of these things, wears a Phi Beta Kappa Key, and has the highest athletic standing, it is still possible that he has not achieved the highest form of education. There are definite spiritual forces that ought to play upon a young life during these formative undergraduate days. I grant that academic studies, and to some extent athletics, do sometimes release high personal forces for the development of the character. I believe as firmly, however, that any college which does not properly discover and appraise, in terms of current thinking, the great religious forces, fails at the point of its highest scholarship. I do not ask the colleges to state a final view of Christian doctrines. About all of this there will be differences of opinion. I utterly abhor the cheap labels, such as "orthodox," "heretical," "agnostic," "infidel," etc. Saints may easily be cataloged by ignorance under either of these terms. I do say, however, that the integrity and availability of the spiritual forces ought to be a matter of first demonstration by every institution that calls itself educational. There is reason to suspect that the academic interest in most of our colleges is the chief, if not the sole interest. Education is the making of a man, and he cannot be made on two sides while the third is neglected without a lopsided product. I think no parent is asking too much when he expects a college to furnish in all respects the best atmosphere in which his son or daughter can unfold. Where religion is considered outside the academic examination; where religion is felt to be so inchoate and uncharted somewhat that the college cannot really examine it; where the unspoken but quite audible impression is given forth that religion is a matter of individual choice and no great harm would come if there were no choice at all; in short where the college quite frankly admits by its spoken or unspoken attitude that it is not to be charged with the religious and moral development of youth, I say it is high time that patrons began to ask, "What are colleges for anyhow?" There ought to be, it seems to me, in every educational institution a source from which should steadily proceed a proper appreciation of and a correspondence with the great spiritual forces which religion holds. This can be done without the slightest taint of sectarianism or of obscurantism. Nobody who knows intellectual implements speaks lightly of spiritual realities. There is a law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus, and that college fails, whatever else it may do, which does not discover and apply it. So my boy goes to a Baptist college where the religious and academic life are sanely intertwined. He is going to a college where the teachers are free and thoughtful, and he is going to be at the feet of teachers who "practice the presence of God" before their students.

I expect him to change a great many of his views. I should be ashamed of him if he did not. In spite of my colossal wisdom I expect him to know a great many things better than I do. He has begun it already. But I want my boy, with all his getting of understanding, to get the wisdom which cometh along from God. I want him to have a fair chance to unfold and shape up in an atmosphere of sound, sane, sweet, and yet free religious feeling and thought. I believe the Baptist university which he will enter, does just this thing, and I believe our Baptist colleges are supplied with the spiritual ingredient as well as any other college in the country.

Northern Baptists to Pray for World Peace

Baptists the world over, from scattered tribe converts in Africa to great city churches here, and from tiny jungle hamlets in India to our own national headquarters, in a vast, simultaneous, many-tongued, prayer for peace on Armistice Day!

This is the great vision which grew out of a recommendation made by Mrs. John Nuveen at the recent meeting of the Administrative Committee in New York, and which Northern Baptists all through the Convention are asked to help make a reality. A chain of prayer for world peace that will gird the earth is the ideal. Messages will go forth from Dr. James H. Franklin, foreign secretary of the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society, to a few of our leaders in foreign fields, who will communicate with every mission station, until there is no part of the earth, however remote, in which men and women and children, under the leadership of our missionaries, will not pray for world peace at a stated hour on Armistice Day.

A committee consisting of Mrs. Nuveen, Arthur T. Fowler, Mrs. Helen Barrett Montgomery, Dr. Hugh A. Heath and E. A. Hanley was appointed by the chair to consider the matter of Armistice Day observance. Dr. Fowler, on behalf of the committee, presented the following report to the Administrative Committee, which, on motion of E. H. Haskell, was adopted.

The special committee appointed to present recommendations concerning the celebration of Armistice Day in Baptist churches, particularly in view of the Conference on Limitation of Armament, recommends as follows:

(1) That Baptist churches be urged to hold themselves in readiness to cooperate with any Protestant movement which seeks to emphasize international peace; that they seek cooperation with Canadian Baptist associations, The Southern Baptist Association, and The Danish and Swedish Baptist Associations;

(2) That the weekly prayer meetings held in Baptist churches during the week beginning November 6th be made special occasions for prayer on behalf of the Conference on Limitation of Armament to be held at Washington beginning on November 11, 1921;

(3) That Baptist pastors be urged to give special attention in their public ministry on Sunday, November 6, to the great theme of international peace;

(5) That the national missionary societies be requested to notify their respective mission stations by cable or otherwise, and the Board of Education to communicate with the schools and colleges concerning the desirability of appropriate prayer meetings or other public services in connection with Armistice Day, and the Publication Society be requested to feature the significance of the occasion in its Sunday School papers.

An Imperative Need

By J. J. ROSS

I THINK that I see a great unmet need within the sphere of the Northern Baptist Convention, and if you will be kind enough to give me your attention, I will tell you about it.

Some months ago, it was my privilege to visit an undenominational college located not a hundred miles from Chicago, Illinois. At the conclusion of each address delivered, a number of the students came forward, and introduced themselves as Baptists. In all, there were about four hundred students in that college. I remarked to the president that I had met a number of Baptist students, whereupon, he said, "We have about a hundred Baptist students here, and twenty-one of them have the ministry and foreign mission work in view. They come here from practically every state in the union, and every province in Canada, because they and their parents know of the excellent courses we give in Bible."

There is an undenominational Bible school located not a thousand miles from Chicago, and last year it enrolled over four hundred students, and on good authority, I have it that about one-half of them were Baptists, out of our own churches in the Northern Convention. These splendid young people were anxious to obtain a fuller knowledge of the Bible, that they might qualify themselves for better Christian service in their home churches and elsewhere. There was no Baptist Bible institute for them to attend here in the north, and so they did the next best thing, went to an undenominational school.

A few months ago, I attended the graduation exercises of an Evangelistic Institute here in Chicago, and while there formed the acquaintance of five young men, all of whom were Baptists, and all from the farms in Western Canada. The school referred to, is a Bible Institute, not distinctively denominational, and these young men were there, preparing themselves for better service in their home churches and communities. They were not qualified to enter our colleges, not our highly standardized theological seminaries.

There is another non-denominational Bible institute, which is doing an excellent work of its kind. Last year, including its evening classes, it registered over nine hundred students. Many of these young people are the Christian cream of this and other countries. This institution is known in every land on the globe. By one of the teachers, I was informed that "There are more Baptists in our institution this year, than all the other evangelical Christian bodies put together." Many of the students from this institution, as from others I have mentioned, are ordained into the Baptist ministry. Coming from undenominational schools, are they fully qualified to occupy Baptist pulpits? Are they equipped for leadership in Baptist churches? Sometimes these splendid young men do our Baptist churches harm, and sometimes the churches do these young men serious harm. The fault is not so much with the young men, nor with the churches, as it is with their teaching, or their lack of teaching. As a natural consequence of incomplete, unbalanced teaching, these young men do not know about our distinctive Baptist doctrines, polity and work. They know practically nothing about our educational, and missionary programs and tasks.

This last summer, I gave some help in the assembly held in Ottawa, Kansas, and while there, about a dozen fine young Baptist people conferred with me about their taking some training in a Bible institute. A similar thing occurred in Eau Claire, Wisconsin, just the other week. These young people were not qualified to enter our colleges and seminaries, yet they were eager to fit themselves for better Christian service in their home churches and elsewhere.

Baptists take to the Bible as naturally and eagerly as hungry sheep to the clover. The responsibility, it seems to me, is upon us to provide the field of clover for thousands of our own young people. We need in the north, A BAPTIST BIBLE INSTITUTE, taught by a staff of godly men and women, about whose morality, spirituality, and doctrine there is absolutely no suspicion. We need an institution that will center around the study of the Bible as the very Word of God, which will have as its specific aim, the provision of instruction suited to the needs of a constituency varied in its educational advantages. We need an institution that will give courses in Biblical Introduction and Exposition, Christian History in general, and Baptist History in particular, Bible Doctrines and Christian Evidences, the Art of Address-Making, Sunday-School Pedagogy, and Applied Christianity, Music, Personal Work, Church Business, and a strong general course in English. By having this institution, we will save many of our young people to our churches, teach them how to study and to balance Truth, and fit them for many of our pulpits, and missionary fields. Shall we not have somewhere within the field of our Northern Baptist Convention, A BAPTIST BIBLE INSTITUTE?

The Ship of Fate

By MRS. T. E. ADAMS

WE have some rather large ships in our harbor at times, and once in a while it is interesting to watch while they are loaded. Sometimes it is coal, again it is merchandise, and in the great body of the ships goods of all varieties are stowed away. They are unloaded at some other port where dealers are waiting that the goods may be sold at a profit.

Think of the difference between a cargo, full and jammed in, of goodwill and good work, in the Baptist ship—to make certain what fate shall befall the little nations of Czechoslovakia and Poland. In a several week trans-Atlantic trip with Madame Lydia Kolator of Prague and Miss Martha Wenske of Poland, it was impressed upon my mind a dozen times a week, the absolute need of these western European neighbors of ours.

Feasting is an American habit of honoring a guest, an idea, a memory and one another. So our Jubilee party was featured. Once a wonderful banquet was spread in honor of Mrs. Montgomery, in a great cosmopolitan city. The banquet and the occasion was to honor a woman, who was devoting much of her life for the good of womankind in all parts of the world. It was an international cosmopolitan gathering, and the flags of all nations decorated the walls, our tables in a brilliant banquet hall. There was a table for Chinese, and another for Japanese:—there were Armenians and Syrians present, and right in front of the speaker's table was one decorated with the new colors of the Western European peoples.

It was a very gay occasion and productive of great and lasting good, but when Madame Kolator and Miss Wenske gazed at the festive coloring in flags and flowers and food, they saw through tears, a picture of their native lands. They saw the pinched faces and bodies of little children, who had forgotten how to laugh. They thought of the desperate cold of a coming winter which no illusion from the land of roses and of plenty could dispel. They themselves too recently from countries where the food stuffs and stores were still being rationed in mid-summer, where just showing the glow of health, and return of spirit, which only a generous diet of potatoes and beef-steak can impart.

The fate of the nations depends upon help being supplied for this winter. There are no clothing goods in the country, especially Poland. The textiles are not there, even if they had the money with which to buy them. There is no soap because of the scarcity of fats. To be clean and to be warm—these are the needs, which our Baptist Ship of Fate is to supply. So dig out Johnny's suit, sew on all the buttons, sponge and press and mend it and send it on.

The average man has too many moth-inviting suits hanging around to which he fondly clings; he probably won't like it if you box them up but he's used to being down-trodden and after he knows they are gone, he will feel mellow and generous as if the idea was his in the first place. In your wardrobe there hang one or two good wool suits, skirts and coats. They will come in just right—and if enough of them go in this wonder-ship, what a world of comfort will be theirs! Then, there are the intimate inside things; you who live in steam-heated houses where you wear fine gauzy things the year around just go down town and buy some good warm outing flannel gowns, and long-sleeved long-legged garments which people require who have only a little fire in part of the house, part of the time. If the Ladies' Aid So-

Big Things Planned by the States

These have fallen into line with the objectives and program of the Northern Baptist Convention and set goals for fall and winter work

A TIDAL wave of enthusiasm that is sweeping straight through the Northern Baptist Convention, booming on from state to state, and carrying everything in triumph before it, ought to come from the plans for fall and winter work outlined by state directors of promotion, and state secretaries.

It was, of course, the committee on objectives and programs, that notable "Committee of Fifteen," that started the movement going, with the suggestions drawn up by it at Des Moines, under the chairman Rev. E. P. Dutton, secretary of the Buffalo Baptist Union. But once started, it is gaining momentum every minute. State leaders, home missionaries, foreign missionaries, and General Board of Promotion officials are joining hands to make the meetings uniquely successful. Letters coming in to Dr. John Y. Atchison, general director of the General Board of Promotion, Dr. Hugh A. Heath, executive secretary of conferences and conventions and Mrs. L. Jesse P. Bishop, associate secretary, asking for missionary speakers, plainly point to the fact that this is going to be a historic year among Northern Baptists. Among state plans already formulated are the following:

ARIZONA begins a series of missionary conferences October 2, with Dr. Rider as leader, and Miss Amy Acock of Japan as missionary. The meetings will last until October 25th.

CONNECTICUT has planned five association meetings in October, all pushing the program. There will be three missionary institutes and two missionary conferences from the middle of September to the middle of October.

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA, under Dr. Brin-sted's leadership, is planning an interesting series of meetings for the month of November, with Dr. Rider and Miss Acock.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA plans a three days' Baptist ministers' conference for spiritual quickening.

ILLINOIS, in a thorough piece of follow-up this fall, will use two or three representatives from the General Board of Promotion.

INDIANA is putting on the program in its associations.

IOWA believes it wise to put on the evangelistic campaign first. In the early winter, stewardship will be emphasized, and a financial drive will follow in the spring.

MAINE is asking that the first Sunday in October be made "Announcement or Rally Day Sunday," on which to present the whole situation of the New World Movement. The state has voted to accept the denominational goals. It is planning the canvass of churches, quarterly meeting of associations, and women's basket meetings. Missionaries have been assigned to it.

MASSACHUSETTS is planning evangelistic meetings, the first to begin immediately after the state convention. After them will come a special gifts campaign; a training conference in church efficiency; and missionary conferences during the winter. The state is forming associational boards of promotion. An unique series of meetings is being planned by Director Reid from October 30 to November 18 with Mr. Vinton as one of the speakers.

MICHIGAN will select a spring month for its meetings, because of associations and state conventions in the autumn.

MONTANA Dr. Cress had the objectives printed in the state bulletin—five hundred additional copies, besides the usual 1000.

MONTANA: Dr. Cross had the objectives and intensive devotional and evangelistic campaign. Its board of promotion is preparing literature to be sent out, and is considering the question of Minnesota goals which shall be in accord with the goals suggested by the Northern Baptist Convention.

NEBRASKA will use the associational promotion committee to stimulate collections. Teams of laymen and ministers are being sent to the various churches to inform them of the New World Movement, and to help them urge collections, and to encourage giving. It will make use of personal and form letters. Backward churches will be visited.

NEW HAMPSHIRE is planning to use associations as promotion centers, and declares, that aside from the state conventions, this is the best opportunity in the whole year to get hold of our church people.

NEW YORK will hold at least seven conferences in seven large cities for inspirational and educational purposes. It will have trained workers in the cities following up their work. It will have the women of the state enter into a definite program as their share of the work for the balance of the five years.

NEVADA is planning a church visitation canvass, as the churches are so scattered that it is not feasible to have large conferences.

NORTH DAKOTA was the first state to adopt officially the printed objectives and programs, as their convention convened in July.

OHIO is planning a series of sixteen institutes, with the primary goals educational and inspirational. Teams of five state workers, with missionary and national workers.

PENNSYLVANIA will hold its conferences in either November or December. Goals have been sent to the churches with working plans.

RHODE ISLAND: The Rhode Island Baptist printed the program in its July number, as did also the state bulletin in many other states. The denominational program is being taken into the associations and association promotion committees are being organized.

UTAH is calling for a missionary visitation of the churches. Its plans are in the hands of Dr. Bowler and Dr. Kinney of the Home Mission Society, with Mr. Minaker, for recommendations to the department of conventions and conferences.

VERMONT has just held a great conference to which were invited ministers, missionaries and members of the state convention board.

WASHINGTON (EAST) and NORTHERN IDAHO have a very complete plan. Executive committees in several states were called to meet and formulate definite plans. Rallies began September 15, with Dr. Bowler and Dr. Petty. Miss Lucile Withers of China and Dr. S. D. Bawden of South India are the missionaries. The method adopted is to divide the state into eight districts, with approximately eight churches in a district, a campaign director for each district to be chosen from especially active laymen or pastors. The object is to reach every church with information and inspiration. The conferences will last into October.

WASHINGTON (WEST) will begin its conferences about October 15, with Dr. Bowler, Dr. Rider and Dr. Petty, also Miss Withers of China and Dr. S. D. Bawden of Burma as missionaries. The plan of campaign will be by personal visitation; a conference with pastors and key workers in the church; and finally by helping each church strive toward the objectives and programs suggested by the Northern Baptist Convention. Dr. Holt is sending a covering letter to the pastors with the objectives.

WEST VIRGINIA is making plans for regional missionary conferences in February.

WISCONSIN: Dr. Le Grand sent out the objectives and programs to the pastors.

Besides these state plans—

CLEVELAND CITY MISSION SOCIETY will hold denominational week conferences from October 10-14.

DETROIT BAPTIST UNION is also making plans for city-wide rallies.

ROCHESTER BAPTIST UNION is planning a mass meeting on October 4.

BUFFALO BAPTIST UNION is planning a series for November.

(Reports on other state plans will be made next week.)

Women and Children Last.

They are still a long way from equal suffrage in Kaying, South China, where before a girl can make a public profession of Christianity she must first gain the consent of two families—the one into which she was born, and the one into which she is betrothed. Miss Louise Campbell, a missionary at Kaying, under the auspices of the Woman's American Baptist Foreign Mission Society, writes that very often it is the prospective husband who objects.

"Thirteen of our girls were heart-broken because they were forbidden to worship Christ openly," says Miss Campbell. "The saddest case is that of Cloud Blossom, who will have nothing to look forward to after her marriage in December except to picking over tobacco leaves for the rest of her life. But she has pledged herself to keep up secret devotions, and to refuse to share in anything idolatrous.

"A few weeks ago a girl who was once in our school for a year ran away from her husband's home, where she was very unhappy, to the home of an aunt. When she was found, her mother-in-law drew up the following conditions, before she could be re-instated:

"1. She must be obedient to every wish of her husband and of her mother-in-law.

"2. She must live at peace with all in the house—fifty or sixty persons.

"3. She must say nothing, if a more desirable girl should be installed as head-wife in her place."

Green Lake—An Appreciation

By ELSIE KAPPEN

WHEN we gather with like-minded folk under tall oaks and beside the lake of an assembly ground, to learn of him who made it all, and of his brook that reveals him to us, and of his world still waiting to know about him,—we wonder not that the Master loves to walk by still water to talk from a boat-side, to steal to a hill-top for a prayer hour,—and we wonder not at all that eager people sit at his feet, and come from far to learn of him. Something of that spirit of eagerness to learn of him led young people to Green Lake, and in a noticeable degree pervaded the Wisconsin Baptist assembly, held this year, August 11-21.

What splendid opportunities we had for learning to love the Lord with all our hearts and souls! It was altogether fitting and beautiful that the assembly should open with one of those never-to-be-forgotten "Sunset Services." It required no urging to follow the path to Sunset Point and join the young people grouped on the lawn of "Sunset Cottage." It required no pulpit or church steeple or stained-glass windows to lead us into the spirit of devotion. In God's own hour-of-worship with our eyes upon his handiwork in lake and sky, we worshipped in heart and soul, as we softly sang, "Day is Dying in the West." And as we watched the sun slip behind the trees and the colors gather and fall we were led into the thought of God by one who knows him. Not after that first sunset service was Dr. Le Grand a stranger to Wisconsin young people. It seemed so natural to think with him of the "Unseen Forces of God" all about us, or of being, "In Tune With God," or, in the hush of this twilight hour, of "Jesus Only." "One of the most beautiful sights I have seen is the reflection of the setting sun on your faces," said Dr. Le Grand and we know that a light was stealing into our hearts at the same time.

Day Began With God

The day began as well as ended with the thought of God. Following the breakfast hour, we gathered on the porch of the assembly building for our "family worship" as Dr. Le Grand led us into the thought of the day from God's word. We came to think of the leader of these two services not as a speaker or a state secretary but as the "assembly pastor" ready at all times to give counsel and help to everyone.

The evening services in the auditorium, were varied in subject and character but each contributed to the spiritual life.

Wisconsin Assembly does not forget that we love the Lord with mind as well as heart. Mornings were spent in classroom work, five periods each morning, with three simultaneous classes in each period. Familiar with conferences and assemblies of one kind or another and acquainted with Wisconsin assembly from its beginning some of us felt that this year was unusually strong in the faculty and the courses presented.

The Bible had its rightfully important place. Three courses in the Bible were offered, an introductory course by Rev. W. S. Steward of La Crosse, "How Christianity Spread" by Dr. W. P. Behan of the Publication Society, and "Teaching Values of the Old Testament" by Rev. M. C. Tunison, pastor at Logansport, Indiana. The program was so arranged that everyone could get into one of these courses.

Prof. F. S. La Pue of Wayland Academy, gave two invaluable courses for people planning to lead in any capacity along lines of church work.

"Sunday School Methods with Children," "Story Telling," the "Sunday School Teachers" and "Adult Sunday School Methods" are always courses that are both popular and worth while. Especially was this true with Miss Myrtle Hucklebury, Elementary Secretary for Indiana, assisted by Mrs. O. B. Winne, in the first two; by Mr. Koehler, Director of Religious Education for Illinois in the third and Mr. Tunison of Indiana in the fourth.

Judging from the popularity of the "Church Vacation School" course, this period was wholly successful. The devotion with which assembly folks knotted hammocks during recreation periods or filled odd moments waiting for dinner with basket-weaving attested the fascination of this course under the leadership of Mr. Gage.

"Baptist Leaders," under Dr. Behan was a course of especial interest, and with a real message to Baptist young people.

For young people whose interests were with the B. Y. P. U. there was practical help in "Young People's Methods" under Mr. J. B. Gleason, student pastor of the University of Wisconsin. Those who were missionary minded received suggestion for a program of missionary education in the courses on "Missionary Methods."

Who would know better than Dr. Hulbert, the retiring state secretary, the problems of the rural church? The cream of twenty-five years of experience in meeting them was given to those who wanted to know how.

Something new in the line of assembly courses was the one by Chas. A. Boyd, dean of the assembly on "Biblical Dramatization." That this was practical as well as interesting was proved in the splendid presentation of the drama Elijah, the final evening of the assembly.

Recreation Without "Wreck"

Recreation "without the wreck" is the kind that makes for strength at Green Lake. From the way we answered the summons to meals, one might think that physical strength was gone but that it quickly revived was shown by the yells and songs and friendly rivalry at the tables.

Afternoons were entirely given over to rest and play.

The night given over to fun was "Stunt Night" when each association presented its cleverest and funniest stunt.

If young people were asking "who is my neighbor?" the answer came in many ways. Two evenings we looked through those remarkable pictures of Sumner R. Vinton's into the faces and homes of our neighbors, "over there." Somehow he made us see not pictures but living folks, folks living but without the life abundant. We were not entertained but were led to a thoughtfulness and questioning of heart concerning these, our neighbors.

On Monday night the answer came again. The pageant, "The Striking of America's Hour" was beautifully presented by young people from Milwaukee, directed by Mrs. F. A. Long, Director of Woman's Work in Wisconsin. Hearts were deeply stirred and not a few eyes were wet as group after group made their stirring or pathetic appeal to America for freedom and light. Miss Naomi Fletcher, Christian Americanization Secretary, who has come to be one of us in Wisconsin, followed the pageant with a challenge from our neighbors "over here."

A new but welcome face at the assembly was Miss Jessie Dodge White, Candidate Secretary of the Woman's Home Mission Society. In her spirit of sincere fellowship, she endeared herself to Wisconsin folks, and in her talks, again and again, she presented the needy people from the Atlantic to the Pacific, still waiting the Christian neighbor.

Life service night was a high point in the assembly. A beautiful service conducted by Miss White sounded the service call and prayer was felt rather than heard. Dr. Le Grand followed with a practical and spiritual message on the theme, "Whom shall I send and who will go for me?" that touched all our hearts and seven new decisions for life service were definitely made while those who had decided earlier reaffirmed their purpose. While the sole purpose of the assembly is not life recruits, these decisions for service, alone, would make Wisconsin Baptist Assembly tremendously worth while.

Floating 'Neath the Moon

As the sunset service was a fitting and beautiful opening for the assembly, so the moonlight service was a fitting and beautiful close. It seemed to mean that as the sun set upon these assembly days the reflected light would shine through us in the places back home. Seated in two large launches the shore was circled with gospel songs and then floating in mid-lake we watched the full moon rise, while Dr. Le Grand gave us his final devotional message. It was an evening to carry home and live over many times during the year.

One of the greatest reasons for this finest year of the assembly was the esprit d'corps of the assembly group. Loyalty to the whole program, a deep earnestness and a spirit of good fellowship marked the opening day and continued on through to the closing session.

No appreciation would be complete without mention of Hulbert Hall, the splendid new building which Wisconsin people have built to the honor and lasting memory of Dr. D. W. Hulbert. The Hall is beautiful, usable, a fine addition to the grounds and a real token of esteem to one who has served the state and its young people so faithfully and so long. When you come to the end of those Green Lake days,

And you sit awhile with your thoughts,
And you see the folks go their different ways,

With the joy that the days have brought,
Oh, then you know that those Green Lake days,

Will live throughout all the years.
And you see in the glow of the sunset sky

A day that is bright and clear!

The Devotional Life

"The Servant of the Spirit"

By ROBERT W. SHAW

SEVERAL years ago Charles Sylvester Horne, a brilliant English preacher gave the Yale Lectures on Preaching. Afterward these addresses were published under the title, "The Romance of Preaching." Here is a volume which the writer has read through year after year, usually at the beginning of the work in the fall. He believes that a wide reading of this volume would not only be helpful to those ministers who would take the time to read it, but would prove stimulating and instructive to the laymen as well.

Dr. Horne begins his address with a chapter on "The Servant Of The Spirit," and goes on to discuss in succeeding chapters, the Prophets; the Rulers of Peoples, such as Savonarola, Calvin and Knox; The Founders of Freedom, such as John Robinson and the Pilgrim Fathers; The Passion of Evangelism, as seen in Whitfield and Wesley; and closes with a chapter on "The Romance Of Preaching."

"The preacher," says Doctor Horne, "who is the messenger of God, is the real master of society; not elected by society to be its ruler, but the elect of God to form its ideals, and through them to guide and rule its life. Show me a man who in the midst of a community, however secularized in manners, can compel it to think with him, can kindle its enthusiasm, revive its faith, cleanse its passions purify its ambitions, and give steadiness to its will, and I will show you the real master of society, no matter what party may hold the reins of government, no matter what figurehead may occupy the ostensible place of authority."

He Has Eager Competitors

The minister has all about him eager and conventional competitors who endeavor to usurp his functions in dealing with the big human problems. It may be a dramatist who endeavors to set up a pulpit on the stage; it may be a journalist who believes that he has a vital message for society; it may be some street-corner agitator making capital out of the hypocrisies and inconsistencies of men; it may be some novelist training his guns upon some real or fancied wrong; or some statesman, poet or essayist who seek to discuss issues usually considered as belonging to the pulpit.

But there is this difference between the preacher, and all of these. The minister is "the servant of the spirit." He stands forth, not as a hired man of the churches, but as the anointed servant of Jehovah. He came into the ministry by a divine impulse, he is sustained in it by a strength from above, and any suggestion that he confine his sermons to a limited area, must be resented and resisted.

It is an easy thing to stand in a pulpit and speak a message of truth to the assembly gathered for worship, but that is not all there is to preaching. For in that assembly there may be and often are people with their faith shattered, souls tortured by a sorrow almost to a last agony; men stable-minded and double-minded; men who profess religion much and practice it little; those whom the cares of this world and the deceitfulness of riches are choking slowly unto death; souls embittered with real or fancied wrongs; some following Jesus, but like the disciple of old following afar off; some publican weighted down with his sins; some pharisee proud of his religious devotion. And the task which the preacher then faces is far different from merely uttering a word of truth. His task is to get one little seed of divine truth into the consciousness of his hearers that it may spring up and bring forth a harvest of fruit.

Anything May Happen

The hour of worship brings forth a momentous assembly. The time for the sermon approaches, and the arena is set for a stupendous duel between God and self. An atmosphere is created in which anything is likely to happen. Some Saul may come to the crisis of his life, and a Paul be born; some publican may utter the prayer of "God be merciful," and go away justified. Or some soul may be filled with the Spirit of God, and set forth on a mission of righteousness, and a new era in civilization will begin. Here in this holy and divine place are those divine forces which may decide the destiny of individuals and nations as well. Lame consciences struggle to their feet; nerveless wills are stiffened and strengthened; feeble and enervated spirits are brought to recovery. And the "servant of the spirit," stands as an ally to the trembling and fainting souls that are on the verge of giving up the battle for virtue and righteousness.

But in the day in which we are living old words in theology have taken on new meaning. Such words as justice, righteousness, and brotherhood have been burned into the souls of the young men of this day with a divine compulsion. The men have refused to accept as inevitable the vices and social wrongs of life which have intrenched themselves so deeply in what we are pleased to call a Christian civilization. The young ministers of this day have taken as holy vows as did their fathers in another day. Their fathers vowed that human slavery, and strong drink should no longer shackle and stupify the sons of men. They devoted their lives to these holy causes and conquered. Now their sons have taken vows that none of their brethren shall have to live in the future under conditions that are fatal to physical health, chastity and honor; that a merciless competition shall not always kill the truth and self-respect of those who are taken in its toils; that the progress of humanity shall be something better than an unrelieved struggle for bread; that the slum, the sweatshop, the brothel, the saloon, the hellish and unhealthy conditions of labor must go; that such words as justice, righteousness and brotherhood shall be given a spiritual meaning in the Christian's vocabulary as have the words faith, holiness and consecration.

"Who shall say," says Doctor Horne, that man shall ride upon the wings of the wind and talk across the empty spaces of ocean from ship to ship, and from to shore, and yet shall not conquer the selfishness, mistrust and hatred in his own heart? Who shall say that he shall vanquish every physical disease, only to be conquered by the venom of malice, envy and suspicion that poisons the veins of his own soul? No, if you do your duty the progress of the world's idealism shall keep pace with her advance in material prosperity; and the church's early ideal of internationalism shall be realized, with its glorious consequences in the deliverances of the weary nations from the burdens beneath which they groan; and the emancipation of the human spirit everywhere from those dark shadows of mistrust and fear which have been the perpetual nightmare of the past."

Plenty of Chances Left

"It would have been a great thing no doubt to have run with Timothy on some errand for St. Paul. It would have been a great thing to have dared everything for Christ when Nero was on the throne. It would have been a great thing to have confronted emperors with Athanasius, to have died for freedom with Savonarola, to have crossed the Atlantic with Brewster and Bradford, to have waked the world to a new spiritual life with Wesley and Whitfield. But let no man say our age is inferior in opportunity to any that has gone before. The one demand is the consecrated spirit, and the forward mind."

Ours is a holy calling, for we are "the servants of the spirit." And the miracle of it is that while many never mount upon wings as eagles, yet they can run and not be weary, they can walk and not faint, and when they wait upon the Lord their strength is renewed. No minister shall ever be bankrupt of a message so long as he remains a "servant of the spirit," unafraid of any sinister person or power who would attempt to make him a mere servant of an institution.

A Big and Busy Baptist

Mr. Lloyd George, in the opinion of The United Presbyterian is entitled to a hearing under the head of "overworked ministers." Its comment runs:

"Other countries have solved their problems by working ministers in 'shifts,' changing their cabinets every few months. Since Mr. George became prime minister of Great Britain there have been six premiers in France, six in Italy and nine in Germany. The British prime minister has a striking personality. He is an astute politician, a great statesman, a convincing orator, a splendid mixer and a man of no mean literary ability. He is the only man now at the head of any of the Allied governments who held that position during the period of hostilities; all others have been replaced in the process of reconstruction. The premiers constant companion is his younger daughter, Miss Megan Lloyd George. The people of Great Britain have done an unusual thing in erecting a statue of their living prime minister in his native province, Wales."

Which one would naturally expect from a Welshman and a Baptist.

Join God on the March

"Do not expect too much from the conference on disarmament—" is a wise warning of the Baptist Observer. But that should not discourage effort. For it goes on to say:

"But if we can stop this foolish nonsense of one nation planning a bigger navy and a larger military fist than any other nation; and if we can change this program of competition for protection against each other for a program of co-operation in preserving the peace of the world, a big step in the right direction will have been taken. The way is open to the messengers of peace. Let every Christian be much in prayer that the spirit of Him who stilled the storm and tempest on blue Galilee may possess the hearts and minds of the conferees as they assemble at our nation's capital; let every American citizen be patient and generous and hopeful, for this coming conference is the morning star of a new and better day. Our God is marching on."

Women Plan Parades for Disarmament

A world-wide demonstration for disarmament by women of all nations, to be held on Armistice Day, when the international disarmament conference convenes in Washington, was initiated Aug. 21 by organized American working women through the National Women's Trade Union League.

Telegrams inviting participation of a score of women's organizations of the United States and the organized women in forty-eight nations which are sending delegates to the Second International Congress of Working Women in Geneva, were sent out by Mrs. Raymond Robins, national president and president of the International Congress of Working Women, desire to disarm, by giving unequivocal

"To strengthen the governments in their expression of the women of all the world," is the purpose of the demonstration.

Here They Are, Then. Send at Once

Sunday Schools have been asking for short stereopticon lectures to use in the session. Several years ago Dr. Emily Bretthauer began work in Suifu. She was the first woman physician in that city. She found an old inn and converted it into a Christian dispensary and hospital. This little lecture tells how it was done and what has been done since. The story cannot be told in the space allowed here—get the lecture, entitled "A Pioneer Doctor and Nurse of Suifu." It is now ready. Write to the Stereopticon Depository at 276 Fifth Avenue, New York City, 1701 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia, Pa., 125 N. Wabash Avenue, Chicago, Ill., 729 Occidental Building, Indianapolis, Ind., or 313 W. Third Street, Los Angeles, Calif. and reserve the set. Good for a Women's Missionary Society meeting or a meeting of the World Wide Guild.

Hardin's New President

President Samuel J. Vaughn goes to Hardin College at Mexico, Mo. directly from the University of Illinois. There he headed the Department of Industrial Education. To those who are acquainted with educational standards, this speaks for itself.

Cheering News from El Salvador

Rev. William Keech, American Baptist Missionary writes as follows:

"Our work here around the capital is opening up as never before. We have so many open doors just now that we cannot possibly enter them all for regular work. We have a new congregation in Apopa. A great deal of interest is manifested in La Libertad and many are asking us to go down; we have a house offered to us freely for meetings in our old station of Quezaltepeque which we were forced to abandon temporarily at the time of the first earthquake in 1917, and several other places offer splendid opportunities to commence regular work. It seems to me that we are about to begin to reap abundantly the fruit of our incessant labours during these years in the central part of the Republic.

Y. W. C. A. Starts Another New Thing

One of the most successful ventures of the American Home (Cottage) Bible Institute was the inauguration, in June, 1920, of the home Bible reading courses. Hundreds enrolled at the start, and the many letters of appreciation received by the Institute are strong commendations of the plan.

Any one who can read can enjoy and profit by these delightful reading courses, and those of the highest intellectual attainments tell of added pleasures from their pursuit.

All that is required is the repeated reading of the selected book of the Bible (say, five to fifty times) during two months, each time from a different viewpoint. At the end of two months a test may be taken to ascertain what has been gained. Answers will be graded if desired by the reader.

Address, American Home Bible Institute, 837 Allison St., Washington, D. C.

Thank You; So This Paper Has Been Saying

Mr. James Mullenbach, chairman Hart, Schaffner & Marx Trade Board, chairman also of the Church Federation Commission on the Church and Industry, expresses the conviction that "Because of the disastrous consequences of the condition of unemployment on personal character and the danger to decent social life and progress, the Church may well be alert to the necessity of arousing public sentiment to deal with this wide-reaching evil by adequate remedy. The Church need not specify in detail the remedy but ought to insist that the present drifting and inaction shall cease and the statesmen, industrial inquirers and labor find ways to cure a condition fraught with such evil and danger. 'Society does not owe a man a living,' but it seems it does owe him an opportunity to earn one."

International Uniform Lesson For Oct. 16

PAUL WRITES TO THE CHRISTIANS AT CORINTH

I Cor. 1:10-11, 13:1-13. Golden Text:
I Cor. 13:13

By JOHN A. EARL

The Lesson Text

Paul wrote his first letter to the Corinthians while he was at Ephesus. The letter indicates that it was occasioned by information that had reached Paul concerning factions in the church and by questions that Paul had been asked to answer. The letter covers a wide range of subjects stretching from the foothills of how women shall conduct themselves in public worship and what is the proper procedure in regard to eating meats of fered to idols to the high altitudes of love and immortality. Most of the letter is local and temporary in its significance, but here and there its pages are the eternal verities.

The Lesson Taught

Love indispensable, indefinable, imperishable are the three things emphasized by Paul in the lesson.

Love Indispensible

In the first paragraph of his great chapter on love, Paul shows the Corinthians that love is indispensable. The things they prized most of all were valueless without love. Eloquence had a high rating among the Greeks. Demosthenes, the outstanding Greek orator, is still quoted as the standard of excellence in public address. The gift of tongues was eagerly coveted by every member of the Christian community in Corinth. Apollos, after whom one of the factions in the church was named, was famed for this eloquence. And yet, "If I speak with the tongues of men and of angels, but have not love, I am becoming sounding brass, or a clanging cymbal." Knowledge was sought by the Greeks as miners seek for gold. The best of modern philosophy finds its springs in Plato and Aristotle, thus proving the wisdom of the ancient Greek philosophers in discovering the truth. The questions that arose in the church concerning the modus operandi of the resurrection reveal the eager interest that the Christians of Corinth had in knowing things. But here again love was and is indispensable, for "If I have the gift of prophecy, and know all mysteries and all knowledge, but have not love, I am nothing." Power to work miracles was regarded as the pinnacle of efficiency, especially by the Jewish Christians in Corinth, and here also love is indispensable, for, "If I have all faith, so as to remove mountains, but have not love, I am nothing." The good works of charity and the merit of martyrdom have always been highly valued among men, and justly so; and yet "If I bestow all my goods to feed the poor, and if I give my body to be burned, but have not love, it profiteth me nothing." Love is the soul of all true eloquence, all worthy knowledge, all unusual powers, all laudable generosity, all self-sacrifice.

Love Indefinable

Paul was too wise to attempt a definition of love. Like life, love may be described and interpreted, but never defined. Therefore Paul dramatizes love, reveals love in action, and in this way he tries to show the Corinthians the eternal value of love. Love is revealed in what it does and in what it refrains from doing. It does seven things and seven things it does not do. Love is a cheerful sufferer. Indignities are met with a smile, reproaches are tempered with patience, injustice is softened with the shock absorbers of kindness. Anybody can suffer in silence and nurse a grudge; but it takes love to suffer with a smile and be kind to those who cause the suffering. "Love suffereth long, and is kind." In addition to these two things, love rejoiceth with the truth. Love is a truth-seeker, and it is never happier than when it finds the truth and translates it into action. Love carries a broad mantle and with it covers the faults and failings of men. It is always trusting people in spite of the many times the trust has been misplaced, always expectant despite disappointments and discouragements, forever persevering and refusing to quit when the task seems endless. Something like this Paul had in mind when he wrote, "Love beareth all things, believeth all things, hopeth all things, endureth all things." But love has its negative side also. "Love envieth not," is not vain, is not proud, is not discourteous, is not selfish, is not quick-tempered, never harbors revenge. Of course it follows that if love does not indulge in these seven things, it practices their opposites. It is generous, humble, democratic, thoughtful of others, well-behaved, patient and magnanimous. Love finds its source and supply in the eternal fountain of all love, God, for God is love.

Love Imperishable

The Corinthians were giving entirely too much emphasis to the things that pass away and failing to value at their highest worth the three imperishable virtues of faith, hope and love. Paul therefore calls upon them for a reevaluation of the things they thought worthy. The special gifts of tongues, prophecy and knowledge were temporary serving a local need. Thus Paul acknowledges the temporary character of some things which certain religious leaders would make permanent. He regarded the special gifts referred to as belonging to the childhood of the church. Progress and maturity would take the more excellent way of love and righteousness, and would cease to be interested in most of the things which occasioned the first letter of Paul to the Corinthians. One has to acknowledge that the church is still very much in its infancy so far as the things of permanent value are concerned. We are still like the Corinthians, divided by factional strife, stressing the things of lesser value, and almost hopelessly split on doctrinal definitions, while love stands with bleeding hands and feet sadly looking on because she has been crucified afresh and put to an open shame. Love is the most excellent way. Love never faileth. "Let us love one another, for love is of God; and everyone that loveth is begotten of God and knoweth God." Love is the final test of Christianity.

Adult Class Campaign in Baptist Churches

A campaign to double attendance in Baptist Bible classes throughout the Northern Baptist Convention is being launched in the various states by directors of religious education, in harmony with the plan worked out by the adult department of the American Baptist Publication Society.

The campaign is to extend over ten Sundays, Oct. 2 to Dec. 4, and is being promoted as the adult's rightful share in the Sunday-school rally season.

Men and women are taking definite part in Sunday-school classes today as they never have before. In our churches of the Northern Baptist Convention we have half a million men and women in Sunday schools, but the purpose of this campaign is to increase that number to one million.

Pastors and Sunday-school leaders are realizing the immense value of the well-organized and active adult classes. Such classes must not exist for themselves, and where they do exist for the school and the church they are rendering great service. The opportunities in the adult class for promoting church attendance, evangelism, home religion, community service, civic righteousness, and world-wide missions are unlimited.

The specific directions for the local class found in the promoting leaflet are worth repeating here.

1. Call together a few who are interested and study the plan. Discuss the opportunity it offers to your class. Pray about it. Consecrate yourself to the work. Form an "Inner Circle" of those who plans are under way to repeat it in May.

Putting Yourself to School

THE sound of the school bell is in the air, and half the men and women in the world are looking rather wistfully at those young scholars with shining morning faces creeping like snails unwillingly to school! It is a case of wishing they had only known enough to take advantage of advantages themselves, years ago. But youth rarely does, when everything else is so much more alluring than mere lessons. So as we grow older—to a certain extent, at least—most of us become self-made men and women, is just so far as we recognize our individual lack.

There is, for instance, the matter of a vocabulary. A person who has little or no education, who reads little and is in no sense a scholar, gets along well with a vocabulary of about a thousand words. The number of words that a person uses in his ordinary conversation grades from a thousand up to about ten thousand for a well-educated individual. Everybody really has three vocabularies—the first and smallest, that used in speaking; the second and next largest, the writing vocabulary, that used when we have time to sit down and choose the pick of the best words we know to express our thought; the third and largest, our reading vocabulary, meaning words used by others which we understand, but which we seldom or never employ in our own use.

A gentleman we know once determined to spend ten minutes a day with the dictionary; which thing he did, and as a result he not only has a crisp selection of telling words but he came to love their derivations, so that all conversation was enriched by the quaint imagery conjured up by certain words. A single word is often a concentrated poem, a little grain of pure gold; for example:

Joyce starts
Tribulation, which as everyone knows means affliction, anguish, sorrow. But the significance is lost unless one goes back to discover that it is derived from the Latin 'tribulum', which was the threshing machine or harrow, whereby the Roman husbandman separated the corn from the husks, and 'tribulatio' in its primary meaning was the act of this separation. Along came a writer of the early Christian church and appropriated both word and image for setting forth a higher truth—that sorrow, distress and adversity separate in man whatever is light, trivial and poor from the solid and true, the chaff from the wheat.

And that little word desultory, take it to pieces, it comes from de and salto, "to leap from one thing to another," as a man who in the ring is technically called a "desultor" and rides two or three horses at once, leaping from one to the other. What a quaint picture one gains of the inner processes of a desultory person.

Another gem is capricious! A certain man is full of caprices, we say! Ah yes, from "capra," a goat; and if you have ever watched a goat you will have observed how unaccountably it leaps here and there indulging in all sorts of unexpected antics! In like fashion, then, a caprice is a movement of the mind that can't be calculated on before hand. A vivid, vigorous and picturesque impression, surely.

Rivals properly are those who dwell on the banks of the same river. But as all experience shows there is no such fruitful source of contention as a water-right, and these would be often at strife with one another in regard to the periods during which they severally had a right to the use of the stream, turning it off into their own fields before the time, or leaving open the sluices beyond the time; in other words, interfering with the rights of their neighbors. And so in the course of time "rivals" came to be applied to any who were in unfriendly competition for the same thing.

Assiduous and attention have delightful pictures lurking in their meanings: he is assiduous who 'sits close to his work'; he is attentive who, being taught, "stretches out his neck" that he may not lose a word!

Putting yourself to school with the dictionary a few minutes every day will bring you a rare collection of paintings to hang in the gallery of your mind. And, on occasion, you will be exhibiting them privately, with no little pride at the quaintness of these new possessions.

But at best words can only be unstrung pearls. There are jewels more precious in Friends On the Shelf! Some famous man, in watching a child aimlessly playing with its twenty-six blocks bearing the letters of the alphabet, said eloquently: "And that was all Shakespeare had to work with! All!" But books are more than letters skillfully juggled into words, or else we would never go to the trouble of putting ourselves to school with them. For the mere curiosity of discovering what great people have said about books the following collection of phrases has been selected to show that true books are:

Embalmed minds.

Voiceless teachers.

The only true equalizers.

Friends of the friendless.

Repositories of universal experience.

Lighthouses erected in the sea of life.

The only riches posterity cannot squander.

A guide for youth, an entertainment for age.

The only treasure-houses open to all comers.

The cheapest and least palling of all things sold.

The only voices loud enough for future ages to hear.

Carriers of the accumulated heritages of each generation.

Better physicians than doctors, better preachers than clergymen.

Not so persistent as living bores; they take no offence when shut up!

Reservoirs of vitality: they make the flowers bloom and the skies turn blue.

Like well-chosen and well-tended fruit-trees; their fruits are not for one season.

Children of those whose lives are a glorious service, and whose memories are a rich benediction.

A book is brain preserved in ink.

The alphabet is conquering the world!

There is no worse robber than a bad book.

The newspaper is the grandstand of the world.

No man is wiser for his newspaper until he is above it.

A room without books is a body without a soul.

Books are looms that weave rapidly man's inner garments.

History is a divine book of revelation: great men are its texts.

Man is an unlighted candle: he needs some books to kindle his powers.

Today we seem more interested with literary fringe than with solidity.

The only croesus to be envied is he who is reading a richer book than you.

In history, much is false but names and dates; in fiction, all is true except these!

He whose yesterdays are full of books and culture, shall find his tomorrows full of happiness and friendship.

Famous Baptists

By PEGGY

THE other afternoon I was supposed to be practicing on the piano, but actually I was playing and singing "My Country, 'Tis of Thee," when Bill poked his head in the door and said: "I'll give you exactly ten minutes to tell me who wrote those words, and what denomination he belongs to!"

Ten minutes! !

You may be sure I did some hurrying to find our book of patriotic songs and look up the name of the author of "America," which I discovered was Dr. Samuel F. Smith. But how was I ever going to find out his denomination? Then I remembered the encyclopedia, and what do you suppose I discovered inside of eight minutes? Why, that this famous Dr. Smith wrote our famous national hymn was a Baptist!

Bill simply couldn't get over my unexpected quickness, but no sooner had he bragged to Uncle Tim about what a clever niece he had, then Uncle Tim smiled: "Oh clever's no word for it, suppose you prove to me now how bright the two of you will be in discovering five more Baptists apiece—Baptists who are famous in history, I mean. I'll give you until tomorrow at this time to report, and nobody must tell you more than one name each for your list."

Now maybe you would know exactly how to go about finding out such names, but I think Bill and I had to do about as much questioning as any boy or girl in all America. Personally, I thought I never could fill my list, but of course, I knew enough to head it with Warren G. Harding, president of United States, and also Charles H. Hughes, who is now Secretary of state. Then I was in a fix, for I didn't know anybody else. So I asked mother, and she told me that Premier Lloyd George, the Prime Minister of England, is a Baptist. That made three for me. When father came home he told me that John Milton, the great blind poet of England, was a Baptist. He wrote "Paradise Lost," as you probably know. Then I telephoned one of my teachers and she said that the famous John Bunyon who wrote "Pilgrim's Progress" was a Baptist, and I was quite excited about that, because Bill and I often used to play being John Bunyon in prison. This made my five names, and I was awfully excited to have heard of them so easily, when a Harvard graduate we know gave me a sixth name, for it seems that the first president of Harvard college was a Baptist.

But do you know, I liked Bill's list much much better than my own? For his famous Baptists all did such very hard things. First of all he had some one named Roger Williams. This Roger Williams was the first Baptist in all America, and way back in the year 1636 he said that every man, woman and child had a right to worship God as he wished to, which was such an unpopular belief that he led a colony of people off into unsettled country and started the state called Rhode Island now. The strange part about it is that today everybody in the United States has accepted his point of view, but when he lived everyone denounced him as a terrible heretic, and Baptists were imprisoned and exiled for this belief. Bill found out that this first American Baptist was also the first to start Christian work with the American Indians who were real heathen in their ignorance of God.

Bill's second Baptist was William Carey, the famous English shoe-cobbler who started the first English missionary society, in a day when other ministers said coolly that if God had wanted to have English ministers go into all the world he would have given them a "gift of tongues" so they could speak any language which the heathen spoke. But Mr. Carey, although he had never been to college, studied languages as he cobbled shoes, and finally went to India where he translated the Bible in thirty-seven different languages of India. Carey is a name we Baptists can be very proud to own.

Bill's third Baptist was Adoniram Judson, the first missionary to go from America to a foreign mission field, which was Burma. So Bill's names were all people who were brave enough to be pioneers for their beliefs, and try difficult things for the first time.

His fourth name is one we love to say, because it is so unusual: Jonathan Goble! He was in the fleet of the American warship which went over to Japan years and years ago to make Japan open her land to people of other nations. Mr. Goble was so interested in the fascinating country that he became a Baptist missionary there, and because he had an invalid wife who could not walk he invented a grown-up baby carriage so she could be pulled easily around the streets, and this invention of his was the now famous jinrikisha! I was never more surprised in my life, for jinrikshas seem so much a part of Japan that I supposed they had always had them there just as they have always had paper parasols and cherry blossoms and Fujiyama. Yet behold, it was a Baptist missionary who made the first jinrikisha!

Bill's other Baptists were parents of famous people. For instance he discovered that the father of Henry Clay was a Baptist, so was the father of William Penn, and the mother of Abraham Lincoln. He also discovered that President McKinley insisted on being immersed as Baptists baptize when he joined the church of another denomination.

It was because we were so brimful of facts about Baptists that the Chimney Corner Editor said to us in her nice calm way: "And who do you think is the most interesting Baptist living today?"

"Why, I hadn't thought about that!" said Bill.

"Neither have I," I laughed.

"But don't you think you might do a little thinking?" she said to us, "For there are four corners to the globe and Baptists in every corner, doing the most interesting worth while things. The magazine called "Missions" tells about them. Then there's your own pastor, perhaps he seems the most interesting modern Baptist to you. And there Mrs. Montgomery, the very first woman ever elected to be the head of any general denominational union, yet last June in Des Moines Baptists honored her by electing her president of their northern Baptists Convention! Perhaps you'll find her your most interesting Baptist. Or perhaps it will be Dr. Aitchison—his initials are J. G., Oh! Surely you've seen them a hundred times, but do you know what he is?"

We stared at her, fascinated, to think how many wonderful Baptists people were still doing things. Then quick as a flash she said: "I know! Let's make it a Young Reserve Contest, and offer a reward for the best paper sent in by November first telling about the most interesting Baptist."

"Oh yes, let's do that!" I cried.

And Bill said firmly: "Those Young Reserves will choose some Baptist missionary, just see if they don't!"

"No," I answered, "I'm positive they'll chose some one working in their home town who will seem very wonderful to them—don't you agree?"

But the Chimney Corner Editor shook her head: "Not one of us will know until November first," she smiled.

So Bill and I hope each one of you will enter the contest, and won't you please write on your paper how old you are? Miss Applegarth will print the three best papers, she says, and give a reward for the very best one.

Third World Brotherhood Congress

BY SAMUEL ZANE BATTEN

The Brotherhood movement is one of the most significant and hopeful movements of our time. In a sense it is old, as old as Christianity itself, which is the religion of fatherhood and brotherhood. All through the Middle Ages there were men and groups who cherished the ideal of brotherhood and sought to make it a reality in their lives and in the order of society. As a result we have the various brotherhoods, in both the Catholic and Protestant churches, and these, as Bishop Leete has shown in his book on "Christian Brotherhoods," have exerted a profound influence in the world.

But in a real sense the movement as we know it is a comparatively recent thing. For some twenty years or more there has been a well-defined effort in this country to revise the brotherhood ideal, to unite the men of the churches in study and service and to infuse the brotherhood spirit into the whole life of church and society. This movement in our country has had a somewhat changeful course, which need not be here discussed. In recent months, due to a variety of causes, there has been a remarkable increase of interest in the brotherhood idea and policy; and this contains much promise of good for our churches. The departments of brotherhood of the Home Mission Society and the Publication Society, are co-operating most heartily in this work, and during the past year an average of more than one brotherhood a day has been organized in our Baptist churches.

In the United Kingdom a most interesting development has taken place. Some twenty years ago a number of earnest men came to feel that something more must be done to reach and help the unchurched men of the cities. Out of this effort came what is known as "The Pleasant Sunday Afternoon." This was a lively and friendly meeting held in some church to which all men were invited. There was spirited singing, an interesting address, and best of all a warm welcome for all who came. By a natural process this movement has grown and deepened; some ten years ago it developed into the British Brotherhood. It is not necessary here to discuss this remarkable movement in detail; but it is a potent influence for good in hundreds of centers and to thousands of men.

Some fifteen years ago a movement began in Canada somewhat along the lines of the movement in our own country, though it embodies many features of the English movement.

For some years past representatives of the Brotherhood in these lands have met in conference and have considered the problems of their common work. This feeling was greatly strengthened by the war, which brought our men together in a common enterprise. As the war was closing the feeling that the time had come to express the spirit of brotherhood, became a conviction that must be obeyed. Suffice it to say that the first World Brotherhood Congress was held in London, September 14-17, 1919. Four hundred and thirty-one delegates representing twenty-one nations, were present. At that time steps were taken which led to the creation of the World Brotherhood Federation; and our honored Dr. John Clifford was chosen as the first President. Among the Vice-Presidents may be named General Jan C. Smuts of South Africa, Hon. Arthur Henderson, the noted labor leader of England, Dr. Charles L. White of the American Baptist Home Mission Society, and Bishop James Atkins of the M. E. Church South.

The Second World Congress was held in Washington Oct. 3-6, 1920. Delegates are now on their way to attend the Third World Brotherhood Congress, meeting in Prague, Czecho-Slovakia, August 25-29. President Masaryk, of the new republic, has been very cordial; he extends a hearty invitation to the congress and will deliver an address on the closing day. Among those who go from America are Dr. Rolvix Harlan, a member of the executive committee, and Dr. Samuel Zane Batten, Commissioner of Education.

The Brotherhood movement exists to give reality to the gospel of brotherhood. The World Brotherhood Federation, as its name implies, is a federation of the brotherhood organizations in various lands. It recognizes fully the fact that the work in each country must develop in its own way; and so in each land men are encouraged to follow those forms of organization which best represent its spirit and meet the need. But it believes that the spirit of brotherhood needs emphasis and expression today. Its motto is the word of Christ: One is your Master, even Christ, and all ye are brothers; its declared aims are:

To link all men of good will in the bonds of brotherhood.

To remove the causes of broken brotherhood and industrial strife.

To seek the adjustment of human relations on the basis of justice and brotherhood.

"So, as we trace man's universal quest for Light.

Strange customs we shall see revealed to us.

In many corners of old Europe's soil

The people quaintly thought they could persuade

The seasons to obey their every wish

If they but mimicked what they wished performed.

If they desired rain, they called the tribe

And danced a rain-dance, or if they would bring

The Springtime in, they played at waging war

On Winter, as I shall disclose to you."

To proclaim and exemplify brotherhood and to win men to Christian discipleship.

To make brotherhood a fact in the universal life of the world and to establish the reign of righteousness on earth.

The Brotherhood Message adopted in London and reaffirmed in Washington, closes with this invitation and appeal:

"In the name of the Heavenly Father we summon men everywhere to the faith and practice of brotherhood. We charge the men of every church to make their church a true brotherhood of love and service. We ask the brotherly men in all countries to effect such a national organization as may be deemed best for the prosecution of its work. And we invite the brotherhood federations of all lands to co-operate in the work of making brotherhood a fact in the universal life of the world."

Mrs. Montgomery on Prayer and Property

There was a remarkable series of open forum meetings at the big Chautauqua in western New York the last of August in connection with the annual sessions of the Summer School of Forum Methods. Roger W. Babson, the eminent statistician, Dr. Tehyi Hsieh, the noted Chinese platform orator, and Mrs. Helen Barrett Montgomery were the chief attractions.

In the big open-air amphitheater one evening, with more than 3,000 in attendance, Mrs. Montgomery, as the speaker of the occasion, held her audience for two hours with a presentation, interpretation and open discussion of Jesus' word on the subject of prayer and property. The Scriptures were read by Prof. Davis, afterwards, of Oberlin College, from Moffatt's translation. The quotations on the subject of prayer were given first and, after a fifteen-minute interpretation by Mrs. Montgomery, Jesus' incisive words on the subject of property were read and commented upon in like manner. Then followed the discussion for more than an hour in full forum fashion. Mr. George W. Coleman, the president of the Open Forum National Council, acted as chairman, repeating the questions from the audience. Mrs. Montgomery answered them with remarkable clarity and pertinency. Mrs. Montgomery's ability as a platform speaker is well known, but never did she handle a subject or an audience more masterfully than on this occasion.

This juxtaposition of these two significant topics, prayer and property, had whetted the appetite and every one was on the qui vive not only to see how faithfully the speaker would hew to the line, but also to watch the quick reaction of the many intelligent, consecrated minds represented by that unusual audience.

Every one came away from that meeting not only feeling that he had listened to a composite sermon of great power and practical value, but also that an exhibit had been given to innumerable pastors and lay-workers of what might be done in any church, any Sunday evening, by way of provoking a serious, worth while and intensely interesting discussion of vital Christian principles. It was also quickly seen by those who have to do with making up programs for church conventions what possibilities there are in the Bible reading forum idea as illustrated on this occasion.

Private discussion, stimulated by this meeting, continued throughout the Chautauqua constituency for days afterward; indeed, the subject broke out repeatedly in other meetings on the grounds where an address was followed by discussion.

Mr. Babson's three addresses likewise deeply stirred the Chautauqua constituency; he is so virile, original and fearless. The boldness with which this astonishingly successful business man comes out for simple, unadorned Christian virtues fairly takes one's breath away.

The teachings and preachings of Mrs. Montgomery and Mr. Babson led a good many to feel that the minister who has to preach to business men and that the secretaries of our conventions and societies who have such important business matters to handle, all need a better understanding of fundamental business principles. Hearing that the Babson Institute, of which Mr. Coleman is the new president, is about to offer to men in the industrial field a short, comprehensive course in business fundamentals and that one theological seminary had already made inquiries with reference to the possibility of special terms whereby its students in a body could take such a course, Mrs. Montgomery declared that it would be of the greatest service to all our missionary societies, city, state and national, if the men and women who are conducting their affairs could get the benefit of such a course as this.

These fundamental courses of the Babson Institute are taken by correspondence, and in eighty-one lessons of not over 700 words, cover the basic laws of industry, the A. B. C. of production, the principles of salesmanship and the investing of money for safety and profit. As the Babson Institute is of a public nature, organized under the educational and charitable laws of Massachusetts, it cannot pay dividends. Its aim is to spread among the owners of business, industrial executives and factory workers the unquestioned fundamental laws of economics, salesmanship, accounting and investments, so that the conflicting groups in our industrial and commercial life may come to a sound understanding of their respective rights and obligations and thus contribute not only to their own success but also to a safer and more just economic national life.

Jesus' Principles Will Work

Mr. Babson and Mr. Coleman believe profoundly in the application of the principles of Jesus to the life of business and industry and that a correct understanding of the immutable natural laws underlying all sound business life will lead to a realization of this ideal.

Pres. Arthur E. Bestor of the Chautauqua Institution and his associate managers were so much stirred by these developments and were so eager to make available to their constituency another year some such courses on business fundamentals that Mr. Babson and Mr. Coleman were asked to arrange a series of classes along these lines at Chautauqua next summer, but Mrs. Montgomery expressed a strong desire that those who may never be able to go to Chautauqua should have the opportunity of taking up these courses by correspondence at once.

Chicago Welcomes Dr. Stackhouse

"The calling of Rev. Perry James Stackhouse, D.D., to the pastorate of our church and his acceptance of the call, have come about so quietly and naturally, that some are sitting up, rubbing their eyes and looking around to see if it is actually so. It is. And if this happy consummation of the pulpit committee's efforts answers our recent inquiry, the Tabernacle Baptist Church, St. John, in June, 1899, was ordained the following September and that pastorate little more than two years, during which time the church erected a new house of worship.

For the purpose of taking up a post-graduate course of study at the University of Chicago, he resigned his pastorate in September, 1901, and removed thither, and in connection with his studies became pastor of what was then known as Austin Avenue Baptist Church the following De-

REV. PERRY JAMES STACKHOUSE

'whether or not such a one were not somewhere, waiting for us,' the sequel will be more than gratifying to all concerned."

So, the Bulletin of the First Baptist Church of Chicago jubilates over its good fortune.

A native of Canada, Perry James Stackhouse was born about forty-five years ago, at St. Paul, New Brunswick. He traces his lineage through American ancestors, his paternal great grandfather having been born in Philadelphia, Pa., and his maternal grandfather in New York City.

He acquired his preliminary education in the public schools of his native town. He early felt drawn to the ministerial calling, and when seventeen years old preached his first sermon, being then a student at the Union Baptist Seminary, St. Martin's, New Brunswick. When nineteen years old he served as pastor of two small churches. During the four years, 1895-99 he was a student at Acadia College, Wolfville, Nova Scotia, where he was graduated with the degree of Bachelor of Arts. During these years he spent the summer vacations as student pastor; and in recognition of his literary talent, he was made editor-in-chief of the college journal during his senior year in college.

Young Stackhouse accepted a call to ceMBER, and on the 24th of that month married. During this pastorate, also, a new house of worship was built by his church.

In January, 1904, he was again called to the pastorate of the Tabernacle Baptist Church of St. John, New Brunswick, and having completed his post-graduate course during this year he received from the University of Chicago the degree of Bachelor of Divinity in Absentia. He was pastor of Cambleton Baptist Church, Cambleton, New Brunswick, from May, 1907, to May, 1910, when he accepted a call from the First Baptist Church of Amherst, Nova Scotia, known as the most prominent and influential Baptist Church in eastern Canada, whose membership was 1020 at the close of his pastorate of four years.

Since 1914 he has been the honored pastor of Tabernacle Baptist Church, Utica, N. Y., where he early ranked among the foremost preachers of the state, and which he leaves after seven years of fruitful work, to assume the pastoral duties of the First Baptist Church of Chicago.

In 1919, in recognition of his scholarly attainments and his ability as a preacher and author, Colgate University conferred on him the honorary degree of Doctor of Divinity, a well-merited tribute. Dr.

Stackhouse's two books, "The Social Ideals of the Lord's Prayer" and "The Sword of Christ and the World War," have attracted much attention and won for him a more than local reputation as a fascinating and instructive writer and author.

In his pulpit addresses, Dr. Stackhouse dispenses with the use of notes and with his subject thoroughly studied out and well in hand, he speaks extempore, in a style at once clean, clear-cut, forceful and convincing, which with his ready command of good English, holds the close attention of his auditors. And it is said of him, that he has the further happy faculty of knowing when he has exhausted his subject and stopping there.

Dr. Stackhouse will begin in Chicago, October 1.

During his ministry of more than seven years at Utica he has received into the church about 450 members, most of them by baptism. The church is now the largest Protestant church in that city of more than 100,000 people, having nearly 1,000 members. It is out of debt and has a generous endowment.

Utah Church Workers Discuss Mormonism

By L. A. GARRISON

The annual meeting of the Intermountain Christian Workers' Institute, held at Salt Lake City, closed its session Sept. 1. The meetings were held in Emory Hall, the community house of the Episcopal church adjoining the state university. The organization is composed of all Protestant churches in Utah. The themes discussed this year related entirely to the work among the Mormons. The papers were historical, doctrinal and analytic. The sketches of the lives of some of the pioneer missionaries read like a romance. This is especially true of the work of the Presbyterian church. The work of the Baptists seems, to a new comer, lacking in continuity, will and purpose. While the membership of the Baptist church ranks well in comparison with other churches, yet this is due more to migrations from the south, than to statesmanship and sacrifices of money and men.

Assassinate S. S. Superintendent

The superintendent of the first Congregational Sunday school in Utah was assassinated. Missionaries had their lives threatened again and again. And yet they toiled on until some have lived to see a new day in Utah. The doctrinal discussions had to do with the doctrines of the Mormon church; with its doctrine of God, verging on polytheism, Adam the God-man, marriage and inspiration. In contrast with these Mormon views, the spiritual character of God was emphasized and the superiority of the inspired Bible, in comparison with the "Book of Mormon," the "Doctrine and Covenants," and the "Pearl of Great Price" was shown.

It was brought out by those who have seen years of service here, that the singing of Christian hymns by the Mormons and contact with Protestant Christianity have wrought wonders in the modern thinking of the Mormon people, in spite of the false doctrines of their inspired books.

In analyzing methods used by various denominations to meet the situation as it exists in Utah, stress was laid on the importance of schools organized and conducted by Christian men and women under the tutelage of the various denominational boards. The Presbyterians, with their girls' school at Logan, their academy at Mount Pleasant, and Westminster College at Salt Lake City, have done a work that commands the respect of all Christians and the Mormons themselves. They number many distinguished converts from the Mormon faith who were students in these schools. The Congregational church still retains two schools—one at Vernal and one at Provo. Somehow one's Baptist pride is dreadfully hurt at the way we have withdrawn from fields, sold property where churches once were, and at the pitiable way in which the field is manned today. Our organization and approach to the Utah problem has been wholly inadequate. The Baptist workers here are loyal and devoted such as is hard to find in other fields where the work is easier. The Baptist situation is due to the character of organization, rather than the fault of any individual.

There is yet a very great opportunity for the Baptists in Utah. No denomination has done anything worth while in the way of community service, and yet it would seem that this is the very point of contact. The Mormon churches, with the popularity of their dance halls, indicate what might be done through the uplift and education of real social centers. It is to be hoped that the denomination will furnish both our Home Mission Society and our Women's Home Mission Society with a direct command, sustained by adequate support, to go up and possess the land.

A resume, given by Dr. W. M. Paden, superintendent of Presbyterian work and the missionary statesman of Utah, gives a fine statement and comparison of conditions in Utah.

Polygamy is Dead or Dying

"Polygamy is dead or dying, just as sure as the saloon and its echoes are dead or dying. Of course, in each instance there are cases of bootlegging, moonshining and the use of the old supply. Polygamy is dead although there are some polygamists living. But there is no possibility that the prohibition of it will ever be removed from the state constitution, or the law against polygamous living taken from the Utah statutes.

"In 1870 there were 86,000 people in Utah; now there are 450,000. Of the 86,000 in 1870, at least 80,000 were Mormons and possibly 5,000 non-Mormons. Of the 450,000 people in the state today, about 300,000 are adherents of the Mormon church, and about 150,000 non-Mormon. The Mormon increase in Utah during the last fifty years has been about 225,000, or an average of 3,000 per year. The Mormon increase has been less than threefold, the non-Mormon increase about thirtyfold.

"At least 100,000 of the 300,000 Mormons in the state have but little connection with or interest in the Mormon church as a religious institution, and at least 100,000 of the 150,000 non-Mormons in the state are not closely connected with any of our churches, either as communicants or otherwise.

"As late as 1882, when the territorial council of the legislature was organized, every chairman of all the seventeen committees of the legislature was a high church official, and all were polygamists but three. I question whether there were more than three or four polygamists in the whole membership of the last legislature, and even the Mormon church objected when a polygamist sought the nomination for governor.

"Joseph Smith's claim that he was given authority to establish the Christian church is quite as baseless as his claim that he was given authority to rehabilitate polygamy. His claim was quite as baseless as when he began to multiply Gods and multiply wives."

Church Schools

Following the vacation Bible schools that have come to have such a welcome place in numbers of our churches, the church school should have hearty recognition beginning as early as the first Sunday in October. The church school meets at least once a week for a two-hour session for the purpose of religious education. The time may be on Saturday afternoon from two or four o'clock; from seven to nine some week-day, night, or, where the public school board is in sympathy with the plan, on Wednesday afternoon from 2:30 to 4:30.

If the program is kept intensely interesting as it was in all of our best vacation Bible schools, the children will have keen relish for the study and the varied exercises that are given. There must be live interest in the exercises if the end sought is realized. "Character is caught, not taught," fits well here. The boys and the girls must be eager to attend in order to realize the object in view.

In order that this may be true, teachers who love boys and girls and who love the Bible are essential. It was said back in 1886 that Dr. Boise, the professor of New Testament Greek, would not take young men immediately after they had been with Dr. William Rainey Harper. He said these men were like dish rags, so intent and so enthusiastic had they been with Dr. Harper. Something of this knowledge of the Bible, of this skill in teaching of this burning enthusiasm that had such remarkable illustration in Dr. Harper is a prime requisite for teachers in the church school. The children must somehow feel that this teaching is very real, that the best life and love of the teacher are manifest. There surely ought to be conversions from time to time in these schools, natural, sincere, and biblical conversions.

From October to May inclusive, with a recess of two or three weeks in December, gives a good period for the church school. But a session of two or three months is well worth while, where a longer time does not seem practicable. We ought by all means to give some attention to religious education in addition to the time given on Sunday. The vacation Bible school should insure this action on the part of all our churches. Pastors and superintendents should lead in response to this urgent call.

"The Little Brown Church in the Vale"

A few days ago the Cedar Valley association held its annual session at Fredericksburg, for some forty years the home of Dr. William S. Pitts, the author of the "The Little Brown Church in the Vale." Dr. Pitts was a practicing physician and the leader of the choir in the Baptist church of Fredericksburg, a little town about fifty miles north east of Waterloo. The choir was known all over the county and welcomed far and near. When the immortal song, now sung all over the Christian world, was first sung in old Bradford on the Little Cedar River, where the "Little Brown Church" that gave rise to the song now stands, the people went wild over the melody and the words. A like reception awaited the song and the choir wherever they went. The little "church" is kept in good repair by an organization that wishes to preserve it as a memorial of Dr. Pitts and the song. So many couples go there for the marriage ceremony that recently a small fee is asked for the use of the house. The money goes into the treasury to meet incidental expenses and to help keep the house in good repair.

At Fredericksburg the Cedar Valley Association adjourned to visit the grave of Dr. Pitts and to hold a brief memorial service. Pastor W. J. Coulston of New Hampton gave an interesting address and the "Little Brown Church in the Vale" was sung. A committee was appointed to plan a memorial for Dr. Pitts in connection with the Baptist church at Fredericksburg. The moderator of the association, Rev. W. S. Andeson, the local pastor, Rev. C. S. Carrol, and another citizen of Fredericksburg are the committee. The writer was well acquainted with Dr. Pitts. He was a man of fine presence and of kindly spirit.

The Annual Association

Two of our associations were held in June and August claimed six others, but September is the special month for these gathering in Iowa. Nearly every day of the month is occupied by an association. There are but few conflicting dates and it is hoped that these will be corrected another year. Fewer men and women from outside of the association now ask for a place on the program, or are invited to take a place. One live man or woman (preferably a returned missionary from the home field or from the foreign field) can give information and a quickening message. Well-formed pastors and lay workers can then take up discussion and form plans for action. The responsibility is with them; the money must come from them. If under careful guidance they are led to discuss these missionary topics, they will take deeper interest in them; but this calls for time and place on the program. It helps greatly where those who visit the association from outside remain through the whole session. They want the very best hearing possible when they speak; so does the other fellow. If competent pastors and lay workers give close attention to the state workers, do not they in turn merit an appreciative hearing from these same state workers in order that their point of view, fresh from the field, may be considered.

Evangelism is the keynote of the campaign for the fall and winter months. A revival in every church is the note that Dr. G. W. Cassidy, our state promotion director, is sounding, and the word is well received by the delegates at the association. We never outgrow the need of "times of refreshing from the Lord." A great awakening in all of our churches that shall beget repentance of the sin of indifference, of carelessness about church attendance and about general interests of the kingdom of God is imperative. When the church longs and labors for the conversion of sinners, the Lord hears prayers and men and women are saved.

Dr. G. P. Mitchell is emphasizing the place and the value of the local Baptist church. He shows clearly and plainly how the local church is fundamental in all of our denominational enterprises; that we must strengthen the local church, foster the local church, recognize the local church in all of our plans and enterprises, if we would realize largest achievement in kingdom service. Baptists will not long tolerate bosses. The will of the people, represented in and through the local church, must be heard and obeyed.

Iowa Baptist Convention

The convention will meet this year at Waterloo, one of the beautiful little cities of Iowa. The Walnut Street Church will extend the hearty welcome. The location is good and a large attendance is anticipated. Last year the convention met at Keokuk in the southeast corner of the state. Pastor Harvey J. Moore worked untiringly for the success of the meeting and there was a large representation, considering the distance that Keokuk is from most of our Iowa churches.

Dr. D. I. Purser, the pastor of the entertaining church, came to Iowa a little more than a year ago from Alabama, the land of Baptists, and he will prove to be a past master in extending the hospitality of the church. The old First Church, with Pastor Clyde I. Askins at the head, and Burton Avenue, led by Pastor V. C. Kelford, will give royal aid in the entertainment of the Baptist hosts.

Who Ought to Go?

The pastors, yea, undoubtedly they should be there. But the business men in the churches, how we need them to enter into the discussions and to help in the planning! The young people must care for the denomination in the near-by tomorrow. If every pastor would begin at once to see one or two of the most competent and devoted young people in his church were appointed delegates, and that all, or at least some part of the necessary expense was provided by the church, or the young people's society, what a blessing he would bring to the young people and to the churches! The Sunday school officers and teachers have never failed to find help and inspiration at the Iowa Convention. Dr. O. C. Brown of Philadelphia is asking for an adult class campaign to begin in October and last through December, for the express purpose of doubling the membership of every adult class in our Baptist churches. The writer has sent circulars giving the plan in detail to our Sunday schools all over Iowa. This race may well mean a mighty awakening among our men. Organization is called for in every church. An urgent word was also included from Rev. Selden S. Roberts about preparation of officers and teachers for better service.

Iowa Baptist women are well organized and they will attend the convention in large numbers. Several new girls are receiving aid from the Girls' Missionary Education Fund in their preparation for service on the foreign field and in the home land.

How to Bring Them Together

By FRANK DANN

"The Forum" is gone so I cannot get in there but I do want to "get in" somewhere and help Brother C. H. Dickey to "put across" his plea—re "Bringing Together the Preacher and the Church" which appeared in THE BAPTIST of Sept. 3.

I am an old superannuate, so am not pleading my own case, but I am constrained by sympathy with Bro. Dickey and hundreds of other brethren in like circumstances; most of them more severely handicapped—they not having the alluring recommendation of "ex-Chaplain with the Expeditionary Forces in France."

Now in our present organization of the Northern Baptist Convention it looks as if all the necessary machinery is provided, and the only addition needed is sufficient clerical force to take care of the new material. I venture to suggest that the committee on ministerial pensions be also made the bureau of ministerial and church relations, having as its auxiliaries the secretaries on promotion in the various districts, the secretaries of state conventions and the secretaries on promotion in the various associations all working in cooperation, on a complete index system which would show at any time the standing and ranking of every minister and church within the borders of the Convention.

It seems to me that many good results would follow the adoption of such a system, e.g.: the elimination of undesirables from amongst the ministers, the checking, if not ending of too easy ordination of unfit ministers, the encouragement of desirable aspirants and the removal of a source of anxiety from the weaker brethren. Good results would also be likely to accrue to the churches.

A Ship of Fate

cieties would get busy, work overtime and tie some good warm-wide bed comforters, it would be a pious orthodox act. Little wool outfits for the arrivals by the stork route are most necessary. Look into your shoe bags—some don't fit Mary to her liking but they will find the right foot over there. Send the left one, too, to make a pair. If any require half-soling and heeling, do it. If you were ever a generous buyer, you will still have some on hand; take this opportunity to clear out that space for some woman across the winter sea can use a few pieces of almost any kind of new cloth.

Can't you see the ship sailing out of New York harbor—with that inspiring statue of liberty—and hope like a benediction following it with her gaze of tenderness!

These needy neighbors of ours are watching for their "ship to come in," which if not like the bearer of the golden fleece of the fabled Argonauts is the bearer of good American wool, not to pull over their eyes, but to cover their chilled bodies. Some of the cheerful, joyous, frivolous things, such as boys and girls like should be tucked in your packages—for the holiday season!

Wouldn't you like to be there to see the packages opened? Send such things as you would willingly stand by and watch their unpacking and their distribution with pride.

WESTERN WASHINGTON

SEATTLE BAPTISTS are beginning already to prepare for the entertainment of the Northern Baptist Convention next June. They are determined to leave nothing undone that will minister to the comfort of their guests or that will contribute to the spiritual power of the convention. On Sept. 12 a group of men and women, who had been appointed jointly by the convention board and the Seattle Ministers' Conference, met to select a permanent committee on arrangements. Dr. J. F. Watson was elected chairman of the permanent committee, Mr. Corwin S. Shank, vice-chairman, and Dr. Geo. F. Holt, secretary. There, with Dr. E. H. Hicks and Mrs. W. L. Thompson, were authorized to nominate the chairman of all sub-committees and report at another meeting called within two weeks. When these chairman of committees shall have been selected and appointed, they, with the officers named above, will constitute the general committee of arrangements.

ASSOCIATIONAL MEETINGS will be held in October: The Cowlitz Assn. at Chehalis, Oct. 4-6; Bellingham Bay Assn. at Mt. Vernon, Oct. 18-20; Puget Sound Assn. at Olympia, Oct. 23-25 and Seattle Assn. with the First Church, Seattle, Oct. 25-27. The Puget Sound Assn. has changed its date from Oct. 11-13 to Oct. 23-25, that it may celebrate its fiftieth anniversary jointly with the Central Church of Olympia, whose fiftieth anniversary occurs at the same time.

THE UNIVERSITY CHURCH, SEATTLE: Rev. Frank B. Matthews, pastor: A lot has been selected for their new building at the corner of East 43rd and Brooklyn Ave., one block south of the present site. The church is planning to render a larger service to the students of the University of Washington with the opening of the college year. Mrs. V. H. Didrickson, one of their members, has been secured to assist the pastor in work with the young women of the university. It is expected to have a young man also, to assist the pastor in special work among the young men of the university.

WILLARD TOPPING, a student at Denison University, son of Rev. and Mrs. Henry Topping, Missionaries to Japan who are at present assisting in the Japanese work in Seattle, will spend this year as one of the teachers in Bishop College, Marshall, Texas.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

DR. GEORGE D. KNIGHTS of the First Baptist Church, Long Beach, spent his vacation with his wife and daughter in an auto camping trip in Northern California. He supplied two Sundays for the First Church of Oakland, where Dr. John Snape is doing splendid service in leading this noble church. On the sixteenth of September the church gave a largely attended reception to Dr. and Mrs. Knights and to Mr. and Mrs. A. A. McLean, the pastor's helpers. This was the tenth autumn reception to this pastor and wife. Their son Kenneth is a sophomore in the University of Redlands, and will this year be an assistant secretary in the Redlands Y. M. C. A. The new Sunday school building of the church is nearing completion and will be ready for the fall opening.

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

PURSUANT TO A CALL sent out by the by the First Baptist Church, Sacramento, a council met in the church Sept. 12, and examined Brother Frederick C. Krautz, and after due deliberation, expressed itself as satisfied with his statement as to Christian experience, call to the ministry and Christian doctrine, and recommended that the church proceed with his ordination. The ordination service was held that evening. Mr. Krautz is working as a Bible missionary in Northern California for the Publication Society.

DOVER: When the Baptist and the Free Baptist churches of Dover became the United Baptist church the meeting house that had been used by the Free Baptists, an excellent building, was fitted up for social activities and special departments of church activity. In the new equipment was installed a first-class moving picture machine. Pastor Henry F. Huse uses this to the great advantage of church and community. Instructive pictures of the right sort are given on certain week evenings and on Sunday nights biblical and missionary themes are portrayed. He has recently used two of the motion pictures prepared by the Home Mission Board viz—"Christian Education" and "Sunrise for the Monks." More than 200 people were in attendance and one of these said: "No living man could have told the story of the gospel work among the Indians and made us realize just what this great work is as did the motion picture." In his preliminary address Pastor Huse gave an historical sketch of what has been done for the Indians and then described from the picture what our own denomination has done through its missionaries for the Mono. This pastor and church are making a strong and successful effort to meet the actual needs of the day and fulfill their obligations to the World Wide Kingdom for Christ.

THE DAMARISCOTTA ASSOCIATION: This association met for its annual session in the historical church at Damariscotta, founded by Adoniram Judson, father of the great missionary and efficiently served at present by Rev. T. B. Hughes. Rev. C. C. Tilley, of Jefferson, was re-elected moderator and Rev. L. E. Carter of Nobleboro, clerk. Among the features of the meeting was the incorporation of the Damariscotta Benevolent Society which takes over the work of a society for ministerial aid which has existed, for many years and has accumulated a considerable fund, the incomes of which has been used with wide charity. Dr. R. C. Thomas of the Philippines Islands was present and in a masterly way brought the facts of our mission work there to the minds and hearts of the people. Dr. Thomas spoke at the Lincoln Quarterly Meeting at Morrill on Sunday Sept. 4, and at the First Church at Rockland on the evening of that day. His visit to Maine was greatly appreciated and will be of large service. Other features of the Damariscotta Association were the "Woman's Hour," conducted by G. E. Gay, president of the Woman's Society, an evangelistic address by Rev. Harry Taylor, and the new stereopticon lecture issued by the Promotion Board and read by Mrs. T. B. Hughes. The work of evangelism and the New World Movement were presented by Drs. Hamlen and Whittemore.

COBURN INSTITUTE: Coburn begins the new year with the largest student body for many years and the quality of the students is of the highest. WATERVILLE: The pastorate in the First Church of Rev. Walter Quarrington recently of Detroit, Mich. began in a prayer meeting Sept. 8. The large attendance, the spirit of the meeting and the evident fact that the new pastor is not only at home in a prayer meeting but knows how to lead one were full of promise. A large congregation greeted the pastor on his first Sunday. The services of the day were greatly enjoyed. Both pastor and people seemed to have "a mind to work."

HODGSON: Rev. D. A. McKinnon has resigned the pastorate of this church and will accept a position in the provinces where he will have opportunity for study along special lines.

NEW HAMPSHIRE

REV. ARTHUR L. SNELL, pastor of the church in Dover, died at his home Friday evening, Sept. 16. Mr. Snell preached as usual the previous Sunday. He was a native of Lawrence, Mass., where he was born in 1865. He received his early education in the Lawrence schools, and was graduated from Harvard in the class of 1886, and from Newton Theological Institution in 1889. His first pastorate was in Foxboro, and his second in West Somerville where he remained ten years. His next charge was with the First church in Fitchburg, Mass. In 1911 he was elected district secretary of New York for the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society. This position he held for seven years, and resigned to become pastor of the church in Dover, N. H. in June 1918. Mr. Snell's work at Dover has been a marked success. Besides his wife Mr. Snell leaves three married daughters, and two sons living at home. At the Des Moines Convention Mr. Snell was selected a member of the Executive Committee of the Northern Baptist Convention.

COLBY ACADEMY at New London, N. H. began its 85th year September 13 under favorable auspices. The chapel was well filled with students and visitors at the opening services. Colby Hall, the boys dormitory has been renovated and is a marked improvement.

A COUNCIL ON ORDINATION was called to meet with the Pleasant street church, Concord, Sept. 2, to confer as to the advisability of ordaining to the Christian ministry Mr. Paul E. Alden. The council voted unanimously in favor. The services of ordination were held in the church Sunday evening, September 4. Mr. Alden begins his pastorate with this church under favorable conditions.

THE TEN ASSOCIATIONS of the state held their annual sessions during the month of September. The meetings were well attended, and a good interest shown. More churches are now served by pastors than for a long time. More than a third more baptisms are reported for this year as compared with last year.

REV. C. P. MACGREGOR, of the First Baptist church Lawrence, Mass., has resigned to become pastor of the First Baptist church, Manchester, N. H. and will assume his new duties November first.

THE NEW LONDON ASSOCIATION met with the Third Baptist Church, Norwich, Rev. R. D. Trick, pastor, on September 14-15. Devotional periods were conducted by Rev. E. L. Nield, Lebanon; Rev. P. S. Collins, Bozrah; Rev. George Borden, Quaker Hill. The annual sermon was given by Rev. G. H. Strouse, First Baptist Church, Norwich. Echoes from the Des Moines Convention were made by Rev. W. N. Reynolds, Lyme, and Mrs. J. D. Rough, Norwich. Miss Ina Burton, New York, spoke of the work of the W. H. M. Society. Rev. James McGee, New Haven, spoke on the "Church Organized for Evangelism," and Rev. Chester H. Howe, New London, discussed "Methods of Evangelism." Rev. W. E. Bates, New London, represented the M. and M. Board. "The Church School We Need," was treated by Rev. W. T. Thayer, Hartford. Dr. David A. Pitt, Norwich, illustrated from his experience "Young People's Work that is Worth While." The state convention work, other than church school, was laid before the association by Revs. E. E. Gates, H. B. Sloat and A. B. Coats, D. D., Hartford. Rev. J. A. Elder, New London, preached the missionary sermon. Foreign mission work was presented by Rev. W. F. Thomas and Miss Clara Tingley of Burma.

REV. HENRY D. COE has resigned the pastorate of the First Baptist Church, Bristol.

THE MEETING HOUSE of the Packerville Baptist Church was struck by lightning and burned to the ground on July 26. Rev. J. W. Higgins has been pastor of the church fourteen years. Rev. E. E. Gates, pastor-at-large, for the state convention, has been assisting Mr. Higgins in special meetings, conducted in the Sunday-school building. On September 18 Mr. Gates baptized sixteen candidates.

THE SIXTY-FOURTH ANNUAL MEETING of the Stonington Union Bible School Convention was held at Old Mystic, September 14. The devotional services were conducted by L. P. Allyn, C. C. Zabriskie and Frank E. Williams. Addresses on "The Church School We Need," "How to Get Our Bible School Children to Church," "Reaching the Unreached," "My Baraca Class," "Child Conversion," "Filled or Failing," were delivered, respectively, by Rev. W. T. Thayer, Miss Gertrude L. Brown, Dr. H. M. Thompson, Mr. W. M. Morgan, Rev. C. S. Nightingale and Rev. B. U. Hatfield. Mr. W. A. Fraser presided and conducted the sessions in a most interesting fashion.

FIRST CHURCH, NEW LONDON, is planning to build a new parsonage. A conference of New London Association was held in this church, Sep. 22-23 at which Miss May Huston of New York, Miss Mary Noble of Buffalo and Rev. Floyd L. Carr of Pittsburgh, were the speakers.

THE FIRST CHURCH OF NEW LONDON has three young men studying for the ministry. Two are in college. The third was baptized on Sunday, Sept. 18. He has already been accepted as a student at Crozier Seminary. The church has been open throughout the summer. A vacation school with an enrollment of over three hundred with representatives from thirteen different nationalities was conducted. The church has engaged Miss Mabel E. Brown, formerly assistant to Rev. A. C. Archibald at Lowell and Brookline as assistant to the pastor, Rev. Chester H. Howe.

THE FOURTEENTH ANNUAL CONVENTION of the Hungarian Baptists of America took place Aug. 23-28 at Bridgeport. The convention proved to be an unusual success and of vast import to the Hungarian Baptists of America. Not only was a promising platform adopted for the home mission work but also for the foreign mission, where there is an opportunity for carrying out religious work among the Hungarian people in some of the newer European states. The reports given by the represented churches were encouraging indeed. Great success, during the past year, was also reported by the various committees. On Aug 26th the Sunday School Association and the Young Peoples Union had their session. The Union of the Ladies Aid Societies had its day on Aug. 27. All these organizations showed concentrated development and activity. Dr. Anderson and Dr. Sly both gave very effective addresses. Deep appreciation was expressed at the welcome extended by one of the leaders of the English speaking Baptists of Connecticut.

RHODE ISLAND

ONE OF RHODE ISLAND'S PASTORS takes up evangelistic work. The Rev. William G. Cooper was five years with the Evangelization Society of London, England, and has been nearly five years the evangelist-pastor of the South Church Providence. He is open for winter and spring engagements. His address is 30 Warrington St., Providence, R. I.

REV. JAMES M. LENT, pastor of the Woodlawn Church, Pawtucket has resigned, but expects to make Providence his residence for the present.

UNION CHURCH, Providence, has called Rev. J. Herbert Owen of Watertown, Mass. and it is expected that he will begin his pastorate soon.

WESTERN PENNSYLVANIA

Bellevue Church opened its fall work with a reception to the pastor, Rev. Chas. A. Decker, and his family upon their return from vacation. The program of the evening included a short talk by the pastor, giving some idea of the work planned for the coming months. The large attendance of enthusiastic members, together with the extensive program of the pastor, indicates the most successful year the church has ever had.

Dr. F. W. GORDON has been acting pastor of Bethel Church, Carrick, for two months. During that time harmony has been restored and attendance at both Bible school and preaching services has so increased that the present building is outgrown. Plans are being made for a new church edifice.

THE BROTHERHOOD of the Pittsburgh Association is making its biggest and most serious attempt to develop the men's work in our churches by taking a series of conferences into eleven groups of the association. The General Board of Promotion has furnished two prominent speakers for the entire series.

REV. LAWRENCE B. FORD, pastor of the Woodlawn church, while on his vacation preached for Dr. A. T. Hilton, of the First Church, Wheeling, also at Apollo, a former pastorate. During his absence, the board of deacons secured the services of Rev. G. H. Trehane, a retired minister who is a member of the Woodlawn church. The pastor is completing plans for realizing certain objectives during the year by sitting in conference with the leaders of each department. The objectives will be those recommended by the General Board of Promotion adapted to the local field. October will be Rally Month, designated as follows: 2nd, church 9th, Bible School; 16th, Young people's societies; 23rd, Women's societies. The church has maintained its financial program both for home and missionary work in spite of the severe industrial depression.

"The Spirit of the Camps" at Greenville

The first Baptist church of Greenville Pa. had not been made to appreciate the value to herself and others, of sending her promising young men and women to the summer "training camps" Lake Geneva, Winnepesaukee, Oswegatchie etc. Nevertheless, there are a round dozen of her children who have been to one or the other of these camps, one, two and some three successive years, largely through the influence of one young man who four years ago, attended the Lake Geneva conference for the first time. The Church had felt the impact of these broadened and deepened lives, but seemingly had failed to recognize the agency through which their inspiration had so largely come. But enthusiastic youth like love will find a way. So the eight or nine, who have just returned, "got together" with the campers of former seasons, and decided to "show them."

The result was a pageant of the campers, by the campers, and for the campers; that is, for the sake of the larger number who should be encouraged and enabled to go next year.

The pageant called "The Spirit of the Camps" prepared and presented by the campers, was given Sunday evening, Sept. 4, in the church auditorium.

Next year, the First Church of Greenville expects to have the largest delegation from any single church in the Northern Baptist Convention, "training" in the camps.—GRACE A. GAISER.

NEW JERSEY

Rev. J. L. Keith MacLeod of Pleasantville, had the honor to preach to the President of the United States, Sunday, Sept. 11, while supplying the pulpit for Dr. Cross at Chelsea Church, Atlantic City.

NEW YORK

NEW YORK COMMUNITY SERVICE announces a Dramatic Institute for Church Workers to be held at 370 Seventh Avenue, New York City, beginning September 28 and continuing through October and November.

Rev. A. W. Beaven began his thirteenth year of service with the Lake Avenue Baptist Church of Rochester, N. Y., September 11. The attendance record has been kept carefully by actual count for a number of years in the Lake Avenue Church and shows a continuous development through the years with a total attendance at the morning services for the twelve years of 304,558, and at the evening services, 248,729. During these years the average number of baptisms has been 62 per year. The average number of members received per year 137. The membership has grown from 1,191 to 2,106. The Current Expense receipts have risen from about $15,000 the first year to $31,000. The Benevolence Receipts have risen from $10,000 to $52,000. The total amount of money raised 12 years ago was about $25,000. This last year it was $107,155. The per capita giving to Current Expense has risen from $12.50 to $15.50. The per capita giving to Benevolence has risen from $8.30 to $20.60.

FIRST CHURCH, ITHICA, James H. Gagner, pastor, in addition to its regular budget, has assured a special budget of $14,000 for a parsonage, repairs and the church debt. All of it has been subscribed and the church has received a special bequest in addition of $1,000.

Community Training School for Church School Workers

The ninth season of the Community Training School for Church School Workers, conducted by the New York City Sunday School Association and Columbia University (Extension Courses), will open Monday evening, October 10th, at the Union Theological Seminary, Broadway at 120th Street, New York City.

The course of study will be divided into two sessions which will occupy twelve Monday evenings each; the winter session extending from October 10th to January 9th (omitting December 26th); and the spring session occupying from January 16th to April 3rd.

Such men in the Religious Educational World as Milton S. Littlefield, Frank K. Sanders, Henry N. Furnald and others will be responsible for the instruction.

This opportunity is open to the workers in Sunday Schools of all denominations and our Baptist Sunday school Superintendents and Teachers should avail themselves of this excellent intensive training.

A three year's course leads to a diploma. Booklets of information and registration blanks can be secured from the Association Office, 250 Metropolitan Tower, or from Stanley B. Hazzard, Director of Religious Education, New York City, 276 Fifth Avenue.

Brooklyn and Long Island Y. P. B. U. Notes

The year 1920-1921, with Gilbert Bigger of Greene Avenue Church as president, is a big year in the history of the Young People's Baptist Union of Brooklyn and Long Island. We realize how far short we have come of what we might have attained, but we know that whatever we have accomplished has been because of His directing hand.

Some seventy meetings have been conducted under the auspices of the Visitation, Educational, Missionary, Queens-Nassau-Suffolk and Meetings committees. Our young people have been preaching the unsearchable riches of Christ on the street corners of our city and in the churches, and have not been ashamed of the gospel.

In order to bring the local societies into closer contact with one another the Union is divided into ten districts, with a superintendent in charge of each, whose duty it is to stimulate interest in the activities of the Union, and promote Christian fellowship.

The Fresh Air budget for the year was $6,000, which amount was raised by voluntary subscription, and a concert. Because of the generosity of members and their friends we were enabled to entertain about 400 children and mothers at our Fresh Air Home in Commack, L. I. These were taken direct from the local churches to the Home, and back again, in large sight-seeing busses. Our faithful matron, Miss Cardwell, and her assistant, Miss Benham, devoted their entire vacation to the care of the kiddies, whose ten-day stay in God's wonderful country was altogether too short for them. The Y. M. C. A. hut, purchased some time ago, was dedicated at the conference held May 28-30, and has been used as a boys' dormitory.

Two subsequent conferences have been held at the Home; July 2-4, and September 3-5. These were so successful that such conferences will probably be part of the Union's regular summer work. Installation of officers took place at the last one, at which time the new president, Fred B. Ashplant of Strong Place Church, and the committee chairman, presented their plans for the year to the delegates present. A "Double-Up" campaign, to increase the active membership of the local societies, will be a special feature this year. At the conclusion of this campaign there will be a month of evangelistic services, with experienced evangelistic workers in charge.

Brooklyn Union was well represented at the convention at Cincinnati, with sixteen delegates, who came home so enthused with the spirit of the convention that they all plan, d. v., to go to St. Paul next year, and, incidentally, to Yellowstone Park.

Dr. James Asa White, general secretary of the B. Y. P. U. of America, spoke at the first quarterly meeting at Greene Avenue Church. This is the first time we have had the pleasure of hearing Dr. White at a Union meeting, and were indeed glad of the opportunity.

Among the Books

"The Path of the King."

By John Buchan; George H. Doran Co., New York; 290 pages; $1.90, net.

Kingly genius survives from generation to generation in the spirit of the human race; this is the thesis of the book; and the author works it out by means of a series of highly interesting historical tales of kingly, though not crowned, persons, beginning in the days of the Norse Vikings and ending with Abraham Lincoln. William the Conqueror, the Maid of Orleans, Walter Raleigh, Cromwell and the rest live again and re-enact for the reader the romance of their lives. When the reading is done, one realizes that he has enjoyed a lively resurvey of the history of the last thousand years.

"Joanna Builds a Nest."

By Juliet Wilbur Tompkins. Indianapolis: Bobbs-Merrill. $1.75.

Under the guise of a detailed narrative of a triumphant home-building, the successful transmutation of a dingy old country farmhouse into a modern, sunny, bright cottage-home, the author sugar-coats many interesting and valuable hints to home-builders. A love-story of genuine quality adds heart-appeal to the plot, and a sheaf of really individual personages moves across its pages. It is a real "sunshine" book for cheerful people; its gentle humor and optimistic sentiment will also endear it to the other kind of folks.

"Sex for Parents and Teachers."

By William Leland Stowell, M.D. The MacMillan Company, New York; xxx 204 pages; $3.00.

The author is a Fellow of the New York Academy of Medicine and of the American Medical Association. G. Stanley Hall presents a commendatory introduction. The book is designed to serve as a help for parents and teachers who wish to know how to give sex instruction wisely. The treatment is scientific, simple, clear and chaste. Illustrations are carefully selected, artistic and easily understood. Parents and teachers will find the material they need, presented in practical form so that they can easily make use of it. The frontispiece is Cot's picture, "The Storm," from the Metropolitan Museum of Art. Another front page holds a picture of the author's mother, to whom the book is affectionately dedicated, and "who explained to me the wonders of birth and motherhood when I was yet a little lad," he says. A normal boy or girl who is led through the course of instruction herein pointed out will find it hard to "think evil," and is not likely to err through ignorance in matters of sex.

OUR MUSIC CORNER

CONDUCTED BY

WILLIAM LESTER

FOR HARVEST-TIME MUSIC

Wherever it is at all possible, I believe that the cardinal festivals of the church year—Christmas, New Year's, Easter, Harvest, Thanksgiving-time, etc.—should receive special attention from the musical side of the church service. By all means should the choir-master plan to do some extra, especially appropriate music, a cantata preferably. Hence, with Thanksgiving time close at hand, in this issue I enumerate our effective and practical service cantatas for such use. Here they are:—

- Give Thanks Unto God—Clough-Leigher
- Harvest-Tide—Blair
- A Psalm of Thanksgiving—Lester
- The Rolling Seasons—Simper
- The first-named, to my notion one of the most beautiful short choral works written by an American, is obviously designed for service use, since it takes only twelve minutes for performance the solo voices are soprano, alto and tenor, and the scheme of the work lists an opening chorus, soprano (or tenor) solo, unaccompanied quartet, alto solo, soprano and alto duet, and closing chorus. The next is entirely Scriptural. My quartet has successfully done this lovely cantata—it is not easy, so will require some attentive rehearsing—and if you can get a double quartette or a chorus, it is even more satisfactory. Clough-Leigher, in spite of an occasional overly-complex tendency, I consider one of the two or three leaders in his chosen field. He has technique and ideas. This short work is not easy—but it is worth all the time required. It is published by the Oliver Ditson Co., of Boston.

Of a more square-cut type is the second title listed. This Blair cantata is somewhat easier, but much less distinguished than the above mentioned one. It would not be very effective for quartet—it calls for a chorus, and the effects are obviously designed for such forces. Solo voices required are tenor and bass. And interesting feature of the musical material is the fact that it uses the scheme of the "leit-motif"—representative themes used as motto-material throughout. It would require about thirty minutes for performance. The publisher is Novello—agent for this country, H. W. Gray Co., New York.

The work by the editor of this column —A Psalm of Thanksgiving—is a somewhat more extended choral production than the two listed above. The text is scriptural; the solo voices are tenor and baritone, with optional choice of soprano and alto at certain points. The music is quite singable, of no particular degree of difficulty, with an independent organ part. Time required for performance, twenty-five minutes. The cantata is from the press of the White-Smith Music Co., of Boston, Mass.

For a volunteer choir, where simplicity is the great issue, the Simper cantata will fill a wide-spread need. Like all the works of this writer, it is simple to the extreme, but effective. For the most part the organ simply doubles the voice parts. Such four-square material needs special care in its treatment, more than usual differentiation of dynamic values and tempo-adjustments, to keep it from becoming stodgy and dull. Clayton F.

Summy Co., Chicago, Ill., is the composer's representative in this country.

From the above-named choral works choice for almost any type of service can be satisfactorily met. Personally, I always like to get cantatas like the ones under discussion, with an eye to their use not only as a whole, for a festival occasion, but for the occasional use of the most graceful numbers incorporated therein for routine use. Many extended sacred works do not admit of this temporary dislocation; the separate numbers either lack form or interest sufficient to warrant their independent use. All of the above-mentioned works will admit of this use; hence their purchase is really an economy as well as a convenience, and consequently possess an additional appeal to those of us who find it diplomatic to keep one eye on the monthly bill that is to receive the pessimistic scrutiny of our dear friend, the church treasurer.

All of these works have been given under the direction of the writer and I can recommend them for their various purposes; the first, for use in the service itself; the other three, to be featured in special choral occasions, when the musical program is the point of the whole occasion.

ITEMS OF INTEREST

H. Chandler Goldwaite has been appointed municipal organist of St. Paul, Minn., and took up his duties Sept 1. The rogan is a new one and was purchased with a fund raised by popular subscription. It is the intention to present a series of free organ recital, starting with three a week. This course by Mr. Goldthwaite will be supplemented by a course of recitals by other organists of distinction. Mr. Goldthwaite is a pupil of Lynwood Farnam.

The Scottish Chronicle recently gave an interesting account of the musical career of Mrs. Henry Greeves, who without doubt is the oldest organist now living and performing active duty. She has been playing the organ in church for nearly seventy years!

When only eight years of age she officiated as organist at Headingly Church, near Leeds. When twelve years old she was appointed organist of Selby Abbey Church. She played as Selby until 1865, and then accepted a position at Canton Church in Lancashire. She afterward was appointed organist of Wiston Church, where she now plays every Sunday.

The universal appeal of Edgar Stillman Kelley's "Pilgrim's Progress" is demonstrated by the fact that rehearsals for an early production of this great choral work have already begun in New Zealand.

"The Pilgrim's Progress" is a musical miracle play for solo singers, chorus and orchestra, the text being based on the allegory of John Bunyan. The varied experiences of Christian in making his pilgrimage to the Celestial City offer infinite variety to the composer, and the result is a work which cannot fail to hold interest to the listener.

Dr. Kelley's work will be given as the third concert in the music festival at Worcester, Mass. Oct. 3-7, celebrating the tercentenary of the landing of the Pilgrim Fathers in Plymouth.

PASTORS WANTED

THE RIDGEWOOD CHURCH of Joliet, Ill., is without a pastor. Large opportunity for an evangelistic field worker. Address the clerk.

THE FIRST CHURCH, LOS GATOS, CAL., is looking for a pastor. Los Gatos is a city of about 3000 people in a desirable climate. Membership of church, sixty-five. Salary, $1500. A man adapted to work with young people is especially desired. Address H. L. Miller, 684 Santa Cruz Ave., Los Gatos.

AVAILABLE PASTORS

A BAPTIST MINISTER of wide experience, and for some time associated with the pastoral and Sunday-school work of a large city church, is free after October 1 to serve in the capacity of part-time pastor's assistant, or as acting pastor of a church during a period covered by a change of pastorates, or as stated supply. Location desired, Chicago or its immediate vicinity. Address M. R., Care of THE BAPTIST.

EVANGELISTS

REV. AND MRS. JONES EARL CORWIN, located for the last year and a half at Flora, Ill., are leaving there to re-enter the evangelistic field, in which they have had past experience. Mrs. Corwin has a fine voice and her messages in song are powerful. Pastors wishing their services may address W. H. Corwin, Blanchester, Ohio, or Rev. Jones E. Corwin, Flora, Ill.

A CHRISTIAN PHYSICIAN

THE PASTOR of A BAPTIST CHURCH in Idaho writes: "We are in need of a competent, Christian physician; one who looks upon his work as a real Christian ministry and not merely as a means of livelihood; not a formal church member, but one who honors the church by personal affiliation with its activities whenever possible. The location is near the capital, the climate is good, two hospitals within twelve miles. The village has a large country area settled with capable, prosperous people." Address C. W., care of THE BAPTIST.

MISCELLANEOUS

REV. WILLIAM KEACH, American Baptist missionary at El Salvador, Central America, wants a Ford; also an organ for a new church building.

OUR MISSION in Mexico urgently appeals for organs. Dr. A. B. Rudd writes that there is urgent need for five folding organs for central and southern fields in Mexico. Any friends wishing to help in this way are asked to communicate with Rev. C. S. Detwiler, A. B. Home Mission Society, 23 East 26th Street, New York City.

The following message has been sent out by Pres. Mullins and Dr. L. R. Scarborough to the members of all churches affiliated with the Southern Baptist Convention. It is well worth repeating for the benefit of the people of the North. We are at a great crisis in the history of our people. Our faith, our loyalty, our courage are severely challenged by a great situation of danger and of possible victory. We are in the most trying period of our five-year Campaign program, the third year. Two courses are open to us. We may look at the difficulties, real and imaginary; at our financial losses, great and small; at our own weakness of various kinds, until the difficulties, losses and weaknesses become mountain high, until God's presence and power become a mere echo of former things, until Christ's promise and the Spirit's presence become empty unrealities. That way lies defeat, ruin, the ignominy of broken pledges and a fickle loyalty. But there is a glorious alternative. We may renew our vision of the coming Kingdom; replenish our courage at the living fountain of Christ's boundless life, link ourselves once more to His unbroken promises and His infinite power, renew our fellowship with God's living Spirit, rededicate ourselves to prayer and the performance of the task to which all powers in heaven and on earth are pledged, and with unaltering faith and courage go forth to victory. We must not falter. We must not abate our zeal. We must not think or talk failure or defeat. We must not permit a passing situation to destroy our morale. We must not end with the flesh after beginning in the Spirit. Our Baptist people are not children who undertook a foolish or ill-advised thing, nor quitters who are daunted by circumstances. We must sacrifice and toil and suffer, if need be, but we must win. The eyes of men and angels are upon us. God is with us. His grace and power are pledged to us. With renewed strength from God let us be steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord until the final victory.

Dr. Nathanael Butler of the Divinity School faculty of the University of Chicago, has been seriously ill and in the hospital. The latest report is that he is making some improvement.

Normal Park Baptist Church, Chicago. Chas. T. Holman, pastor, includes in an aggressive program for the coming year an effort to put THE BAPTIST and Missions in every home.

Rev. Jos. B. Rogers reports that La Salle Avenue Baptist Church, of which he is pastor, has served 33,000 meals to unemployed and hungry men in the last few months.

The Book of Remembrance For 1922.

Everyone will be interested to know that the "Book of Remembrance" is to be published again in book form. The book for 1922 is now on the press. It is a beautiful book, printed throughout in two colors, with cover in green, blue and gold. It is convenient in size, and has all the material conveniently arranged for practical use. There is a verse of Scripture for every day, a topic of prayer, and a list of our missionaries arranged according to their birthdays. Twelve fine halftone reproductions of masterpieces of religious art make the book complete. It is the finest thing of this sort that has been published. Everyone who can secure a copy should have one. Missionary societies can well provide a supply for each of their members. A good many Sunday-school teachers are buying copies of the book for their classes. It would make a fine Christmas gift. The price is twenty-five cents, and as the edition is limited, orders should be sent at once to the Literature Department of the General Board of Promotion at any of the following addresses:

276 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

Since Rev. F. G. Arnold came to this field in June 1920, 170 have been added to the church bringing its membership up to 400. The Sunday school grew from 210 to 413 last Easter. Mr. Arnold conducted an evening Bible study class in the high school from seven till ten each Monday evening, teaching the Prophets and Psalms. An average of thirty young people completed each semester and received credits. This fall the class will study the Book of Acts and the Life of Paul. He also teaches a high school class in Sunday school.

A week-day religious education school meets from 4 to 5 or later each Wednesday afternoon and Mr. Arnold as superintendent, with three other instructors, teach the children of the first eight grades.

When allotment of $25,000 toward the New World Movement was taken up one year ago, only $4000 was pledged, but as the church prayed for guidance, with the help of Dr. Rider and Dr. W. E. Ripley one Sunday the full amount was pledged. Current expenses were raised from $4800 to $5000, the church was repaired and redecorated.

Mr. R. M. Booth, who for years led the singing in evangelistic meetings conducted by Rev. E. B. Pratt, is chorister. He and his talented wife conduct wonderful singing and concert work.

The Southern Association met with this church Sept. 27-28-29; and in October the state convention, 500 strong, comes to celebrate the Jubilee Year of organized missions in this state.

REV. J. BURT BOUWMAN was granted a two months leave of absence during the summer. During this time he attended the summer session at Columbia University. Mr. and Mrs. Bouwman motored to New York City, coming back by way of Philadelphia and Washington, and thence through the Cumberland Mountains, and through Ohio to Michigan. Mrs. Bouwman took vocal lessons in New York City.

A CONFERENCE of SUNDAY-SCHOOL WORKERS, including officers and directors, was held at Lyon Lake, Sunday afternoon and all day Monday, Sept. 4-5. C. L. Berry, religious educational director for Michigan Baptists, gave a splendid address Sunday afternoon. At the other session, the year's program was worked out.

Fresh from the Field

Colby College, Waterville, Me., opened for its 104th year of instruction on Sept. 22 with the largest enrollment in its history. New students to the number of 189 registered, of whom 128 were men and sixty-one were women. The registration in the upper classes is not yet complete, owing to the fact that many students have not yet been released from their summer employment, but the total attendance when all have returned will be not far from 500. Sunday, Sept. 25, was observed as "go to church" Sunday by the entire college. Faculty and students gathered on the campus at ten o'clock and formed in line with the United States flag and the Colby flag at the head. Each denomination represented among the students marched as a separate unit in the procession, which proceeded from the campus down town and there separated, each unit going to the church of its preference. Thus at the beginning of the new year the college publicly proclaimed to the city its Christian character in a most impressive way.

The Church Federation of Duluth conducted a survey in that city to discover the truth or falsity of the statement that men do not attend church. The survey proves, as did one in Pittsburgh that the charges are untrue. Forty-seven per cent of the church audiences in Duluth were found to be male. It was also discovered that 81 per cent were wage-earners.

Recent instructions of the War Department respecting the conduct of troops changing station by marching include a paragraph advising that the sentiment of the nation concerning Sabbath observance be respected and no marches, except in cases of necessity, be made on Sunday. It is further directed that opportunity be provided for religious services, conducted by the chaplain or through community co-operation, and that dignified publicity of such services be made.

The women's Board of Religious Organizations has protested to St. Louis motion picture managers against undignified representations of ministers in the movies.

The Italian Baptist Missionary Association met in its twenty-third Annual Convention on September 13, 14, and 15 at Somers, Old Oak Farm, New York—a meeting that will live long in the memory of those who attended it, because of the enthusiasm and the Christian zeal which permeated every session of it. One of the most important actions taken was the presentation of the following goals: Sunday school covering fifteen goals of Publication Society; Young People's Societies in every church; one service in English each Sunday; co-operation with social agencies in community; church a center of community influence; 60 per cent of resident members in attendance monthly; 75 per cent of the resident members in attendance at communion service; personal service league in each church; daily Bible reading and prayer; annual every-member canvass for current expenses and benevolence; weekly envelope offering; minimum of $5 per year per capita towards pastor's salary; devotional services; members in higher schools and recruits for missionary and ministerial work; evangelists, colporters, and publicity.

Dr. Robert L. Kelly of the Council of Church Boards of Education has reported to date to Dr. George R. Baker of the Board of Education of the Northern Baptist Convention that figures from thirty-five theological seminaries, practically all of them in the north, show an increase of from 10 to 110 per cent over last year's attendance.

The Presbyterian Church has now paid in full the debts growing out of the Interchurch World Movement. In order to meet the demands of the banks, it has issued certificates of indebtedness which will be met out of the proceeds of the various church boards. At the time of the Interchurch collapse, it was felt that possibly grave damage had been done the credit of all our religious organizations. But their determination to pay on time all indebtedness has made that credit stronger than ever.

Three Days of Blessings is what they have just experienced through their first Bible and Missionary Conference in the Baptist Church at Deep River, Conn., Dr. J. Havergal Sheppard, reports. The conference opened enthusiastically Sunday, Sept. 25, with Rev. Geo. Caleb Moor, pastor of Madison Ave. Church, New York City; Rev. W. F. Thomas, president of Karen Theological Seminary, Insein, Burma; Rev. E. H. Semett, Dean of the School of Missions, New York City; Rev. Anton Hok, Czecho-Slovak tenor and pastor of the First Czecho-Slovakia Church, New York City; Miss Lucinda Johnson, field worker for the Board of Promotion, New York; Rev. A. E. Pero of Essex; Rev. S. W. Delzell of Chester; Dr. Sheppard and others. On Monday, Sept. 25, the chief speaker was Rev. E. H. Emmett; on Tuesday, Sept. 27, Rev. Anton Hok; on Wednesday evening the woman's work was featured with Miss Lucinda Johnson as chief speaker.

Were You Ever Cold?

BY NELLIE G. PRESCOTT

Were you ever cold? Perhaps so, for a few moments. Then you went into a warm room, turned on more heat, or spread another blanket on your bed.

Were you ever hungry? Were you ever faint for lack of food? Probably never, for there has always been food, abundant, warm and nourishing.

Did you ever have only one thin worn garment? Did you ever lack shoes and warm under-clothing? Never! There has always been enough for you to wear, even though you may sometimes have felt that it was not in the latest style.

Have you ever gone without soap for days and months? Have you ever been unable to keep your body clean? Or failed to properly wash your clothing? Never!

The cold that goes with mud huts, dirt floors, no fire, insufficient food and ragged soiled clothing, is an uncomfortable, piercing, killing thing. Yet men, women and little children, will suffer hunger and cold during this coming winter, in Czecho-slovakia, Poland and Latvia, unless we help. Let us stop in our busy, well-fed, comfortable lives, to think what a shipload of good warm clothing will mean to these friends who have suffered so much from war and its evils. Let us give generously and very promptly, to help "Fill a ship in fellowship."

Musical programs in Roman Catholic churches in this country have often been elaborate. But apparently Archbishop Hanna of San Francisco believes that these can be improved as he has recently sent priests to Europe who will study there for three years. On their return they will be given the task of improving the music in all the churches of the diocese.

The twenty-third annual convention of the Italian Baptist Missionary Association at Old Oak Farm, Somers, New York, on Sept. 13, 14 and 15, enthusiastically endorsed the New World Movement, and passed a resolution pledging its support. Following Dr. Aitchison's address, in which he challenged every Baptist "to give the sum that represents him before Christ," one of the churches in the conference which had had an apportionment of $3,000 and which had pledged $5,000, declared through its pastor that it meant to give now "in a really worthy manner."

A down-town church in a boarding-house district has demonstrated beyond peradventure that it can serve the community disinterestedly without regard to race, class or creed and with no intrusion of so-called religion in any form, and at the same time find its own work going forward by leaps and bounds in every channel of church activity, largely due to the good will thus generated. We are talking about the famous old Clarendon Street Church of Boston, which is experiencing a wonderful awakening under the stirring leadership of its young pastor, W. Harry Freda, who in two years' time has broken some of the best records the church made in its palmiest days. He conducts in the vestry every Wednesday night during the winter season a Community Forum which is managed in the interest of the neighborhood exclusively. It is never used to grind any private axes. The meetings are opened and closed just as any gathering of citizens might be conducted.

In connection with appeals for life enlistment, the following figures furnished by the Foreign Mission Society are of interest. The period covered is from April 1, 1919 to Oct. 1, 1921. New missionaries—appointed and sailed: men, 38; wives, 38; single men, 8; short term men, 7; single women (clerical), 6. Appointed but not yet sailed: Men 15; wives, 15; single men, 13; single women, 4. The Woman's Society has appointed 68 who have sailed and 11 who have not yet sailed. This makes a total of 223, of whom 165 have already sailed for their fields. The total survey estimate of new missionaries was 654, of whom 431 remain to be appointed.

The "Free Christian," a monthly Baptist paper from Warsaw, Poland, reports a great spiritual awakening in the village of Radose (gladness) in which there were reported 120 converts. The man who had the joy of leading these people into the kingdom of God was a missionary, Dziekuc Malej.

The Tribune, a socialist paper published in Warsaw, Poland, had this to say in a recent issue, "Christianity is an idea which reaches out for the whole world. The Bolsheviki had a similar ambition but lost, as has also the Vatican. The true Christian idea is represented by the American mission in Poland, their work conclusively proving that

Again, It Might Be Worse

A comparative statement of costs and receipts of THE BAPTIST in 1920 and 1921 show some instructive facts. Take the matter of subscription receipts. Kind friends last year prophesied thus: "Wait until next year and see what will happen. THE BAPTIST is a new thing now and is carried on the wave of the great campaign. Just wait until next year and see the slump in subscriptions." For months we laid awake nights with the spectre of dissolution ever before us. The predictions of the prophets have proved to be profits. Our average weekly subscription receipts are $227.54 greater in 1921 than in 1920. Prophecy on, brethren!

A Great Offer!

THE BAPTIST and Missions, new or renewal subscriptions, for $3. The subscription price of THE BAPTIST is $2.50 and Missions $1.25. Send both to this office.

Moulding Public Opinion.

I am enclosing an express money order for $3 in payment of a combined subscription to THE BAPTIST and Missions to be sent to the Public Library, Topeka, Kan. This is a donation to the reading tables of the library by the Baptist Woman's Union of Topeka." This order shows good business sense and an appreciation of the value public opinion. You go into any library and you are sure to find the publications of certain denominations and sects. Does this mean that the library board is showing partiality? By no means. It shows that certain groups of people have realized that the public reading rooms furnish an opportunity of moulding public opinion. They propose to have their work set forth by their official publications. Baptists are also doing a great work. No matter how small the local church may be the community should know that it belongs to a great Christian body which is determined to do its best to make Christ known throughout the world. Are THE BAPTIST and Missions in your public library, Y. M. C. A. and Y. W. C. A.? If they are it shows local initiative and enterprise. Make yourself a committee of one to find out. Then, if necessary ACT.

Dead While They Live

Stop breathing and you will soon be dead physically. Some people keep breathing largely because it is an automatic process. If it called for initiative they would soon be gone.

Stop thinking and intellectual atrophy will soon result. It is possible to confine ourselves to such narrow interests that we can hardly be called intelligent beings.

Stop seeking information on the work of the kingdom, especially as represented by the denomination of which you are a part, and for practical purposes you might about as well be dead. You may count one in the total of population but what kind of a "one?"

Kind reader, remember that the majority of our Baptist church members do not throw themselves into the work of their churches and make no contribution to the extension work of those churches because they have never had any adequate conception of the meaning of church membership. Some of the best Baptist missionaries on earth are those who with tact place THE BAPTIST and Missions in such homes and encourage their reading.

for them all peoples are brothers. Away from the Vatican! the last fortress in Europe of middle-century, out-of-date obscurantism—this is our motto which should be on the lips of all people who desire Poland easily and according to reason to come to real knowledge."

For different nations, army and navy appropriations advanced from 1912 to 1921 as follows: Great Britain, from $351,044,000 to $1,121,318,000; Japan, from $93,576,000 to $282,357,000; United States, from $244,177,000 to $1,422,752,000. Certainly we must unload if we are not to face bankruptcy. Can anybody show any tangible gain to the United States from such vast expenditure?

At a farmhouse in Japan a woman asked a colporteur to let her have some of his medicine. She had mistaken him for a hawk of patent remedies; but she bought a New Testament for the healing of her soul. A cobbler near Naples begged to be allowed to mend the boots of one of our Italian colporteurs: "I have read what our Lord said about giving a cup of cold water, and I do it for love, because it is pleasing to him. Whenever your boots need mending—the boots you wear out in selling the gospel—come to me, and I shall seem to have a share in this holy mission."

—Bible Society Record.

The First Church, Kansas City, Mo., on Sept. 22 tendered the new pastor, Dr. D. J. Evans, and his wife a reception. The church building was crowded to its utmost capacity. A fine program was given, including talks by some leading pastors of other denominations and also by some brother Baptists. Dr. Evans brings unusual gifts to a great church.

It is reported in the daily papers that Dr. Robert Stuart McArthur has requested that his name be removed from the church calendar of the Calvary Church, New York City, as pastor emeritus, as he cannot approve of some of the methods being used by Dr. Straton which seem to him too sensational for the Christian pulpit.

Evangelist C. E. Hillis and wife, of Kahoka, Mo., recently concluded a two-weeks' meeting in the church at Lockbridge, Iowa. Accessions practically doubled the membership of the church. They are now in meetings at Round Prairie, Iowa.

Our people will be glad to know that Dr. J. H. Rushbrooke, Baptist Commissioner for Europe, is giving his very best attention to conditions in Russia. He has recently made a visit to Poland, and near the borders of Russia he may have secured valuable information regarding famine conditions and the progress of our own Baptist people during the last few years. Information will be forwarded to America by Dr. Rushbrooke whenever he has anything to report in addition to what is appearing in the secular papers.

The Polish Baptists in the vicinity of Jersey City, N. J., have already collected about 2,000 pounds of supplies, consisting of several large cases of overcoats, suits and shoes to be shipped to Poland, according to a report which Rev. M. Pawlowski, pastor of the Polish Mission, brought to the headquarters of the Foreign Mission Society last week. These supplies will be part of the shipment which the two foreign mission societies will send to Europe in November, in harmony with the relief plan, "Fill a Ship in Fellowship," as already announced in THE BAPTIST. Our Polish Baptists have set a fine example which will be followed by hundreds of Baptist churches in all parts of our large constituency.

Interesting things are always going on in the board room on the tenth floor of the Holland Building at headquarters in New York! This time it was an open meeting held on the afternoon of Friday, Sept. 30, and conducted by Miss Alice W. S. Brimson, Christian Americanization Executive Secretary (whose middle initials have been played reputed to stand for Woman's Society!) and a corps of her state secretaries. For the benefit of the new workers Miss Mildred Kaminski, secretary of the New Jersey District, spoke concerning the method of the skilled worker in approaching the local church and organizing her campaign. Among the other secretaries present were Miss Meta Stevens, of the Pittsburgh District; Miss Mary Comstock, secretary for New York City; Miss Marion Lathrop, of the New England District; Miss Ethel Bowker, secretary for New York State, and Miss Ida Cheeseborough, whose field is the Brooklyn District. In connection with the October drive for Christian Americanization volunteers the occasion was an opportune one.

The first meeting of the new union board of the Atlantic District was held on Sept. 21. The attendance was large, members coming from Washington, Delaware, New York, and western and central Pennsylvania. Plans for the year were outlined and enthusiastically endorsed, and those present felt that the work of the winter was successfully launched. A new note of comradeship was injected into the meeting by the delightful social hour at the home of the new president, Mrs. H. H. Skerrett, Germantown, Philadelphia, on the evening preceding the board meeting. The out-of-town members were entertained over night by the local members of the board.

The warehouse rented temporarily by the Foreign Mission Societies in order to receive the clothing and supplies for Europe is now ready. Baling machines have been installed and the work of assembling and packing the supplies will be under the direction of Mr. V. G. Krause, a missionary of the society in Bengal-Orissa, now at home on furlough. The address is 348 East 23rd Street, and shipments should be sent promptly during the month of October.

The First Church of Ann Arbor, Mich., has invited Rev. T. W. Young of the First Church, Columbia, Mo., to supply the pulpit the second and third Sundays of October. The church is now without a pastor. Dr. Young was pastor of this church for twelve years, 1894-1906. During this time Dr. Young inaugurated the specialized Baptist work for our Baptist students at state universities, which has since grown to large proportions in the Northern Baptist Convention. To Dr. Young belongs the credit of beginning it in 1902. Till then nothing had been attempted at any state university. In Ann Arbor a fine building was bought, equipped and put into successful operation, which is still maintained. This was the beginning of our Northern Baptist work for our Baptist students at state universities.

The one hundredth anniversary of George Williams, founder of the Y.M.C.A. movement, will be observed Oct. 11 at the Y.M.C.A. College, Chicago, by a celebration which will be both national and international in character. The trustees of the college have created a commemoration committee which is representative of the United States and Canada, and this committee is in charge of the program for Oct. 11, which will do honor to the memory of the man who started the Y.M.C.A. movement. Included on this committee are Secretary of Agriculture Henry C. Wallace, John Wanamaker of Philadelphia, Hon. Thomas R. Marshall of Indiana, President Walter Dill Scott of Northwestern University, Bishop McDowell of Washington, Hon. B. H. Budge of Montreal and scores of other business and professional men throughout the United States and Canada. The program of the celebration includes the dedication of the George Williams room at the college. This room is an exact reproduction of the room in London in which the association had its birth. The furnishing of the room has been made possible by the co-operation of Howard Williams, son of the founder, who is expected to come from England to assist in the celebration. Hundreds of delegates from nearly every state, country and city Y.M.C.A. in the United States are expected at this anniversary. John Wanamaker, a noted Philadelphia merchant, who knew Mr. Williams, is sending a representative to the celebration. England and Canada will be represented by delegates. The United States will be represented by Hon. Henry C. Wallace, Secretary of Agriculture, who will preside over the afternoon session on the 11th. The program, which will conclude with an anniversary dinner at the college on the night of the 11th, includes among others the following speakers: Dr. Karl Fries, general secretary of the world's committee of the Y.M.C.A.; Dr. John R. Mott, general secretary of the North American Y.M.C.A., and Dr. Howard Agnew Johnston, pres-

Where Hope's Values Lie

ADVICE to avoid becoming excessively other-worldly is both abundant and superfluous. There is little danger of such an error among present economic and sensual engrossments. The danger is rather that one may so far yield to the spirit of the world around him as to become too this-worldly, if not sensual and devilish. Most of us have to fight for an open door to a real living hope beyond the portals of life and time.

Paul's experience through his active life had enough bitterness and disillusionment in it to keep his faith keyed and his hope tuned to something better hereafter; and in the midst of such experience he stated his valuation of his personal hope in comparative terms: "If in this life only we have hope, we are of all men most miserable." These words are loaded with a sense of burden, indignity, persecution, affliction, sorrow, torment. For many an easy-going Christian in these days to quote them would seem almost sacrilegious. For many of us seem to attach little value to the prospect of a future life. We do not seem ready to "bank" upon it as a substantial security; neither are we the most miserable people in the world, by a considerable margin. The hope that some of us have in this life, apart from the resurrection hope makes us far from miserable.

Is the resurrection hope then useful only in case of Christians in desperate worldly circumstances; or has it a value realizable in the best worldly conditions and surpassing all worldly prospects and attainments? Everyone must answer this question for himself; but what his life is to be worth to himself and to others will depend as largely on how he answers it.

One does not need to be wise above what is written in order to find an answer that justifies his ultimate good sense and satisfies his heart. Paul's own idea of time, space and form as they would be discovered in the resurrection were hazy. He knew in part, saw through a mirror (that is he did not see through it at all), and did not know what the resurrection body was to be; but he saw far enough and with sufficient clearness to assure him that he would emerge from death in his full-blown personality in a union of added intimacy with the living Christ? And that was better than to see with the naked eye the loom of Canaan's hills.

When one comes to measure life's values by the scale of eternity, he may well say even in his most prosperous days that the loss of his heavenly hope would plunge him into the lowest depths of misery; for the loss of that is presently to lose all. Time is soon to be buried in eternity; and when the heritage of good one does possess finds its birth and death in time, what is it worth to a soul whose chief need lies in the eternal?

This saying of Paul is simply one of the arguments by which he sought to clinch the verity of the resurrection. He was arguing that the values of the present life are derived from the hope of the resurrection so that if it be absent they are like counterfeit bills, bogus checks on the bank of well-being.

Life's enrichment here lies in weaving into its hopes, purposes, activities, sorrows, enjoyments, associations and achievements or failures the certainty of an eternity in and with the risen Jesus.

"It Is the Hand of God!"

STEP by step these editorial sketches are tracing out those elements of doctrine which are usually emphasized as evangelical and Baptist, in an attempt to show that if they be viewed in a simple and unsophisticated manner, there is a broad ground of agreement concerning them on which practically all Baptists do actually stand together in belief.

Miracle is one of those topics of emphasis.

What is a miracle? One idea is that it is an immediate act of God without any intervening natural cause. A difficulty with this view is that since we do not know how any event that we call miraculous is brought about, we cannot tell whether nor how far God makes use of natural means in it. Only God knows that.

It may be supernatural in its cause, but here again we do not know what the range of natural causes is. How far God may make use of higher natural laws and forces than we have discovered, we do not know. Until we know that, in defining a miracle as a supernatural occurrence we may be speaking without knowledge.

It may be superhuman; but since there are many things superhuman that are not miracles at all (an earthquake, for instance), this characteristic gives us no real definition.

Perhaps the best way to describe it is to call it super-scientific. Nothing that we know of nature can explain it, and only a personal act of God can account for it.

In this last sense nearly all believers in God recognize a miraculous element running through both creation and redemption. They differ among themselves concerning the credibility and the miraculous character of particular events. Some believe and other discredit the miracles of Lourdes. They differ concerning the credibility or the miraculous character of some of the incidents in the Old and New Testaments. But in major things, such as the origin of life, the person of Christ, the saving efficiency of the gospel and the gift of eternal life, few fail to see the superhuman, the supernatural, the super-scientific, the act of God.

These things, however, lie in the field of present experience as fully as in the experience of any generation past. Everybody whose attention has been called to them is as close to them for purposes of knowing as anybody ever was. The case is different with regard to events in history which appear miraculous. Concerning such events, unless we assume the attitude of pure superstition on the one hand or of pure and willful ignorance on the other, some questions must be asked and answered. Did the event actually occur? This is a question of history to be answered from the available historical evidence? If it did actually occur, can science explain it as an event in the course of nature or of human agency? And here no mere naturalistic guess will serve. If a scientific explanation is attempted it must be scientifically done?

A last question is, Does the incident carry to the mind an expression of God? If so then we have a genuine miracle tested historically, scientifically and religiously.

Most people ask only the last question. Any incident past or present which is not obviously natural and which brings to them a vivid impression of the presence and power of God, is to them a miracle, a sign of God. And for all ordinary purposes the utility test is sufficient. For what is the purpose of any miracle except to give to man a vivid impression of the presence and power of God?

The Case for Visual Instruction

THIS Visual Instruction Number is, so far as we are aware, the first of the kind to be issued by any Baptist newspaper. The reason is clear, being found in the fact that only in recent days has there been placed large emphasis upon the place which projection machines of various sorts may play in secular and religious education. The purpose of the editors is not to prove anything; we have no case to make out for anybody. They have observed that the stereopticon is being used in larger measure than ever and that an increasing number of our churches are making use of moving picture machines. Our desire has been to present something of the experience of some of the pastors who have been working along these lines, together with consideration of many other matters which immediately arise when the subject is considered.

On a number of points there seems to be agreement. For instance, it is agreed among those writing that pictures may play an important part in missionary education in the churches. There seems also to be a common opinion that in some churches effort should be made on some week night to furnish the children and perhaps the adults of the community with healthful, helpful recreation by the use of moving pictures.

As to how churches can help to improve the character of the films shown in commercial houses, there is more or less question. An article full of common sense and helpful suggestion is included in this number.

One pastor urges that pictures should never be allowed to take the place of the spoken word, especially in services which are properly evangelistic in character. And the men who use them in such services agree with him, contending, however, that they have secured fruitful evangelistic results through a discreet use of pictures in connection with just such services. Here is a field of investigation in which we should like more data. We do not care so much for opinions as we do for the story of actual experience.

Unquestionably the moving picture is to have tremendous power in the future. If it has proper religious uses the church should be quick to see these. So wonderful an instrument should not be abandoned to the devil. We recommend to pastors the careful study of this number.

Finding Jobs for the Jobless

DIFFICULTIES of great magnitude confront the conference on unemployment, but it is meeting them in a statesmanlike way. One of the most encouraging features of its work thus far is the way it dares to face the actual facts of the situation. Without any theorizing about ultimate programs, it is proceeding to point out what can be done to meet the present emergency.

One fundamental principle indeed it has affirmed, namely: that the employment of the unemployed is no longer merely a problem of private business, but has become a definite community concern calling for organized community action. When that principle becomes clear to the people generally and they make up their minds to act upon it, one of the most critical of the problems of the present crisis will be in the way of solution.

For private employers the recommendations include "establishment of part time work by manufacturers, thus increasing the number of workers used in each plant; operation of factories and mills in the making of stock where possible; continuation of repair and similar work on a normal scale; doing of repair and alteration work by office building, hotel and home owners during the coming winter instead of in the spring as usually." This is all that the conference expects of private business, and it is difficult to see how more can reasonably be expected from this source.

But if dependence should be placed in this program alone no solution of the problem would be achieved. The utmost expectation would be a slight reduction in the volume of unemployment. Consequently the conference turns to the community as a whole for an adequate program, and offers suggestions on a large scale for community action. It proposes the creation of representative local emergency committees, the registration of the unemployed, publication of the number of unemployed; expansion of street, sewage, repair and building work by municipalities to the maximum volume; establishment of part-time work by municipalities; co-operation between state and local officials especially in the matter of road building; pushing Federal construction work; action by the present Congress on road-construction legislation, and requiring railroads to use funds granted to them by the government in increasing employment.

These are emergency measures, and if they are fully carried out they ought to absorb the present volume of unemployment.

The tug will come however when the attempt is made to carry them out. For at the very outset the state or the municipality that underakes any such work must face the contractor; and the revelations in New York and Chicago show what that means. It means that the grafter will be present and busy every minute. In the emergency perhaps nothing better can be done, but it is well to be advised of conditions beforehand, so that everything will be clearly understood.

There is a further possibility of trouble over wages and conditions of employment. To let a contract is one thing, to get men to work for the contractor is another. Suppose that the wages offered by him or the working conditions are such that men refuse to accept jobs under him; what then is to be done?

It is to be hoped, and seems probable, that these difficulties will not prevent such enlargement of opportunity for employment as will meet the existing emergency. In fact at the very time of writing these paragraphs, newspaper reports indicate that local community movements are beginning in the most encouraging manner. But the conference will have failed of its chief task unless it initiates a program for the permanent prevention of unemployment and unless it finds a way for the community as a whole to set aside both the contractor and the union and go directly to the job. President Roosevelt in the building of the Panama Canal set a colossal and everlasting example of the thing we are trying to say.

Federated Action for Better Pictures

IN connection with this Visual Instruction Number, THE BAPTIST endeavored to discover if any of our city federations of churches had by cooperation with moving picture managers brought about better and cleaner pictures. Inquiries of a number of such federations brought the reply that they talked about such action but that nothing had been done. The Federal Council of Churches turned over this part of our inquiry to the National Committee for Better Films and from the secretary of that organization we had this word: "In no instance do I remember any formal conferences between federated ministers and organized motion picture managers. There are many instances where individual ministers have joined with other civic workers in helpful conferences."

To us this is a rather surprising discovery, especially in view of the spontaneous rising against immoral and indecent films which has been so marked in recent months in almost every part of the country. Individual churches have a measure of influence in such matters, if they are wisely guided. Where there is a community church, responsibility would seem to rest upon it. But in larger cities, where churches are numbered by the dozen and perhaps by the hundreds, no large work can be done unless they act together. And the church federations would seem to be ready at hand for the task.

Admittedly the effort bristles with difficulties. It can never be accomplished by any body which assumes at the beginning an air of infallibility or which fails to recognize the conditions under which picture houses must do business. But difficulty has never been an excuse for inactivity in Christian things. If the church of Christ has any responsibility for its community, it must inevitably take into consideration the character of the pictures its people are seeing. It cannot view with indifference anything which is counteracting its teaching and influence. It must regard anything that will help clean thinking and living.

Good Pictures and Bad Actors

CAN pictures be good if the actors in them are bad? Are moving pictures in which there is nothing offending present to be allowed when it is well known that the players featured in them are living indecent and immoral lives? Can the subject presented be divorced from the people presenting it?

Revelations made in connection with the Roscoe Arbuckle case have brought such questions to the front. Whatever may be the decision in regard to his guilt or innocence, it is well demonstrated that some stars in this business are libertines and have been living lives with utter disregard to the standards which prevail among decent people. To allow such people to remain in public favor and to patronize the films in which they appear is to condone their offences.

That the public is not so easy as it was is evidenced by the haste with which Arbuckle films were withdrawn in so many cities and towns until a decision should be reached in his case. Evidently managers felt that if a limit had not been reached in what the public would endure, such a point was being approached. That is a wholesome lesson. It is also a profitable suggestion to Christian people. Let them cry out against men and women who are living a travesty of some of the most sacred relations of life and the time will not be long before their managers hear of it. Immorality can be made unprofitable the moment the church people decide that it shall be so.

It Is Humanity, Not Politics

MISGIVINGS, honest and perhaps not wholly groundless, have existed in the minds of a good many people, lest the Russian famine relief organization should yield to an obvious temptation to make its relief work an occasion for attempting to discredit the existing government in Russia. Considering the common opinion of the American people about the administration of Lenin and the soviet system as a whole, it is bound to be a delicate and difficult matter to keep entirely clear of political implications in feeding the starving Russians. There must be some of the American relief workers who are convinced that the present government, that is to say, Bolshevism, brought on the famine, and who draw from that conviction some hot inferences; and so believing, they will find it difficult to keep from expressing their opinion.

The pros and cons of that conviction need not be discussed here. But any attempt to couple with relief a political propaganda would degrade the relief, estrange the Russian people, and outrage every sense of humanity, decency and fair play in America.

The American people, perhaps all people, have trusted Mr. Herbert Hoover as men are rarely trusted in this world; but here was an unexampled situation. How could he meet it?

He has answered that question. In a letter to the American Friends' Service Committee of Sept. 10, he wrote: "The effort being made by all American organizations to mitigate this terrible situation is free of purpose in political, religious or racial contention. It is not the sentiment of charity to ask who or why."

Pictures Indispensable in Missionary Education

Only pictures can bring a vital realistic message to every church of all the missionary work of the denomination. Eye-gate impressions have an advantage over ear-gate impressions

By SUMNER R. VINTON

THE work of the denomination must be reported to the churches—reported accurately and fully. They pay the bills and are entitled to know where their money goes, how it is being spent and what it is accomplishing. The main thesis of this article is that pictures, especially in the form of slides, are indispensable in doing this. The work has grown to such dimensions that personal contact on the part of all the missionaries with every church is impracticable. To bring a personal report from each of one hundred mission stations to each of the 9000 Baptist churches of the north would call for 900,000 services! To do this in a year, each church would have to have a special missionary meeting twice a week for fifty weeks! Only pictures can bring a vitally realistic message of all the work to every church. Illustrated magazine articles and pamphlets are a necessity and of incalculable value, but they alone do not and cannot accomplish all that is needed. Talk of the inertia of matter; it is nothing to the inertia of mind! The thought of the millions of pages of unread missionary material of high quality makes the heart sick. The actual projection of good pictures on a screen accompanied by adequate description and appeal is the best method by which a pastor can hope to reach his entire membership. As a means of getting the missionary message to those not already interested, preparing the way for more intensive missionary education, it has no equal.

Some Axioms

Eye-gate impressions do have an advantage over ear-gate impressions. Never mind the relative percentages. It is a simple fact that we grasp the thing that is seen more quickly and more definitely and we remember it longer. Some one has put it this way: "What passes in one ear goes out of the other; there is nothing between to stop it. What goes in at the eyes can't get out. There's no back door to the skull." We do not like to pass judgment on an important report that we have merely heard read. We want to see and read it for ourselves. At the meetings of the Northern Baptist Convention, printed reports of all the important committees are distributed before they are presented, or the audience makes its protest with no uncertain sound. Surely, then, a method by which facts can be presented through both eye and ear at the same time has an advantage that cannot be denied.

Creating Interest

The picture method is the best method by which a pastor who has not travelled can bring to his people an interesting and accurate account of work in distant parts of either the home or foreign lands. The mental images that are formed while listening to an address are all of them drawn from the past experiences of the listeners. Talk of a missionary 'preaching' to the heathen and the average mental conception is in terms of an orderly church service with choir and organ and all the quiet decorum of the home church. But to 'preach' connotes something very different to the missionary, and again, it means one thing in the interior of the Congo field and something entirely different in our older Karen missions in Burma. Only actual pictures can make it possible for the varied conditions in our widely scattered missionary enterprises to become real to our constituency.

Pictures make it possible for people to form first-hand, personal convictions regarding needs and opportunities and achievements. This is not true of the spoken address. A pastor, without pictures, tells his people of idolatry. They are seeing and thinking entirely through the medium of his convictions as gathered from reading and contact with missionaries. If, however, good pictures illustrated the same address, idol worship would have reality and the people would draw their own conclusions as to its inadequacy as a religion. Moreover, the convictions, being their own, would last longer. The pastor who fails to give his people the advantage and opportunity of reaching their own conclusions is as unfair to his people as is the Roman Church in withholding the Bible.

The value of pictures in sustaining an interest once aroused must not be overlooked. Indeed, we must pay increasing attention to this. Our program is going to grow larger rather than smaller. Every interest and enthusiasm already aroused must be conserved and increased. An aggressive use of pictures is essential if this is to be accomplished. The experience of a pastor of a church with 120 resident members is to the point. Their quota was $15,000.00. They pledged $17,000.00. He used slides every other week all last winter. To quote his own words: "The people wanted to know where their money was going and what it was doing. I was surprised at the distances some of my people came regularly to see those pictures." It is not surprising that he was able to add: "We paid in more than we had pledged." Securing the payment of all the pledges made for the New World Movement is going to depend in large measure on sustaining and increasing the interest already aroused. Especially after enough time has passed for the money to reach the fields and be put to work, people are going to demand that we show them the results of their increased scale of giving. This cannot be done without an adequate supply of good pictures from all our fields.

The Providential Element

Consider the providential element in the case for pictures in missionary education. While geographic exploration and discovery and improved means of travel and communication were preparing the way for the wonderful expansion of missionary work in the latter part of the nineteenth century, a marked development of photographic processes and great improvement of methods of projection were making possible the adequate reporting of this larger program to the entire church. God synchronizes. There are no accidents with Him. Photography was invented about the time modern missions began with Carey. The real picture era, however, began when photography 'went dry', about 1870. That did away with the messiness of the old wet plate process, made field work possible and also increased the speed of photographic plates bringing in the era of the 'snap-shot'. Then came the invention of the celluloid film, still further increased speed of emulsions and an incredible advance in the manufacture of fast lenses. All of this started just as the great missionary societies began to get their bearings and began also to think in world terms after the upheaval of the Civil War and the division of so many of the denominations into northern and southern branches.

Improvements in Projection

In projection apparatus as well there has been within recent years a remarkable development. Thirty years ago this last summer a missionary student in Colgate Academy started out on a tour of country Baptist churches with pictures of Burma. The only lights available for lantern work at that time were the oil and oxy-hydrogen. The latter cost at least $3.00 a night, so this student used oil. Not long after, the arc light was adapted for stereopticon work but was for a long time very unsatisfactory. It is still a matter of more or less expert manipulation. Results are uncertain when a novice is at the lantern. With the advent of the gas-filled mazda lamps, the entire situation has changed. Easy of manipulation, economical and efficient, there is no excuse for any church to be without a reliable stereopticon to use for missionary education. If regular current is not available, a battery light will give good results. But mark this—the gas filled mazda came on the market just before the Methodist Centenary inaugurated the day of larger things in missionary work. The fact that more than a thousand Methodist churches installed lanterns was no inconsiderable factor in bringing success to the Centenary.

Four Factors in Successful Picture Work

There are four factors in the successful use of pictures: the slides, the projection apparatus, the mechanics of projection and description or lecture accompanying the slides. It would be folly to attempt to speak of the relative value of each factor. All four are essential. Effective picture work can come only as the result of the proper coordination of all four factors.

The original pictures from which slides are made must be good, photographically—that is, they must be sharp in focus, with good contrasts of light and shade, with plenty of detail in the shadows and correct in composition. A picture is like a mirror—if it calls attention to itself, something is wrong. In these days when millions of people—some claim twenty millions—attend the 'movies' every day and get a liberal education in the matter of fine photography, there is no excuse for a poorly focussed, under or over exposed picture being shown in a church! Nothing will more surely alienate our young people, making them feel that the church is 'on the cheap' and below standard. More than that, it is dishonoring Christ and his kingdom.

But good photographic quality is not enough. The pictures need to be rich in human interest and really illustrate the points that are to be made in the lecture. Such pictures do not 'happen.'

The slides should be thoroughly standardized as to their technical photographic quality as slides and also as to coloring. This quality should be worthy of the Kingdom.

Projection Apparatus

Three elements make up the apparatus involved: light, lenses and screen. The light should be of sufficient strength for the necessary size of picture. Making too large a picture with a given light is like attempting to spread paint out over too big an area. The results are not satisfactory. With acetylene or battery light nothing over seven feet diameter should be attempted. Up to ten feet diameter the four hundred watt is ideal. If a church is more than fifty feet deep, a larger picture is needed and a stronger light should be used.

The lenses should be of such a quality as to give a 'flat field', i.e., equally sharp focus over the entire picture. It is impossible to obtain this with the cheaper lenses furnished with some makes of lanterns.

The finest slides and equipment are of no value if the apparatus is not used right. The mechanics of projection must be perfect. The screen should be in a good position, with the bottom high enough from the floor so all can see the entire picture without constant craning of necks. It should be so placed that no heads will cast shadows on the picture. If possible to place it so that an audience can stand for an illustrated hymn without heads showing, so much the better, but this is not always possible. The screen should be stretched tight and kept clean.

The lantern should be placed at the right distance from the screen to fill it, never so far back that the picture is larger than the screen. The lantern should be on a table or stand steady enough to prevent the pictures doing a 'shimmy' on the screen.

Light and Focusing

The light should be properly centered so that there is even illumination of the entire picture without any shadows or colors. If moving the light sidewise, up or down or backwards and forward will not clear the shadows or colored ring, the condensing lenses are not the proper ones to be used with that particular objective or projecting lens. An expense of $1.50 or $2.00 for new condensers will remedy the defect.

The pictures should be well focussed. Slides should be cleaned, arranged in the box in exact order, guarded against meddlers who might disarrange them, and given to the operator with all slides in the same relative position in the box, with the thumb tag up where the operator can pick up each slide and put it into the lantern with the minimum loss of time or motion.

Lecturer, operator and sexton need to do teamwork. They need to have a clear-cut understanding as to the plan to be followed about putting the lights out and getting the first picture on the screen. A little forethought and care on this point will add greatly to the effectiveness of the pictures.

Signals

Some adequate signal for change of pictures should be used that will not in any way distract the attention of the audience. A 'clicker' is an abomination unto the Lord. An electric signal with telephone ear piece is the ideal. Where such is really impossible, the best unobtrusive signal is to put the hand into the edge of the picture. It makes no noise, if the same operator is used again and again he soon gets so that he will get the signal before the hand actually gets into the picture. If necessary, have someone sit by the operator just to watch the lecturer for the hand signal and then touch the operator for the change of picture. It can easily be done.

The fundamental principle involved in the whole matter is simply that the mechanics of projection shall be so perfect as to call no attention to itself. The time has come when in our picture work in churches we must have done with 'that-will-do-I-guess' and 'pretty-good' standards. For the honor of our Lord, we want to do the thing and do it right.

The Lecture

Don't read the lecture. A manuscript accompanies each set of slides. That is a necessity, but don't read it. Master the message of the set of slides. Become familiar with each slide so that the sight of it on the screen will at once suggest its message. The present form of illustrated manuscript was designed to make this both possible and easy. Make notes, if need be, on cards or slips of paper, so that statistics can be given accurately. Master especially every map, chart or world-slide. The lecture is not simply to entertain. It is to teach and the maps and charts are invaluable. If a man has really mastered each map or chart and knows its talking points, there is no need for any lagging of interest while they are being shown. But if the lecturer is not master of the charts and maps and familiar with the world-slides, they will kill any lecture.

In talking on the slides, avoid the repetition of set phrases like 'this is a—', 'here we see—' and that entire prolific family! Lead up to each picture, anticipating it a little where possible. Explain what needs to be explained about each picture as soon as it comes on the screen. The audience will be examining the new picture and wondering about it. If what does not explain itself in the picture is not quickly explained by the lecturer, the audience will not hear a third of what he is saying at that time. After natural curiosity has been satisfied, it is quite possible to add a few sentences not bearing directly on the picture but developing the thought or demonstrating the point at issue and preparing the way for the next slide.

Be ready to read a word-slide, or chart with wording, the moment it comes on the screen. The audience is movie-trained. They are used to reading the titles and will read what appears on the screen and will hear nothing of the lecturer's words until they have finished reading!

Pictures Only A Means To An End

Pictures are not a crutch for the unresourceful nor a shortcut for the lazy. They are not a substitute under which a man can camouflage a lack of real, vital, personal convictions regarding the missionary program of the denomination. They are never an end in themselves, but only a means—a powerful, effective means to a great end. Every church in the Northern Baptist Convention ought to have a good stereopticon. High grade pictures should be available to illustrate every phase of denominational activity for which the churches are asked to give. These pictures should be earnestly shown to the members of our churches by the pastors on an average of at least once a month. When that day comes the writer and the Board of Promotion will be out of a job. God speed the day!

Visual Instruction in Modern Education

FROM the days of Comenius and his Orbis Pictus, there has been an ever-increasing effort to bring into the schools pictures of things, either to illustrate texts and lectures or to be used as the basis of description, analysis or reasoning. For centuries such illustrations had to be confined to wood cuts and engravings. The invention of photography made possible a wider use of pictures. The stereoscope and projection lantern made photography far more effective and greatly enlarged its use. But photography, even with the help of the stereoscope and lantern, could not represent action. The representation of action, movements and processes is the particular field of the moving picture."

So Mr. P. P. Claxton, late Commissioner of Education of the United States, traces the modern evolution of the picture method of teaching. But as a matter of fact the Catholic Church had been using pictures and other devices for presenting object lessons in religious teaching a thousand years before Comenius. The method in some of its forms is as old as pedagogy. Teaching through the eye is one of the most primitive suggestions of method. Modern education has the advantage over that of the ancients, in the fact that the method is now more comprehensively and scientifically used.

The larger conception of visual instruction and its larger modern development are more adequately stated by one of the writers in the Cyclopedia of Education. He says:

Widening the Eye-Gate

"The last century of schoolroom practice has been marked by a great increase in the use of material objects, models, pictures, charts and other visual aids. As a product of science teaching and improved pedagogy, such aids have gained a wider use, included a wider range of types of material, and passed from exclusive use in the demonstrations of the teacher to personal use by the children themselves." He classifies such aids in four general types, namely: natural or artificial objects, pictorial substitutes, schematic representations and symbolic substitutes. Thus the use of graphs and diagrams, blackboard illustrations of all sorts, every variety of chemical and physical tests in the laboratory, the use of beans and sticks for counting in the kindergarten, pantomime and pageant, maps and clay modeling, drawings, paintings, statues, curios, landscape surveys, observation of customs of people and animals, visits to the menagerie, the collection of geological and botanical specimens, are all merely devices of visual instruction. All of them seek to introduce knowledge by the "eye gate of the soul." In fact it is estimated that 85 percent of all of the things we learn and of all the things we remember have come to us by the eye gate.

Such large significance has come to be recognized in this method of teaching that presidents and professors in a number of colleges and universities, together with teachers in schools of lower grade, have organized within the last two years the National Academy of Visual Instruction. Its second annual convention was held in Des Moines last July 5, with an attendance fairly representative of the most progressive educational thought. Its purpose, as stated in its constitution are "to establish and maintain an organization through which schools and other educational institutions, churches, parent-teacher associations, clubs, welfare groups and societies engaged in educational and semi-educational work, may unite in furthering better production of and a more systematic and intelligent use of visual aids, such as lanterns, slides, motion picture films, charts, art collections, exhibits and models; to prosecute research in visual instruction methods; to investigate sources of supply; to establish a clearing house of information; to devise methods of co-operation; to work out standards of method and practice, and to promote the knowledge and use of better films."

All roads lead to filmdom in these days. So common and so prominent has the moving picture come to be that no matter how broadly philosophical may be one's theory of visual instruction, he is apt to bring up just where the National Academy of Visual Instruction did in its constitutional definition of purpose, at the subject of "better films."

Pictures, Pictures, Everywhere

The extent to which the use of films prevails is not commonly realized. In addition to the vast number of places and people witnessing the exhibition of moving pictures for purposes of mere entertainment, whose statistics are not at hand and are constantly changing to larger volume, consider the growing use of films for purposes of direct instruction. Ten thousands public schools in this country already possess and use lanterns and slides. The Illinois National Guard has installed moving picture machines at several of its armories for the purpose of teaching the men in the various units the several subjects included in the educational system of the Guard, such as history, geography, economics, geology, astronomy, civics and hygiene. At least 6,400 schools of higher grade have installed and are using films in their regular courses, this estimate is based on a recent investigation of the Bureau of Education. One thousand of these schools have projection machines, of the standard size used in theatres. The various departments of agriculture in the states are using in demonstrations in farming and farm problems 43,000 feet of film. According to the Scientific American, the United States bureau of Economics has prepared films covering practically the whole range of economic facts and problems, in all the principal lands of the world, is now rotating 36,000,000 feet of film, and showing them to 2,000,000 people every month.

Mr. H. Addington Bruce, argues that since children are instinctively drawn to pictures, since the story the pictures tell is easily grasped by the child, and since the low critical development of children makes them especially receptive to visual suggestions, parents ought to be careful about the selection of pictures for their homes.

A Test Case

A most interesting test of the teaching value of moving pictures was recently made by Miss Agnes Carroll, in the Stevens School of Detroit, Michigan. The object of the experiment was to ascertain what advantage if any in the teaching of a given lesson to equal groups of students, either the oral method or the visual possessed over the other. Choice was made of 180 children as nearly as practicable of equal intellectuality and previous training. These children were divided into two equal groups and taught in separate rooms. The oral method was used with one group, by a skillful teacher; the visual method, also by a skillful teacher, was used with the other group. The subject to be taught was: "How We Hear."

The oral lesson occupied fifty-three minutes in its presentation without pictures. The visual method used the moving picture exclusively, without preparation, without explanation and without the help in interpreting the pictures. The film was run twice to make sure of definite impressions by repetition. The whole time of the picture lesson including both runs was thirteen minutes.

"Visuals" Beat "Orals"

At the close of the recitation hour the same set of questions was submitted for examination to both groups. The papers were mixed in one pile and one teacher examined all of them. The results showed that the "visual" group made an average of 64.76 percent, the "oral" group of 61.5 percent, a difference of more than 3 percent in favor of the visual group. A month later the same groups were again examined on the same questions and their respective averages were 63.9 for the "visual" group with 59.8 for the "oral" group. Thus, visual instruction showed a retention gain over that of the oral method of more than 4 percent.

Instruction is the point of interest in this paper. It must be clearly understood that the moving picture shows as usually presented seek mere amusement rather than instruction. Their educational influence, is valued by competent critics as low, and in many instances positively degrading. At the present time there is an outcry against the morally corrupt movie, precisely like but far more general than the complaint on the same grounds that used to be made against the regular theater. Churches, schools, welfare organizations and even the producers of films themselves, are demanding a higher type of visual entertainment and are studying together how to secure it.

A Cow Gazing at a Gate

Mr. Claxton again reminds us that "Mere gazing at objects and pictures—even the most interesting moving pictures—like a cow gazing at a new gate, will not result in education." His rustic figure of a cow gazing at a gate is more true than appears at first sight. Observe the usual audience coming away from a picture theater. What do their words and looks reveal? It is rare to find such a spectator at the close of a spectacle giving signs of any fresh intellectual stimulus and of a new and powerful moving of the moral will. That is, the common movie must be regarded as a non-educational or falsely educational device which presents a very serious problem of community regulation. The United States lags behind most foreign countries in taking up this problem in a practical way. For the consideration and solution of this problem the National Academy for Visual Instruction whose constitutional objects have already been stated, was formed.

Whether visual instruction as a recognized method is likely to continue and to be scientifically perfected is hardly open to two opinions. On this point the United States Government, in a recent report of the Bureau of Education has this to say:

"Within the next decade the moving picture will be the indispensable adjunct of every teacher and educational lecturer. On the public platform the cinematograph will evidently have its recognized place, and it may even invade the pulpit. As the attention and interest of educators are more and more drawn to its merits. The future usefulness of the educational cinematograph bids fair to surpass the prediction of its most sanguine advocates."

The cinematograph has already invaded the pulpit, and the churches are already studying how they may make the use of all proper methods of visual instruction contribute to the main purposes of the gospel of Jesus Christ.

From Men Who Have Tried Them

Jamestown Likes the Experiment

By GUY LIVINGSTON BROWN

We began the use of high grade religious pictures in connection with our evening service of worship during the early part of the present summer season. Our first experiment was with a portable machine, which was not satisfactory, and we were forced to install a modern, up-to-date Powers projector, with a first-class equipment to correspond. We now have expended a little more than two thousand dollars on our equipment, which is second to none in the city. We are beginning the fall work next Sunday evening when we shall show the great picture, "Johnny Ring and the Captain's Sword," recently released by the Temple Producing Company, of Philadelphia. This is, as you may know, the story of Dr. Conwell's conversion, and should present a powerful gospel message.

Thus far our experiment has been abundantly successful, more than meeting our expectations. Our church, which has a large auditorium, has been filled night after night during the summer season. I preach a short sermon, which is followed by the picture illustrating the truth presented. The meeting closes with a special invitation to "Christ and the Church," and an after meeting of ten minutes conducted in one of the side rooms, which room is always filled to overflowing with those who are persuaded to remain.

I am looking forward to splendid results this year through the use of the motion picture in presenting gospel truth. Jamestown, N. Y.

Learning Through the Eye

By CLARENCE W. KEMPER

If 82 per cent of our information comes through the eye, then let's use the eye more. There is no virtue in giving a monopoly to the preacher's method of pounding on the ear if we can get entrance for our information better through objectifying it.

Believing there is real service to be rendered here, our church has put three features into our program that have to do with this method of information.

First: Friday night of each week a movie program is to be provided. Parents and children are to enjoy this evening together under the auspices of the church. Certainly few will dispute the rather obvious fact that our families need this today. This program will also be related to the Sunday school as we shall distribute tickets for this program to those boys and girls who are in Sunday school the preceding Sunday. This makes every boy and girl a good publicity agent both for the school and community night program.

Second: On the last Sunday evening of each month we have one of the stereopticon lectures provided by our Board of Promotion. This has the advantage of a constant reminder of exactly what is being done in our missionary and educational enterprise at home and abroad. It is one of the most concrete ways of developing and sustaining interest in our New World Movement.

Third: Our Sunday evening services have three features. The first period of fifteen to twenty minutes is given over to one reel of a movie of high moral and religious tone. Following that we are bound together in a common spirit and sympathy by a period of song conducted by a leader who makes it a point to get us all into it. Having developed this spirit and setting, the pastor brings a message of a devotional character which presses the claims of Jesus Christ. In short it gives the best opportunity for sane and constructive evangelism.

It must be understood we do not put our reliance on these features but regard them as powerful auxiliaries to our work. It signifies not less confidence in the Holy Spirit but believes we should give the Spirit the largest scope in which to work.

We conceive it our business and responsibility to give our Master the best possible entrance through this channel into the consciousness of human souls.

Crowds See Pictures in Beloit

By INGRAM E. BILL

A three-fold consideration prompted the First Church of Beloit to adopt moving pictures in its regular program. It is not only legitimate but imperative that a universal interest be exploited for kingdom purposes. If it is true that the devil is in the picture machine it is time to drive the devil out and put the Christ in. Jesus spoke in parables which is simply a word picture. He did not draw his sermon even from the Bible but from the common walks of life. The motion picture in religious work is the application of Christ's method in modern conditions.

It has not been our purpose to compete with the commercial houses or even to supplement their service. Our work is distinctive. Because this was publicly stated we secured the hearty sympathy and cooperation of the picture houses in the city.

Pictures have not been used primarily to get the crowd. Our services were being supported by capacity congregations prior to the introduction of pictures. The thought has been to teach the largest possible number of people the best possible ideals of life by the best possible agency available.

Upon Sunday the regular evening service is cut to about forty-five minutes and this is followed by a high grade picture of from three to five reels. The sermon may or may not be related to the picture. In the afternoon the same picture is used at the children's church with worship, community singing and a Bible story. As many as five hundred children exclusively of primary and junior age will sometimes be in attendance.

Friday evening is announced as community night. High grade pictures of five and six reels are used with social and other features. The same program is given at four-thirty for school children.

Only pictures which teach a real religious lesson are used on Sunday. Upon Friday the selection is much wider and often a picture is used the purpose of which is simply entertainment of a clean character.

These services are attended every week by large groups of people from every section of the city the majority of whom are quite out the regular constituency of the church. It is probably true that more non-church members among the young people and adults are in regular attendance at the services of this church than in all the other churches of the city combined.

Our weekly programs cost between thirty-five and forty dollars. This is met by free will offering, exclusively, which average from forty-five to fifty dollars a week.

Pictures have not detracted from, but have cooperated in strengthening the spiritual results. Last spring witnessed the largest number of Easter accessions in years. Some of the adults that were baptized were attracted to the church in the first place by the picture program. The claim is not made that folks have been converted in seeing the pictures. But the interests of many have been stirred and the program as a whole has been simply one expression of a general condition of life and progress which will get results with or without pictures. ### Multiplies Audience by Four

By R. G. PIERSON

The successful use of motion pictures in the church, like the use of the organ, the stereopticon or any mechanical device, depends upon the Spirit and purpose of those who use them. They can be made a means of getting and entertaining a crowd or they can be made a mighty power for preaching the gospel to the crowd they attract. "The hour is here when the church must use any method that God honors. Enough testimony can be produced to satisfy the most skeptical that God honors modern appliances when set to His use." The church has been slow to adopt new methods in its work so it is not surprising that very few churches have used motion pictures.

The First Baptist Church of Janesville, Wis., installed a complete outfit a year ago and the editor of THE BAPTIST has asked us to tell of our experiences.

Purpose

Naturally our motive in the use of the pictures was to attract more people to the church and then our purpose was to preach Jesus Christ and him crucified. We also desire to be of service to the community, especially its children and young people, by giving good, wholesome pictures.

Plan

On Sunday afternoon, either at 4 or 6 o'clock, we have a children's hour at which time the whole service is planned for the children, with songs, prayer, scripture and sermon. On Sunday evening we have the adults and the service is made evangelistic. Music, prayer, scripture, short sermon are put in between the reels.

On Friday we have community night. Between reels we have community singing, solos, and recitations. Committees are appointed to arrange programs. This year we plan to have the children attend at four o'clock on Friday in order that we may be of service to a large number. Children fifteen and under are obliged to register and secure a ticket of admission. In this way we discover children for the Sunday school and new families for the church. However, we do not use it as a bait to get children from other schools.

We have never charged admission and never make a special appeal but simply announce that an offering will be taken. The offerings for twenty-seven Friday evenings and thirty-six Sunday evenings last year amounted to $1072. The films and incidental expenses cost $886 and the balance was used for equipment.

Programs

Our Sunday night programs are made up of travelogues, missionary and nature pictures, Biblical stories and drama. At first it was difficult to secure right kind of films but it is becoming less difficult due to the larger demand. The writer prefers a good clean drama with a spiritual lesson than any of the Bible films he has ever seen. We have shown such pictures as The Stream of Life, Pin Hole Parish, Chosen Prince, Lincoln pictures, Vicar of Wakefield, Manger to the Cross, Sunrise for the Mono, Men of Tomorrow, Turn of the Road, Passing of the Third Floor Back, Johnny Ring, The Highest Law.

The material for the Friday evening programs is almost unlimited. We have secured most of our films through the extension division of the University of Wisconsin and the New Era Film Co. of Chicago.

Projection and Equipment

It is important to secure a good equipment from the beginning. Our church has a Zenith machine, with stereopticon attachment, a Mirroroid screen, a booth (steel and asbestos), film case, and rewind machine. This equipment cost about $500.

It is necessary to have an operator who is capable and interested in this special work. We are fortunate to have a deacon E. W. Curlier, who is especially interested and who gives much time to the work without any charges.

It will be helpful to those in charge to subscribe for "The Moving Picture Age" (secure booklet—1001 Films) and "Educational Film Magazine" (secure Loose Leaf Film Service).

Problems

There are many problems connected with the use of pictures. Every one must learn from his own experience. Those just beginning the work will have the following problems to face: criticism of members for his own and other churches, equipment, operator, selection of films, use of time between reels, discipline, attitude of people attending, development of the worship spirit.

Results

I am constantly asked what have been the results. At the end of another year I can answer this question better. Our Sunday evening attendance has increased from 125 to 500. We are getting in touch with new people, many of whom have not been to a church service in years. We are gaining the confidence and good will of people disposed to criticize the church for a lack of interest in their welfare. We are getting new children for the Sunday school. We are giving poor people a place to go for wholesome entertainment (Friday evenings). We are reaching new people for church membership. Indirectly and slowly we are influencing the movie houses and they are showing better pictures. It gives the preacher inspiration for his Sunday night pulpit work.

The Educational Moving Picture

AT the present time the greatest changes are being made in plans for the distribution of educational moving pictures that have taken place in many years. These changes have come at a time when the theatrical moving picture is also undergoing great changes.

The difficulty with the educational film has been that there was none, and that what there was could not readily be secured. The organization of a new company, which is really the consolidation of several, means that distribution is to be possible. Churches, schools, and other agencies that have desired good films can get them. The religious film has also been almost impossible, the last summer has witnessed improvements in the distribution of this film and if promises that seem to be good, are realized it is to be easier to secure what is needed for a church or school. Prices will not be decreased, but service improved.

In World's Work for August is the following paragraph: "A picture is more easy to understand than a book and it is also more easy to remember; it takes less intelligence to grasp. For this reason the use of moving pictures in education is both good and bad. It is good so far as instruction can be given to a wider range of intelligence and more efficiently; and it is bad so far as it fails to develop imagination and, in fact, tends to throttle imagination by substituting the picture for it. For memory depends on imagination, and both pictures and imagination produce that, but they do not produce each other. Of these two forms of visualization, imagination is the more valuable because it carries on beyond the original concept, while a picture produces a visualization of itself and little more. But certainly the movies can teach where other methods have failed, and with much greater speed. This development is at hand. From being a training school of immorality and lawlessness, the 'movies' are to become a medium of valuable instruction."

GOING 1100 FEET PER SECOND

Not by an air plane, but by voice, for the scientist tell us that if we see it lightning and then take the elapsed time before we hear the thunder and multiply this number of seconds by 1100 we have the distance in feet of the lightning flash. Try it and see. The time which is necessary for sound to travel was found by two Dutch scientists Moll and Van Beck, who timed the interval between seeing the discharge of a cannon on a hill eleven miles away and hearing the boom.

Light travels over 186,000 miles per second. Sound is a snail in comparison. When we combine a good voice, with something good to say, we have an efficient means of imparting truth and making new ideas. If to this voice we will add a picture illustrating what we desire to say, the truth is imparted about in the ratio of the velocity of light to that of sound.

No better means of imparting truth and giving education has yet been devised than the combination of light and sound. The moving picture has the advantage of light and captions, but the stereopticon lecture is at present unsurpassed because it combines both in the most effective manner. This is illustrated in part by those individuals who having used the movie on the Mono Indians ask for a text to be read between reels. This has now been provided. Ask the Stereopticon Division, General Board of Promotion for particulars.

SEEING IS BELIEVING

The first experiment to attempt to discover whether or not light was instantaneous was a crude apparatus consisting of a light on one hill a covered light on another and a man at each light. Each man covered his light. The first man uncovered his and as soon as the second man saw it he uncovered his and the first man timed it to see how long it was after he uncovered his light before the second one was seen. The time was too short to measure.

Then one day in 1676 the Dutch astronomer Roemer discovered that the first satellite of Jupiter was eclipsed sixteen minutes sooner when the earth was on the side of her orbit nearest to Jupiter than it was when the earth was on the side of the orbit farthest from Jupiter. He decided that light was sixteen minutes crossing the orbit, or eight minutes coming from the sun, and, therefore light must have a velocity of about 186,000 miles per second.

This rate is practically instantaneous at short distances as the first experimenter found. Therefore when a picture is seen on a stereopticon screen, it makes its impression at once, and if the proper words as said, so that the ear is aided as well as the eye, the most scientific and actually the most impressive way of conveying truth is used. This explains the almost unbelievable success of the stereopticon lecture.

Ask the nearest stereopticon depository of the General Board of Promotion for reservations.

Constructive Community Programs for Young People and the Family

By W. D. MCGUIRE, JR.

Executive Secretary, National Board of Review of Moving Pictures

GOOD pictures exist. They are made by all the great producing companies and present beautiful, satisfying and entertaining drama. They may be rented anywhere in the United States for almost any purpose. They are one of the most attractive means for drawing crowds of people—children, boys and girls, parents and old people. They are a fine preventive of delinquency and the evils of over-exuberance. They cause leisure time to disappear on winged feet. Best of all, they are a most attractive form of entertainment for all members of the family. You have said: "There are tremendous possibilities in the motion picture." Why not stop scolding about pictures you don't like as much as others in your town, and emphasize the good? Why not spend one-tenth of the energy now given in attempts to censor your neighbors' motion picture morals and make fine entertainments a regular feature in your town? These paragraphs have something definite to suggest to you.

State Censorship Does Not Work

State censorship has been tried and has failed. It destroys rather than improves motion pictures. It affords no protection to childhood or youth. No amount of censorship can change a theme unsuitable for young people into one that is suitable. Censorship, therefore, fools people into a false security. To advocate censorship is an easy way to dodge one's own responsibility. An increasing number of thoughtful persons are supporting the Better Films Movement as a constructive program. In all cities and towns where it has been undertaken it has accomplished desirable results.

In most of the communities of the United States there is one motion picture theatre for every 5,000 to 10,000 of the population. People flock to these places in such numbers that it has been estimated in the larger cities that a number totaling the entire population visits the theatre every five to seven days.

In spite of its attractiveness to the people, the motion picture, either as entertainment or instruction, is an unused social asset of American life. While it reaches more of the population than any other amusement agency, social workers have allowed it to develop almost entirely along commercial lines. Yet here is a form of entertainment which attracts and which is understood.

It is useless to attempt to force a child to stay out of the attractive, alluring motion-picture show if we offer him no substitute. Common sense would seem to suggest that we discover the kinds of pictures children like and those which are adapted to the world of the child, and furnish them freely in every city and town. Already the National Board has prepared such lists and the pictures can be rented if there is sufficient energy and interest in local communities. This phase of children's recreation, however, should be considered as a part of the larger program for recreation.

Details of procedure in putting into operation the plan for exhibiting selected pictures in communities of all sizes in the country have been prepared by the National Committee. These details have stood the test and have brought results satisfactory both to the public and the theatre managers.

The National Board has discussed this subject thoroughly with motion picture theatre owners of America and has their assurance that they desire to cooperate wholeheartedly with community groups which will support finer pictures, family programs and entertainments for young people. In this democratic movement parents and public-minded citizens must do their share.

The movement for better films and for selected motion picture programs has aroused wide interest. It is endorsed by various organizations of national scope as well as by agencies which have in mind the interests of the public in certain states and cities. Among them are:

National Congress of Mothers and Parent-Teacher Associations; National Congress of Daughters of the American Revolution; Motion Picture Committee of the General Federation of Women's Clubs; Indiana Indorsers of Photoplays; State Parent-Teacher Associations in Connecticut, Pennsylvania, Colorado and Texas; California Committee for Better Films; Federation for Child Study, New York; Cleveland Cinema Club; Minneapolis Women's Co-operative Alliance; Cincinnati Council for Better Motion Pictures; Southern Co-operative League, Washington; Ladies' Home Journal for April; Woman's Home Companion; Lee F. Hamner, Director of Recreation, Russell Sage Foundation; H. S. Braucher, Secretary, Playground and Recreation Association of America; Henry F. Cope, D. D., General Secretary, Religious Education Association, Chicago; C. C. Marshall, D. D., Director of Motion Pictures, Centenary Conservation Committee, Methodist Episcopal Church.

How to Arrange a Community Program

In arranging a community program, the following suggestions drawn from the practical experience of many cities and towns, will be found helpful:

1. Gather all representatives of leading organizations to discuss "selected pictures" and unite on a simple program. By all means include the exhibitors.

Recognize that all kinds of people go to make up a town and that the exhibitor is a business man who wishes to furnish gripping, wholesome entertainment to the play-going public in large numbers and on every night. He may know the temper of the town better than you do.

Assume that he is a good citizen, a father, and desirous of contributing his share toward civic welfare. Perhaps he has ideals which need the encouragement of large attendance at the finer entertainments.

No neighborhood or community commercial entertainment can be modified or changed by individual complaints or by the stay-at-home critics or theorists. Representatives of organizations or leading individuals must unite and really speak for the neighborhood or town. Such speech should be tolerant, based on facts, and practical.

2. Discuss at the meeting the possibility of having "selected pictures" for family nights with the entire program up to standard, and also some plan for the young people.

A frank discussion is necessary in which all join, including the exhibitor. He should understand the desires of the home-loving people of the town, and the others should understand his business difficulties. Any plan agreed upon must be on a self-supporting basis. Family programs should be thoroughly wholesome from beginning to end. The young people's entertainments should come at times which will not interfere seriously with school work and yet will not break into periods which are most profitable to the exhibitor.

Use the Experience of Others

3. Obtain as a basis for discussion the lists and catalogs of pictures selected by the National Board of Review.

There are almost unsurmountable difficulties in the way of examining pictures before they are shown. You must rely on some careful and helpful agency to indicate large quantities of good pictures from which selections may be made. The lists of the National Board are drawn from the productions of all companies. The exhibitor usually has renting arrangements with only a few of these distributors of films. He must be given large leeway in his booking arrangements within the limits of the lists.

4. Arrange with the exhibitor on a co-operative and permanent basis for publicity, to be given the townspeople in advance, regarding these programs.

The exhibitor uses various methods to acquaint the public with the pictures which he has booked and is to show from week to week. Possibly additional methods can be worked out by the conference or by a sub-committee. Have an open mind toward the pictures run on other nights. The townspeople have a right to enjoy other wholesome kinds of plays "without let or hindrance." No exhibitor desires to run for any community pictures which are unwholesome, offensive or objectionable.

5. Work out some plan for bringing people to the theatre for the selected entertainments.

This venture will last only so long as the public supports it. The exhibitor is justified in demanding, through the representatives of the community, sustained support for selected entertainment for the family and for young people. The plan may involve extra expense for the rental of pictures required for these entertainments. The exhibitor is justified in dropping the plan when the public shows lack of interest as represented by admissions.

6. Carry on through various channels a well considered system of education of parents to develop a public sentiment both for finer family pictures and for selected pictures for young people.

The primary responsibility for attendance at motion picture entertainments rests upon the shoulders of the parents of the town. There must be supervision and there must be also a recognition of the fact that most film dramas are made for the entertainment of adults. Education in this matter is the work of the representatives of the homes.

When all is said, motion pictures are but one form of entertainment. Every community may well concentrate on many other forms of leisure time activity, involving out-door exercise, free play, ingenuity, and attractive home entertainments.

Personal Views of Visual Instruction.

From Some Pastors Who Have Not Systematically Used the Machine Pictures

EUCLED AVENUE, CLEVELAND

We practically have made very little use of them up to the present time.

It is not because we have had any great objections against them, but, we have not been compelled yet to face the necessity of using them.

Personally, I believe that the moving picture can be used successfully in a religious service, although the practice is always attended with some difficulty and considerable danger.

The moving picture has a place in the church's program for the healthy entertainments of the children, also in the working of its educational plans, and makes possible considerable variety in some part of the evening service. I feel it is a great mistake to substitute the moving picture, or anything else, for the spoken word. Nothing should be allowed as a substitute for the gospel message which is to be preached by God's own messenger. There is always the temptation present to follow the path of least resistance, and to try to get something which makes success a little easier and quicker.

I believe the use of the moving picture in religious services should be a limited one. That it should not be taken as a last resort in order to strengthen the weakness of the pulpit itself in preaching the inspiring Truth.

W. W. BUSTARD.

LAKE AVENUE, ROCHESTER, NEW YORK

We have not finally decided on the place that a moving picture program has in our work sufficiently to outline anything that would be very suggestive to other people. We have talked about buying a moving picture machine and may do so. We have used one quite often and have, of course, used the stereopticon regularly in the Bible School work and in other forms of work for a good many years. We have used the slides with illustrated hymns with good effect. Our experience, however, is not extensive enough to be of much help to anybody interested in the moving picture end of it.

A. W. BEAVEN.

FIRST CHURCH, SPOKANE

We have not in any systematic way used either the stereopticon or moving picture machine, although we have talked about it, and decided that it would be a good thing to buy a moving picture outfit in the interest of our young people.

Of course, I have used frequently the stereopticon, but only for the portraying of missionary activities.

I do not feel that I could make a valuable contribution for your edition, but I will await with a good deal of interest the number as it comes from the press. If at any other time you think I can be of service, please let me know.

If We Were There.

BY MRS. L. A. CRANDALL

We were talking over in family counsel our gift to "The Unseen Guest," who, during last holiday season, represented in our church the hungry, ragged children of central Europe. "Do you think we can really afford that much?" I asked, to which the good man replied, "At that we shall be better off than they are."

Machinery and Methods

Stereopticons, Projections, Lanterns, Dissolving Views, Screens, Condensing Systems, Amperes, Volts, Electric Currents, Storage Batteries, Lenses, all Sorts of Shop-Talk.

THE value of the visual presentation of any subject in order to make the most definite impression has long been recognized. Before the advent of the stereopticon, however, the use of pictures—the most common method of visual instruction—was limited because of the fact that but few people could examine an ordinary picture at one time, making impossible the discussion and examination of a picture by a large class.

The use of the stereopticon has become so widespread now that such an instrument is considered a necessity in every completely equipped church. Sunday school, school or lecture hall, to say nothing of lodge rooms and club houses. With the increased popularity of stereopticons, they have been improved until now models can be secured for almost any purpose.

During the remarkable growth of motion pictures in recent years "still" projection has more than held its own, largely because motion pictures, for educational purposes, have several inherent weaknesses that cannot be overcome. The first is the matter of expense, both initial and operating. Another is the impossibility of discussion while the observation is going on, while a third is the fact that because of the rapidity in the change of scene, the examination can be but superficial.

The development of stereopticons that will project opaque objects as well as lantern slides has greatly increased the number of purposes for which these instruments can be used. When lantern slides were necessary, the teacher or lecturer was at times rather limited in the choice of subjects, but today practically any object can be projected upon the screen. Maps, pages of books, which can be used without being removed from the book, photographs of all sorts, written sheets and even the actual specimens can be satisfactorily used. Some stereopticons are so made that part of an object, such as a map, can be projected if the entire subject is too large for the machine.

Dissolving view lanterns, by means of which the "racing" of the slide across the screen or a short interval of darkness between slides is entirely eliminated, have done much to increase the pleasure of viewing pictures on the screen. True dissolving effects can be produced only Could there be a more convincing answer, a more genuine spirit of sharing what we have?

Nothing is more difficult for a people living in comfort, than to visualize poverty and despair five thousand miles away, or to imagine the case turned about—we over there, suffering, they here, giving to us. This is one test of fellowship. The second test is given us in this splendid call to fill a ship for the needy of Europe.

After looking over the practical suggestions concerning what to send, no good Baptist, well seasoned in the habit of giving, will ask, "Shall I part with this top coat which I haven't worn for a year but may need sometime? or, "Shall I keep that baby quilt for sentiment's sake? but, "How much can I share?" For, give as we may, we shall still be better off than they are.

by the use of two lanterns fitted with a device by means of which the pictures are projected alternately by one lantern and then the other, or by stereopticons made especially for this purpose. Such models must have two independent condensing systems, illuminants and projecting lenses.

Very often true dissolving view stereopticons can be used for stereoscopic projection, which at times is valuable where perspective is an important feature. Two slides, made from stereoscopic negatives, are used, the two pictures being superimposed on the screen.

Improvements in the forms of illuminants, notably the low voltage Mazda lamps and the acetylene burner, have made stereopticons available even where there is no regular electric current. The 6-volt lamp, which is interchangeable with the regular illuminant, can be used with a storage battery, while a 30-volt, 14-ampere Mazda is used on low voltage circuits generated by individual power plants, such as are now being installed in many schools and churches where the regular current is not available. The acetylene burner is, of course, used with a tank of compressed gas.

To meet the needs of religious lectures, extension workers, county agricultural agents and traveling lecturers of every sort, stereopticons have been made that are really portable. Since there are illuminants that do not require regular electric current, as already stated, a stereopticon can now be taken and used wherever one is needed.

Many departments of science in schools and colleges use accessories for micro projection with their lanterns, making possible the projection of microscopical specimens upon the screen and greatly facilitating their study.

Although it is possible, of course, to claim too much for visual instruction, it cannot be denied that wherever verbal explanation is not sufficient, visual presentation can be used to advantage. Thus, the stereopticon is now being used successfully in the study of history, literature, painting, architecture, and the like, while in the church, lectures, Sunday-school lessons and sermons are constantly being illustrated by pictures projected upon a screen.

Conference and Jubilee of Swedish Baptists

By C. GEO. ERICSON

THE forty-second annual Swedish Baptist General Conference, assembled in the cities of St. Paul and Minneapolis, Minn., Sept. 13-18, with a delegation of 449 and registered visitors of 361—total 810—marks the largest conference in the history of the Swedish Baptists of America. The sessions were held in the Bethel Academy auditorium and the evening services in the grandstand of the State Fair Ground, near the Bethel Institute campus.

Most of Tuesday, Sept. 13, was given over to the Ministerial Association. The opening session of the conference was on Tuesday evening with Dr. G. Arvid Gordh of New York as moderator. After exchange of greetings and the election of the nominating committee, Dean C. G. Lagergren, preached the annual sermon.

Home missions had Wednesday night, the session being presided over by Dr. Olof Hedeén, missionary secretary of the conference. A number of missionaries on the home field related their experiences. More old-fashioned pioneer work on the home field was urged.

Foreign missions had an excellent interpreter in Dr. Wm. Axling of Japan on Thursday night. A dozen ex-missionaries and outgoing missionaries were on the platform. Dr. Frank Peterson presided. Dr. Axling, in his address, explained clearly and forcefully the political and the religious conditions in Japan. Speaking about Japan's relations to America, he quoted Premier Hara as saying in a personal interview shortly before Dr. Axling left Japan, "America was Japan's first friend, America is Japan's strongest friend, America is Japan's longest friend, and it is unthinkable to me that this friendship shall be broken." Concerning the religious situation in Japan Dr. Axling said, "Japan has gained her western civilization, but she has lost her soul. We must give Japan what she lacks."

Golden Jubilee

Friday, Sept. 16, was the greatest day in the history of the conference. It was a day of thanksgiving, a day of jubilee, because of the fiftieth anniversary of the Bethel Theological Seminary. Dean C. G. Lagergren delivered an address at the morning gathering, his subject being, "The Value of Education in the Promotion of Christianity in the World," showing how the religion of Christ has advanced, largely because of educated ministers and missionaries.

The B. D. degree was conferred on the following alumni of the seminary: Rev. J. O. Backlund, Chicago; Prof. Adolph Olson, St. Paul; Rev. C. Ivar Peterson, Kiron, Iowa; Missionary J. E. Tanquist, Assam; Prof. E. A. Einstrom, St. Paul; Rev. John Selander, Grove City, Minn.; and in absentia, to Missionary David Gustafson, China, and Principal Instanes Osborne, Deer Creek, Minn.

Dr. Lagergren gave, during the day, a brief history of the seminary. The seminary was founded by the late Dr. John Alexis Edgren (an oil painting of Dr. Edgren, painted by Rev. Raynold Lund of Chicago, was presented this day to the Bethel Institute) in Chicago, 1871, and it was originally a Scandinavian institution. While in Chicago it was connected with the University of Chicago. Out of this small beginning (one student and one professor the first quarter, 1871) have grown three independent institutions: Bethel Theological Seminary, the Danish Theological Seminary at Des Moines, Iowa, and the Norwegian Theological Seminary in Chicago. Five hundred and six students have registered during the fifty years and 247 have graduated. Dr. C. G. Lagergren succeeded Dr. Edgren as dean thirty-two years ago.

Addresses of congratulations were given by Dr. E. R. Pope, who rejoiced in the happy relation between the American Baptists and the Baptists of the Swedish tongue, and by Mr. Gillette, member of the Board of Education of the Northern Baptist Convention. From the Bethel Seminary of Stockholm, Sweden, was presented a beautifully-bound address of greeting, Colonel K. O. Broady, Stockholm, had sent congratulations through Rev. O. J. Engstrand of Brooklyn, who recently returned from a visit in Europe. The following seminaries were also represented: The Danish Baptist Theological Seminary by Dean N. Lawdahl, the Norwegian Baptist Theological Seminary by Dean H. Gunderson and the Divinity School of the University of Chicago by Dr. J. A. Briggs.

Dean Lagergren Resigns

Dr. C. G. Lagergren, for thirty-two years dean of the Bethel Theological Seminary, tendered his resignation as dean and professor of the seminary to take effect Sept. 30, 1922. The resignation was accepted. Dr. Lagergren was appointed Professor Emeritus of the faculty of the seminary and granted an annual pension of $1000. To succeed Dr. Lagergren was elected Rev. G. Arvid Gordh, of the First Swedish Church of New York. To succeed the late Dr.

Emanuel Schmidt was elected Dr. K. J. Karlson of Worcester, Mass. Dr. Gordh was, during the years 1905-'11, principal of the academic department of the Bethel Institute.

Important Decisions

Among the more important decisions we wish to mention the establishment of a Missionary Training School as a department of the Bethel Institute. It was also decided to erect a girls' dormitory as soon as possible. It was further decided to raise an endowment fund of $250,000 for the Bethel Institute.

A resolution was drawn to urge all Swedish Baptists who are not yet citizens of the United States to take out their papers on citizenship at first opportunity. A telegram was sent to the President of the United States commending his steps in the disarmament movement.

A Source of Inspiration

The conference was a source of great inspiration. Never before have so many Swedish Baptists been summoned at one place. More than 2000 attended the evening sessions. The addresses by C. G. Lagergren, John A. Swanson, William Axling, O. J. Engstrand, Frank Peterson, J. E. Klingberg, and G. A. Gustafson were messages for both the intellect and the heart. The devotional hour, the warm prayers, the excellent choral music—all served to edify and inspire to greater work for God.

The new moderator of the conference is Dean C. G. Lagergren and vice moderator, Dr. J. G. Oster of Kansas City, Mo. Next year's conference will be held in Englewood, Chicago. An invitation from Portland, Ore., to meet there in 1925 in connection with the World's Fair, was accepted.

Welcome and Farewell

THE presence of two great visiting Baptists, one just returning to America, and the other about to leave it to resume his work in his own land, Rev. Oliva Brouillette of France, and Dr. John Frey of Latvia, made an unforgettable occasion of the recent dinner of the board members of the Foreign Mission Society, held at the Hotel Le Marquis on the evening of Sept. 20. Mr. Mornay Williams as presiding official called upon Dr. James H. Franklin to act as toastmaster. Mr. Brouillette, as the first speaker of the evening, told of the wonderful social service work that is being done in France under the leadership of Northern Baptists, and of how the applied Christianity of their practical service is leading men and women to Christ. There are 870 children of widowed mothers in France, he said, whom Northern Baptists are directly aiding through small monthly cash allowances, paid to them through local Baptist ministers, and hundreds of girls and women who are benefitting through the Baptist work established in industrial centers.

Dr. Frey, who will have charge of the distribution of the supplies of the fellowship ship in Latvia, in a touching farewell speech, said that he looks upon the Northern Baptists of the United States as a tower of strength behind him, as he goes back to resume his work in that stricken land. He contrasted the dinner with recent meals in Latvia, under the Bolshevik rule—meals composed of dry bread eaten in darkness that the worm holes in the bread might not be seen. "I am going back to Latvia to save souls, more precious than life alone," he said. "If God has saved me from exile in Siberia, and from starvation in prison, it is fitting that I give my days to Him."

Miss Helen Hudson of the Woman's American Baptist Foreign Mission Society, who is in charge of the White Cross collections for European relief was the third speaker of the evening. "We are going to 'fill a ship in fellowship' and then we will do the next thing that comes along," said Miss Hudson.

At the evening session of the Board were present: Rev. W. S. Abernathy, Rev. D. H. Clare, H. M. Fillebrown, Prof. Henry B. Robins, O. R. Judd, T. Otto, C. H. But-ton, Rev. C. W. Chamberlin, S. W. Cummings, Mornay Williams, J. H. Franklin, G. R. Huntington, W. P. Lippard, Miss Mabelle Rae McVeigh, E. B. Cross, Miss Helen Hudson, Rev. John A. Frey, Rev. Oliver Brouillette, Rev. H. B. Grose.

The Gate Stands Open!

By MILTON FORT BALDWIN
Editor Moving Picture Age

WERE I the pastor of a small church whose musical equipment consisted of only a piano, and were we considering the advisability of installing a pipe organ, my approval or disapproval would be contingent upon two factors: the prevalent opinion throughout the general ministry as to the advantages of an organ, and the particular opinions based upon the experiences of ministers, within and without the bounds of my denomination, who had made use of pipe organs in their respective churches for considerable periods of time. The motion picture is as valid a candidate for religious employment as was at one time the now generally accepted organ, but the film's potentialities for good are immeasurably greater; and my most reasonable procedure is to place before you the exact words of some of your contemporaries who are qualified by experience to relate to you what significance the motion picture has held for their religious activities.

"The moving picture came," says Rev. D. T. Robertson, Fargo, North Dakota, "and has had a wonderful development. The church stood aloof and relegated the invention to the playhouse—allowed one of the greatest inventions of the age to fall into 'unholy' hands—and then condemned the invention as of the devil, and all who used it as agents of his satanic majesty. Now, educators in all branches, seeing the advantages of the moving picture, are using it generally, with the result that religious educators are seeing their mistake and are turning to the motion-picture machine and the producing companies as allies in presenting truth and applying the principles of Jesus.

"We have used a moving-picture projector for many months. Almost six hundred members have been added to the church in less than three years. The last year, the year the projector was installed, has brought more than three hundred of the total.

"Many men and women who in youth had drifted from our church were attracted by the movies. They came to see the picture—just the bait on the hook—but each night a twenty-minute gospel message preceded the picture. First these people came on Sabbath evenings, but shortly afterward they were to be seen regularly at the morning services, and later they came seeking fellowship with God and his people. They would have remained away from the church, according to their own testimony, had not the pictures brought them out."

Rev. William N. Whear, Lanesboro, Iowa, presents a satisfying concrete illustration of the extension of a church's influence by means of the motion picture. "With reluctance, and only after much urging, we decided to adopt the plan of charging an admission (for weekday performances). A few people who 'sponged' have ceased to attend our exhibitions, but the financial situation has assumed a more pleasing complexion. Not only are we able to pay for our programs; we have funds for other needy purposes as well.

"One of these good causes is the upkeep of our church community house, known as the Lanesboro Community Building. This structure is the outgrowth of the church's attempt to serve Lanesboro every day in the week. Some time ago we began to create sentiment in favor of a building and equipment for community programs, and today there stands alongside the church a community house valued at $20,000 and completely outfitted for the people's enjoyment."

Rev. Bertram Willoughby knows that moving pictures are one of the finest assistants available. "After more than a year of Sunday-night-sermon-and-film services the results may be tabulated as follows:

"A permanent evening congregation taxing the capacity of the house has been built up; many who had not been to church for years are now regular attendants.

"A decided improvement in the moral and spiritual character of many of the attendants is noticed. Scores of people have said, 'These services make me a better person.'"

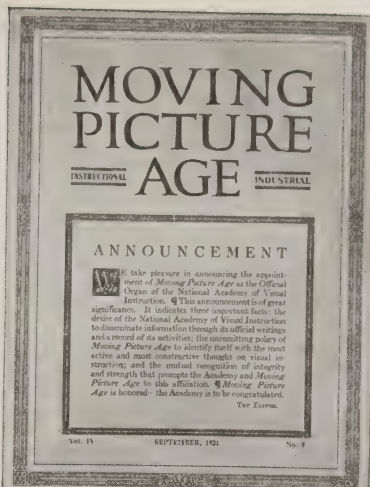

And then read the whole-souled declaration of Rev. Roy L. Smith, Minneapolis, as to the fruit yielded by the moving-picture activities of his church:

"We are frequently questioned regarding the results obtained from our picture programs. Perhaps the best answer is the action of our official board, which has constituted the committee in charge of this work a permanent organization of the church, and has made it answerable to the governing body of the church on the same basis as the Sunday school. This means that we are definitely committed to the work.

"The most apparent results are to be met in the Sunday school, but results are to be found in every department of our work. Our Sunday school has increased 100 per cent since the introduction of pictures, both in enrollment and attendance. Our statistical secretary tells us that 40 per cent of this gain is directly traceable to the pictures. Teachers of classes testify, without exception, to the wholesome effect upon the enrollment in their classes.

"From the standpoint of publicity the community programs have been the best single medium we have had. Our church has come to be known all over our section of Minneapolis, both among children and adults. Everywhere our visitors go they are greeted with the words, 'Yes, our children go to your Community Night!' Hundreds of adults have come with the children, and we have had a chance to interest them on other features of our work. The fact that children do not have to come to our Sunday school has given an impression that we are unselfishly working for the interests of the community.

"The result is a friendliness toward us that is of incalculable value. Our regular services of worship have shared largely in the general advantage, and Sunday congregations have been greatly increased.

They are approaching this big problem with serious minds, looking for the best available help.

One writes us:

"Of course, in a new field of endeavor, such as the practical application of moving pictures in church work, we will make some mistakes, but it is not at all necessary for workers to experiment blindly—something they can ill afford to do anyway—when MOVING PICTURE AGE studies these common problems and points the way so graciously."

And another:

"That one idea was the means of increasing our Sunday-night attendance over 200 per cent." And he read it in MOVING PICTURE AGE!

Our Research department is a source of great help to those responsible for the policies and programs of moving pictures in churches.

And there is the book "1001 Films," which lists and classifies over 1,700 films suitable for non-theatrical exhibitions. This compilation can be secured only with MOVING PICTURE AGE, and is FREE.

"A few minor incidents will tend to show the interest that people take in our work. A physician was attracted by the pictures and came to the church office to inform himself. As a result of the conference he offered to go, on call of the pastor, to any family in need of medical care without charge. He said, 'I believe in working through a church that has this ideal for its community.' Two lawyers stand ready to care for any cases needing legal aid. The superintendents of the three public schools in our parish have given active co-operation in arranging our programs and also in the actual religious work of our organization because of their interest in our community plan."

And so it goes, throughout a list of pastors so long I could tire you out with the quotations. These are the men who have uncovered and are eagerly utilizing a new stimulus to American spirituality; these are the inevitable leaders in religious circles, for they are the men whose churches are a living, moving force in the everyday existence of the people, rather than symbols of a Sabbath Day obligation that has no daily application.

Are you content to accept the responsibility for using the same old methods and achieving the same mediocre results, are you alert to take advantage of this proved supplement and make your church a pattern for the other church that is failing to render the good service of which it is capable? The gate stands open!

Early in July a Fundamentalist group in the First Church, Topeka, Kans., at a prayer-meeting with thirty-four members present, offered a motion to adopt the confession of faith set forth by the pre-convention conference at Des Moines, and the motion carried by a vote of twenty-two to eleven. On Wednesday evening, Sept. 28, with approximately 200 members of the church present, a motion was overwhelmingly carried to rescind the former action on this matter, and by a like vote a motion was carried declaring that the only creed of faith that the First Church recognizes is the Bible, and instructed the delegates from the church to the state convention meeting Oct. 11 to act in accordance with this declaration. We are informed that the vote was at least twenty to one. On the last motion there were no negative votes expressed, those not favoring such action remaining seated on the call for the negative vote. The reason for this reversal, according to information given out, is that the church disapproves of what it believes to be the purpose of the Fundamentalist movement in Kansas. The Topeka church entertains the state convention this year.

The International Baptist Seminary, 64 South Munn Ave., East Orange, N. J., will be dedicated Oct. 12, at 2:30 p. m., followed by an informal reception. The students will furnish music, and the chief address will be delivered by Rev. Charles L. White. Dean John F. Vichert of Colgate Theological Seminary will offer the dedicatory prayer. Other men of the denomination and of the community will have part in the program. A cordial invitation is extended to the denomination to attend this important event in the history of Baptist Home Mission work. The school opened Monday, Oct. 3 with six departments, namely, Russian, Polish, Hungarian, Roumanian, Czechoslovak and Italian. Between sixty and seventy students will be in attendance during the school year.

The board of trustees and faculty most cordially invite members of our Baptist churches and friends to visit the institution from time to time as they have opportunity.—Frank L. Anderson, President.

Rev. Paul N. Cayer has resigned as pastor of the South Church, New Bedford, Mass., in order that he may become pastor of the Feller Institute Church, near the city of Montreal, Canada. The church is largely made up of students from the Feller Institute, which is a co-educational institution of about 300 students serving as a fitting school for McGill University. Courses are bilingual. Mr. Cayer has been in New Bedford for nine years, before which he was two years in Fowlerville, Mich., and two years in Detroit, and fifteen years in Waterville, Maine. He enjoys the respect both of the French and of the English-speaking churches. New England loses a fine man in his going.

Adult Class Campaign in Baptist Churches

A campaign to double attendance in Baptist Bible classes throughout the Northern Baptist Convention is being launched in the various states by directors of religious education, in harmony with the plan worked out by the adult department of the American Baptist Publication Society.

The campaign is to extend over ten Sundays, Oct. 2 to Dec. 4, and is being promoted as the adult's rightful share in the Sunday-school rally season.

Men and women are taking definite part in Sunday-school classes today as they never have before. In our churches of the Northern Baptist Convention we have half a million men and women in Sunday schools, but the purpose of this campaign is to increase that number to one million.

Pastors and Sunday-school leaders are realizing the immense value of the well-organized and active adult classes. Such classes must not exist for themselves, and where they do exist for the school and the church they are rendering great service. The opportunities in the adult class for promoting church attendance, evangelism, home religion, community service, civic righteousness, and world-wide missions are unlimited.

The specific directions for the local class found in the promoting leaflet are worth repeating here.

1. Call together a few who are interested and study the plan. Discuss the opportunity it offers to your class. Pray about it. Consecrate yourself to the work. Form an "Inner Circle" of those whose plans are under way to repeat it in May.

2. Study your field. Make a complete list of those who should be reached for membership in your class—your neighbors, members of your church or congregation, parents of your Sunday-school boys and girls, etc.

3. Divide the active membership of your class into groups of three to six each, with a responsible energetic leader of each group—some one who will work systematically and not give up. Nothing short of consecrated, persistent hard work will succeed in this campaign.

4. Divide the list of prospective members equally among the groups and ask each group to increase its number to ten as soon as possible, and to secure their regular attendance to Dec. 4.

5. Form the groups into two sides for a contest; the side securing the larger number of membership and having the larger average attendance to Dec. 4 will be the winning side. A dinner should be served by the losing side, or some other recognition be given to the victors.

6. Where there are two or more adult classes in the school, organize them into an adult department and work together not only for the individual classes, but for the promotion of the entire Sunday school enterprise.

7. Make definite plans for the future. Put energy and good fellowship into the life and work of the class so that it will go right on growing in membership and usefulness. The purpose of this campaign is not merely to have large numbers in attendance for a few weeks, but to enlist them permanently in Bible study and in definite Christian experience and activities.

8. Plan for an evangelistic campaign from Jan. 1 to Easter, 1922.

This campaign will be a great success in each school where the pastor and superintendent enlist every adult worker to carry it forward.

PAY UP

By DR. JOHN Y. AITCHISON
General Director of the General Board of Promotion

The payment which Northern Baptists made on the New World Movement pledges last year, namely, 92.6% of the amount due to May 1, 1921, stands out as one of the great achievements of our history.

The attention of our churches is called to the fact that payment of New World Movement funds has not been kept up to the former high standards during the last few months. A careful study of the whole situation reveals the fact that there are perfectly normal reasons for the decrease in receipts.

The work of our Missionary Societies and Boards is so urgent that we earnestly appeal to all our constituency to make prompt payment on pledges and to church treasurers to remit all funds on hand without delay. In these times of financial stringency we ought to put first things first.

We appeal now to all friends to help save our organizations from the necessity of borrowing large sums of money with which to carry on their work.

International Uniform Lesson for October 23

PAUL'S LAST JOURNEY TO JERUSALEM
Acts, 20:1-21:17. Golden Text: Galatians, 6:9

By JOHN A. EARL

The Lesson Text

The lesson text covers all of chapter 20 and almost half of chapter 21. Its chief interest lies in the fact that it is the record of the close of Paul's active career as a missionary. From the time he arrived in Jerusalem until his martyrdom he was a prisoner. However, what the Acts of the Apostles lost in continuing the account of Paul's active missionary work, the New Testament gains in the wealth of experience revealed in the prison epistles.

The Lesson Taught

Life's departures, disclosures, decisions are well illustrated in the record of Paul's last journey to Jerusalem.

Departures

When Paul seemed to be at the height of his career and at the full measure of his efficiency, he was suddenly switched from the main line and apparently side-tracked. To all appearances his later years were an anti-climax. When he turned aside from his great work to make the last journey to Jerusalem all his friends seemed to feel that Paul was taking the wrong course, and they did their best to dissuade him from carrying out his plan to go to Jerusalem. One is reminded of Paul's great Master setting his face to go up to Jerusalem in the face of certain death, and rebuking those who showed concern for his physical safety. But Paul is only one of the long line of men and women who throughout the years of human history put duty before safety, conviction above convenience, and God's will for them above life itself. Such were Joseph, Elijah, Jeremiah, Daniel, Esther, Mary the mother of Jesus, Paul and all the apostles, John Huss, Martin Luther, David Livingstone, John G. Paton, and a host of others whose names are in the book of life. When Joshua addressed the Israelites at the Jordan, he said: "Ye have not passed this way heretofore." Their fathers had crossed the Red Sea, but they being a new generation had not passed this way before. History repeats itself, but the new departure however old is always new to those who experience it for the first time. So Paul was passing through a new experience for him although the experience was as old as Abraham or Noah or the generations preceding them.

Disclosures

It is a good time to review our lives when called upon to make a new departure. Shaken from our accustomed moorings by some experience which suddenly comes to us, we naturally turn to introspection. This is exactly what Paul did. He passed by Ephesus in order that he might avoid the general congregation, and stopping at Melitus he sent for the leaders of the church at Ephesus. To them he told the story of his life as preacher, teacher, pastor and missionary. He gave them the benefit of his own musings upon his career. Running through his address to the elders of the church at Ephesus is a strain of fine self-respect because the speaker was conscious of having done his worthy work well. Three things marked his ministry to the people. It was a loving ministry. He himself was the thirteenth chapter of First Corinthians incarnate. The man who wrote that chapter lived it. Paul loved men. It was love that impelled him to sacrifice himself for the salvation of men. He could feel deeply. His sympathy was genuine. "Who is weak and I am not weak?" He refers to his tears more than once. A tearless ministry is not in the true succession. The ministry of Paul was a loyal ministry. With noble pride he tells them that he is pure from the blood of all men, for he has not shunned to declare the whole counsel of God. He was no trimmer. If Peter, the chief apostle, needed to be rebuked for his sacramentarian tendencies, Paul rebuked him; and he never hesitated to lash the Judaizers in defence of spiritual freedom in Christ. Christ was the sum and center of Paul's theology. He himself cultivated the mind of Christ, and so far as a human being can do it, he reincarnated Christ.

Decisions

Paul could decide and abide by his decision. These are two very necessary qualifications in leadership. When Paul decided for Christ it was radical and final. His decision to proceed to Jerusalem in spite of the tears and protests of his friends is only a part of his original decision made on the way to Damascus or rather after he reached Damascus. The conversion of Paul never had to be repeated. It was so thorough that there never was even the hint of faltering in the way of the Lord. He seems to have stood alone in his decision to make the trip to Jerusalem. The Christians all along the route did not agree with Paul on what they regarded as a fatal step for him. Paul agreed with them as to the danger he was facing; but that did not shake his determination to see it through. Like his Master his hour had come, and he would no longer attempt to escape it. There are times when prudence is impertinence.

It is little credit to us when we decide promptly in favor of a course that looks toward personal gain; but when we decide just as promptly and joyfully to pursue a course that will certainly bring personal danger and loss, there is genuine quality in such a decision. That is the heroic in Christianity.

Three Abreast

By SELDON L. ROBERTS

During the last days of September, three interesting training classes completed their work and received their final certificates and diplomas.

At Moulton Memorial Church, Newburgh, N. Y., Pastor A. E. Finn who a number of years ago "put training work at the head of my list of pastoral duties," presented seventeen certificates to seventeen pupils who had taken "Preparation for Teaching" with much supplemental material and work furnished by the pastor-teacher, spending two years on the course. This class consisted largely of present teachers. The director of teacher training made the commencement address. One member of this class came into the fellowship of the church, and has become a valued worker with boys through the help he found in the training class.

At Newark, N. J., a fine group of high school young people with others who have been taught by Mrs. Joseph Riker at the regular Sunday-school hour at the Peddie Memorial Church had a class supper and graduating exercise planned by themselves before scattering for college and other duties. One member of the class is planning to enter the ministry, another has gone to Newton Center, Mass., to prepare for missionary work, two are teaching in the Chinese Sunday school of their Church, and others in various departments. This class did most of the third year work in individual study each in his own chosen department of church-school work, under the direction of the teacher, Mrs. Riker.

One of our most interesting classes has been that of the Grace Church, Camden, N. J., taught by the pastor, Rev. William P. Haug. This class began work in Feb., 1918, and though they are a busy group in a great industrial city, of the fifteen students who did regular work in the class, eleven and the teacher have finished the entire course of study and received diplomas. Much credit for this accomplishment is due the pastor-teacher. This class did its third year's work as a class, taking "Story Telling," "Graded Social Service" and "The Church School," the last as a double unit. Practically all are regularly working in the church school. At the class banquet on Tuesday evening, Sept. 27, the proprietor of the cafe where the meal was served whispered to the director of teacher training who with the pastor sat at the head table, "The long table stands where the old bar used to stand when this building was a saloon, and isn't this a different crowd from that which used to assemble here."

The Chimney Corner

A Day

BY EMILY DICKINSON

I'll tell you how the sun rose
A ribbon at a time;
The steeples swam in amethyst,
The news like squirrels ran.

The hills untied their bonnets,
The bobolinks begun.
Then I said softly to myself,
"That must have been the sun!"

But how he set I know not,
There seemed a purple stile
Which little yellow boys and girls
Were climbing all the while,

Till, when they reached the other side,
A dominie in gray
Put gently up the evening bars
And led the flock away.

She Had an Extra Day in Her Week

THEY wanted Mrs. Hathaway to be the chairman. And the committee sat around her parlor with the beguiling expressions on their faces which committees invariably assume to sugar-coat the pill.

But Mrs. Hathaway had a head on her shoulders and foresaw a few snags: "Of course, this is a real compliment, she smiled, 'but surely you know what a busy housekeeper and mother I am, so where would I ever get the time to do all the necessary telephoning in connection with this work? And the necessary reading to be intelligently informed? Or the necessary time to prepare for the parlor meetings in almost every neighborhood in town? And I won't want to have sets of gripping little speeches at my tongue's end! Why, ladies, it seems to me I would need an extra day in my week if I were to assume such a responsibility!"

The Pleasant Gray Lady leaned nearer: "Esther Hathaway, if you could be convinced that God would give you that extra day for the asking would you take the chairmanship?"

"I'm perfectly safe in saying yes to that!" agreed Mrs. Hathaway, "and I hope you dear people understand how heart and soul interested I am! I'm not refusing this new task because of any unbelief in the New World Movement. All along I've thought it a disgrace to our denomination and to our type of Christianity that our church people have been so apathetic. I suppose if our pastor and our trustees could only have agreed about letting money take wings outside the meeting-house-doors — however, I think your plan is the most human vital idea: for all of us to push it vigorously into every home—with story-telling groups for the children in every neighborhood Friday after school; with tea-parties to talk it up among the girls; parlor meetings for the grown-ups, with sewing bees for the women besides, where they can be inoculated unbeknownst! Why it's the dearest, most revolutionary yet sanest plan I ever heard. I'm challenged myself already! But—my days are so full!"

"There's that extra day if you'd only claim it," insisted the Pleasant Gray Lady.

Esther Hathaway's expression changed into a startled question-mark: "Surely you're joking?"

"Not a bit of it! I've long had an extra day all my own every week for several years now."

"Tell me!" "Tell us!" cried the others.

"Oh, its simple. I began by longing for an extra day which nobody else could know anything about, so they wouldn't encroach on me! Finally it dawned on me to weave such a day in dead secrecy out of the seven days I already had. You see like everybody else I did a good bit of frittering in waking moments, so I didn't crave a 24-hour day but a 12-hour one to work in. Right away I named it Secretday and kept in my Bible a schedule of my precious own hours. For instance, on Sundays we all used to sleep until nine o'clock, so I got an hour right there by getting up an hour earlier. Just the quietest most sacred hour of all, that was! Then Sunday afternoons, I could always get at least two more extra hours, time I used to spend turning over the Sunday paper idly or simply napping. Every night I took from nine to ten o'clock, and Tuesdays it was a three-hour stretch, since my husband dined at his club and spent the evening, and the children had choir practice. This is the way it ran, my precious Secretday:

Sunday, 3 hours: 8 a. m.—9 a. m.; 4 p. m.—6 p. m.

Monday, 1 hour: 9 p. m.—10 p. m.

Tuesday, 3 hours: 7 p. m.—10 p. m.

Wednesday, 1 hour: 9 p. m.—10 p. m.

Thursday, 1 hour: 9 p. m.—10 p. m.

Friday, 2 hours: 7 a. m.—8 a. m.; 9 p. m.—10 p. m.

Saturday, 1 hour: 9 p. m.—10 p. m.

"I took it in dead earnest, as a sacred trust. I read all the things I knew I'd always been needing to read, I did all the delightful friendly things I'd always been longing to do, I planned all the difficult executive work I felt the Lord needed my hand to do! I think to Him it was indeed 'the acceptable day of the Lord'; for you remember how Zechariah said not to 'despise the day of small things!' I didn't! And I grew to love all those rare verses about 'a day in thy courts is better than a thousand,' also 'day unto day uttereth speech'—it did you see! I proved the proverb about 'length of days in her right hand, riches and honor in her left hand.' I also proved 'not to boast thyself of tomorrow, for thou knowest not what a day may bring forth.' You can see why there grew to be a new meaning for me in the creation verse: 'the morning and the evening were the same day,' and 'a thousand years are as one day, and one day as a thousand years.' Indeed the only reason I've ever been able to squeeze into so much in my life is because of my Secretday, so now I've confessed something no one else knows, hoping you will see that the extra day is there for anybody to claim who claims it honestly and sincerely."

Esther Hathaway's face was a study! "Tell me," she said, "am I really the one to do this beautiful stirring up in our church? To make people see the New World Movement as God Himself sees it?"

"Esther dear," they cried, "you're the one above all others, just because you

A WIND came out of the sea
And said, "O mists, make room for me!"

It hailed the ships, and cried, "Sail on Ye mariners, the night is gone."

And hurried landward far away,
Crying, "Awake! it is the day."

It said unto the forest, "Shout!
Hang all your leafy banners out!"

It touched the wood-bird's folded wing,
And said, "O bird, awake and sing."

And o'er the farms, "O chanticleer,
Your clarion blow; the day is near."

It whispered to the fields of corn,
"Bow down, and hail the coming morn."

It shouted through the belfry-tower,
"Awake, O bell! proclaim the hour."

It crossed the churchyard with a sigh,
And said, "Not yet! in quiet lie."

instinctively phrase it that way!"

"And I think," said the Pleasant Gray Lady, "that with your exquisite social instincts and your keen sense of humor and your deep love of missions, you're like Esther of old, 'who knows but that thou hast been brought to the kingdom for such a day as this?'"

"Then," she smiled, her face alight with a new radiance, "I'm going to claim my extra day and do this fascinating work. I begin to see I may get even more benefit out of it than anyone else! It isn't that I have the talents, but I have the will to work!"

And she did!

What the Days of the Week Mean

DID you know that the days of the week as we say them are really the old heathen names given by our old English ancestors away back in the centuries ago, when they worshipped gods? For instance:

Monday comes from the two old English words Monan-daeg, which means moon-day.

Tuesday means Tiwes-daeg—Tiw being their god of war.

Wednesday means Wodnes-daeg,—Woden (or Odin) being the head of all their gods, supposed to have been always attended by two ravens and two wolves.

Thursday is Thures-daeg; Thor was the god of thunder (Odin's son, he was) supposed to have a long red beard and to carry a heavy hammer, which he threw away from him to make thunder with—and—oh! marvelous fact—it was always supposed to return to his hand all by itself.

Friday means Frige-daeg; Frig was Odin's wife.

Saturday is Saeturn-daeg; Saturn was the Latin god of agriculture.

Sunday means Sunnan-daeg, day of the sun, which those old ancestors of ours worshipped, you know. So surely when you say the names you will be glad to say a prayer of thankfulness that somebody was brave enough to come over to those heathen great-great-great-great-etc-grandparents of ours to tell them of God our Father, and of the Lord Jesus.

Sunday Week

By HAZEL NORTHPOT

SUNDAY morn I used to think
All the world sat in their pews;
Now I know of lots of folks,
Find some other day to use:

Monday all the Grecians pray,
Tuesday is the Persian day,
Wednesday the Assyrians find
Beneficial to their mind;
Thursday the Egyptian folk

Ancient dieties invoke.
Turks on Friday say their creed,
Jews on Saturday've agreed.

Sunday morn, I used to think,
All the world sat in their pews;
Now I know of lots of folks,
Find some other day to use!

A Blue Wash Day

By PEGGY

OUR Wash Lady is fat. She is very fat. She is fat in all the places where we are thin. And she has more chins than anybody you ever saw before. But she is very nice and we love her. Only she does not look at our clothes as we do.

To us, clothes are things to play in and go to school in; and the only clothes we think about especially are the ruffy ones we go to parties in—At least, that Timothy and I go to parties in. Bill's clothes are way beyond the ruffle age, of course.

Now I always thought of ruffles as being the pleasantest kind of affairs, to make a plain little girl like me look fluttery and dressy. But ruffles to our Wash Lady are the biggest nuisance in the world—Almost as big a nuisance as grass stains on the seats of Timothy's trousers.

Timothy and the Wash Lady are great chums. Every Monday he hurries down to see her. We really think it is because he likes to watch her chins. But of course she is quite a clever talker, too, and Timothy likes to listen to long stories that never seem to end, about people called Bridget and Michael and Terry over in a place called Ireland. We think it's very amusing to hear Timothy dashing down the cellar steps calling out: "I'm coming, Mrs. O'Gwady dear!"

"Sure ye are," she calls through the steam and the bubbling of the boiler, "and the 'top of the marnin' to ye, too. But I'll be after sayin' that the green on them pants be most turrible, this week, me boy! Sure I'll not be spakin' to ye agin if ever ye git 'em so green again! What's a poor old woman like me to do, rubbin' and rubbin' that awful greenness?"

You should hear Timothy sigh: "I think our gwass must come off greener than anybody's grass. Mrs. O'Gwady. I sit down on it so duceadfully light and easy."

"Bless your sweet buttons!" says Mrs. O'Grady, every one of her chins woobling separately. She's awfully nice! Perhaps people with whole sets of chins are sure to be jolly. Even over grass stains and ruffles. But we never knew what pesky things they were until the time when she couldn't come. In August, too, of course, when there are always more ruffles and naturally more grass, too.

Mrs. O'Grady fell down somebody's dark cellar stairs (we had a railing put on for her to hold fast on our stairs, I'm thankful to say!) and twisted her ankle by sitting down on it. We suppose her ankle has many "chins" of fat as her neck; anyhow sitting down so heavily sprained things, and she couldn't come to us. Moreover poor mother could not find a laundress anywhere—east, west, north, south, not a left-over wash lady in town!

Agony was on her vacation, so one day, when father was in his office downtown and we were away on an all-day picnic, dear mother quietly went down to the laundry and did the work herself. We thought she looked very white and tired when we got home, and there were little pearl blisters on her hands, but we never knew where the tiredness and the blisters came from till we found all our clean clothes dangling on the closet hooks! We told on Mother then, and Father put his foot down hard! He really did! "Weren't there steam laundries?" he cried. Was his wife to be the slave of a tub? We thought it sounded beautifully.

In fact, we were so impressed that the following week, when Mother and Father went off in the Ford to spend the day waking up a dear little country church (to be interested in our New World Movement!), we waited till the Ford had turned the corner, then we scooted to the laundry. We had already chosen our parts: Bill was to be Knight-of-the-Difficult-Wash-Tubs, I was to be Countess-of-the-Ironing Board, and little Timothy was to be Page-of-the-Twinkling-Clothes-Pins, by which titles you will see that Bill was to wash, Timothy to hang things on the line, while I ironed.

Bill's cheeks soon grew to look like gorgeous peonies in a flower show, so very red! And oh! but he was cross.

"Tim," he shouted, "if you ever make another grass stain like this I'll spank you. Honest injun! It isn't fair to get 'em so green every week."

Timothy's dear blue eyes looked like saucers: "Mrs. O'Gwady is a nice Wash Lady," he said, "she wobbles her chins at me, but I like it, and she never spansks."

Poor little Page-of-the-Twinkling-Clothes-Pins! He had his hands full hanging things up on the line. But ah me. I couldn't spare much love on him; for there's only one electric iron, and there I stood on blistered feet trying to make things straight and smooth or ruffy and puckered, as the case might be. But I burned my fingers, and tore the ruffles, and made brown marks just where they showed the most. I made curley-kew corners in the places that needed to be smoothest. Nothing looked right, so I cried. And Timothy was so tired he cried, too. But Bill did not cry. He stood there with his hands in his pockets and said fiercely: "I tell you what, we'll never even notice Mrs. O'Grady's chins when

Topic for October 23.

WHAT WE KNOW ABOUT GOD

Ps. 139:1-12

"O Jehovah, thou has searched me, and known me."

A thorough study of the topic would involve the closest research from the first verse of the Genesis to the last verse of the Revelation, also a study of the course of human events from the earliest days till now. This is manifestly impossible. For the practical, everyday Christian we have assumed to know some things about God and his dealings with us.

1. His creative power. "In the beginning God created the heavens and the earth." We turn to the first chapter of John's Gospel and we read: "In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word (Logos) was God. The same was in the beginning with God. All things were made through him." Thus, the Word becomes the agent in creation.

2. His care. Turn to the Twenty-third Psalm and read: "The Lord is my shepherd. I shall not want. He maketh me to lie down in green pastures; he leadeth me beside the still waters." Those of us who are Christians know from our own experiences of the providential care of our great heavenly Father. In times of sorrow, trouble, temptation; he is our help. The Psalmist spoke for the modern Christian: "Surely goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life and I shall dwell in the house of the Lord forever."

3. His abiding love. Have some one read from the fifty-third of Isaiah about the Suffering Servant. A second reading should be Matthew 1:18-25, telling of the birth of Jesus. Then, John 3:16 "For God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son that whosoever believeth on him should not perish but have everlasting life." It is such love as this that breaks the heart of humanity and turns wandering faltering feet in the pathway of God.

4. He is our Father. And, we are his children. Only Christians know the real meaning of this sacred relationship. Only Christians know what it means when we say: "Our Father who art in heaven, hallowed by thy name." Only the Christian knows the meaning of the forgiveness in answer to his prayer, "Forgive us our transgressions as we forgive those who transgress against us."

5. He is our present and future hope. Through Christ God has been reconciling the world to himself. Through this reconciliation there have come to us the real joys of life and the beauties of the whole earth. What a richness of experience this relationship with God brings to the individual! He is our present hope. But, more than that. Some day we are going to lay our armor aside. The things that hinder will be no more. It will be said of us as of Enoch of old: "He was not, for God took him." That which we have seen "through a mirror darkly," will be understandable and we shall come into a blessed realization of the meaning of immortality. Surely we know that he is our future hope!

B. Y. P. U. Notes.

CARLETON W. ATWATER
President, B. Y. P. U. of America

The year 1920-1921, with Gilbert Bigger of Greene Avenue church as president, is a big year in the history of the Young People's Baptist Union of Brooklyn and Long Island. We realize how far short we have come of what we might have attained, but we know that whatever we have accomplished has been because of His directing hand.

Evangelism

Some 70 meetings have been conducted under the auspices of the Visitation, Educational, Missionary, Queen-Nassau-Suffolk and Meetings committees. Our young people have been preaching the unsearchable riches of Christ on the street corners of our city and in the churches, and have not been ashamed of the gospel.

District Organization

In order to bring the local societies into closer contact with one another the Union is divided into ten districts, with a superintendent in charge of each, whose duty it is to stimulate interest in the activities of the Union, and promote Christian fellowship.

Fresh Air Home

The Fresh Air budget for the year was $6000, which amount was raised by voluntary subscription, and the concert. Because of the generosity of members and their friends we were enabled to entertain about 400 children and mothers at our Fresh Air Home in Commack, L. I. These were taken direct from the local churches to the Home, and back again, in large sight-seeing busses. Our faithful matron, Miss Cardwell, and her assistant, Miss Benham, devoted their entire vacation to the care of the kiddies, whose ten-day stay in God's wonderful country was altogether too short for them. The Y. M. C. A. hut, purchased some time ago, was dedicated at the conference held May 28-30, and has been used as a boys' dormitory.

Conferences

Two subsequent conferences have been held at the Home; July 2-4, and September 3-5. These were so successful that such conferences will probably be part of the Union's regular summer work. Installation of officers took place at the last one, at which time the new president, Fred B. Ashplant of Strong Place church, and the committee chairmen presented their plans for the year to the delegates present. A "Double-Up" campaign, to increase the active membership of local societies, will be a special feature this year. At the conclusion of this campaign there will be a month of evangelistic services, with experienced evangelistic workers in charge. The keynote of the B. Y. P. U. for 1921-1922 is "Evangelism."

Cincinnati Convention

Brooklyn Union was well represented at the Convention at Cincinnati, with 16 delegates, who came home so enthused with the spirit of the convention that they all plan, d. v., to go to St. Paul next year, and, incidentally, to Yellowstone Park.

The last hour of the L. I. B. A. meeting on Wednesday, October 19th, will be Young People's Hour.

Rallies

Dr. James Asa White, General Secretary of the B. Y. P. U. of America, spoke at the first quarterly meeting at Greene Avenue Church. This is the first time we have had the pleasure of hearing Dr. White at a Union meeting, and were indeed glad of the opportunity. The Annual Rally will be held on October 6th at the Baptist Temple, when Dr. A. Ray Petty, of Judson Memorial church, will speak to us on "The Mind of Jesus." The usual "Quiet Hour" will be held from 7:30 to 8:30 A. M. the same day, also at the Temple.

World Convention

A WORLD CONVENTION for Washington, D. C., is now being planned by headquarters of B. Y. P. U. of America. The suggestion is meeting with heartiest approval on every hand. Washington young people say they will entertain in great style.

Suggested Plans for Armistice Day Observance in Local Churches

It is suggested that an hour before the opening moment of the limitation of armament conference in Washington, the bells in every Northern Baptist church throughout the country shall ring, reminding every Baptist that Armistice Day has come, and calling all to prayer for the success of the great issues of the conference.

It is further suggested that, since children ought to have a special part in Armistice Day, there being none whom war touches more closely, and none in whom it is more necessary to implant a desire for lasting peace, Sunday-school children of Northern Baptist churches all through the country should gather on that day for a children's parade for peace. This should lead through the main section of each town or city to the Baptist church where peace services are being held. The children should carry banners, proclaiming that "The children of the world want peace," and should sing songs of peace as they march through the streets, to the churches and take the places reserved for them there.

It is also suggested that Armistice Day services in Baptist churches everywhere may be very simple—just the peace prayer, which makes them part of a chain of Baptists praying all over the world at that moment for that thing, a few words on the duty of peace, and peace songs by the whole congregation. State leaders everywhere are asked to develop any supplementary plans they may desire, and all Northern Baptists are asked to cooperate heartily with other denominations in this common end of all Christians.

Philadelphia Letter.

BY ARTHUR C. BALDWIN

It is a great thing to be a Baptist in these days. We are not like the ship bound nowhere under full sail. Civilization has struck its tents and is on the march and so are we. Our record since the great drive has been one of achievement. The message brought back from Des Moines in this regard has been an inspiration to our churches. The Des Moines Confession has served to remind us how fundamentally we are united in creed as well as in accomplishment.

Is not this a time for us to emphasize these unities? In the Convention we differed at times as earnest people may, but when we sang, "Take the name of Jesus with you," and the great hall rang with the volume of sound we felt the common experience that made us one. There is one Lord, one scripture, one life and purpose for all.

Here in the City of Brotherly Love we are trying to work on this basis. I know of no divisive tendencies but often see cooperation of every element. At the first meeting of the Baptist Union, Secretary Steward gave a report of the summer activities among the foreign born that told us no one had been asleep on the job. We were very glad to hear that the Union has been able to make a loan to the New Berean Church of $10,000 so that with the funds in hand they are now at work on a building costing $55,000. That is the way for Baptists to help one another. This church situated in a new section of West Philadelphia has been working under extraordinary handi-

Foreign Students Visit Board

A dramatic little incident that suddenly converted a row of figures into flesh and blood folks took place at the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society Board meeting on September 20, when Dr. James H. Franklin announced unexpected visitors. Then the door opened, and there filed into the Board room, bringing with them a satisfying sense of the vivid results of Northern Baptist work, nine stu-who will spend a year at Newton before returning to his own land, where he would be sixtieth in a direct line of Buddhist priests, had he not been converted to Christianity.

Monsieur Henri Vincent of France, son of a Baptist minister there, now a senior in Rochester Theological Seminary, who will enter upon Christian service in his own land, where his two brothers lost dents from foreign lands, here through Northern Baptist efforts, to fit themselves for higher work for Christ. The nine, as introduced in turn by Dr. Earle B. Cross were:

John Novotny, just arrived from Czecho-slovakia, son of a well-known Baptist pastor, and brother of Mrs. Frances Kolator, who will take a course of study at Newton Theological Institution, Newton Centre, Mass.

Rev. Shozo Hashimoto of Japan, a graduate of the Japan Baptist Theological Seminary, and a pastor in his own land for two years, who will also enter Newton.

Mr. Thomas G. Ling of China, who comes with the approval of the South China Mission, to specialize in industrial chemistry at Brown University.

Rev. Keigaku Kakuda of Japan, who has already an M. A. from Princeton, and their lives in the world war, one of whom was a graduate of Rochester.

Charles Osolin of Latvia, a recent graduate of Newton Theological Institution, who sails soon for England, where he will spend a year at Regents Park College, before returning to engage in religious work in Latvia.

H. A. Aguling, of the Philippine Islands, who has served as pastor while a student in Colgate University and the Northern Baptist Theological Seminary.

Monsieur George Rousseau of France, who will enter Newton Theological Institution this fall, after two years of study at William Jewell College.

Chen Shen Ling of South China, who will continue his study in the University of Pennsylvania this fall, after having received the degree of M. A. at Columbia Teachers' College in June.

caps. I wish there was space for me to tell what Pastor George Lockett and people have had to face. It strengthens my faith in the perseverance of the saints. We are wise now in investing there.

The Logan Church under the pastorate of Francis Everett Steever, late chaplain of the 309th infantry, 78th division, has just laid the corner stone of a fine new structure. The address was made by Dr. Carter Helm Jones and the stone laid by Russell H. Conwell D.D. This church began work in its first building in 1894. Now it is building its third—a pretty good record for less than thirty years. Best of all in the present enterprise, the entire amount of its cost has been pledged. Rev. Frank Divine, past master in the art of the financial appeal, helped them to do this.

The Baptist Institute, John Milnor Wilbur D.D. President, has opened its work with a full school, sixty-three being registered. In order to accommodate the many who wanted to come, it was necessary to purchase an additional house which is now the home of the resident faculty. The entering class numbers twenty-five. The convocation address was given by Rev. George D. Allison of Wilmington. Everything looks bright for the Institute save the financial worry. It will not be an easy time financially unless the New World Movement is able to pay them the designated amount.

The ministers' conference, Rev. George E. Nicholls, president, has begun operations. Rev. A. E. Harris opened the program with a clear discriminating estimate of England's condition based on his observations there this summer. The fact that the daily papers found cause for sensational reports and comments was due to their idea of the public appetite rather than to what he said. Brother Harris knows his England through many years' experience.

The state and city primaries have come and gone leaving the progressive and reform elements decidedly the worse for wear. The knockdown, not a knockout, was skilfully given by the machine's following the strategic principle, Divide the enemy and then crush him. Into the reform issues of a new constitution to allow better roads, a state budget system, home rule in the cities, a reformed magisterial system, were inserted a sectarian and Sunday question that threw many good people into confusion. In the city this was not necessary. The machine elements, that were divided came together in true machine fashion "for the good of the organization." Add to this the fact that in the city out of a registration of more than 450,000 less than 300,000 cared enough to vote, and the further fact that the women vote was divided, and you have the explanation of a smashing victory for combine and contractor rule and the threat of a worse defeat two years hence. Such things hurt. Progressivism has a hard way to go; but already organization is being made to carry on the fight. God reigns and we hope because of him.

A Message to the World Wide Guild

By ALMA J. NOBLE

Who could fail to respond to the first call of the president of our Northern Baptist Convention, especially when she implores us women and girls to do our share in filling that ship in fellowship?

Who of us has ever suffered from hunger or cold? We all have imagination, however, and I hope every woman and World Wide Guild girl in the denomination has a heart so filled with the compassion of our Master that we shall see in this call to help those poor suffering women and children in Europe a chance to "minister unto him." World Wide Guild Girls, throw yourselves into this October drive as you did into war work, and let us prove that we are indeed Worth-While Girls. There isn't a day to lose. Call an extra meeting, write me for particulars if you do not understand, and let us rise gloriously to this emergency.

St. Louis Letter.

By W. E. DARROW

During the Summer your St. Louis correspondent has neglected the work of informing THE BAPTIST of happenings here, he himself being away part of the time and the work slowing down a little in this period. The writer attended the B. Y. P. U. A. convention in Cincinnati, Ohio, going from there to North and South Carolina for a visit among long-time friends, preaching each Sunday during his vacation, and returning in time for preaching in his home pulpit on the last Sunday in July. A number of our city pastors were at the Arcadia Heights Assembly. Other pastors went farther away. A few stood by their work the whole summer through. All of our pastors seem ready for the tasks that lie before, whatever their summertime experience.

A representative company of Baptist people gathered at the home of Dr. and Mrs. S. E. Ewing, 5423 Vernon Ave., this city, in honor of their twenty-fifth wedding anniversary on the evening of Sept. 23rd. Choice gifts were left as reminder of the occasion. Among the gifts were twenty-five bright silver dollars from the members of the Baptist Minister's Conference and their wives. An orchestra played during the reception. Dainty refreshments were served. Dr. and Mrs. S. E. Ewing have been long active in the Baptist work of our city. He was pastor of the Euclid Church, St. Louis some years ago, and is now superintendent of missions for St. Louis. Much of the present success of Baptist effort in and about St. Louis is due to his efficient leadership. May they both live to enjoy their fiftieth anniversary.

A training school for B. Y. P. U. workers is being projected for the first week in November. It will be held at the Compton Heights Church, under the leadership of J. C. Hockett, Jr., state Sunday-school and B. Y. P. U. secretary. There will be a number of teachers from a distance. The work each evening will be according to the following schedule: 6:15-7:00, supper. 7:00-7:45, class period. 7:50-8:30, class period. 8:35-8:45, devotional. 8:45-9:15, popular address. 9:15 benediction. The committees are: entertainment and speakers, F. H. Wittneben and Dr. S. E. Ewing; enrollment, H. C. Fechner and Miss Helen Anderson; publicity, Miss Zada Griffin; curriculum, Rev. W. E. Darrow and Mr. J. C. Hockett, Jr.; house, Wm. Wilson; reception, Leslie Myers; the general committee, Rev. R. K. Kelly, Dr. S. E. Ewing, F. H. Wittneben, Miss Zada Griffin, Miss Helen Anderson, Leslie Myers, Wm. Wilson, the writer and E. S. Johnson. This training school will be of great value to Baptist young people's work in our city, and should be well attended.

Mr. H. C. Fechner of the Ebenezer Church, has been elected recording secretary and Miss Mary Woods of the Lafayette Park Church, junior and intermediate superintendent of the city B. Y. P. U. The city B. Y. P. U. held its fall rally at the Immanuel Church, on the evening of September 15. There was an attendance of over 415. Not a few were unable to get in because of the large attendance. A number of the local unions responded by some interesting "stunt," in manner as planned. The address of the evening was by Rev. R. K. Kelly of the Lafayette Park Church, on "Our Outlook for 1921-1922." Rev. P. G. Van Zandt of the West Park Church, directed the singing.

The community training school for church school workers will begin its ninth year of the work, at the Y. W. C. A. Building, 1411 Locust Street, on Monday evening, October 10. Sessions Monday evenings, 7:30 to 9:30. Lansing F. Smith, 315 North 7th Street, is the business manager. This school is one of the greatest of its kind in the country. First class period, 7:30 to 8:15; chapel, 8:20 to 8:40; second class period, 8:45 to 9:30. January 16—last session of first term; January 23—second term begins; April 24—last session of classes; May 1—closing exercises. Here is a real school, permanent, with a comprehensive curriculum and strong faculty.

The St. Louis Association meets this year with the Euclid Church, this city, Dr. R. B. Whiteside, pastor. A program of interest and profit is being prepared. It will be held on Thursday and Friday, October 13 and 14.

The Missouri General Association will meet with the Baptists of Moberly, Mo., October 18, 19 and 20. The state pastor's conference will meet on Monday of that week at the same place.

The King's Highway Church, this city, will begin evangelistic meetings the first week in November. Other churches are planning for special meetings in the near future.

Grand Avenue Church

Of more than usual interest is the situation at Grand Avenue Church, of which the writer is pastor. This church will complete its work of incorporation on Monday evening, October 3, and soon after the property at 2701 North Grand Avenue, where it is worshipping, will be transferred to the corporation by the Baptist Mission Board of our city. There was trustee ownership at the beginning of its history in 1890. A year or two thereafter, a deed of trust was given trustees representing the Second Church interest in the property by reason of loans for the carrying forward of the Grand Avenue Church work. In 1914 the property was transferred to the St. Louis Baptist Mission Board to keep until such time as our church should be in position to hold the same. After a year of self-support, the first time in its history, the church next month will be able to come into possession of its own, under $8,000 limitation by gift-mortgage to safe-guard money contributed by people outside our membership, chiefly by people of the Second Church. Our church has added eighty-five members during the year closing September 30. The outlook for the future of our work is very encouraging.

St. Louis, September 24, 1921.

of the time it has been impossible to keep a missionary on the field and most of the people were untouched by any religious influence, one girl eighteen years old had never heard a sermon. Last spring missionary Dow of China, home on furlough accepted the appointment as teacher of the government school for Indians and also began preaching in the white church. Late in August Rev. Van Dyke Todd of Fallows visited the field and began a series of evangelistic meetings. At the end of ten days he found it necessary to leave but the spirit of revival was so manifest that it was felt the meetings must not close. Rev. C. H. Bancroft responded to the call and continued the campaign for several days. A number were converted, others reclaimed and the few Baptists in the community were encouraged to send for their letters so that now a church of twenty-five members awaits the coming of a pastor to lead them in further evangelization.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

THE FIRST CHURCH OF SELMA began her fall work Sept. 4. A large increase in attendance at all services was noted. The Sunday-school attendance increased about 50 per cent. After the sermon the pastor gave a short dedicatory prayer and the congregation said farewell to four young people who are preparing themselves for special Christian service. Sunday, Sept. 11, the attendance was still increasing. At the close of the morning service a short business session was called. By a unanimous vote Miss Buschell was called as assistant to the pastor, Rev. F. Carl Truex, at a salary of $100 per month. By mutual agreement Del Rey Church becomes a mission of First Church.

Campaign to "finish the task"

The goal is to raise $200,000.00 in pledges for the New World Movement.

The task is to be finished on or before Thanksgiving night.

The pledges are to be payable in installments during the period of October 1st, 1921, to April 30th, 1924.

Our Convention field has been divided into districts with a Campaign Director in charge of each district. They are Rev. J. R. George, Wenatchee and Walla Walla Districts; Rev. J. F. Day, Yakima District; Rev. J. M. Nelson, Palouse District; Rev. Dean Hamilton, Lewiston District; Rev. J. McAllister, Newport District; Rev. W. E. Monbeck, Coeur d'Alene District; Rev. W. H. Bowler, Spokane District.

The following leaders are now helping us to finish the task. Dr. S. D. Bawden of India, Dr. A. M. Petty, Portland, Rev. J. L. Bryan of Indianapolis, field worker of the General Promotion Board, and Miss Lucile A. Withers of China.

"Let's go" is the slogan of the young people who are setting a fast pace in raising $5000, an item in the campaign budget, for buying assembly grounds.

Euclid Avenue, Spokane, turned in $1,300 last Wednesday. Only $200 more is needed to finish their task but the leaders say they can raise more than their quota, and they are going after a surplus.

In the Lewiston District every church but one has decided to put on a campaign and all have fixed dates for making the canvass.

It is reported that "Okanogan is coming fine. They have a fine crop and will undoubtedly go over the top."

Baptist ministers of the San Francisco Bay Association and their wives, and some prominent laymen met at the Y. W. C. A. for a luncheon at which Dr. and Mrs. E. R. Bennett were our guests of honor. After luncheon all sang the song, "My Jesus I Love Thee." Dr. C. M. Hill led in prayer. Miss Helen Holmes sang a solo; after which Dr. Henry Schenkofsky, Secretary of the Association, read an original poem, "Fifty Years for Christ." Then Dr. Bennett, who has just finished fifty years of preaching, brought the most interesting facts of fifty years in the ministry. After Dr. Bennett had spoken, both ministers and laymen eagerly stood up and gave expression of appreciation of the work done by Dr. Bennett, especially on the Pacific Coast. Rev. A. P. Brown, who has worked with Dr. Bennett the last thirty years, read resolutions for the committee. After that Mrs. C. E. Tingley presented Mrs. E. R. Bennett with a most beautiful bouquet. Mrs. Bennett responded, saying that it had been a privilege and a joy to work by the side of her husband all these years. —Henry Schenkofsky.

AUBERRY: For a number of years a fruitful work under the direction of Rev. J. G. Brendel, has been carried on among the Indians. Later a missionary was sent to work among the white population and a house of worship erected. Much EL DORADO CHURCH has been greatly strengthened in a meeting led by Perry F. Evans of Fort Worth Seminary. He had with him, Joe Canzoneri as singer and Mrs. J. R. Mantey as pianist. A tabernacle 60x80 was constructed on the new property at the rear so as to leave room for the new building which is to be commenced this fall. The church was organized for business, with a choir of fifty voices and other committees at work. There were four additions the first day. In all there were sixty added to the church, and twenty-one others professing faith or renewing their allegiance. An offering of $1025 was made to the Fort Worth Seminary, which keeps these great teams of evangelists in the field. We are also giving one of our most useful young couples to special service; Paul Hudson and his wife. They plan to enter Fort Worth Seminary and prepare for a life work in special lines.

MR. JOHN KNAAK of Liberal, Kansas and Miss Helma Hecht of Chicago, Illinois, were united in marriage on Sept. 1st, at the Immanuel Baptist church, of Chicago. Mr. Knaak is the very efficient superintendent of the Baptist Sunday school of Liberal, and president of the Southwestern Kansas Sunday-School and B. Y. P. U. Association.

NORTON gave to Pastor and Mrs. G. E. Van Hagen a surprise reception recently which proved to be a most happy affair.

Mr. Van Hagen is building a neat bungalow for a home in Norton.

REV. W. G. PUMPHREY has resigned his work at Meade, Kansas, to become Missionary of the Southwest Association, a work for which he is well qualified.

LIBERAL CHURCH is having the largest congregations in history of the church, under the guidance of Pastor John R. Pennington.

FIRST CHURCH, FREEPORT, F. G. Sayers, pastor, has remodeled and decorated its meeting house, at an expense of $4000. The reopening occurred Sep. 18. The program of the church calls for a budget of $10,000 a year.

PHILIP KEDZIERSKI, Bible worker assisting Pastor John Frydryki, of the First Polish Baptist Church of Chicago, was out with some boys calling in the homes of Polish people and distributing religious handbills. A Catholic priest, finding out what was going on, attempted to stop the work by accosting the workers with protests, warnings and threats. The colloquy drew a large crowd of Polish people, who, as soon as they understood the dispute, showed evident sympathy with Mr. Kedzierski, and this gave him a fine opportunity to make an out-door address about the Bible and the Baptists.

Michigan Women Confer

Vacation time is over. The ladies of the Board of the Woman's Baptist Mission Society of Michigan realized this as they began their long and interesting discussion of business on Tuesday morning, the 13th inst. The president, Mrs. Wilson, presided.

An honored member of the Board, Mrs. Cora E. Clarke of Jackson, had passed away during the summer.

Mrs. N. H. Bowen, Secretary-Director, was out of town, having been detained by illness of relative. Literature regarding "Fill a Ship in Fellowship" has been sent to all the Baptist churches in Michigan.

Miss Cooper was also out of the city. The Baptist daily vacation Bible schools led in Detroit, there being twenty-seven. The great lack, however, had been volunteer workers. It is to be much regretted in Detroit that Miss Alma Kurtz is leaving the last of the month to have charge of a settlement house in West Virginia. Her work in Detroit has been greatly blessed and appreciated. It was voted to send a letter to this effect to Miss Kurtz. Detroit's great loss is surely West Virginia's gain.

Rev. A. V. Allen, director of Sunday-school and young people's work in Detroit, came in and spoke of plans regarding the workers' training institute to be held in Detroit November 13-18. Our Miss Bromley will lecture each day of the institute on the book "From Survey to Service."

Mrs. Wreggit reported that $103.96 had been received to date from sales of literature at this year's Associations and assemblies.

An outline of the program for the women's part in the coming state convention was given by Mrs. Brennan, chairman of the program committee.—JANET BURGESS, Cor. Sec'y
